No limitation as to territory can be found in this language. The further provision, "The Legislature shall provide by general law * * * for the jurisdiction thereof except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section, * * *" gives to the Legislature power to fix the jurisdiction of said court, subject only to the previous limitations therein announced, but as to misdemeanors no limit is previously fixed. The power of the Legislature as to misdemeanors is therefore practically plenary.

[2] A similar situation was before the court in Green v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. 556, 564, 21 P. 307, 309, and it was there said:

"Section 13 of article 6 of the Constitution provides: 'The Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof.' Under this section the Legislature has power to confer upon such courts jurisdiction in all cases not vested in some other court by the Constitution. Gafford v. Bush, 60 Cal. 149."

This interpretation of section 11 seems to be in direct accord with Tuttle on California Municipal Courts, § 37, pp. 70-73, where it is said:

"But the constitutional provisions involved in those cases (referring to decisions of other states) were somewhat different from the Constitution of California not only in the description of the courts with respect to their local nature, but also in the fact that the constitutions there involved contained no general grant of jurisdiction in terms unlimited territorially, as in California."

Again the same author says in section 35, pages 63, 64:

"As we have observed in the preceding sections, in the portion of the Constitution defining the subject-matter of the jurisdiction of municipal courts no express limitation is made with respect to the territorial limits within which the case must arise, but the grant of jurisdiction is in the same general terms as in the case of the superior court. Whether this results in giving to municipal courts as broad a jurisdiction territorially, within the limits of the subject-matter, as is granted to the superior courts depends upon whether any other provisions of the Constitution peculiar to municipal courts operate directly to impose territorial limitations, or indirectly in that regard by permitting the Legislature to do so."

[3] It seems also that section 1462 of the Penal Code has been happily framed in accord with the reasoning above set forth, for this section attempts to confer upon any municipal court jurisdiction of all misdemeanors of all grades arising anywhere in the county. It would certainly be an unjustifiable anomaly to have a municipal court with county-wide jurisdiction as to some misdemeanors but with local jurisdiction only as to all others. After all, our law divides crimes into felonies and misdemeanors, and high and low grade misdemeanors are not known to our law as such. The name is a relic of the common law, and no legal reason exists or can be imagined under our system for a constitutional distinction between classes of misdemeanors. Pen. Code, §§ 16, 17.

[4, 5] We therefore conclude that, as to all misdemeanors committed in counties having one or more municipal courts therein, the superior court has been bereft of its jurisdiction thereof, and as to all such misdemeanors, high and low, so committed, the municipal court or courts have original jurisdiction thereof. The fact that the civil jurisdiction conferred upon municipal courts may not be so broad as that applicable to misdemeanors furnishes no insuperable argument against the conclusion above announced. In counties in which large cities such as Los Angeles are located, where all departments of the superior court are crowded with business, these municipal courts have doubtless been authorized to relieve the congestion by transferring all misdemeanor cases not otherwise disposed of to the new courts. See Green v. Superior Court, supra. And if these courts be not given county-wide jurisdiction in such cases, this legislation will have largely failed in its purpose. This fact is entitled to some weight in ascertaining the intent of the framers of the constitutional amendments and the legislation thereunder.

It is asserted that in Bakkenson v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 504, 241 P. 874, views have been expressed which are opposed to those expressed herein. We cannot concede this assertion to be sound. In that case we had before us a provision of said section 11 which read as follows:

"In any city or in any city and county where such municipal court has been established, and in townships situated in whole or in part in such city or city and county, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court except as herein provided."

The facts were that a Los Angeles county township lay territorially partly within and partly without the cities of Los Angeles and Long Beach, wherein had been established municipal courts. The point decided was that said township did not lose outright its identity, its existence, nor its ordinary jurisdiction because partly within said cities. It only lost its jurisdiction over that portion of the township territory lying within the cities, but as to that portion lying without it retained its territorial integrity and its ordinary jurisdiction of causes. In answering the contention that such township and its jurisdiction had been obliterated, the court, among other things, said:

"But it nowhere appears from said amendment when considered as a whole that it was the intent of those who framed it to disturb to the extent of destroying the judicial organization within those portions of such affected townships as lay outside of the limits of those municipalities which had decided to set up municipal courts within their said limits. To so interpret the particular language of the portion of said amendment upon which the petitioner relies, and which is above excepted, would be to give to the amendment as a whole the effect of either taking away from the inhabitants of the portion of such townships as lay without the bounds of such municipalities their already established justices' courts, leaving them without tribunals for the institution and trial of causes within the jurisdiction of such court, or of extending the jurisdiction of the municipal courts of contiguous cities over such outlying territory, neither of which results is thinkable as within the intent of the framers of this amendment to the Constitution, since to give it such an interpretation would be to take away from the inhabitants of such outlying territory their already established system of justices' courts and township officers by the vote of the electorate of an incorporated municipality of which they form no part, and to substitute in place thereof a system of municipal courts in the establishment of which and in the selection of the judges and other officers of which they would have no vote or voice."

But the extension of the jurisdiction of the municipal court throughout the township and county as to one set of offenses only is a far different thing from destroying a township government outright. Indeed, early in said opinion the court, in speaking of the jurisdiction of the municipal courts, said that they were "confined in some respects as to their jurisdiction and functions to the territorial limits of the municipalities thus resolving to establish the same," thereby showing that the court had in mind that they might in some cases have extraterritorial jurisdiction. Again, this transfer of jurisdiction as to high grade misdemeanors takes nothing whatsoever from the jurisdiction of any of the justices' courts; it only subtracts from the jurisdiction of the superior court, which was always county-wide as to the offense here involved.

We are entirely satisfied that petitioner was convicted in a court that had no jurisdiction whatsoever over the offense charged against him.

The petitioner is discharged.

McCAMISH v. GROFF et al. (Civ. 3286.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 14, 1927.

Master and servant — 258(9)—Complaint not alleging injury to employee resulted from operation of defective tractor held not to state cause of action.

Complaint for injury to operator of tractor to which was attached a defective scraper, not alleging that injury resulted from operation of the tractor in its defective condition, but that plaintiff was injured at a time when the tractor was stopped and he was engaged in simple work of cleaning the tiller wheel with an iron crowbar, held not to state a cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by George McCamish against W. R. Groff and another, as individuals and as co-partners doing business under the firm name of Groff Bros. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atran & Sheets, of Colusa, for appellant.

Thos. Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff was employed by the defendants "during the night shift," as engineer and operator of a 75 horse power tractor; that the "tractor was guided by a tiller wheel, which moved to the right or left as the operator gave the direction in a circular frame to which was attached a scraper, devised for the purpose of scraping, and keeping clodded dirt, weeds, stones, straw, and other obstructions from sticking to the steel tread surface of said tiller wheel"; that at the time of the injury complained of and for a long time prior thereto "said scraper was broken, destroyed, and no longer in use upon said tractor, all of which was known at said time to the defendants"; that the "defendants did prior to and at the time the injury * * * was received, carelessly and negligently require, permit, and cause said Geo. McCamish * * * to operate said tractor in said defective condition and at such times as said tiller wheel ceased to revolve or turn and became clogged, as aforesaid, by reason of clodded dirt, weeds, straw, stones, and other obstructions clinging thereto, to remove and pry the same from said tiller wheel by the use and aid of an iron crowbar"; that the "tractor in said defective condition was extremely dangerous, unsafe, and hazardous to operate," and when the tiller wheel so became clogged it was necessary "that the operator immediately stop said tractor and go around in front of same and lean over the circular frame in which said tiller wheel turned and revolved, and by the use of, and holding a crowbar, jam said crowbar into the clogged dirt, weeds, straw, stones, and other obstructions caked and sticking to the steel tread surface of said tiller wheel and pry, dig, and scrape said clogged dirt, weeds, straw, stones, and other obstructions therefrom, in the nighttime when said cleaning and scraping of said tiller wheel could be seen only dimly and with great difficulty, and in so doing the operator was apt to jam the metal crowbar into the metallic portion of said tractor and said tiller wheel, thereby causing steel splinters to fly back into the face and eyes of said operator, * * * all of which at said time was well known to the said defendants"; that at the time of the injury "the defendants negligently and carelessly permitted, caused and required said Geo. McCamish to operate said defective tractor, * * * and, upon said tiller wheel becoming clogged, * * * to get off from said tractor, go around in front thereof, and, with an iron crowbar in his hands, in the darkness of the nighttime, to lean over the circular frame in which said tiller wheel moved and to pry, dig, and scrape said clodded dirt, weeds, straw, stones, and other obstructions from the steel tread surface of said tiller wheel, and in so doing a splinter of steel was torn loose from the said metallic running tread of said tiller wheel and deflected and ricocheted into the left eye of the said Geo. McCamish, thereby causing him to lose his sight in said left eye and to lose partial sight in his right eye."

The defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds of insufficiency of fact to state a cause of action and uncertainty as to the manner in which the defendants' alleged negligence contributed to the injury. The trial court sustained the demurrer and gave the plaintiff ten days in which to amend. The plaintiff elected to stand upon the complaint, and a judgment of dismissal was entered. This appeal is from the judgment.

The only ground urged for a reversal of the judgment is that "the failure of the defendants to keep in use and repair the scraper device was the proximate cause of the injury." In sustaining the demurrer, the trial court said:

"The improperly equipped machine was being worked and no accident occurred in the working, but the machine was stopped as to its working and the operator was doing an independent act and while doing this independent act was then injured."

It is alleged that it was "extremely dangerous, unsafe, and hazardous" to operate the tractor in its defective condition, but there is no allegation that any injury resulted from such operation. If it be conceded that the defendants were negligent in failing to equip the tractor with an effective scraper for the tiller wheel, "there is an entire absence of a sequential relationship of cause and effect between this negligent omission and the injury." Marovich v. Central California T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 303, 216 P. 595, 599; Lammers v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 186 Cal. 379, 385, 199 P. 523; Schwartz v. California Gas, etc., Co., 163 Cal. 398, 402, 125 P. 1044. The injuries involved in the cases relied on by appellant resulted directly from the operation of defective machines or instrumentalities. In this case the alleged danger and hazard of operating the tractor in its defective condition ceased with the cessation of its operation, and at the time of the injury the plaintiff was engaged in the simple work of cleaning the tiller wheel with a simple tool.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DOBLE. (Cr. 1325.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 19, 1927.

Rehearing Denied June 17, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Licenses ⇨40—Wash sale of treasury stock to individual and through him to public held violation of Corporate Securities Act (Corporate Securities Act, § 14).

Scheme to sell corporate treasury stock in excess of permits through conspirators to the public through a pretended sale to corporation's fiscal agent in Oregon and a resale by him as a shareholder to the public in California held wash sale and not a bona fide sale, but constituted a violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), § 14.

2. Criminal law ⇨814(8, 9)—Omission to instruct that delivery of one stock certificate in exchange for another was not sale within Corporate Securities Act held not prejudicial, where conviction of conspiracy did not involve such deliveries.

Where conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), consisted of an agreement to sell stock without a permit in hope that a permit could thereafter be obtained, and when permit was finally denied plan of wash sales of stock by the corporation to its fiscal agent for resale in violation of Corporate Securities Act was adopted, omission in instruction, giving definition of sale within Corporate Securities Act, that delivery of one certificate in exchange for another legally issued should not be construed to be a sale, held not prejudicial.

3. Conspiracy ⇨38—Scheme of corporation to sell stock to fiscal agent in another state for resale in California if conceded to be lawful could not affect conviction for conspiracy based on prior unlawful sales.

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), where acts of conspirators in selling treasury stock of corporation without permit were completed before scheme to sell corporation's treasury stock to its fiscal agent in Oregon for resale in California was devised, such scheme even if lawful did not affect specific stock sales completed before scheme was devised.

4. Licenses ⇨40—Expectations of receiving permit do not excuse sales without permit in violation of Corporate Securities Act.

Violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by sale without permit, is not excusable by fact that issuance of permit was anticipated or expected.

5. Conspiracy ⇨47—Plan to sell corporate stock to nonresident and through him resell to public held evidence of intent to conceal prior illegal sales (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), plan of conspirators to sell corporation treasury stock to corporation's fiscal agent in Oregon for resale by him in California held evidence of conspirators' willfulness to sell stock without a permit and to show their effort to conceal illegal acts in having sold stock beyond amount permitted by permit by supplying stock through such plan.

6. Criminal law ⇨400(8)—Summary of books of corporation and fiscal agent held admissible to show sales of corporate stock in excess of permits (Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5; Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling treasury stock of corporation without permit, where books of the corporation and its fiscal agent were voluminous, summary of books prepared to show amount of stock sales in excess of permits was admissible in evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5.

7. Criminal law ⇨402(1)—Where summary of books is admissible in evidence, it is sufficient if opposite party has opportunity to inspect, cross-examine, and make similar summary (Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5).

Where summary of books is admissible in evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5, it is not necessary that the books be offered in evidence; it being sufficient if opposite party is afforded opportunity to inspect, cross-examine, and make similar summary.

8. Criminal law ⇨402(1)—Foundation held sufficient for admission of summary of books of corporation and its fiscal agent in evidence (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), preliminary proof by bookkeepers held sufficient to authorize admission of summary of books of corporation and its fiscal agent prepared to show amount of stock sales in excess of permits.

9. Criminal law ⇨425—Books of fiscal agent held admissible as declarations of coconspirator as an agent (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), to sell corporation treasury stock without permit, books of corporation's fiscal agent were admissible as his declarations as a coconspirator in so far as concerns conspiracy and as declarations of an agent as to counts for actual violation of the act.

10. Criminal law ⇨444—Testimony that entries were made in books from reports regularly made to bookkeepers held to make books admissible under account book rule.

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock without permit, testimony of corporation's secretary and its bookkeepers and auditors that entries in corporation's books were made from knowledge obtained from reports regularly made by another person whose duty it was to make reports in regular course of business held to make books admissible under account book rule.

11. Criminal law ⇨425—Books of corporation held admissible as acts and declarations within scope of agency of corporation's agents in furtherance of conspiracy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2; Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation's treasury stock without permit, books of corporation which showed amount of stock sales in excess of permits were admissible, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, as acts and declarations of corporation's agents acting within scope of their employment in making sales and keeping record of sales.

12. Conspiracy ⚡28—One cannot direct agents to sell stock illegally and claim irresponsibility because he did not know agents had carried out orders (Corporate Securities Act).

One is not permitted to set his agents about selling corporation's stock in violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), and then claim irresponsibility by claiming not to know that the agents have done what they were directed to do.

13. Criminal law ⚡424(5)—Declarations of agents and employees of a coconspirator forming part of the res gestæ are admissible against all (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling stock in excess of permits, declarations of agents and employees of a coconspirator forming part of the res gestæ are admissible against all.

14. Criminal law ⚡417(16)—Corporation's books held admissible as declarations of its agents and to show knowledge of conspirator of volume of illegal stock sales (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permits, corporation's books were admissible in evidence, not only as declarations of agents, but as evidence to show in connection with other testimony knowledge of conspirator of volume of sales taking place.

15. Conspiracy ⚡47—Evidence independent of summary of books of corporation and its fiscal agent held to show excessive issue or sale of stock (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permits, evidence independent of summary of books of corporation and its fiscal agent held sufficient to show excessive issue or sale of stock.

16. Witnesses ⚡298—Where witness under subpoena duces tecum disclosed that defendant's counsel had corporate records sought, requiring counsel to produce records did not compel defendant to give evidence in violation of constitutional rights (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permit, where corporation's treasurer and other witnesses in possession of corporation's books were subpoenaed to bring them into court and where all proceedings in connection with demand for their introduction in evidence except demand made for books while officer of the corporation was being examined was without presence of the jury, defendant was not compelled to give evidence against himself in violation of his constitutional rights.

17. Witnesses ⚡16—Subpoenaed books carried to defendant's counsel or placed in garage subject to witness' order are not beyond order of court.

Books subpoenaed into court are not beyond reach of court order because witness so subpoenaed carries them to defendant's counsel or places them in garage subject to his order instead of bringing them into court.

18. Conspiracy ⚡47—Evidence, aside from testimony of coconspirators or accomplices, held to sustain conviction of violating Corporate Securities Act (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permit, testimony, aside from that of coconspirators or accomplices, held sufficient, in view of Pen. Code, § 1111, to sustain conviction.

19. Criminal law ⚡428—Testimony of conspirator is regarded as sworn testimony and not as admission or declaration.

The testimony of a conspirator is to be regarded as sworn testimony, not as an admission or declaration.

20. Criminal law ⚡428—Testimony of a coconspirator is "testimony of an accomplice," and must be corroborated (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Testimony of a coconspirator given in court, while not classified as an admission or an act or declaration out of court, is nevertheless testimony of an accomplice, and under Pen. Code, § 1111, must be corroborated.

21. Conspiracy ⚡45—Affecting Intent, evidence of submitting scheme to deputy corporation commissioner was inadmissible in prosecution for conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act.

No specific intent is necessary to constitute the crime of violating the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), except intent to do the acts denounced thereby, and hence in prosecution for conspiracy to violate the act sustaining objection to evidence to prove that plan adopted by defendants was submitted to attorneys and deputy corporation commissioner on issue of defendants' intent was proper.

22. Criminal law ⚡428—If evidence of acts and declarations of coconspirators is properly admitted, it may be considered by jury for all purposes (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6).

If evidence of acts and declarations of coconspirators is properly admitted under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6, it may be considered by jury for all purposes, and consideration need not be postponed until conspiracy is found to exist from independent facts.

23. Conspiracy ⚡28—Instruction that willful plan to sell stock beyond permit would constitute conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act held not error (Pen. Code, § 20; Corporate Securities Act, § 14).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), § 14, by selling corporation treasury stock without permit, instruction, in view of the Pen.

Code, § 20, that lack of knowledge that stock was issued in excess of permit would constitute acts done under mistake of fact and be defense, but selling stock beyond or without permit amounting to violation of the Securities Act would constitute guilt even though defendants believed that acts done in certain way would not be illegal, held without error.

24. Criminal law ⚡32—Requested instruction that ignorance of law would excuse violation or conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act was properly refused.

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling stock in excess of permits, defendant's requested instruction that ignorance of law would be an excuse was properly refused.

25. Criminal law ⚡772(6)—Requested instruction on misconception or ignorance of facts disjunctively coupled with mistake of law was properly refused (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permit, defendant's requested instruction on misconception or ignorance of facts, disjunctively coupled with principle of mistake of law, was properly refused.

26. Criminal law ⚡823(1)—Failure to instruct that plea of guilty of codefendants was no evidence of guilt held not prejudicial, in view of instruction given (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), where coconspirators who had pleaded guilty testified at trial, failure to instruct that plea of guilty of codefendants was no evidence of guilt held without prejudice to defendant, in view of instruction that if jury affirmatively found conspiracy was formed then they should determine whether defendants or any of them actively participated therein.

27. Criminal law ⚡809—Refusal of instruction, misleading in form, held not error (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), defendant's requested instructions, misleading in form, were properly refused.

28. Licenses ⚡42(5)—Refusal of instruction that officer of corporation could not be criminally liable for acts of corporation's agents held proper (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), by selling corporation treasury stock in excess of permit, refusal of defendant's instruction that an officer of a corporation could not be criminally liable for acts of corporation's agents and that codefendants must be defendant's agents in order to convict held proper.

29. Criminal law ⚡393(1)—Grand jury's use of records voluntarily submitted to corporation commissioner held not coercing defendants, indicted for conspiracy, to furnish incriminating evidence (Corporate Securities Act, § 17).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), in selling stock in excess of permits, where books were voluntarily turned over to the corporation commissioner and thereafter grand jury's subpoena was served on commissioner's deputy and corporation officers were never subpoenaed, defendants were not compelled to furnish evidence, within section 17 providing that no one shall be prosecuted for matters concerning which he was compelled to produce documentary evidence.

30. Conspiracy ⚡43(6)—Indictment for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act held sufficient (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 3, 14).

Indictment for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), which followed language of section 14 and further specified how defendant's participation in subscriptions and sales of stock violated section 3, held sufficient to show facts constituting a crime.

31. Indictment and information ⚡125(19)—Counts in indictment for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act held to charge one crime only (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 3, 14).

Where individuals cannot be directly charged under terms of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), § 3, which defines a crime by a corporation, but can be charged under section 14 with selling or assisting in sale of stock in manner causing the corporation to violate section 3, counts in indictment against individuals charging offer for sale, negotiation for sale, and taking subscriptions for stock and authorizing aid in sale of stock charged one crime only.

32. Grand jury ⚡38—Grand jury must appoint stenographic reporter only in cases where district attorney so demands (Pen. Code, § 925).

Under Pen. Code, § 925, grand jury is required to appoint a stenographic reporter to take testimony of witnesses only in cases where district attorney so demands.

33. Conspiracy ⚡45—Sustaining objections to questions to show disposition of money derived from illegal sale of stock held proper in conspiracy prosecution (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), court properly sustained objections to questions to show disposition of money derived from sale of stock and stock subscriptions which were not in issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Abner Doble was convicted of conspiracy to violate, and actual violation of, the Corporate Securities Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Carey Van Fleet, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. F. Cleary and Emery J. Mitchell, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction upon an amendment which accused defendants in the first count of criminal conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), and in six other counts of directly violating the said act by making certain sales of capital stock of the Doble Steam Motors Corporation. The appellant, Abner Doble, was the president of said corporation. Defendant F. G. Cox was the fiscal agent in charge of the sale of stock, and defendant W. E. Barnard was his stock sales manager. The other defendants were officers of the corporation. All the defendants except W. A. Doble and this appellant pleaded guilty. W. A. Doble was acquitted. The conspiracy count charged that the defendants on or about the 1st day of July, 1923, conspired to violate the Corporate Securities Act in the following manner: To offer for sale, negotiate for sale of, take subscriptions for, authorize, direct, and aid in the sale of, cause and assist in causing to be sold, and to sell shares of capital stock of Doble Steam Motors Corporation, then and there the securities of said corporation and of its own issue, without a permit so to do from the commissioner of corporations. The indictment, in conformity with Pen. Code, §§ 184 and 1104, alleged certain overt acts performed by defendants in effectuating the said conspiracy: First, that they furnished and delivered to defendants Cox and Barnard chassis and vehicles known as Doble steam automobiles; second, in the months of July and August, 1923, conducted and maintained on Mission street and Powell street establishments for the purpose of displaying the said car and chassis; third, during the months of July and August, 1923, and thereafter for a period of time the exact duration of which is to the grand jury unknown, employed and directed certain named individuals as salesmen, agents, and servants to take subscriptions for, negotiate for the sale of, to offer for sale, and sell said shares of capital stock. The fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth overt acts alleged were sales of such securities to certain named individuals, specifying the number of shares and date of each sale. The dates specified were July 11, 21, August 1, 2 and 3, 1923. The remaining six counts of the indictment charged independently of the conspiracy certain specified sales of stock without a permit. These sales are the same as those sales mentioned and described as overt acts in the conspiracy charge. Upon all these counts the appellant was convicted with the exception of counts 3 and 7.

The facts proven were, as briefly as we are able to state them, as follows: Two permits were obtained from the California commissioner of corporations permitting the sale of the aggregate of 100,000 shares of stock of the corporation. A spirited sales campaign was conducted in the state of California by the corporation under the direction of F. G. Cox as its fiscal agent. Under these permits the stock was sold rapidly, and by June 19, 1923, the 100,000 shares permitted to be sold had been sold. At first most of the sales were made in Los Angeles, but the sales campaign in San Francisco was conducted from June 4 to August 4, 1923. An application was made to the corporation commissioner on June 23, 1923, for permission to sell 100,000 additional shares. This application did not meet with favor and remained pending until the 9th of August, 1923, at which time it was withdrawn. In the meantime (which embraces the dates of the various sales alleged in the indictment), sales of stock continued to be actively made in San Francisco and vicinity until August 4. In general, the conspiracy proven consisted of the agreement among the defendants that, notwithstanding the permit had been exhausted, sales of stock should continue. The officers, including this appellant, knowing that the permit had been exhausted, urged the fiscal agent to continue making sales; the appellant rejected the suggestion that further subscriptions should be filled by buying up stock from the public; it was the mutual understanding that sales of stock should continue, in the hope that perhaps a permit would be subsequently secured either from the then corporation commissioner or his successor, there being a rumor that the commissioner might resign. In the third application, made on June 23, it was stated that 96,132 shares of stock had been sold up to and including June 16, 1923, as shown by an audit made by certain public accountants. This application was signed and verified by the oath of appellant and others. The witness Penberthy testified that he was an auditor, accountant, and bookkeeper employed by Cox from March 23, 1923, and continued in his employment for one year. He checked, issued, and signed checks and vouchers showing weekly sales of stock by Cox and his salesmen. By these checks and vouchers attached, Mr. Cox made weekly remittances to the Doble corporation showing total amount of sales for each week. The check for the week ending June 16 showed sales of 11,736 shares. These shares, we may assume, were taken account of by the public accountants (referred to in the application above mentioned), in stating that 96,132 shares had been sold up to June 16. The other weekly checks showed the following sales of shares: For the week ending June 23, 8248 shares; week ending June 30, 8474 shares; July 7, 6898 shares; July 14, 8480 shares; July 21, 9350 shares; July 28, 8195 shares; and August 4, 13,109 shares. The evidence thus showed that, although appellant stated in his application on June 23 that 96,132 shares had been sold by June 16, on June 23 the amount sold had exceeded the 100,000 shares allowed by the permits obtained, and by August 4, had exceeded it by over 70,000 shares.

We now take up an additional and further statement of facts which relate to occurrences after August 4, 1923. It became apparent that the application to the corporation commissioner for the permit to sell further shares would not be granted, and it was withdrawn on August 9, 1923. Thereupon and not before, the defendants agreed upon a further plan to enable themselves to continue selling and issuing shares of stock in the absence of a permit from the corporation commissioner. Very briefly, this plan was that the corporation would pretend to sell to Cox in Portland, Or., a quantity of shares of capital stock, and that he, Cox, would then resell the said shares to the public in the state of California either as new sales or in fulfillment of subscriptions that had theretofore been taken by him in excess of the amount allowed by the original permits granted. Some of the main documents looking to the effectuation of the plan were prepared in California at San Francisco, but were signed and delivered in Portland, Or. The appellant signed some of the documents in San Francisco. It may be stated in passing here that two of these documents were antedated, the dates used following by a few days the dates of the two permits originally granted by the corporation commissioner. The instruments were actually prepared on or about August 11-13, 1923. Immediately thereafter some of the defendants went to Portland, Or., and the plan was carried out through means of an escrow with the Portland Title & Trust Company. Certain stock certificates calling for large blocks of stock made out to Cox were left with the title company, and, upon the indorsement and order of Cox, the title company issued the stock from time to time to various purchasers and subscribers in the state of California. These shares were delivered in California by Cox and his salesmen.

[1] In referring to the Portland sale plan above, we have used the expression, the pretended sale to Cox. The evidence shows the sale was only a wash sale. While the conspirators observed the outward forms of a real sale to Cox and then a resale by Cox as a shareholder of his own shares to various members of the public, the whole transaction was conducted in such a manner that Cox never assumed responsibility as a purchaser, never put up his own money or credit, but, by borrowing from the California subsidiary corporation money which he had previously paid in on account of the excess sales and by using other funds of the corporation in his possession, he went through the form of buying, but nevertheless the whole scheme when completed constituted a sale by the corporation through the conspirators of the corporation treasury stock to the public in California. The stock made out to Cox and placed in escrow there and from time to time by his order reissued to California purchasers in the manner the record discloses was not a bona fide sale, and constituted a violation of the Corporate Securities Act of California, as was pointed out in People v. Eise-man (Cal. App.) 248 P. 716.

[2] The conspiracy consisted, then, of the agreement to sell without a permit made during the latter part of June or the 1st of July. The evidence lends itself to the following summary: At first it was the hope of the defendants that a permit would afterwards be obtained from the corporation commissioner, and when that hope failed on or about August 8 or 9, they found themselves in the position that they would likely be exposed for having oversold; not being able or willing to pay back the money to the subscribers and having been previously unwilling to fill the excess subscriptions by purchasing stock in the open market from previous purchasers, they now were confronted with the necessity of further action; thereupon the Portland plan was adopted.

Appellant contends that the sale to Cox in Portland was not a violation of the Corporate Securities Act of California, because it was done outside of this state, and that the subsequent sales by Cox as a shareholder of his own stock to the public were not forbidden by the act; that, the two acts being legal, there could be no criminal conspiracy to do legal acts. Error is assigned in the giving and refusing of instructions based upon the theory of the validity of the Portland plan. The court rejected certain requested instructions prepared upon the subject of whether the Portland escrow stock issues constituted violations of the statute. In giving the definition of "sale" found in the Corporate Securities Act, the instructions omitted the proviso to the effect that the delivery of one certificate in exchange for another theretofore legally issued shall not be construed to be a sale. Inasmuch as the defendants had already illegally sold and issued shares in excess of the permits before the Portland plan was made and the charge and conviction did not rest on the stock sales that passed through the Portland escrow, we do not consider appellant has been prejudiced by this omission, or by the rulings on these instructions.

[3] While we have stated that the evidence shows that the Portland plan constituted a violation of the Corporate Securities Act, nevertheless if we should concede it to have been a lawful transaction it would not affect the validity of the judgment appealed from in this case for two reasons: First, the indictment charged certain acts at certain dates as crimes and as overt acts of the conspiracy which the evidence shows occurred before the Portland plan was either executed or planned; second, these acts were not performed in contemplation of the Portland plan, and from their nature could not become valid by reason of the Portland plan, even if done in contemplation of it. The indictment, in alleging the dates of the sales specified as specific offenses in counts 2 to 7, inclusive, and in alleging the dates of the sales specified as overt acts of the conspiracy, does not go beyond August 4. In alleging the other overt acts or those which are not the specific sales of stock but are the exhibition of automobiles, maintenance of showrooms or salesrooms, and directing of salesmen, the dates alleged are not specific, but the evidence shows that these overt acts also occurred prior to August 4. On that date the campaign in San Francisco ceased and the last of the showrooms was closed. The evidence shows that the Portland plan was not agreed upon or jointly contemplated until August 10 or 13, immediately after the application for the third permit was withdrawn on August 9.

All the alleged overt acts and crimes, therefore, were either alleged or proven to have occurred before the Portland scheme was planned or executed. For this reason we conclude that there are no overt acts specified in the indictment referable to the Portland part of the conspiracy, and also that the Portland plan could not affect the specific stock sales alleged as public offenses committed and fully performed before that plan was devised.

[4, 5] No argument is suggested and we can think of none showing that sales of stock made without a permit would not be a violation of the Corporate Securities Act, even if done in the hope or expectation that a permit would afterwards be obtained. The statute requires a permit to be first obtained. Moore v. Moffatt, 188 Cal. 1, 204 P. 220, by no means holds that such a subscription is not a violation of the act.

Although a very great number of subscriptions obtained prior to August 4 were filled through the Portland escrow, it is not contended that these oversubscriptions and sales amounting by August 4 to more than 70 per cent. over the permits for 100,000 shares were accomplished in contemplation of filling them through the Portland escrow. Not only was that done before the Portland plan was agreed upon and much of the stock actually delivered, but it was treasury stock and not reissued stock. None of the purchasers specified in the indictment received their stock through the Portland escrow with the possible exception of Henry Amacher, and as to him the sale was alleged and proven as occurring July 11. His subscription and first payment were obtained on that date upon a fiscal agent's blank, a form of contract which represented a sale by the corporation of its own stock to the subscriber. Cox continued to take subscriptions upon fiscal agent's blanks until October, 1923. The sales campaign reached its height in July, 1923, started to drop off in August, and September cancellations exceeded subscriptions. Neither can it be argued under the evidence that these sales were sales of canceled subscriptions, as these sales occurred also before cancellations exceeded subscriptions.

Therefore, even if the Portland escrow was not a violation of the statute, the acts previously performed up to August 4, consisting of actually issuing treasury stock and taking subscriptions on behalf of the company (not brokers' agreements for reissued stock), constituted a violation of the act as charged in the indictment. The Portland plan would not undo the statutory violations and conspiracy for that purpose which had occurred before that plan was either agreed upon or carried out. The value of the evidence of the Portland plan was in showing a continuation of the same determination with knowledge and willfulness to sell without a permit and in showing an effort on the part of the conspirators to conceal their illegal acts in having over-sold by supplying stock in this way.

[6, 7] Error is assigned in the admission into evidence of a summary of the books of F. G. Cox, F. G. Cox Company, and of certain of the books and records of the Doble corporation. This summary of the books was prepared to show the amount of stock sales in excess of the permits. It was made by the witness, Mr. Cummings, a certified public accountant. This summary was admissible under subdivision 5 of section 1855, Code of Civil Procedure. The books were proven to be voluminous, the record of sales going into the number of thousands. Wigmore on Evidence, § 1230; McPherson v. Milling Co., 44 Cal. App. 491, at page 495, 186 P. 803; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, at page 496, 55 P. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, at page 86, 53 P. 410. It is not necessary that the books themselves be offered in evidence, but it is sufficient if they are available or produced in order to afford the opposite party an opportunity to inspect, cross-examine, or make a similar summary. 16 Corpus Juris, 615, § 1211. We do not understand the case of Shields v. Rancho Buena Ventura, 187 Cal. 569, 203 P. 114, to hold contrariwise, although there the books were actually put in evidence.

[8, 9] It is claimed that the books themselves were not admissible, sufficient foundation not having been laid, and hence that the summary was also inadmissible. As to the Cox books, the preliminary proof by bookkeepers was as follows: The witness Smith testified that while he was in Cox's office for a time that would embrace July and August, 1923, he did not have complete charge of the books until a much later date. Mr. Penberthy testified that he was a bookkeeper and auditor for Mr. Cox and the Cox corporation; that he acted in conjunction with a Mr. Moorehouse from March until June 23, at which time he became office manager. He verified, approved, and signed the weekly checks and vouchers accounting for the sales by Cox which we have referred to above. Mr. Cox himself testified that his sales organization and bookkeepers operated under his direction and control; that they rendered reports to him upon which he acted as correct. The Cox books were admissible as a declaration of Cox, a coconspirator, so far as concerns the conspiracy count, and as a declaration of an agent so far as concerns the other counts.

[10] As to the Doble books, there was the testimony of the secretary of the corporation, and the following bookkeepers and auditors, Mr. Pinska, Mrs. Lamb, Mr. Jensen, and Miss Capps—substantially the whole bookkeeping force mentioned in the evidence, with the exception of Miss Marshall, who acted directly under the secretary, and who was in West Virginia at the time of the trial. These witnesses showed as full a knowledge of the truth of the entries in the books as was reasonably possible, having regard for the fact that the knowledge of the amount of stock sales came to the Doble corporation from its fiscal agent, Cox. These bookkeepers received reports from Cox's force, showing amount of stock sold and money receipts, verified them from time to time, and made the appropriate entries in the Doble books. This was in the regular course of business. All corporations act through their agents. These entries were made, then, from knowledge obtained from reports regularly made to the bookkeepers by another person employed in the business (Cox), whose duty it was to make the same in the regular course of business. This made the books admissible under the account book rule as restated in Chan Kiu Sing v. Gordon, 171 Cal. 31, 151 P. 657.

[11] But the introduction of the books of the corporation here should be compared to a case where they are offered against the corporation as the acts and declarations of its agents rather than to a case where they are offered by the corporation to prove an account against a debtor. Wigmore, Evidence (2d Ed.) § 1557. While the salesmen, bookkeepers and auditors were in one sense agents of the corporation, in a true sense they were the agents of the officers of the corporation as well. Here all of the officers of the Doble corporation were defendants. It was through these officers that the sales campaign was started and carried out by the corporation. These officers employed and directed the salesmen through the corporation's fiscal agent, Cox, and the bookkeepers and auditors were employed and directed by these same officers, the defendants. The agents acted within the scope of their employment in making the sales and in keeping a record of the sales. The corporation itself was a party to the conspiracy and statutory violations, though not charged in the indictment.

[12] One is not permitted to set his agents about selling stock in violation of the law and then claim irresponsibility by claiming not to know that these agents have done what they were directed to do. Wigmore on Evidence (2d Ed.) vol. II, § 1078, says:

"He who sets another person to do an act in his stead as agent is chargeable by such acts as are done under that authority and so, too, properly enough, is affected by admissions made by the agent in the course of exercising that authority."

Code of Civil Procedure, § 1870, subd. 2, provides that evidence may be given of the act or declaration of the agent of a party within the scope of his agency and during its existence after proof of the agency. Wharton, Criminal Evidence (10th Ed.) § 700; 3 Wharton on Evidence, 1170, 1171, 1173, 1177, 1192, 1198; Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 2007.

[13] The declarations of the agents and employees of a coconspirator forming a part of the res gestæ have been held to be admissible against all under this principle. 16 Cor. Jur. § 1301; State v. Grant, 86 Iowa, 216, 53 N. W. 120; Patch Mfg. Co. v. Protection Lodge, etc., 77 Vt. 294, 60 A. 74, 107 Am. St. Rep. 765; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

The admissibility of the declarations of a conspirator against his coconspirators and the admissibility of the declarations of an agent against his principal are both based upon the same theory—the law of agency. We need draw no distinction, therefore, under the facts in this case, between the conspiracy count and the other counts in the indictment.

[14] The books were admissible, not only as declarations of agents, but at the very least as evidence tending to show, in connection with other testimony, the knowledge on the part of appellant of the volume of sales taking place. People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 6, 106 P. 428; People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 P. 617. While the evidence does not show that the appellant made personal examinations of the books, it does show that he received reports of their contents from the bookkeepers, and there was considerable other evidence warranting the inference that he had knowledge of their contents in this respect quite apart from any presumption arising from his duty to know as the president of the corporation.

[15] If the summary of the books admitted be regarded as admissible merely as tending to show notice and knowledge, and not competent to show oversubscription as a fact, there is, independently of the summary, sufficient other evidence to show the excessive issue or sale of stock. The testimony of Mr. Penberthy, bookkeeper, auditor, and office manager for Cox, showing the weekly checks and sales accounts covering the period from June 16 to August 4, taken in connection with appellant's verified statement of the sales made to June 16, show the sales to have been over 70,000 more than permitted by the permits.

The case of People v. Blackman, 127 Cal. 248, 59 P. 573, is strongly relied on by appellant. There books were held not admissible. Inasmuch as one purpose of the offer there was to show the defendant did not keep correct books, but were falsified to enable the defendant to perpetrate and conceal the crime of embezzlement, the books were held not admissible as regular entries made in the course of business. On the other hand, the defendant's knowledge and complicity in falsifying the books was not first shown and so the books were not admissible on either theory. But it was there said:

"If there was evidence that the entries were made by the defendant or under his direction, or with his knowledge, they would most undoubtedly be competent and important evidence against him." Page 253 (59 P. 574).

[16] It is next argued that the defendant was compelled by the court to produce certain corporation records and thus give incriminating evidence against himself in violation of his constitutional right. Witness Jensen, who had been superintendent of the Doble factory and also treasurer and secretary of the corporation for a time, together with other witnesses who had had possession or access to the Doble books, were subpoenaed to bring the books to court. While the district attorney was examining the witness Jensen in an endeavor to explain the nature of the books, to ascertain why they had not been produced in court and where the books were last seen, the counsel for defendant interrupted and stated as follows:

"Mr. Van Fleet: As far as these witnesses are concerned, I can relieve the situation very easily and tell you all about it. The books are in my office, brought over there by Mr. Abner Doble, or most of the books. There was a whole truckload of books brought over this morning. What are they, stock certificates? A. Stock stubs and stock ledger cards.

"Mr. Van Fleet: Brought over this morning by Mr. Jensen and these other witnesses that you subpoenaed.

"Mr. Fitzgerald: Then I call upon you to produce those, under the subpoena. They were brought over and delivered to you instead of the court.

"Mr. Van Fleet: They weren't delivered to me.

"Mr. Fitzgerald: Where are they?

"The Witness: They are in my automobile in the Palace garage.

"Q. Why didn't you bring them here? A. There are too many of them for me to carry, and I thought the best thing to do was to park my automobile until the court told me what to do with them.

"Mr. Van Fleet: We can have them here in 10 minutes. Of course, I want to make my objection.

"Mr. Van Fleet: I want to apologize to the court for this delay. It was partly due to my own fault, your honor please; I told them to put the books in the garage until —"

A recess of 10 minutes was then taken and the witness excused, after which he returned, stating that he had brought the only books that he could find, that being the stock stub books and ledger cards. The witness also stated that Miss Capps could better identify the books and possibly tell where others were, and thereupon she was called. The examination continued concerning the location of the books of the company. She identified the records then in court as being the stock certificate stubs, the original binders and stubs of all stock certificates that had been issued. Later Mrs. Lamb, another bookkeeper, testified that she was in charge of the books and that the ledger and journal were mostly in her handwriting. It appeared from her testimony that some of the books had not yet been produced in court, but were in the office of counsel for defendant. The district attorney then called upon defendant's attorney to produce the books without the formality of a subpoena. Defendant's counsel replied, that inasmuch as he was attorney for the defendant they were not in his custody but in theirs, and the books were confidential communications and that he could not be compelled to produce evidence against the defendants. The court then excused the jury, stating that he would take up the legal objections in the absence of the jury. After the jury was excused, the district attorney asked for an order directing defendant's counsel to produce the books, stating that his demand was made solely for the purpose of laying the foundation for the introduction of copies if the originals were not produced. Defendant's counsel replied, "As to the demand, to keep the record clear, I say that they are not under my control." After further argument the court stated, "Now, I will stand corrected if this is not the fact. The record discloses here that you are now in physical custody of the books." Defendant's counsel stated, "I will say they are in my office for the purposes of the record." The court instructed defendant's counsel to produce the books in court at the next session. At the next session Mrs. Lamb was again called to the stand and was examined concerning the books, which apparently had been produced in court at that time by some one.

At one point in the examination after the books were produced and when an objection was made upon the ground that the demand for the books was made in the presence of the jury, the court admonished the jury to draw no unfavorable inference from anything that might have been said or done in relation to the books in evidence, and to disregard any statements made in relation to the production of the books.

Appellant relies upon the following authorities: McKnight v. United States (C. C. A.) 115 F. 981; Foster v. United States (C. C. A.) 178 F. 174; State v. Hollingsworth, 191 N. C. 595, 132 S. E. 667, 669; People v. Dufur, 34 Cal. App. 644, 168 P. 590; People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383.

[17] This record does not show that defendant was compelled to give evidence against himself in violation of his constitutional rights. Subpoenas duces tecum were apparently served on the bookkeepers having possession of the books, but instead of bringing the books to court in obedience to the subpoena, they were left either in the office of defendant's counsel, according to his statement, "for purposes of the record," or in an automobile, according to the testimony of the witness Jensen. The proceedings were without the presence of the jury except the demand made while the witness Jensen was being examined. These books were produced by him. The order for the remaining books was made out of the presence of the jury and for the purpose of laying the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence. These books found their way into the control of defendant's counsel after subpoena duces tecum was served. We do not understand that if a witness so subpoenaed carries the books to defendant's counsel or places them in a garage subject to his order instead of bringing them to court that they are beyond the reach of an order of the court. If the order of the court made under these circumstances was irregular the irregularity was technical and not substantial. In view of the cautionary instruction given, the irregularity was less serious than that passed in People v. Dufur, 34 Cal. App. 644, 168 P. 590, and in view of the fact that the order was made out of the presence of the jury, the proceedings compare favorably with those passed in People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383.

[18-20] The appellant attacks the sufficiency of the evidence, not upon the ground that it does not prove the offenses charged, but in these two respects: First, that there was insufficient evidence outside of the acts and declarations of the coconspirators. Second, that there was not sufficient testimony outside of that of accomplices tending to connect the appellant with the commission of the crimes charged. Some of the testimony received in evidence constituted declarations and admissions of coconspirators and was admitted on that ground; the testimony, however, of which appellant complains is not to be classed as acts or declarations of conspirators. Some of the conspirators were witnesses in the case and testified at length concerning the conferences and transactions constituting the formation and execution of the conspiracy. A distinction must be drawn between the case where acts and declarations of a conspirator are offered against him and his coconspirators by the testimony of a third person (in which case the value of the testimony consists in its character as an admission) and where sworn testimony is given in court by members of the conspiracy. The testimony of a conspirator is to be regarded as sworn testimony and not as an admission or declaration. It has been directly so held in People v. Zimmerman, 3 Cal. App. 84, 84 P. 446. However, the testimony of a coconspirator given in court, while not classed as an admission or an act or declaration out of court, is nevertheless testimony of an accomplice. Eliminating all of the testimony given by the coconspirators or accomplices, there is sufficient other evidence in the record to comply with the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code, which requires the testimony of an accomplice to be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.

The effect of adding the checks and vouchers accounting for weekly sales as testified to by Mr. Penberthy and the total sales reported over appellant's verification to the corporation commission has already been mentioned as sufficient evidence of overselling the permit. Appellant testified that weekly reports were placed on his desk by his employees stating the amount of sales made by Mr. Cox and his agents. The books of the Doble corporation were proven in connection with the testimony of several of the bookkeepers of the Doble company who were not members of the conspiracy. The appellant as a witness also admitted signing in San Francisco contract options authorizing Mr. Cox to buy and sell a large quantity of stock and admitted authorizing two other contracts calling for large minimum weekly sales and remittances. The minutes of a meeting of the corporation directors, at which appellant was present and voted, were received in evidence, and these minutes showed the ratification of the said options and other like agreements. Appellant testified that he did not know the reason for antedating the contract options. He explained the difference in sale prices of stock in the two Portland contracts as being for the purpose of allowing people who first bought to receive stock at a smaller price than those who purchased afterwards. The agreements, however, called for concurrent payments and therefore simultaneous sale of the stock mentioned in each agreement. He acknowledged receiving a letter dated May 4, in which Mr. Cox stated that, "If we are going to sell stock in Oakland and San Francisco it will be necessary to have a permit to sell additional stock." He testified that he visited the Powell street salesroom almost every night in July; that he looked at the volume of sales made at the salesroom. He also testified having been present at various conferences in which the Portland plan was agreed upon. He also testified that he paid particular attention to all questions of money received and paid out by the Doble corporation, which would embrace the large amount of money paid in excess of what would be realized from the sale of 100,000 shares and would also embrace the payment of $80,000 to Cox O. K.'d by appellant, and used to draw down stock held in the Portland escrow.

[21] The trial court sustained objections when defendant offered to prove that the Portland plan had been submitted to attorneys and to a deputy corporation commissioner. Appellant claims that this testimony should have been admitted on the issue of the intent of the accused. He relies on People v. Flanagan, 65 Cal. App. 268, 223 P. 1014, and People v. McCalla, 63 Cal. App. 783, 220 P. 436. These cases, however, distinguish between a mistake of fact and a mistake of law and point out that while an act done unintentionally may not constitute a crime, an act done intentionally is nevertheless a crime, even though the party committing the act was under a mistaken belief as to the legality of the act. No specific intent is necessary to constitute the crime of violating the Corporate Securities Act except the intent to do the acts denounced by the statute. In the McCalla Case above cited the court quotes with approval State v. Foster, 21 R. I. 251, 43 A. 66. What is there said disposes of this contention of appellant. People v. Simonsen, 64 Cal. App. 97, 220 P. 442.

[22] The court did not instruct the jury that they could not consider the acts and declarations of the coconspirators unless and until they were convinced by evidence independently of these acts and declarations that a conspiracy had been formed. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1870, subd. 6, states that evidence may be given at the trial of acts and declarations of one conspirator against the others after proof of the conspiracy. This rule undertakes to state under what condition such evidence may be given at the trial and is a question for the court in ruling on evidence. If the evidence is properly admitted it may then be considered by the jury for all purposes, and there was no necessity in the court's separating the evidence into two classes for the jury's consideration.

[23] The court instructed the jury that the mere association of individuals with an innocent purpose or with honest intent is not a conspiracy as defined by law; that while a conspiracy cannot exist without a guilty intent in the minds of the conspirators, yet this does not mean that the parties must know that they are violating the statute; that the question was whether the defendants conspired to do the things which were in violation of the law, not whether they had any knowledge that they were violating the law; that the word "intent," as used in Penal Code, § 20, means an intent to do the acts charged and does not mean that to render the act criminal there must be an intent to violate the law; that section 14 of the Corporate Securities Act makes punishable one who knowingly authorizes, directs, or aids in the sale of securities contrary to the provisions of the act; that one who knowingly performs the acts forbidden is guilty even though he had no specific intent to violate its provisions; that the word "knowingly" imports only a knowledge that the facts exist which bring the act within the provisions of the statute; and, in another place, that the jury should consider all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in considering the intent of the defendants.

[24, 25] A lack of knowledge that stock had been or was to be issued in excess of the permit would constitute acts done under a mistake of fact and be a defense; but acts purposely planned and done, such as to sell beyond or without a permit, which in law amounts to a violation of the statute, would constitute guilt, even though the defendants entertained the belief that those acts being done in a certain way would not amount to a violation of the law. The instructions complained of in this regard we think fairly stated the law applicable to the case and are in consonance rather than out of harmony with People v. Eiseman (Cal. App.) 248 P. 716, and People v. Flanagan, 65 Cal. App. 268, 273, 274, 223 P. 1014. Defendant's requested instructions 5, 6 and 7 were refused because they had the effect of stating that ignorance of the law would excuse. Instruction No. 6 contained the element of misconception or ignorance of the facts, but it was disjunctively coupled with the principle of mistake of law. The defense of mistake of fact was adequately covered by other instructions given.

[26] Neither do we think the defendant was prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct that the plea of guilty of certain codefendants was no evidence of guilt. The court included in its instructions the following:

"If on the other hand you answer that question in the affirmative (i. e., was there in fact a conspiracy formed as charged), you should then determine the question whether these defendants or either of them actively participated and entered into such conspiracy or scheme."

The defendants who pleaded guilty testified at the trial, and it would be far-fetched to say that their plea did what their testimony could not do. Defendant W. A. Doble was tried jointly with this defendant and was acquitted.

[27, 28] Defendant's requested instructions No. 61 and No. 62 were properly refused, they being misleading in form, the one assuming that in no case can an officer of a corporation be criminally liable for the acts of the corporation's agents, the other assuming facts which were for the jury's determination that both Cox and Barnard must be the agents of both defendants in order to convict either defendant.

[29] Appellant claims immunity under section 17 of the Corporate Securities Act, which provides that no person shall be prosecuted for anything concerning which he shall have been compelled to testify under oath or to produce documentary evidence. On May 21, 1924, the corporation commissioner wrote a letter to Doble Steam Motors Corporation stating:

"In order to facilitate the examination of the books of your company, it is suggested that the following books and papers be brought over to this office temporarily. (Follows a list of items.) In the event that this suggestion meets with your approval I will appreciate receiving the books and papers above described as soon as convenient to you."

The affidavit used on the motion to set aside the indictment on this ground stated that the defendants and each of them did as officers of said corporation deliver and cause to be delivered to said corporation commissioner the said books and papers described in the letter; that on the 31st of May the defendants were informed that the books were about to be turned over to the grand jury pursuant to a subpoena. Thereupon the corporation served written demands for the books and papers upon the commissioner and claiming immunity on behalf of the Doble corporations and its officers. Later similar demands were made upon the grand jury. The evidence shows that the corporation commissioner's letter was written in connection with the matter of filing an application for a further permit; that a grand jury subpoena was served on the corporation commissioner's deputy May 26; that the officers of the Doble corporation were never subpoenaed by the commissioner either to testify or bring the books. We think the record does not show the defendants were compelled to produce the books within the meaning of the immunity section of the act. The books went into the possession of the commissioner voluntarily pursuant to his letter of request. The demand for the return of the books, after the grand jury subpoena had been served on the deputy corporation commissioner having possession, did not bring the transaction within the meaning of the section which is confined to cases where the accused is compelled to give oral evidence or documentary evidence. The books having been voluntarily parted with in the beginning, the service of the subpoena should be regarded the same as though served upon any other custodian not a defendant. A different rule would have the result that admissions and incriminating statements though voluntarily given immunity was not subpoenaed, but the the continuous consent of the accused. In People v. Schwarz (Cal. App.) 248 P. 990, relied on by appellant, the defendants who were given immunity had been compelled to attend under subpoena and give oral incriminating evidence against themselves. In United States v. Armour & Co. (D. C.) 142 F. 808, also relied on by appellant, the defendant given immunity was not subpoenaed, but the circumstances under which he was required to give documentary evidence are outlined on page 811 of the decision. From these facts and from the form of the resolution under which the investigating officer was acting, the court finds that the accused did not voluntarily give the evidence. The immunity statutes there considered were also broader in that the giving of evidence as well as being compelled to give evidence was embraced within the immunity clause.

[30] It is urged that defendant's demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained upon the grounds that the facts alleged do not constitute a crime. Section 3 of the Corporate Securities Act forbids any company to sell, offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, or take subscriptions for any security of its own issue until it shall have first secured a permit. Section 14 provides that:

"Every officer, agent, or employee of any company, and every other person, who knowingly authorizes, directs, or aids in the issue or sale of * * * any security, * * * contrary to the provisions of this act, * * * or willfully violates or fails to comply with any of the provisions of this * * * act, is guilty of a public offense," etc.

The counts of the indictment carefully follow the language of section 14, under which the defendants were charged, and instead of stopping with the language of this section which denounces subscriptions, sales, etc., contrary to the provisions of the act, go further and specify the respect in which the defendant's participation in the subscriptions, sales, etc., were in violation of the act, and, in doing so, follow in turn the language of section 3. Fairly and plainly considered, the counts charge more than acts which would amount to a legal sale by a stockholder of his privately owned shares. The allegation is equivalent to an allegation of ownership by the corporation of the securities sold.

[31] It is contended that the several counts of the indictment each charge more than one offense, to wit, "offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, and take subscriptions for stock," as denounced in section 3, and the other "authorize, direct and aid in the sale of, cause and assist in causing stock to be sold," as denounced by section 14. Section 3 defines a crime by a company, section 14 a crime by an officer of a company and by other individuals. The defendants, being individuals, cannot be directly charged under the terms of section 3, but can be charged under section 14 with selling or assisting in the sale of stock in a way that causes the company to violate section 3. The counts each charge only one crime in this way and are not open to the objection urged by appellant. People v. Barnard, 63 Cal. App. 562, 219 P. 756, and People v. Plath, 166 Cal. 229, 135 P. 954, are very much dissimilar.

[32] It appears that no stenographic reporter reported the testimony of the witnesses appearing before the grand jury at the hearings resulting in this indictment. The district attorney did not demand it for these hearings, although a stenographic reporter had been sworn generally for this grand jury and reported other cases. It is contended that if a reporter is used on any hearing before a grand jury that then, under the provisions of Penal Code, § 925, he must attend and report all hearings, and that the defendant has a right to a transcript of testimony in case he is indicted by such grand jury. The part of the section of which an interpretation is asked reads:

"The grand jury, on demand of the district attorney, whenever criminal cases are being investigated before them, must appoint a competent stenographic reporter to be sworn and to report the testimony that may be given in such cases in shorthand, and to transcribe the same in all cases where an indictment is returned. If an indictment has been found against a defendant, a copy of the testimony given in his case before the grand jury shall be served upon him," etc.

The section requires the grand jury to appoint when two conditions coexist, first the demand of the district attorney, and second "whenever criminal causes are being investigated." This latter language if given any effect at all must mean that such demand and appointment may occur at one time when criminal causes are being investigated and that at another time when other criminal causes are being investigated such demand and appointment may not occur. We understand that such has been the interpretation of the practice. At a time when this section read much the same the Supreme Court referred to it as being optional with the district attorney whether the proceedings should be reported or not. In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 636, 78 P. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840. People v. Delhantje, 163 Cal. 463, 125 P. 1066; People v. Arnold, 17 Cal. App. 68, 118 P. 729, is not contrary. That case holds that it is not necessary to reswear the reporter for each and every case in which he acts, but that the one general oath administered by the foreman of the grand jury for all cases coming before that body is sufficient.

[33] The court properly sustained objections to questions put for the purpose of showing the disposition of the money derived from the sale of stock and stock subscriptions. This was not an issue in the case, and the court so instructed the jury.

We have reviewed the entire case and are convinced the appellant had a fair trial. The errors assigned are technical and not substantial. The evidence shows plainly that the appellant knowingly participated in the persistent endeavors of his fellow officers and agents to continue selling stock of the corporation to the public in California after he well knew the permits had been exhausted and that new permits were not obtainable.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

PEOPLE v. MARKS et al. (Cr. 1477.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 25, 1927.

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 125(5½)—Information charging conspiracy in two counts held to charge but one offense (Pen. Code, § 518).

Information charging conspiracy to commit crime of extortion, defined in Pen. Code, § 518, in one count, and conspiracy to falsely move and maintain suit, action, and proceeding in second count, held to involve single transaction and to charge commission of but one offense.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 982—On conviction under information charging only single offense of conspiracy, though in two counts, court could not grant probation and at same time sentence defendant to imprisonment.

On conviction under information containing only single charge of conspiracy in two counts, trial court had no authority to grant probation to defendant on one count and at same time to sentence her on other count to term of imprisonment in county jail.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 982—Where court, after conviction under two counts charging only single offense, granted probation, and at same time sentenced defendant, result was as though no judgment had been rendered.

Where court, after conviction under two counts containing only single charge of conspiracy, granted probation to defendant, and at same time sentenced her to term of imprisonment in state prison, result was as though no judgment had been rendered.

4. Habeas corpus $\S$ 30(3)—Where court granted probation and at same time sentenced defendant to imprisonment for single offense, defendant was not entitled to release.

Where court, on conviction of what was single charge of conspiracy in two counts granted probation to defendant and at same time sentenced her to term of imprisonment in state prison, defendant was not entitled to be released because of error.

5. Conspiracy ⚡47—Conviction of defendant for conspiring to commit extortion and to falsely maintain an action held justified by evidence.

In prosecution for conspiring to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, finding that defendant was an active participant in crime and conviction of defendant held justified by evidence.

6. Criminal law ⚡742(1)—Credibility of witnesses is solely for jury.

Jury is sole judge of credibility of witnesses.

7. Criminal law ⚡1037(2)—Without assignment of questions by district attorney as misconduct and requested instruction to disregard, misconduct will not be reviewed by Court of Appeals.

Where defendant failed to assign asking of questions by district attorney as misconduct, and did not request instruction to disregard or to admonish district attorney to refrain from such further practices, and did not show questions were asked in bad faith, misconduct by district attorney will not generally be reviewed by Court of Appeals.

8. Criminal law ⚡706—District attorney's redirect examination as to whether person brought into record by defendant was under arrest and thief, excluded by court, held not to show misconduct.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, redirect examination by district attorney of state's witness as to whether person brought into record by defendant's cross-examination was under arrest and a thief, excluded by court, and not shown to have been made in bad faith, held not to disclose misconduct by district attorney.

9. Criminal law ⚡706—District attorney's cross-examination of defendant, prosecuted for conspiring to commit extortion, as to whether she lived in apartment under her name, held not misconduct.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, cross-examination by district attorney of defendant as to whether she lived in apartment under her name, excluded by court on objection that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, held not to disclose misconduct by district attorney as raising inference that defendant lived there under different name.

10. Criminal law ⚡706—District attorney's cross-examination of defendant to prove flight, excluded by court and instructed to be disregarded, held not to show misconduct.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, cross-examination of defendant by district attorney as to whether she hid in dressing room when officers came, to prove flight, held not to show misconduct by district attorney, where defendant made no suggestion that examination was unfair and improper at time, and court sustained objections to all offers of such proof and admonished jury not to consider same.

11. Criminal law ⚡1037(1)—Misconduct by district attorney, to be complained of on appeal, must be objected to.

Objections must be made to prejudicial misconduct of district attorney as basis for complaint in appellate court.

12. Criminal law ⚡780(3)—Instruction leaving question whether one is accomplice to jury requiring corroboration held not misleading, though unnecessary, in view of instruction that particular witness was accomplice.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, instruction that whether one is an accomplice is for jury to determine from all the testimony, and that conviction cannot be had on accomplice's testimony unless corroborated by other evidence connecting defendant with commission of offense, held correct, and not misleading, though instruction could have been omitted in view of succeeding instructions that particular witness was accomplice.

13. Criminal law ⚡823(12)—Instruction that state's witness was accomplice and testimony must be corroborated by testimony connecting defendant with crime held not error, viewing other instructions.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit extortion and to falsely maintain action, instruction that state's witness was to be considered as an accomplice and that her testimony must be corroborated by other testimony connecting defendant with crime to authorize conviction, held not error, in view of other instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

On an information charging Carl H. Marks and others with conspiring to commit the crime of extortion and of falsely maintaining an action, Gladys Nichols was convicted, and she appeals. Judgment set aside, with directions that trial court arraign defendant for judgment and sentence as required by law.

A. D. Orme, of Pasadena, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. The information filed by the district attorney of the county of Los Angeles in this case contained two counts, count 1 charging the defendants with conspiring to commit the crime of extortion, and count 2 charging the defendants with conspiring to falsely maintain an action or suit. After a trial had on the information, the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant Nichols guilty under each count of the information and thereafter the court pronounced judgment granting her probation for five years on count 1, and sentencing her to the county jail of Los Angeles county for the term of two years on count

2. From said judgment and order of the trial court denying her motion for a new trial, the defendant Gladys Nichols prosecutes this appeal.

It is the contention of the defendant: First, that the information, although containing two counts, charges but one offense; second, that the evidence introduced by the prosecution is insufficient as a matter of law to sustain the conviction of this defendant upon either count of the information; and, third, that the instructions given by the trial court are so inconsistent and confusing that it is impossible to determine which of the instructions was followed by the jury and applied to the evidence in the case.

[1-4] In so far as the first point is concerned, involving the law of the case, the matter was before the first division of this court in Re Nichols (Cal. App.) 255 P. 244. In that matter it was "the contention of petitioner that the order made by the trial court on the so-called first count of the information in granting probation to petitioner the court exhausted its jurisdiction" (inadvertently stated by the court as "exceeded" its jurisdiction) "and that the sentence imposed on petitioner under the second count of the information was in excess of the jurisdiction of said court and consequently was a nullity." In an exhaustive opinion written by Mr. Justice Houser, the court determined these issues, and we are entirely satisfied with the reasoning and conclusion of the court in that opinion, and adopt the same as the law of this case on the matters therein adjudicated. The opinion states:

"In the first count of the information, as hereinbefore set forth, petitioner was charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit the crime of extortion, in that she and two other persons named therein 'did wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, wickedly, and fraudulently conspire, combine, confederate, and agree with Carl H. Marks and Hilda E. Daws, and each with the other, to commit a felony, to wit, the crime of extortion, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that thereafter, and in furtherance of the conspiracy aforesaid, the said defendant Gladys Nichols, together with Carl H. Marks and Hilda E. Daws, did call up the said R. J. Johnson on the telephone and make an appointment for a demonstration of an automobile, and did go out with said R. J. Johnson for demonstration, and did rent a room in the Crawford Apartments at No. 941 South Georgia street, in which the said R. J. Johnson was to be trapped with Hilda E. Daws, and did make an appointment with the said R. J. Johnson to go to said room with Hilda E. Daws, and did watch the said Hilda E. Daws and R. J. Johnson go up to said apartment, and did thereafter enter the said room and surprise the said R. J. Johnson therein in company with the said Hilda E. Daws, and did demand money from the said R. J. Johnson, and did threaten to sue the said R. J. Johnson for alienation of affections, and did hire and employ an attorney for the purpose of suing the said R. J. Johnson, and for the purpose of thereby and therein, as aforesaid, of extorting and obtaining money from the said R. J. Johnson, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc. "Without setting forth the language of the second count of the information, it may suffice to state that thereby petitioner was charged with the commission of the crime of conspiracy to falsely move and maintain a suit, action, and proceeding by doing and performing substantially the same acts as were set forth in the first count, together with the additional allegation that petitioner and her confederates 'did falsely pretend and represent that Carl H. Marks was married to Hilda E. Daws, and did thereby and therein conspire to falsely maintain a suit for alienation of the affections aforesaid.' The act alleged to have been committed by the defendant in the first count of the criminal action by which a conspiracy to commit one criminal act was charged was therefore substantially restated in the second count by which the defendant was charged with having committed a different offense. The only difference between the allegations in the two counts was that in the second count the falsity of the pretension of the conspirators that Hilda E. Daws was the wife of Carl H. Marks was alleged, which allegation was omitted from the first count."

After quoting from section 518 of the Penal Code, defining extortion and from People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 P. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, People v. Sanders, 188 Cal. 744, 207 P. 380, and People v. Johnson, 22 Cal. App. 362, 134 P. 339, the court concludes:

"With reference to the two counts in the information in the case here being considered, it is clear that the basis therefor was a single transaction and involved but one conspiracy. In the case of United States v. Weiss (D. C.) 293 F. 992, in which one of the questions before the court was that of the right of the prosecution to charge several different criminal offenses where they arose out of one conspiracy, the following language appears: 'At the threshold it must be noted that the government cannot split up one conspiracy into different indictments, and prosecute all of them, but that prosecution for any part of a single crime bars any further prosecution based upon the whole or a part of the same crime. Murphy v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 285 F. 804 at page 816; In re Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 7 S. Ct. 556, 30 L. Ed. 658; 16 Corpus Juris, 270, and cases there cited.'"

The court further fortifies its conclusion by citations from the cases of People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, People v. Powell, 50 Cal. App. 436, 195 P. 456, People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 79 P. 965, and People v. Eagan, 116 Cal. 287, 48 P. 120, and concludes that:

"Assuming that the authorities hereinbefore cited satisfactorily establish the conclusion that but a single transaction was involved in the aggregate of the allegations contained in both the first and the second counts of the information, and that the defendant therein was legally charged with the commission of but one offense, the question of the effect of the action of the trial court in granting the defendant probation as to the 'first count' and sentencing her to state prison on the 'second count' remains for consideration."

It is to be noted that the statement that the defendant was sentenced to state's prison was inadvertently made as the judgment of the trial court was that the defendant should be imprisoned in the county jail of Los Angeles county.

On the second phase of the case the first division of this court quotes from the case entitled In the Matter of the Application of Cyril J. O'Connor (Cal. App.) 252 P. 730, the case entitled In re Fink (Cal. App.) 250 P. 714, and People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998, from which latter case the court quotes as follows:

"In the Mendosa Case (178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998), the judgment of the trial court was that the defendant be imprisoned in the state prison; that the sentence be suspended and the defendant remanded to the custody of the sheriff and confined in the county jail until the further order of the court; and, while it was held therein that such a judgment was illegal in that there was no authority in law for the action of the court in suspending the execution of the sentence and at the same time remanding the defendant to the custody of the sheriff to be confined in the county jail, and consequently that such judgment should be reversed, it was also ruled that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial by reason of such error, but that the trial court should again arraign defendant for judgment and thereupon proceed to pronounce a proper judgment on the conviction legally obtained. The error, therefore, was not fatal in the sense that it was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant. It did not have the effect of exhausting the jurisdiction of the trial court so as to prevent it from pronouncing a new or different judgment. And so, in the case under consideration, it is manifest that on a conviction on what we have held was a single charge of conspiracy the trial court had no authority to grant probation to the defendant and at the same time to sentence her to a term of imprisonment in the state prison. The court might have done either the one thing or the other, but clearly not both of them. Like the judgment in the Mendosa Case, the defendant could not be under a sentence to the state prison and at the same time be either released on probation or remanded to the custody of the sheriff to be confined in the county jail. The two respective conditions of the judgment are so opposed one to the other that neither is capable of enforcement without doing extreme violence to, if not destroying, the other. The result is as though no judgment had been rendered. However, reasoning from the decision in the Mendosa Case, we are constrained to hold that the error committed by the trial court should not avail to the end that the release of the petitioner should be ordered. As is said in the Matter of Smith, 152 Cal. 566, 567, 93 P. 191, 192: 'It does not by any means follow that the prisoner must be discharged if the judgment and commitment are void. * * * The contention on the part of the prisoner that the sentence pronounced * * * is utterly void for the purpose of committing him to the state prison, but is nevertheless valid for the purpose of vacating the bench warrant, and ending the felony case, is illogical in the last degree, and finds no support in the decisions which he cites.' The intention of the trial court in the premises is perfectly clear, and petitioner has suffered nothing so far as her substantial rights are concerned by reason of the error on which the petition is predicated * * * it is ordered that the writ be discharged, and that the petitioner be and she is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, with directions to the superior court to arraign petitioner for judgment and thereupon to proceed in the manner required by law."

Adopting the foregoing as the judgment of this court on the questions of law involved in the discussion we come to the remaining issues raised by the appellant on this appeal: First, the insufficiency of the evidence as a matter of law to sustain the conviction of the defendant on either count; second, errors of law occurring at the trial; third, confusing and inconsistent instructions; and, fourth, misconduct of the district attorney.

[5] We are satisfied from a careful examination of the record that the evidence amply justified the verdict. Indeed, if the testimony of Hilda Daws, an accomplice, is sufficiently corroborated, the evidence as to the guilt of the defendant is overwhelming. We think that the court fully and correctly instructed the jury upon all matters of law involved in the case, and that there is no merit in appellant's contention that the conviction was not good either in law or in fact. If the jury believed the witnesses for the prosecution, and evidently they did, there was ample evidence to support a verdict of guilty as against the appellant. There is no doubt but that the conspiracy was formed and that the perpetrators intended to hold up the complaining witness Johnson for a large sum of money. The people called Hilda Daws, one of the alleged conspirators, as a witness for the prosecution, and it is on this phase of the case that the major contention of the appellant is predicated; it being her contention that Hilda Daws was an accomplice, with which we fully agree, and that her testimony was not sufficiently or at all corroborated. We have carefully examined the testimony in the case and are satisfied that the facts and circumstances are such that a finding that the appellant was an active participant at every stage in the proceedings might fairly be augmented by the statement that she was the brains of the enterprise.

There is ample evidence in the record to show these facts: That the appellant had known the complaining witness Johnson for several years prior to the birth of this attempted holdup; that she had been a witness in a divorce action between Johnson and his wife; that he had several business transactions with her in the way of money loans; that neither of the other conspirators had ever known Johnson personally, and, such information as they acquired came from the appellant; that some one telephoned to Johnson to meet Hilda Daws for the purpose of demonstrating an automobile (and, as the appellant was the only one who personally knew Johnson, it would seem that it would be a fair inference that she did the telephoning); that Johnson, in response to this telephone message, did meet Hilda Daws and demonstrated an automobile with the view of selling the same to her; that the appellant and Hilda Daws lived together and were intimate friends and associates for six weeks prior to the time of the attempted holdup; that they lived three weeks at the McKenzie Hotel, two weeks at an apartment house on Coronado street, and from there went to the apartment house at 1213 Shatto street, at which place they were residing at the time of the commission of the offense set out in the information; that the codefendant and coconspirator Marks had been on terms of friendly intercourse with the appellant and Hilda Daws for many weeks prior to the 13th day of September, the date upon which Johnson was taken by Hilda Daws to the Crawford Apartments; that he visited with the two women daily, and several times each day; that the appellant had resided at the Crawford Apartments, where Johnson and Hilda Daws were trapped by Marks, during the months of April and May of the same year; that she was the only one of the conspirators who had ever lived at or known of the Crawford Apartments; that Hess, who was employed by Marks to prosecute the suits contemplated by the conspirators, was the attorney for the appellant, and had attended to business for her long prior to and up to the date of the trapping; that he had never served either Marks or Hilda Daws, and that Marks had never known of his existence. There is evidence that Mrs. Daws had visited Hess' office with the appellant on some prior occasion. The evidence shows that the day after the trapping of Johnson Marks went to Hess' office and was followed by the appellant and Hilda Daws. Marks denies that he was at the office when the women were there, but this is disputed by Hess. At this meeting with Hess, the appellant and Hilda Daws were in his private office while Marks sat in the anteroom; Marks denied that he saw the women and the appellant states that she has no recollection of seeing Marks there. While the appellant and Mrs. Daws were in the inner office, Hilda Daws was questioned by Hess as to her relationship with Marks and as to the facts occurring at the Crawford Apartments; the appellant testified that she paid no attention to the conversation, but was writing a letter. Attorney Hess says she was present during the whole time, and that he did not observe that she was writing any letter, and was within hearing of the conversation. The appellant had admittedly been informed of the meeting between Johnson and Hilda Daws at the Crawford Apartments on the night before; admittedly she knew that Hilda Daws was not the wife of Marks. In the interview with Hess, Hilda Daws had informed him in the presence of the appellant that she was the wife of Marks, and gave the time and place of her marriage to him. At the conclusion of this interview in Hess' office, Hilda Daws departed and left the appellant and Hess alone, at which time they discussed their business affairs. At this interview between the appellant and Hess in his private office, the appellant did not give him any information as to the criminal designs of Marks and Hilda Daws, although at the time she knew that the statements of Hilda Daws were untrue as to her marriage with Marks, and she knew that there had been an attempted hold-up of Johnson at the Crawford Apartments. Parenthetically it may be said that this of itself is sufficient grounds for a reasonable inference that she was a party to the unholy alliance. The testimony shows that she had degrees from two universities, was an educated woman, and it would seem incredible that, unless she was thoroughly saturated with the criminal instinct, she should have silently sat by and tolerated the prosecution of this nefarious scheme against Johnson.

There is this further testimony and circumstance in connection with this matter: After the arrest of the appellant and Hilda Daws, a conversation was heard in the county jail between these women by another inmate of this institution, Hazel Leininger. The three women were in attendance on a Sunday evening party in the county jail. The witness Hazel Leininger said:

"Mrs. Nichols asked Mrs. Daws if she had signed any confession and Mrs. Daws says, 'No; why?' Mrs. Nichols said: 'Don't sign any confession or let them know I know anything about this, and I can get out, and then I can get you out in about ten days.'"

[6] No good purpose would be served in quoting verbatim the testimony set out in the above recital. Suffice it to say that there is testimony to support every recital of fact from witnesses other than Hilda Daws. Some of this testimony was contradicted, an immaterial circumstance, as the jury was the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses. In view of this recital, and it is not exhaustive of all of the facts that might be gleaned from the record, and in view of the well-settled state of the law as to the quantum of evidence required to corroborate an accomplice, we feel that there is no merit in the contention of the defendant as to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence. In the case of People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 553, 231 P. 767, the court says:

"It is conceded by the respondent that Talbott was an accomplice of defendant Kelly—the only question in regard to appellant's contention being as to the sufficiency of the corroborating evidence. Talbott testified fully regarding the commission of the offense by himself, aided and abetted by defendant Kelly, and two witnesses gave evidence of Kelly's admission after his arrest, in substance, that he received a part of the money which was embezzled, and that, if permitted to do so, he would phone to some of his friends and would be able to procure the money to clear up the shortage. An early case (People v. Ames, 39 Cal. 403) lays down certain illuminating principles with reference to the construction which should be placed upon the statute in question. Among other things, it is there pointed out that even if such evidence raised, 'a suspicion of the guilt of the accused' the demands of the statute would be met. But that doctrine has since been repudiated, and it may now be regarded as settled law that the corroborating evidence will not be sufficient if it be of no greater strength than to justify a mere suspicion of defendant's guilt. People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480; People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 482, 24 P. 32; People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 P. 198; People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 620, 46 P. 601; People v. Bunkers, 2 Cal. App. 205, 84 P. 364, 370. On the other hand, it is not necessary that such incriminating evidence be corroborative of each and every fact testified to by the accomplice; but all that is required is that, standing alone, it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. It may be slight (People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616), and of itself entitled to but little consideration (People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 482, 24 P. 32). 'It is not required that it be absolutely convincing; nor need it extend to every fact and detail covered by the statements of the accomplices.' People v. Bunkers, 2 Cal. App. 205, 84 P. 364, 370. 'It need not be strong; it is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, though if it stood alone it would be entitled to but little weight (citing case). Nor need it extend to every fact and detail covered by the statements of the accomplice.' People v. Kunz, 73 Cal. 313, 14 P. 836; People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449. People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 620, 46 P. 601. Neither need it be evidence tending to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice.' People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449. To the same effect, see People v. Garwood, 11 Cal. App. 665, 106 P. 113; People v. Leavens, 12 Cal. App. 178, 106 P. 1103; People v. Martin, 19 Cal. App. 295, 125 P. 919. Clearly a confession by the defendant on trial would be a sufficient corroboration. People v. Tobin, 39 Cal. App. 76, 179 P. 443; People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 P. 20; People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393, 400. It is held in the case of People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 574, 46 P. 611, that an admission by the defendant which showed his criminal connection with the commission of the offense was all the corroboration that was required. To the same point is the language in People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 563, 120 P. 20, where it is said: 'Her evidence was sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to warrant the introduction of evidence of admissions or confessions on the part of defendant for purposes of the necessary corroboration.' In the Armstrong Case the admissions made by the defendant were far from amounting to a confession of guilt; indeed, in many respects they were susceptible of an interpretation which would show his innocence of guilty intent. Notwithstanding such fact, the court held it to be a sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice. The defendant in the instant case did not make a full confession. What he did say was in effect that he had received a part of the stolen funds, and that if given an opportunity he would 'clear up the shortage.' Bearing in mind that an admission is sufficient; that it need not be strong, but, to the contrary, that it may be slight; that if standing alone it might be entitled to but little weight; and that it need not extend to every fact testified to by the accomplice—we are constrained to hold that the requirements of the statute were fulfilled in that the admission of the defendant tended to connect him with the commission of the offense."

[7] The appellant's next contention is based upon the acts of alleged misconduct on the part of the district attorney during the progress of the trial. Several instances are cited wherein it is contended improper and prejudicial questions were asked by the district attorney. In no instance did appellant assign the asking of any question as misconduct, nor did she request the trial court to instruct the jury to disregard the questions or admonish the district attorney to refrain from such further practices. Furthermore it is not shown by the appellant, nor does the appellant indicate, that the questions were asked in bad faith. In view of the well-settled law in this state that, in the absence of such assignment and request, the appellate courts will not go into the matter of misconduct of prosecuting officers, we might properly leave the matter at this point. In deference to the exhaustive discussion of this matter and the patient industry exhibited by counsel in presenting it to the court, we shall consider some of the assignments of misconduct presented by him.

[8] During the cross-examination of Hilda Daws, the appellant endeavored to establish as a fact that she (the appellant) had placed in the hands of one Brody, a friend, associate, and acquaintance of the alleged conspirators, her diamonds, in order that he might procure a loan on them. On redirect examination, the district attorney asked the witness if this was the—"same Brody now under arrest for shooting up the Haney girls, and isn't he a thief and an associate of thieves?"

"Mr. Eddy, Counsel for Appellant: The only reason I want to object to that is I am afraid on account of its immateriality, I won't have a chance to cross-examine, so I will have to object, but, if the court will let me cross-examine, I won't object at all.

"The Court: I am more inclined to sustain the objection and admonish the jury that Brody is not on trial here."

"Mr. McIsaac, Deputy District Attorney: I withdraw the question."

The appellant brought Brody into the record and it does not appear that the redirect examination was or could be construed to be in bad faith or with any improper motive, assuming that the question was objectionable.

[9] Another assignment arose out of the fact that the district attorney, out of the presence of the jury, stated that he intended to call a witness who would testify that the appellant lived at the Crawford Apartments under the name of Williams. The court stated that he would permit the former but not the latter part. Subsequently the district attorney asked the appellant on cross-examination if she had lived in the Crawford Apartments under the name of Nichols, to which an objection was made by counsel for the defendant and was sustained. The most that can be said of this is that it was subject to the inference that she may have lived there under a different name. The only objection to this by the attorney for the defendant was that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, which objection was sustained. Clearly there was no misconduct in that respect.

[10] The next and only other assignment of misconduct justifying special consideration, if any of them do, is suggested by the following proceedings:

"Question by the District Attorney (appellant on the stand): When the officers came you hid, didn't you? A. No, sir; I was back—I was in the dressing room. Q. You didn't ask the officers what the trouble was? A. No one asked for me either. Don't forget that. Q. You are sure of that? A. Absolutely. No one searched the apartment or no one asked for me. Q. Why did you keep hid in the closet—

"Mr. Eddie: Just a minute. Object to the question as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: You were both talking at once. I didn't get the question.

"Mr. McIsaac: This is along the line of flight. This witness concealed herself when the officers arrived.

"The Court: Read the question.

"Mr. Eddie: Nothing testified to on direct examination about being hid in a closet.

"Mr. McIsaac: There has been a wide range of direct examination, and I have a right to cover the field on cross. If this witness made an effort to conceal herself from the officers it is material. * * *

"Mr. Eddie: They can prove flight by other witnesses. There is no evidence here of flight at all. They are undertaking to make this witness a witness against herself.

"Mr. McIsaac: Withdraw the question."

There is nothing in that statement to justify any accusation as to the district attorney's fairness or to impute to him any improper motive in asking the question, and, in view of the fact that no suggestion by the attorney for appellant that it was unfair or improper was made at the time, it probably did not occur to him or to the jury that there was any such element involved in the question. The court sustained objections to all offers of proof made by the district attorney that have been made the basis for an assignment of misconduct, and generally admonished the jury that they were not to consider the same. The instructions by the court on this phase of the case are such that, even if proper and necessary assignments of misconduct had been taken by counsel for the appellant, we would be constrained to hold that no substantial right of the appellant was infringed by reason of any conduct of the district attorney in the prosecution of the trial. With reference to this matter, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"* * * If any evidence has been admitted and afterwards stricken out, you must disregard the matter so stricken out entirely, and if any counsel has intimated by questions which the court has not permitted to be answered, that certain things are, or are not, true, you must disregard such questions and refrain from any inferences based upon them. If counsel, upon either side, have made any statements in your presence concerning the facts in the case, you must be careful not to regard such statements as evidence, and must look entirely to the proof in ascertaining what the facts are. * * *

[11] In conclusion, upon this aspect of the case, we may well say that objections must be made to prejudicial misconduct of the district attorney as a basis for a complaint in the appellate court. As was well stated in the case of People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 333, at page 369, 202 P. 51, 67:

"It frequently happens that in the heat of a trial counsel ask improper questions. But judgments cannot be reversed for an inadvertence of this character, unless, from an examination of the record, we may be of the opinion that it has caused a miscarriage of justice. In view of the court's prompt rulings and instructions to disregard the questions which it will be presumed were heeded by the jury, it cannot be said that defendant's cause suffered by reason of anything contained in these questions, however improper they may have been."

In quoting the last phrase above we do not wish to be understood as implying that questions propounded by the district attorney in the instant case are subject to such a criticism.

[12] The remaining question to which particular attention is called by the appellant as a reason for reversing the judgment is based upon an attack upon an instruction by the trial court. It is appellant's contention in this behalf that the instructions are so entirely inconsistent and confusing that it is impossible to determine which of the instructions were applied by the jury to the evidence in the case. As an illustration of this contention, appellant calls attention to the following instructions:

"(1) Whether or not one is an accomplice as defined in these instructions, is for the jury to determine from all the testimony and circumstances in proof in the case.

"(2) A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof.

"(3) You are instructed that Mrs. Daws, who has testified in this case is to be considered by you as an accomplice.

"(4) You are instructed that, unless you find the testimony of the witness Mrs. Daws corroborated by other evidence which has been introduced in this case which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged, you must find the defendant not guilty."

[13] The first instruction was a correct statement of the general principles of law as to the corroboration of accomplices, and, in view of the succeeding instructions, all of which were given at the instance of the appellant, it might well have been omitted, but to say that these are uncertain or misleading is to do violence to the English language and convict jurors of supreme stupidity. The jury is told specifically in two separate instructions that Mrs. Daws was an accomplice, and in one that as such her testimony must be corroborated or the defendant acquitted. As intelligent men and women, upon reading or hearing those instructions read, the jury could have arrived at no other conclusion than that the defendant could not be convicted unless there was corroboration of Mrs. Daws' testimony, as outlined by the other instructions given by the court. Furthermore we are of the opinion that, if the first instruction above quoted alone had been given, no sane juror, after a consideration of all the facts and circumstances adduced in the case, could have had any doubt whatever that Mrs. Daws was an accomplice. She was the instrumentality through which the proposed badger game was to be accomplished. She was the most active person involved in the transaction, and no juror could have been so dense as to have had any doubt as to the fact of her being one of the conspirators. As a whole, the instructions by the court were full, fair, and comprehensive, and our attention has not been called to a single instruction that does not correctly state the law.

It results from the foregoing opinion that the judgment of the court, admitting the appellant to probation on count 1 of the information should be set aside; the judgment of the court sentencing appellant to the county jail for a term of years upon the second count be set aside; and that the court be, and it is hereby, directed to arraign the defendant for judgment and sentence and proceed therewith in the manner required by law.

CLIFF v. CALIFORNIA SPRAY-CHEMICAL CO. (Civ. 3258.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 26, 1927.

1. Pleading $\S$ 20—Complaint, alleging that seller of chemical solution causing plaintiff's injuries acted either as defendant's agent or as retailer, held bad on demurrer.

Complaint, alleging that one, from whom plaintiff purchased chemical solution causing injuries complained of, acted either as defendant manufacturer's agent or as retailer, held bad on demurrer.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1040(10)—Defendant recovering judgment was not prejudiced by overruling of demurrer to complaint.

Defendant recovering judgment was not prejudiced by erroneous overruling of demurrer for alternative allegation in complaint.

3. Poisons $\S$ 6—Evidence against manufacturer for injuries by chemical solution, purchased from dealer, held insufficient for jury.

In action for injury to plaintiff's eye by chemical solution, purchased from one to whom defendant manufacturer sold it, spurring from container when opened by plaintiff, evidence held insufficient to take case to jury.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1061(4)—Defendant, for which jury returned verdict, was not prejudiced by denial of directed verdict.

Denial of directed verdict was not prejudicial to defendant, where jury returned verdict in its favor.

5. Poisons $\S$ 6—One injured by chemical solution, purchased from one to whom manufacturer sold it, can recover from latter only in tort.

There being no contractual relations between manufacturer of chemical solution and purchaser thereof from another, to whom manufacturer sold it, recovery for purchaser's injuries caused thereby can be had only in tort.

6. Poisons $\S$ 6—Purchaser cannot recover for injuries caused by substance purchased, unless danger was imminent, inherent, and concealed by seller.

One injured by compound or substance purchased by him can recover only if it was imminently and inherently dangerous and such danger was concealed by seller.

7. Poisons $\S$ 6—Seller must have knowledge that compound was imminently and inherently dangerous, to be liable for injuries to subsequent purchaser.

Seller must have had knowledge, or circumstances connected with preparation and marketing of compound or substance sold must have been such as to charge him with knowledge, that it was imminently and inherently dangerous, to render him liable for injuries to subsequent purchaser.

8. Poisons ⚡—Instruction on manufacturer's liability for negligence in preparing chemical solution causing injury, held not error.

In action for injuries by chemical substance, purchased by plaintiff from one to whom defendant manufacturer sold it, instruction that defendant could not be held liable for negligence in manufacturing and preparing solution, unless it knew or should have known, and concealed its knowledge, of dangerous defect when it shipped solution, or solution was imminently and inherently dangerous without plaintiff's knowledge, held not error.

9. Appeal and error ⚡—1052(8)—Errors cannot be held prejudicial, where judgment was only one possible under admitted facts and law applicable.

Where judgment, under admitted facts and law applicable, was only one that could be entered, alleged errors, as in admitting testimony, cannot be held prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by A. J. Cliff against the California Spray-Chemical Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Schottky & Soliss and Ostrander & Ostrander, all of Merced, for appellant.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant had judgment in an action begun and prosecuted by the plaintiff to recover damages for an injury resulting to one of his eyes from the alleged negligence of the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that during all of the times mentioned therein the defendant was engaged in the manufacture and sale of a certain chemical solution, known as and called "Ortho Lime Sulphur Solution," for use in orchards and vineyards in spraying trees and vines; that said solution, for the purpose of marketing, was placed in drums or containers of about 50 gallons' capacity; that on or about the 12th day of January, 1923, plaintiff purchased at Atwater, in the county of Merced, state of California, several barrels of said solution manufactured by the defendant from one C. J. Pregno, "who was at said time acting either as an agent for said defendant or as a dealer in said Ortho Lime Sulphur Solution"; that thereafter and on or about the 27th day of February, 1923, plaintiff, intending to use said solution for spraying purposes and without any knowledge of any danger therefrom or warning by the defendant of any danger, attempted to remove the plug from one of the containers, which was the method provided by defendant for opening the same and removing the solution therefrom, and, while so doing, by reason of the negligence of defendant, the plug was suddenly thrown out of its hole by explosive force within the barrel or container, and said solution contained therein was suddenly and with great force expelled and thrown out of the container, striking plaintiff in and about the face and body, a portion thereof striking his left eye and so severely injuring the same that the sight thereof was entirely destroyed; that thereafter, on the 1st day of November, 1923, said eye was removed by one Brett Davis, a duly licensed physician and surgeon, etc.

[1, 2] The complaint further alleges that the injury was occasioned solely by the negligence of the defendant, by reason of its carelessness and negligence in the manufacture and preparation of said solution for marketing and use, and its failure to warn plaintiff of any injury in connection therewith. To this complaint the defendant interposed a general and special demurrer. One of the special grounds of demurrer was directed against the alternative pleading, relative to C. J. Pregno acting either as an agent of the defendant or as a retailer in said Ortho Lime Sulphur Solution. The demurrer upon this ground was well taken. See Jamison v. King, 50 Cal. 132; 21 Cal. Jur. p. 42, § 22. However, as the defendant had judgment, no prejudice has resulted from such ruling.

[3] The record shows that the defendant, a manufacturer of spray materials, sold the material in question to one C. J. Pregno, a retailer at Atwater, in Merced county; that Pregno sold it to the Atwater Fruit Exchange, a co-operative association, of which the plaintiff was a member, which, in turn, sold the same to the plaintiff; that there were no contractual relations existing between the plaintiff and the defendant. The material in question was a compound containing 10 per cent. lime, 20 per cent. sulphur, and 70 per cent. water, practically uniform in character and quality with other brands of spray material in use among orchardists. The record also shows that the material in the drum or container was correctly labeled; that it was neither explosive nor poisonous, and only slightly caustic; that it would irritate the flesh, but not violently. This is in accordance with the testimony of the chemist called by the plaintiff. This witness also testified that the compound has no more volatility than water, and that it had no more tendency to expand or generate pressure, when confined, than water. The plaintiff himself had used Ortho Lime Sulphur Solution spray for some four years preceding the accident; he was accustomed to protect his hands from irritation caused by the spray by wearing a pair of gloves, usually rubber gloves, and that he wore no protection over his eyes. Before the accident occurred, the container had been lying in an orchard, where it was intended to use the same, for a period of some two days; that the plaintiff bent over the drum and unscrewed the plug or cap with a wrench; that, as he was doing so, the cap blew out and the spray spouted into his face and into his left eye; that he bathed his eye in a barrel of water standing in the orchard, rubbing it with his hands; that evening he applied potato poultice; afterwards it was treated by Dr. Davis of Merced, who testified that by May 1st the injury had all healed and that there was no necessity for further treatment. Plaintiff afterwards went to San Francisco to another doctor, who gave him a thermostatic treatment to remove the scar over the center of the eyeball; this treatment is by means of heat, with electricity applied directly to the center of the eye. Following this treatment there was a sloughing off of the outer surface of the cornea; water came out of the inside of the eye, and the eye was lost. The testimony of Dr. Davis was to the effect that the loss of the eye was traceable "in some way to his condition and this treatment."

While the complaint alleges that there was an explosion within the drum or container at the time the plaintiff was attempting to remove a plug therefrom, as hereinbefore stated, it is evident from the testimony that there was no explosion, and that a portion of the contents of the container was caused to spout therefrom, by reason of air pressure exerted within the container. While the testimony is to the effect that the container was being opened while in a practically level position, the circumstances of the liquid spouting from the opening would strongly lead to the conclusion that the container was on a sufficient angle to cause the liquid to fall toward that particular portion of the container and to press against the plug, and that the air pressure in the opposite portion of the upper end of the drum was sufficient to cause the liquid to spout from the container. The testimony of the chemist is direct to the point that there were no explosive substances in the drum. His testimony is that the ingredients in combination were neither explosive nor poisonous; that it would irritate some, but it was not a violent irritant; that an exposure of the drum to the sun would cause a slight expansion of the ingredients, just as the sun would cause water to expand; that a rise in temperature of 15 degrees would cause an expansion of about one-tenth of a gallon in the 50-gallon drum.

The testimony shows that the drums delivered to the plaintiff had a capacity of 54 gallons. It may be here said that three drums of that capacity were purchased by the plaintiff, two of which contained 50 gallons each and one 51 gallons. This testimony would justify the conclusion that there was sufficient air space left in the drums, and that the spouting of the liquid therefrom must have been caused by a slight tilting of the container.

The record shows that the labels which were placed upon the drums gave specifically and in detail the quantity, quality, and ingredients contained in each. The accuracy of the labels is unquestioned. There was also testimony to the effect that the substance had been handled for many years without any one experiencing any injurious results. There was no testimony to support the allegation that C. J. Pregno was acting as an agent of the defendant, nor was there any testimony introduced from which the jury could conclude that the chemical contents of the drums were not correctly stated on the labels, nor was there any testimony from which the jury could conclude that the contents of the drum in question was imminently or inherently dangerous, or contained anything from which the jury could conclude that a user thereof, in the ordinary course of handling, or in applying it to the uses and purposes for which it was intended, would be exposed to any hazards, or to anything that might result injuriously to either life or limb.

[4] Upon the conclusion of the case, the testimony showing, as we have said, that there were no contractual relations between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the spray had been purchased from the co-operative association, which in turn had purchased the same from Pregno, and the testimony showing that there was nothing imminently or inherently dangerous in the contents of the drum, that the chemical contents of the drums were correctly stated upon the labels pasted thereon, that the spray had been used for a number of years without any injurious consequences by the plaintiff as well as others, that the contents of the drum were neither poisonous nor explosive, that it had no more expansive quality than water when exposed to the sun, there being no testimony that the defendant knew or had any cause to know of any dangers in the handling of the compound, or knew or had reason to know of any negligence connected with the preparation or marketing thereof, or in any manner concealed, or attempted to conceal, anything whatever that might render the use of the spray material injurious, or that there were any risks incident in the use of the spray for the purposes for which it was intended, the defendant interposed a request for a directed verdict in its favor. This was denied. We think this ruling erroneous. While the ruling of the court in this particular may not be said to be prejudicial to the defendant, by reason of the fact that the jury returned a verdict in its favor, nevertheless it does obviate a setting forth and consideration of the alleged errors of the court in its instructions to the jury.

[5-7] There being no contractual relations between the plaintiff and the defendant in this case, the plaintiff having bought from others to whom the defendant sold the article in question, recovery can only be had in tort, and then only when the compound or substance sold is imminently and inherently dangerous and such danger concealed by the seller. The seller must have had knowledge, or the circumstances connected with the preparation and marketing of the article in question must have been such as to charge him with knowledge.

While it is argued upon this appeal that this is a question of first impression, we find upon investigation that such is not the case. In Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 39, 43 P. 398, 31 L. R. A. 220, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, the court states the rule in this language:

"If a tradesman sells or furnishes for use an article actually unsound and dangerous, but which he believes to be safe and warrants accordingly, he is not liable for injuries resulting from its defective or unsafe condition to a person who was neither a party to the contract with him, nor one for whose benefit the contract was made"—citing Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 127, 15 Am. St. Rep. 387; Heizer v. Kingsland Mfg. Co., 110 Mo. 605, 19 S. W. 630, 15 L. R. A. 821, 33 Am. St. Rep. 482; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109; and Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, 60 et seq.

To the same effect is the case of Catlin v. Union Oil Co., 31 Cal. App. 597, 161 P. 29.

In 19 Cal. Jur. pp. 611, 612, we find the law thus stated:

"Ordinarily, a manufacturer is not liable for injuries sustained by reason of defects in articles sold through others unless there is a contractual relationship between him and the one injured. * * * However, even though there is no privity of contract, recovery may be had where an accident happens through the character of a substance sold as being imminently dangerous to human life, and the one injured had no knowledge of its dangerous character. Thus recovery may be had where poisons, inflammable oils, explosives, and like dangerous substances are sold in a mislabeled condition, even though the misbranded substance has passed through the hands of a number of intermediate vendors.

"If a tradesman sells or furnishes for use an article actually unsound and dangerous, but which he believes to be safe and warrants accordingly, he is not liable for injuries resulting from its defective or unsafe condition to a person who was neither a party to the contract, nor one for whose benefit the contract was made. But liability attaches where one delivers an article, which he knows to be dangerous, to another person, who has no notice of its nature and qualities, and injury results to such other person through no negligence of his own."

In the note to Windram Mfg. Co. v. Boston Blacking Co., 17 A. L. R. 674, following that case, wherein the Massachusetts Supreme Court holds the manufacturer not liable, the annotator words the rule as follows:

"It is well settled that as a general rule a manufacturer or seller of a defective article is not liable for injuries to the person or property of an ultimate consumer who has purchased from a middleman, unless the article was inherently dangerous to life or property, the theory being that, in the absence of contractual relations between the parties, no liability can be predicated upon the manufacturer's or seller's negligence; at least, where the wrongful act or acts are not known at the time, and the article is not immediately dangerous to third persons."

Or, as stated in Catlin v. Union Oil Co., 31 Cal. App. 597, 161 P. 29, supra:

"When there is no privity of contract between the first wrongdoer and the person suffering damage, and the negligent act falls within the class concerning things which carry no menace or threat of probable damage to third persons, the liability of the first party will extend no further than to his immediate co-contractor."

The cases cited on page 674 of volume 17. A. L. R., are so numerous in support of the foregoing statement of the law that it is unnecessary to more than refer to the citation. An exception to this rule is stated in Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co., 139 Wis. 357, 121 N. W. 157, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 21 American Negligence Repts. 530, and, also, on page 681 of volume 17 A. L. R., to wit:

"The manufacturer or dealer who puts out, sells, and delivers, without notice to others of its dangerous qualities, an article which invites a certain use, and which article is not inherently dangerous, but which, by reason of negligent construction, he knows to be imminently dangerous to life or limb, or is manifestly and apparently dangerous when used as it is intended to be used, is liable to any person who suffers an injury therefrom, which injury might have been reasonably anticipated."

Other cases to the same effect are cited in the note to A. L. R., to which we have referred, showing cases where the liability attaches and where liability is held not to attach. In all the cases cited, where the article is not imminently, inherently, or essentially dangerous, liability is rejected. Some exceptions are mentioned, which are really extensions of the rule of liability; such are cases involving the question of the known use to which the article is to be put, and which known use will ordinarily involve the safety of person or property. This extension of the rule of liability was applied in the case of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., 217 N. Y. 386, 111 N. E. 1050, L. R. A. 1916F, 696, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440. In that case an automobile was equipped with a defective wheel, and it was held that, while an automobile may not be said to be imminently and inherently dangerous, yet its known use is such that the equipping of an automobile with a dangerous part, such as a defective wheel, will render it imminently and inherently dangerous to the user thereof, whoever he may be. The same rule is applied to drugs, medicines, and foods. As said in the language to which we have referred in 17 A. L. R. on page 688, the decided weight of authority is to the effect that an ultimate consumer may bring an action directed against the negligent manufacturer or packer of industrial articles of food, or of inherently dangerous beverages, with whom no contractual relations exist.

In the case at bar, there is nothing in the record by reason of which the extension of the rule to articles inherently dangerous, or dangerous by reason of their intended use, holding a manufacturer liable, could be held to apply, nor is there anything in the record on which the defendant could be held liable, under the rule upholding recovery, where there has been concealed a defect or negligent construction or preparation. The language to which we have referred in 17 A. L. R., as beginning on page 672, covers 38 pages, and includes every phase of the subject, and, when applied to the circumstances presented by the record here, establishes conclusively that no liability has been shown on the part of the defendant. It would serve no useful purpose to recite the law found in the notes to which we have referred, and we therefore refrain from so doing.

[8] We may, however, state that the contention of the appellant that the court erred in instructing the jury that the defendant could not be held liable for its carelessness and negligence in the manufacture and preparation of the spray material, unless the defendant had knowledge, or should have had knowledge, of a dangerous defect when it shipped the solution, and that it concealed said knowledge from its consignee; or, second, that the spray material was a substance imminently and inherently dangerous, and that the plaintiff did not have knowledge of such dangerous character and that the defendant knew, or should have known it, and concealed it from the plaintiff, is not well taken.

The rule as to concealment is clearly stated in the case of Krahn v. J. L. Owens Co., 125 Minn. 33, 145 N. W. 626, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, where a defective board was installed over a cylinder in a threshing machine, and an injury resulted to one who stepped thereon. The rule applied was that the board was so defective as to be dangerous to life and limb; that the defendant knew of the defect when it sold the machine, or at least ought to have known it; that the defect was proximately the cause of the injury; that the defect was concealed to such an extent that observation on the part of the plaintiff would not disclose it; that the part was intended for the purposes for which it was being used; and that plaintiff was one of the class of persons of whom it was contemplated the article would be used.

[9] However, as hereinbefore stated, there is no evidence in the record of any concealment. The evidence is direct and uncontradicted that the labels on the drums correctly stated the ingredients contained within, and also the percentage of each; that the contents of the drum was neither explosive, poisonous, nor imminently nor inherently dangerous. This being the case, no contractual relations being shown, no liability exists. Whether the court erred or did not err in admitting testimony that no claims for personal injuries in the use of the spray had ever been made against the company is wholly immaterial, as, under the admitted facts and the law applicable, the judgment in favor of the defendant is the only one that could be entered, and therefore none of the alleged errors of the court can be held to be prejudicial.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

MEYER v. HELLMAN COMMERCIAL TRUST & SAVINGS BANK.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Trial $\S$ 91—Counsel familiar with deposition, desiring to object to particular series of questions, should object to questions as read instead of moving to strike out after reading of entire series.

Counsel, desiring to object to particular series of questions and answers in deposition with which they were familiar, should have objected to each question as read instead of waiting for reading of entire series and then moving to strike out portion of deposition on ground that the irrelevancy of the answers could not have been anticipated.

2. Banks and banking $\S$ 154(7)—In action against bank, statement in deposition of person who committed forgery that bank officer had advised him to make good held irrelevant.

In action against bank to recover money paid out on checks bearing plaintiff's forged signature, where deposition of person who committed forgery was read, held statement therein that at time of attempted adjustment officer of bank knew that signatures had been forged and advised settlement was irrelevant, and should have been excluded.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1047(3)—Denial of motion to strike out irrelevant portion of deposition held not prejudicial.

In action against bank to recover money paid out on checks bearing plaintiff's forged signature, denial of motion to strike out portion of deposition of person who committed forgery stating that bank officer, after forgery, had advised deponent to make good, held not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by Elsie Meyer against the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action for money had and received, brought by plaintiff as one of defendant's depositors with two accounts, one a commercial account opened in December, 1920, and the other a savings account opened in March, 1921. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff for $3,702.36, and from that judgment defendant appeals.

Respondent neither having filed a brief nor presented oral argument, the appeal must be determined upon the trial record with the aid of appellant's brief alone.

The controversy arose out of withdrawals of money upon certain checks bearing plaintiff's name as drawer, but, as she claims, with the signatures forged by a man named Berthold, now in the penitentiary under sentence for forgery of plaintiff's name in a wholly independent transaction, which occurred in December, 1921, and in no way affected this defendant. The testimony on behalf of plaintiff was her own, her daughter's, and Berthold's, who, in a deposition taken in San Quentin prison on behalf of plaintiff, swore that by forging plaintiff's name to checks, some of which, paid and canceled, were introduced in evidence, he had drawn about $4,000 from plaintiff's account with defendant, and had lost the money in gambling. The chief witness called by defendant was a handwriting expert, I. N. Inskeep, who pronounced the disputed signatures to the checks in evidence to be genuine signatures of plaintiff. The court might equally well have decided upon the evidence for defendant rather than plaintiff, but nevertheless it did resolve the conflict in favor of plaintiff. Defendant frankly concedes that, having been unsuccessful in convincing the trial court of the genuineness of the signatures in question, it cannot hope for a reversal upon the evidence as a whole. The theory of defendant was that plaintiff had either shared in the moneys drawn (though this was denied both by plaintiff and Berthold), or that plaintiff had put into Berthold's hands checks signed in blank by herself, and that Berthold had then filled in the amounts to suit his own purposes, the body of the disputed checks being in his undisguised and admitted handwriting.

Defendant's reliance is placed, therefore, upon the alleged error in admitting at the trial a certain portion of Berthold's deposition in reference to a conversation between him and Mr. Bell, vice president of the defendant bank. Plaintiff testified that, when she learned in August, 1921, that there was something wrong with her account, she at once sought out Berthold, and that he confessed to her that he had drawn her money, adding that he had only borrowed it, and would pay her back. It appears that within the next few days Berthold did deposit in plaintiff's account, on August 5, 1921, a check for $4,000, which, however, was dishonored by the bank on which it was drawn. In his deposition Berthold declared that shortly before he deposited this check of $4,000 he called at the bank and had a conversation with Mr. Bell, in the presence of a representative of the American Bankers' Association, and that in that conversation he told Mr. Bell that he had forged Mrs. Meyer's name to upward of 20 checks, aggregating in amount $4,000. After Berthold had given this testimony in his deposition, the following questions were asked and answered:

"Q. What else did you tell him? A. Well, he had told me I had better try to make it up; to pay the money back, and I told him that I would; that I thought I could get my folks to make it up, so I sent a couple of telegrams to my folks but I didn't get any answer back from them. Q. Where were your folks? A. In the East. Q. What else was said to Mr. Bell? A. Well, he told me the best thing I could do was to make the thing right in some way."

The record indicates that at the taking of the deposition an objection was made by defendant's attorney at this point, and also a motion to strike out the portion relating to the conversation between Berthold and Bell; and, when the reading of the deposition at the trial had reached this stage, Mr. Williams, representing the defendant, renewed his objection and his motion to strike, upon the ground that the portion of the deposition relating to the conversation had between the witness and Mr. Bell did not prove, or tend to prove, any issue in the case, and was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Mr. Williams insisted further that the relevancy of the conversation could not be determined in advance of the answer; that the conversation recited contained no admission by Mr. Bell that could be binding upon the bank; and that it had no tendency to prove or disprove any issue in the case. In opposition to the motion plaintiff's attorney argued:

"It is a conversation with the defendant, in which the defendant and this witness talked about this particular matter that is in issue. The witness told the defendant certain things, and the defendant told the witness certain things, and it is very material in the light of the entire case, if your honor please, that it should be brought to the bank, approximately at the time of the deposit of the $4,000, that there was an admitted forgery, and that Mr. Bell, representing the bank, told this witness he ought to make it good. I think it is very material."

The court allowed the testimony to stand. Defendant now asserts that the court construed this testimony as evidence of an admission on the part of defendant that the disputed signatures were in fact forgeries.

[1, 2] It is true that plaintiff's attorney said in his argument that it was material that it should be brought home to the bank that "there was an admitted forgery." The only admission, of course, was the admission of Berthold himself that he had committed forgery; and there is nothing in the deposition indicating any admission on the part of the bank, or forming a basis for the inference of any such admission. The mere rejoinder of Mr. Bell to the effect that, if Berthold had cashed checks on signatures forged by him, the best thing for Berthold to do was "to make the thing good," was no more than a recommendation to him that, if he had secured money by fraudulent means, he should make reparation. At the trial the questions and answers were being read from Berthold's deposition, with which defendant's attorney was already familiar; and the better course would have been to make any desired objection as a question was read rather than to wait for the reading of a series of questions and answers, and then move to strike out that portion of the deposition upon the ground that the irrelevancy of the answers could not have been anticipated. The statement in question not being an admission, it had no relevancy to the issue, and upon timely objection or motion should have been excluded. However, even if the motion had been granted, there would have been left in the record similar testimony, previously given by the same witness in the deposition, and already admitted at the trial without objection. One of the questions asked Berthold was how he came to make the deposit of $4,000 on August 5, 1921. In the deposition he answered:

"Well, there is a whole lot to be said in order to answer that question. Mr. Bell, the vice president of the Hellman Bank, was really the cause for it being put in; he knew about it, and told me that I better make it good."

When this answer was read at the trial, the attorney for the defendant made a motion to strike out "that part relative to what Mr. Bell knew," on the ground that it was a conclusion; and after discussion, in which the court and both counsel took part, defendant's attorney, referring to the sentence, "he told me I better make it good," said:

"I do not move to strike out that part. The only part I move to strike out is that part relative to what Mr. Bell knew, * * * on the ground that it states a conclusion of the witness."

The court granted this motion, whereupon plaintiff's attorney said:

"Well, it is just merely those four words, 'he knew about it'; to which defendant's attorney responded, 'Yes.'"

[3] Under these circumstances it cannot be said that defendant was prejudiced by denial of the motion to strike out testimony substantially the same, when read a few moments later from the succeeding page of the deposition.

The judgment is affirmed.

LINTON v. MILLER & LUX, Inc. (Civ. 4592.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. May 31, 1927.

1. Waters and water courses $\S$ 156(2)—Contract granting easement to procure water through canal held not to require owner of servient tenement to maintain weir for grantee's benefit.

Contract granting easement to procure water through canal and ditches on servient tenement, providing that the grantee should "pay one-fifth of cost of constructing and maintaining weirs or improvements necessary for maintaining and using" the canal, held not to impose duty on grantor's successor to repair or replace weir, whose only purpose was to divert water to the dominant tenement.

2. Waters and water courses $\S$ 154(1)—Law does not require owner of servient estate to maintain irrigation canal for benefit of dominant estate.

The law does not place on owner of a servient estate any obligation to repair or maintain an irrigation canal for the benefit of the dominant estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by David Linton against Miller & Lux, Inc., for damages resulting from failure to maintain a weir in an irrigation canal system. Judgment for defendant after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Osborn and Kaye & Siemon, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland (Kenneth C. Gillis, of Oakland, and Joseph C. Sharp, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The plaintiff and appellant instituted this action against the defendant and respondent for damages alleged to have been sustained through the refusal and failure of the respondent to maintain a weir in its irrigation canal system, in Kern county, which the appellant contends it was obligated to maintain and keep in good condition and repair.

It appears that on or about March 5, 1895, one Henry Miller entered into an agreement with one Horatio Stebbins, wherein it was recited that both of the parties were interested in the canal and works of the Kern Valley Water Company, from which water might be acquired for irrigation purposes; that, whereas Miller had constructed a canal running from the main canal of the water company, through the lands of Miller & Lux to the easterly boundary of lands owned by Stebbins, and from which the latter could, by the construction of canals and ditches therein-after described, irrigate his property, he, being desirous of securing the use of the canal running from the main canal, paid to Miller $1,500 for a license and privilege of such use for the purpose of conveying such waters as he might be entitled to receive from canals and reservoirs provided for in a contract between Miller and one Haggin. Stebbins was further granted the license and privilege of constructing ditches 20 feet wide through the lands of Miller & Lux, and it was further agreed that the proposed ditches, when completed, might be used by Stebbins for the purpose of taking such waters as he might be entitled to receive at points where said ditches should tap the Miller tributary of the water company's main canal; that Stebbins should construct such 20-foot ditches and gates as might be necessary, at his own expense, and bear one-fifth of the expense of maintaining the Miller canal, and one-fifth of the cost of constructing and maintaining such gates, weirs, and other improvements and appurtenances as should be necessary for the maintenance and use of said Miller canal.

Appellant alleged in his complaint the principal recitals of the contract as heretofore stated, and attached a copy of the same thereto as Exhibit A. It was further alleged that the plaintiff had by mesne conveyances acquired an interest in the lands formerly owned by Stebbins, and that the defendant had succeeded to the interests and obligations of Miller in said contract and in the lands and canals therein described; that, under and by virtue of the terms and covenants of the original contract and "grant," Miller contracted to maintain and keep in good condition and repair the canal tapping the water company's main canal, and all gates, weirs, or other improvements or appurtenances; that, after the execution of said contract, there was constructed a weir in the Miller canal for the purpose of diverting water for irrigation, but that neither Miller nor the defendant had kept it in good condition or repair; and that for a period of two and one-half years next preceding the commencement of the action it had been allowed to rot, and that it was washed away; that the plaintiff had demanded that the defendant reconstruct said weir, but that it had failed and refused to do so, and that the plaintiff was compelled to, and did, build a dam in the canal at a cost to him of $300; that such dam was unsatisfactory, and was finally destroyed; that, because of the plaintiff's inability to obtain sufficient water for irrigation, he had been damaged in the sum of $2,500. In a second count it was recited that one James Anderson had under the same circumstances been damaged in a like amount, and had assigned his cause of action to the plaintiff, wherefore judgment was prayed for $5,600.

The defendant demurred generally and specially to the complaint, and the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment entered thereon, from which the plaintiff appeals.

[1, 2] It is apparent that the copy of the contract attached to the complaint does not support the allegations that Miller agreed to maintain and keep the weir in good condition and repair for the purpose of irrigating the plaintiff's lands. The only provision of the contract bearing upon that matter is to the effect that the plaintiff's predecessor in interest "will pay one-fifth of the cost of constructing and maintaining such gates, weirs, or other improvements and appurtenances as may be hereafter necessary for maintaining and using said canal"—referring to the Miller canal. However, the weir which is alleged to have rotted and been washed away was not "necessary for maintaining and using" the Miller canal. Its only purpose was to divert water to the 20-foot ditch constructed by Stebbins, the plaintiff's predecessor in interest. We are satisfied that no stipulation of the contract places upon the defendant the burden of repairing or replacing this particular weir; on the other hand, there is no obligation placed by law upon the owner of a servient estate to repair or maintain a right of way or canal for the benefit of the dominant estate.

In Bean v. Stoneman, 104 Cal. 49, 55, 37 P. 777, 779, the claimant of an easement consisting of a water course brought suit against his grantor for an alleged failure of the latter to furnish sufficient irrigation water, due to defective ditches. It was held that, while the owner of the servient estate can do no voluntary act to destroy or impair the easement, yet the fact that the grantor had used the ditch "could not of itself impose upon him the obligation to always continue its use, and the grant contained no express covenant that he would do so, or that he would keep the ditch in repair." And the rule in such cases was announced in the following language:

"The grantee, or owner of the easement, is bound to keep it in repair, and this applies as well to water ditches as to private ways. Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250 [17 P. 69]; Durfee v. Garvey, 78 Cal. 546 [21 P. 302]. In Prescott v. Williams, 5 Metc. [Mass.] 429, 39 Am. Dec. 688, a case cited in Durfee v. Garvey, 78 Cal. 546 [21 P. 302] it was said: 'The duty of making repairs, and the labor necessary for keeping the water course in a state fit for use, rests wholly upon him who claims an easement on his neighbor's land; and, as a general rule, easements impose no obligation upon those whose lands are thus placed in servitude to do anything.' See, also, Goddard on Easements, 285, 443."

It follows that, since it nowhere appears that the defendant was required to do more than refrain from a voluntary interference with the grantee's right to acquire his share of the water for irrigation, and the weir in question was requisite only to the diversion of appellant's share of the water, he was not entitled to damages from respondent because of its refusal to maintain it, and the complaint therefore failed to state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

INDEPENDENCE INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5531.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 31, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 28, 1927.

1. Insurance §144(1)—Insurance carrier's liability is not enlarged by unknown contract of insured employer to indemnify another employer against injury to employee.

Insurance contracts being governed by the rules applying to contracts generally, liability of an employer's insurance carrier is not increased by contract of the employer, unknown to the insurer, to indemnify another employer against injury to or death of an employee.

2. Master and servant §375(2)—Injury to employee riding from work in conveyance not under employer's control is not compensable.

Where injury to employee occurs while riding from work in conveyance not furnished by, or under control of, the employer, it does not arise out of and in the course of the employment, so as to be compensable.

Certiorari to review an order of Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Concepcion Loya and another against the Southern Pacific Company and others. The Industrial Accident Commission made an award of compensation in favor of one of the claimants against the Independence Indemnity Company, and such company petitions for certiorari to review the order. Award annulled.

Floyd T. Schneidell, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. On December 28, 29, and 30, 1925, and January 3, 1926, the Southern Pacific Company employed, among others, one Leo Loya, as a laborer in one of its crews of trackmen upon its lines of railroad in the vicinity of Los Angeles. On the morning of the last-named date the crew of laborers, including Loya, proceeded from their home base at Saugus, which lies between Los Angeles and Castaic, under orders of the railroad company, to Camulos, beyond Castaic, where they worked during the forenoon, clearing a wreck, returning to Castaic at about 1:30 p. m. of the same day. The Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, a corporation engaged in the moving picture enterprise at Los Angeles, was then making pictures at Castaic, which is approximately midway between Los Angeles and Santa Paula, toward the north and west of the former city. Prior to the dates above mentioned, the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company (for convenience designated herein as the Fox Company) requisitioned an engine and five cars for the purpose of photographing a train scene, and a gasoline motor car upon which to place the camera. It appears that the train was in charge of a railroad foreman, and both were used for the purposes of the Fox Company, whose director gave orders to the conductor and foreman, until about 4:30 o'clock p. m., when they were released, and started back toward Saugus. It is conceded that Loya and other workmen were on the motor car, riding toward home, during his return trip, and that Loya fell from the car, receiving injuries from which he died almost immediately, and that at the time of the accident the petitioner herein was the insurance carrier of the Fox Company.

The respondent Concepcion Loya, father of the deceased, and respondent David Loya, a minor son, by his guardian ad litem, filed with the Industrial Accident Commission an application for compensation, naming therein as defendants both the Southern Pacific Company and the Fox Company. Upon a hearing petitioner was joined as a party defendant, and, evidence having been introduced and the case submitted, the commission awarded compensation in favor of the minor, denying relief to the father, and finding that "Leo Loya was employed as a laborer on January 3, 1926, at Saugus, Cal., by defendants Southern Pacific Company, a corporation, who was his general employer, and Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, a corporation, who at said time was his special employer; * * * that at the time of the injury and death of said Leo Loya, and for several hours prior thereto, he was performing special service for the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, a corporation, and under its exclusive supervision and control; * * * that the Southern Pacific Company, as general employer, should not be held liable for any part or portion of said death benefit and burial expense by reason of that certain indemnification agreement entered into by it and the said Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company on January 3, 1926; and that the Southern Pacific Company should be relieved of all liability and discharged therefrom. * * * Award is therefore made in favor of David Loya against Independence Indemnity Company, a corporation, defendant, of a death benefit and burial expense in the total sum of $1,599.94, payable," etc.

It is contended by the petitioner, in the main, that: (1) The crew of laborers, including the deceased, was not ordered by the Fox Company, and did not work for it; (2) that the purported indemnification agreement mentioned in the findings was executed by an assistant to the moving picture director, without the authority of the Fox Company, and whose only duties were to order men and equipment upon such occasions; and (3) that, while returning homeward, Loya was riding upon a conveyance of the Southern Pacific Company, under the sole supervision and control of its agents, at a time and place where no supervision or control was or could have been exercised by the Fox Company.

"To release and discharge, and it does hereby release and discharge, the Southern Pacific Company from all liability for loss of or damage to any of its property which may be sustained by reason of any cause whatsoever, whether occurring through negligence of Southern Pacific Company, or its employees, or otherwise, while in transit over or upon the lines or in the custody of the Southern Pacific Company; and to indemnify and save harmless the Southern Pacific Company from any damage or injury to the person or property or loss of life of any of its officers, agents, actors, performers, servants, or employees, or the public, or the employees of the Southern Pacific Company, which may occur through negligence of Southern Pacific Company or its employees or otherwise;

"(3) To indemnify and save harmless the said Southern Pacific Company from all claims, suits, judgments, costs, charges and counsel fees paid, sustained or incurred by said Southern Pacific Company for or on account of any injury or damage herein above referred to, whether occurring through negligence of Southern Pacific Company or its employees or otherwise; and

"(4) To pay for any injury or damage that may occur to the property of the Southern Pacific Company or its employees through the use of its property by the undersigned which may be sustained by reason of any cause whatsoever, reasonable wear and tear excepted.

"Dated at Saugus, Cal., this 3d day of January, 1926. Wm. Fox Vaudeville Co.,

"[Corporate Seal]

By M. Miggin.

"Witness: H. E. Pierson.

"(When executed by a corporation, a duly authorized officer must sign the corporation's name and his own and his official title thus: 'Jewel Film Co., by John Jewel, President,' and also affix corporate seal.)"

The introduction of the contract of which the foregoing is an excerpt was strenuously opposed by counsel for the Independence Indemnity Company, upon various grounds, among them being that Miggin had no authority to execute it on behalf of his principal, and that, in any event, if valid, it constituted an independent transaction between the Fox Company and the Southern Pacific Company, and was irrelevant to the question of liability under the indemnity company's insurance policy.

[1] It affirmatively appears from the testimony of all the witnesses who claimed to have knowledge upon the subject that neither Miggin nor any other person had authority to execute the instrument in question. Miggin swore that he had no such authority; that his only duties were to assist in ordering equipment and men, under the instructions of the director in charge of the picture; that he ordered the train and crew, and the motor car and one man, by written requisition; and that, when they arrived, a paper which he believed to be a receipt for the property was produced by a representative of the railroad company, who said, "Sign here," which he did; but that, had he known the character of the instrument, he would not have signed it. It appears without contradiction that Miggin was merely a clerk, with limited authority to bind the Fox Company, under instructions of his director, only for the usual expenses of hired equipment and its accompanying personnel. That he had no power, with or without the sanction of his principal, to enlarge or otherwise vary the terms of the insurance policy by an independent agreement with a third party, of which the insurer had no knowledge, is obvious. Policies of insurance are governed by the same rules which apply to contracts generally. Main St., etc., Co. v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 129 Cal. 301, 61 P. 937; Bassi v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 57 Cal. App. 707, 208 P. 154. One may not modify the terms of a contract to the detriment of his cocontractor without the express consent of the latter. Ehrman v. Rosenthal, 117 Cal. 491, 496, 49 P. 460. Hence, in so far as the act of Miggin was concerned, the insurer did not become obligated to indemnify the Southern Pacific Company against injury to, or the death of, an employee.

[2] As already seen, the Fox Company contracted with the Southern Pacific Company to furnish a train and crew and a motor car for the purpose of making a picture at Castaic canyon. The performance of such service necessitated the presence of equipment and men at the scene of action, commonly expressed by the artists as "location." It appears that agents of the film company used the equipment and certain men at Castaic, and in so doing directed the conductor and foreman as to their movements, but that the actual operation of the cars was under the exclusive management and control of employees of the Southern Pacific Company is manifest. It is admitted that at least one man was ordered by the Fox Company, and delegated by the railroad company to, and did, operate the motor car. This car was not operated by Miggin or any member of the picture company during the day. Miggin testified, "At about 4 I dismissed the car personally," and it is not denied that six men (of whom Leo Loya was one) and the foreman then boarded the car and started toward home at Saugus.

The question of liability under such circumstances has been frequently discussed by the Supreme Court of California. In Ocean Accident Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 173 Cal. 313, 321, 159 P. 1041, 1044 (L. R. A. 1917B, 336) the authorities in both England and America were reviewed, and the court concluded:

"With these authorities before us we think the governing principles of all the decisions are not difficult of discernment. The first of these is that there are excluded from the benefits of the act all those accidental injuries which occur while the employee is going to or returning from his work, and it matters not in this respect whether his journey takes him over public roads or private ways. * * *

"In the very broadest sense, of course, it is true that an injury which happens to a man who is on his way to his place of employment is an injury 'growing out of and incidental to his employment,' since a necessary part of the employment is that the employee shall go to and return from his place of labor. But it is to be noted that the right to an award is not founded upon the fact that the injury grows out of and is incidental to his employment. It is founded upon the fact that the service he is rendering at the time of the injury grows out of and is incidental to the employment. Therefore, an employee going to and from his place of employment is not rendering any service, and begins to render such service only when, as has been said, arriving at the place of his employment, he proceeds to use some instrumentality provided, by means of which he immediately places himself in a position to perform his tasks."

The same rule was announced in London G. & A. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 190 Cal. 587, 589, 213 P. 977; Clapp's Parking Station v. Industrial Acc. Com., 51 Cal. App. 624, 626, 197 P. 369; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 48 Cal. App. 572, 574, 192 P. 166; California Highway Commission v. Industrial Acc. Com., 61 Cal. App. 284, 285, 214 P. 658, and Dominguez v. Pendola, 46 Cal. App. 220, 188 P. 1025.

In the case last cited it was said:

"Where transportation is furnished by an employer, as an incident of the employment, to convey an employee to and from the place of employment, an injury suffered by the employee going or coming in the vehicle so furnished by the employer, and under the control of the employer, arises out of and is in the course of, the employment within the meaning of the Compensation Act"—citing Judson Mfg. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 300, 184 P. 1, and Starr Piano Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 433, 184 P. 860.

In all of the authorities which have come to our attention it was held that, where the employee avails himself of conveyances other than those of his employer and under its control, the journey to or from home does not constitute a service growing out of and incidental to the employment, within the provisions of the Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

It is also contended that there is no evidence in the record to support the finding that at the time of his injury the deceased was an employee of the Fox Company as a special employer. While there is much affirmative evidence tending to show that he was not an employee of, and did not perform any service for, the Fox Company, and the evidence, if any, tending to support the award in this respect is exceedingly weak and meager, we think from what has been said that an extended discussion of the evidence is unnecessary.

The award is annulled.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 22, 1927.

1. Highways ⇐184(2)—Evidence warranted finding that automobile driver's failure to observe truck standing at edge of pavement was want of due care.

Where plaintiffs stopped their truck on right-hand side and off paved portion of highway, with left wheels resting 6 or 7 inches from the edge, and where the night was clear and lights of approaching automobile were in good condition, failure of defendant automobile driver to observe the truck at a greater distance than 40 feet held to authorize finding of want of due care in exercise of duty to proceed carefully and be on alert to avoid colliding with others.

2. Husband and wife ⇐260—Wife's right of action for personal injuries is community property.

A right of action for personal injuries to wife is community property.

3. Negligence ~~§~~89(2)—If husband's negligence proximately contributed to wife's injuries, right of either or both to recover is barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 370).

Though, under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, wife may sue alone, yet, if husband's negligence proximately contributed to her injuries, right of either or both to recover is barred.

4. Negligence ~~§~~82—Failure to perform duty imposed raises presumption of negligence, which, if proximately contributing to injury, precludes recovery.

Failure of any person to perform duty imposed on him by law raises presumption of negligence, and, if negligence proximately contributes to his injury, he cannot recover.

5. Negligence ~~§~~122(1)—Presumption of negligence from failure to perform duty may be overcome by showing failure excusable and not inconsistent with due care.

Presumption of negligence from failure to perform duty imposed by law is not conclusive, but may be overcome by evidence that failure was excusable or justifiable under circumstances, and not inconsistent with exercise of due care.

6. Highways ~~§~~184(3)—Contributory negligence in failing to remove unlighted motor-truck entirely from pavement held for jury (Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 13, 20[w], as amended by St. 1919, pp. 206, 219).

Where plaintiffs stopped their automobile truck on right-hand side and off paved portion of highway, with left wheels resting 6 or 7 inches from edge, to adjust lights, and were there struck by defendant's automobile, whether failure to remove vehicle as required by Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 13, 20(w), as amended by St. 1919, pp. 206, 219, entirely from the pavement was excusable under circumstances, or, if not, whether failure or omission to maintain light proximately contributed to injury, held, under evidence, for jury.

7. Highways ~~§~~184(3)—Whether automobile driver had last clear chance to avoid collision with plaintiff's standing truck held for jury.

In action for personal injuries from collision after dark of defendants' automobile with plaintiff's truck which was standing near edge of pavement, evidence of width of pavement, defendant's failure to apply emergency brake or swerve to left, and of defendant's speed and distance of plaintiffs' truck from center of highway held sufficient to raise issue as to whether defendant had last clear chance to avoid injury and was negligent in failing to do so.

8. Highways ~~§~~179—Where defendant was negligent in failing to avoid collision with standing truck, that he failed to see occupant was immaterial (Civ. Code, § 3333).

In action for personal injuries from collision after dark between defendant's automobile and plaintiffs' truck which was standing near edge of pavement, where defendant saw truck in which plaintiff was seated and was negligent in failing to avoid collision, it was immaterial, in view of Civ. Code, § 3333, that he failed to see occupant thereof.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

9. Negligence ~~§~~83—Last clear chance doctrine applies from time defendant actually observes plaintiff's peril, not from time he ought to have observed it

The last clear chance doctrine applies only from time defendant actually observes plaintiff's perilous position, and not from a time when it might be said that he ought to have observed it.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; Mortimer Smith, Judge.

Separate actions by Carlo Giorgetti and Clarinda Giorgetti against F. H. Wollaston and another. Actions tried together. From separate judgments for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louis V. Crowley, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Earle Warren and Ralph E. Hoyt, both of Oakland (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondents.

CASHIN, J. Appeals from the judgments entered in two separate actions for the recovery of damages for personal injuries suffered by respondents in the same accident, and which are alleged to have been caused by appellants' negligent operation of an automobile. By stipulation the actions were tried together and the appeals presented on the same transcript.

Respondents are husband and wife, and appellant Wollaston, at the time of the accident, was the employee of and operating an automobile owned by appellant corporation. The accident occurred at about 9 o'clock p. m. on January 20, 1922, at a point on the public highway between Irvington and Centerville in Alameda county. The highway, which there runs north and south, is paved with concrete, the width of the pavement being 18 feet. Respondents shortly before the accident had been riding in a Ford truck, operated by the husband, and were proceeding north along the highway. The truck was equipped with lamps in front, but carried no light in the rear. The lamps having through some defect commenced to grow dim, the truck was stopped, according to the testimony of respondents, on the right-hand side and off the paved portion of the highway, with the exception that the left wheels rested thereon 6 or 7 inches from the edge. The husband alighted from the truck, his wife remaining seated therein, adjusted the lamps, the time consumed in so doing being from 7 to 10 minutes, and then passed around the vehicle on the side resting on the pavement to the rear. He was there struck by the automobile operated by appellants, which approached from the south. The automobile also collided with the truck, and as the result of the collision both of the respondents suffered physical injuries. Photographs taken at the scene of the accident in June, 1923, show that it would then have been possible to remove a truck completely off the pavement before stopping, but the testimony is conflicting as to whether this would have been practicable on the night of the accident owing to the condition of the unpaved portion of the highway at that season, it being also testified by one of the respondents that a ditch then existed to the east and near the pavement. The witnesses agree that the night, though dark, was clear, and that the highway followed a straight course in each direction from the place of the accident. It was testified by appellant Wollaston that he approached at a speed of 25 miles per hour; that his lights were in good condition; that he first observed the respondent husband and the truck when between 35 and 40 feet away; and that his car was traveling on the east side and from 12 to 18 inches from the edge of the pavement; that a third automobile was approaching from the north, the lights of which had been visible for a quarter of a mile, and which at the time the truck was first seen by the witness was coming to a standstill on the west side of the highway at a point about 60 feet north of the truck; that after the truck was first seen the lights from the third car interfered with the view of the witness, but that immediately upon seeing the obstruction he applied his foot brake, but not the emergency brake, the course of the automobile so far as appears not being changed.

It is contended by appellants that the court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury; that the only conclusion reasonably to be drawn from the evidence was that respondents alone were negligent, and that the evidence was insufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the issue as to whether appellants had the last clear chance to avoid, and were wanting in ordinary care in failing to avoid, injuring respondents.

[1] It was the duty of appellant Wollaston to proceed carefully and to be on the alert to avoid colliding with others (Lampton v. Standard Bread Co., 48 Cal. App. 116, 191 P. 710); and, while his testimony that he did not see the truck was uncontradicted, yet in view of the fact that the night was clear and his lights in good condition, the jury might reasonably have believed that his failure to observe the obstruction at a greater distance was a want of due care, and this conclusion would not be rendered unreasonable by their acceptance of his testimony that his view was temporarily cut off by the lights of the third car, as it fairly appears therefrom that this occurred after he had observed the truck and one of the respondents near it.

The acts of respondent husband in operating and permitting the truck to remain on the highway at the hour shown, unequipped with a rear light of the kind prescribed by subdivision a of section 13 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 405, as amended by St. 1919, p. 206), was a violation of law; and by subdivision (w) of section 20 of the same act, it is also made unlawful to leave or permit to be left standing on the main traveled portion of any public highway a vehicle undergoing repairs or which has been stopped for the purpose of having repairs made thereon, unless such vehicle shall have been disabled on the main traveled portion of the highway in such manner and to such an extent that it shall be impossible to avoid stopping thereon and impracticable to remove the same therefrom until repairs shall have been made.

[2, 3] A right of action for personal injuries to the wife is community property (Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 P. 56; McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 P. 980; Moody v. Southern Pacific Co., 167 Cal. 786, 141 P. 388); and though as provided by statute she may sue alone (section 370, Code Civ. Proc.), yet if the negligence of her husband proximately contributed to her injuries, the right of either or both to recover is barred. Basler v. Sacramento, etc., Co. 158 Cal. 514, 111 P. 530, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642; Dunbar v. San Francisco & Oakland T. Railways, 54 Cal. App. 15, 201 P. 330.

[4, 5] The defect in the headlights of the truck, which led respondents to stop, was, as fairly appears from their testimony, due to a condition which developed a few minutes before the car was stopped and was not caused by a lack of due care on their part; but the absence of lights either in front or in the rear rendered the operation of the truck at the hour mentioned unlawful, and it was the duty of respondents to remove the same from the main traveled portion of the highway. Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 13 and 20(w). The failure of any person to perform a duty imposed upon him by law raises a presumption of negligence, and if such negligence proximately contributes to his injury, he cannot recover. McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., supra, p. 486 (42 P. 980); Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co., 191 Cal. 195, 215 P. 675; Shimoda v. Bundy, 24 Cal. App. 675, 142 P. 109. This presumption, however, is not conclusive, but may be overcome by evidence that the failure was excusable or justifiable under the circumstances and not inconsistent with the exercise of due care. Berkovitz v. Am. River Gravel Co., supra; Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 667, 98 P. 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 1061; Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560; Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 229 P. 30; Western Indemnity Co. v. Wasco Land & Stock Co., 51 Cal. App. 672, 197 P. 390; Graybiel v. Auger, 64 Cal. App. 679, 222 P. 635; Mitsuda v. Isbell, 71 Cal. App. 221, 234 P. 928.

[6] In the instant case it does not appear that the time consumed in adjusting the lamps was unreasonable, and, as stated, there was testimony which, if believed by the jury, tended to show that the condition of the highway east of the pavement was such at the time of the accident as to render it impracticable to remove the truck farther in that direction. No reason, however, was shown for the failure to maintain a light on the rear of the truck, and either violation of the statute unexcused, if proximately contributing to the injuries, would bar a recovery, unless appellants, having knowledge of respondents' peril, had the last clear chance to avoid, and by the exercise of ordinary care could have avoided, the injuries. Whether the failure to remove the vehicle entirely from the pavement was excusable under the circumstances, or, if not, whether such failure or the omission to maintain a tail light proximately contributed to the injuries, were questions which in view of the evidence were properly submitted to the jury (Graybiel v. Auger, supra; Western Indemnity Co. v. Wasco Land & Stock Co., supra; Mitsuda v. Isbell, supra), and were so submitted by instructions which fully and correctly stated the law, and we cannot say that the evidence was insufficient to support a conclusion favorable to plaintiffs on any of the issues presented.

[7] It is contended that in view of the evidence the last clear chance doctrine had no application, and that the court erred in submitting the issue to the jury. As stated above, the width of the pavement was 18 feet, and the third car mentioned was 60 feet north of the truck, where, according to the testimony of Wollaston, it had practically come to a stop, this witness further testifying that upon discovering the position of the truck he failed to apply his emergency brake or swerve to the left. This evidence with that as to the speed of the latter's car and the distance of the truck from the center of the highway sufficiently raised the issue as to whether appellants had the last clear chance to avoid the injuries and were negligent in failing to do so. No error is shown in the instructions presenting this issue, and a finding thereon adverse to appellants would be fairly sustained.

[8] It is further claimed that respondents by the exercise of ordinary care could have extricated themselves from their dangerous position, and that the evidence was insufficient to show that appellant Wollaston knew of the danger to either. It is clear that Mrs. Giorgetti was wholly unaware of the danger from appellants' car; and as to her husband the jury might reasonably have inferred that after becoming aware of his peril he was unable by the exercise of due care to escape it. Furthermore, appellant Wollaston saw the latter and the truck in which Mrs. Giorgetti was seated, and was thereafter, as impliedly found by the jury, negligent in failing to avoid the collision. That he failed to see Mrs. Giorgetti is immaterial, as he was, in consequence of his negligence, responsible for all the damage proximately caused thereby whether it could be anticipated or not. Civ. Code, § 3333.

Appellant further criticizes certain instructions (one of which contains an obvious verbal inaccuracy) in which, it is urged, the law was incorrectly stated. None, however, can fairly be said to have been misleading or, if erroneous, prejudicial.

It appearing that the verdicts were fairly sustained by the evidence, and no error being shown which can reasonably be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice in either case, the judgments appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

Opinion in Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [9] The petitions for hearing in this court are denied. However, in the discussion of the application of the doctrine of last clear chance, the District Court of Appeal seems to hold that the jury under the evidence might conclude that the defendant Wollaston, by the exercise of due care, might have observed the plaintiffs' car at a greater distance, notwithstanding the positive and uncontradicted evidence of when he first saw that car. If that portion of the opinion be so construed, it is not approved. The doctrine applies only from the time the defendant actually observes the plaintiff's perilous position, and not from a time when it might be said that he ought to have observed it. Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 754, 134 P. 709; Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696, 218 P. 36. Notwithstanding our disapproval of that portion of the opinion, we are satisfied from an examination of the record that the proper application of the doctrine of last clear chance could be and was made by the trial court and jury.

HOVLEY v. FRANK MELINE CO. et al.*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 27, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 26, 1927.

1. Principal and agent §99—Principal cannot clothe agent with ostensible authority and deny or affirm agency at convenience (Civ. Code, §§ 2315, 2317, 2330).

One cannot hold another out before the public as his agent having authority of a general character and take the benefit of his acts when he considers them favorable to him and repudiate his acts when he considers them unfavorable, under Civ. Code, §§ 2315, 2317, 2330, relating to authority of agents and mutual obligations of principals and third persons.

2. Trial §396(3)—Findings held sufficient to support judgment, though court fixed defendant's liability on different theory than that set forth in pleadings.

Finding that defendant "guaranteed" the payment of $3,000 under contract binding defendant as principal and not as guarantor held not insufficient as not supporting judgment for plaintiff for specific performance of contract, in that it fixed liability of defendant on different theory than that set forth in pleadings which nowhere used the term "guaranteed," since the only way defendant could be guarantor of performance of his contract was to perform it as principal and one "guaranteeing" the payment of his own indebtedness promising to pay it, however awkwardly expressed.

3. Trial $\S$ 404(1)—Findings will be construed together to reconcile conflict due to apparent misplacing of words.

All findings will be construed together for purpose of reconciling conflicts due to apparent misplacing of words "by" and "to."

4. Specific performance $\S$ 12—Agent's offer of performance will not prevent judgment for specific performance against principal with whom party deals directly.

Offer by an agent to perform a contract will not prevent judgment for specific performance against the principal, where the other party to the contract deals with the principal directly, since he cannot be required to deal with the agent.

5. Specific performance $\S$ 12—Offer to compromise contract will not prevent judgment for specific performance.

Offer to compromise is not such an offer of performance as will prevent judgment for specific performance of a contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action for specific performance by Elizabeth Hovley against the Frank Meline Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. M. Chapman and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Meline.

W. I. Gilbert and Isidor Morris, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. The principal point to be decided in the appeal of this case is whether a certain contract signed "Frank Meline Company, by G. H. Seward," and also signed by Peter P. Hovley, plaintiff's assignor, was binding on Frank Meline, who was doing business under the name of Frank Meline Company. Appellant concedes that Seward was at the time he signed the contract in the employ of defendant, but contends that signing the contract was not within the scope of Seward's employment either actual or ostensible. The defendant was at that time engaged in a business of various kinds, among which were construction of buildings, financing, promotion, that of real estate broker, etc. He had four offices in four different localities, and had about 1,000 persons in his employ. He was not, of course, giving personal attention to all of the various branches of his business, but had systematized and organized his business. Seward was operating in what was known as the "Wilshire Office Dept." A letter head had been printed for use in that department on which was printed "The Frank Meline Company, Realtors. Please direct your reply to the Wilshire Office Dept. Attention G. H.

Seward. Promotion, Financing, Loans, Business Properties, Leases, Individually-Owned Apartment, Building Contracts." That letter head was in general use in that department. Mr. Meline learned of this contract executed, in the manner indicated, and did not communicate with Mr. Hovley about it.

[1] After a review of the evidence, we conclude that Mr. Seward was held out to the public by Mr. Meline as having authority to represent him in promoting building contracts and financing and in the manner pursued by Mr. Seward. The contract was a contract of Frank Meline and not of G. H. Seward. A man cannot hold another out before the public as his agent having authority of a general character and take the benefits of his acts when he considers them favorable to him and repudiate his agent's acts when he considers them unfavorable. Civ. Code, §§ 2315, 2317, 2330.

[2] The findings of the court are criticized, and it is true that they are subject to criticism. The use of the term "Frank Meline guaranteed the payment of $3,000," standing alone, supports appellant's contention that the finding is without the issues. The term "guaranteed" nowhere appears in the pleadings or in the evidence, but the meaning of a word is sometimes shown in the context to be different than its technical meaning. The contract was one binding Frank Meline as a principal and not as a guarantor. The only way he could be a guarantor of the performance of his own contract was to perform it as a principal. Where a man "guarantees" the payment of his own indebtedness, he promises to pay it, however awkwardly expressed. And, again, when the trial court finds that he guaranteed "under the terms," etc., the terms of the contract can be considered in ascertaining what "guaranteed" meant, and that it was the obligation specified in the contract. We hold that the judgment should not be reversed on the ground that the court fixed the liability of the defendant on a different theory than that set forth in the pleadings, and we construe the findings as above stated and not on a different theory than that shown in the pleadings. As we construe the findings, the cases of Chetwood v. California Bank, 113 Cal. 414, 45 P. 704, McDougald v. Argonaut Land Co., 117 Cal. 87, 48 P. 1021, and other cases cited by appellant in support of his criticism, are not in point.

[3] Again, there is no distinction between the delivering of a certain memorandum to certain materialmen for the benefit of defendant, and a delivery to defendant under the facts of this case, and hence there was no material discrepancy on this point between the allegations of the complaint and the findings. The criticism that it is found that the material was delivered to materialmen instead of by them is so apparently a careless misplacing of "to" for "by" and "by" for "to," that the judgment should not be reversed for that reason. All findings should be construed together, and, if possible, all conflicts should be reconciled rather than to reverse a judgment because of such conflicts. Haight v. Haight, 151 Cal. 90, 90 P. 197.

[4, 5] The contention that the judgment should be reversed because Seward offered to perform cannot be sustained for two reasons: Hovley was dealing with Meline as a principal and could not be required to deal with a man of less responsibility whom he had a right to consider as an agent only. Again, the offer to perform was not made in full accordance with the terms of the Meline Company contract and was at best an offer to compromise.

We find no prejudicial error in the proceedings in the trial, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

METCALF v. ROMANO et al. (Civ. 5796.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 2, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Aug. 1, 1927.

1. Highways ⇨184(2)—Evidence held to support recovery for death of boy struck by automobile while he walked along highway.

In action for death of seven year old boy struck by automobile as he walked along highway, evidence held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

2. Witnesses ⇨40(2)—Determination of competency of children under age of ten to testify is within trial court's discretion.

Determination of question of competency of children under ten years of age to testify is matter for trial court to determine in its discretion.

3. Highways ⇨184(4)—Instruction following statutory language as to automobile driver's duty to exercise care held proper (Motor Vehicle Act § 113).

In action for death of seven year old boy killed by automobile as he walked along highway, instruction as to automobile driver's duty to exercise care in driving on public highway which followed wording of Motor Vehicle Act 1923, p. 553, § 113, held proper.

4. Highways ⇨184(4)—Instruction on care required of automobile driver held not erroneous, as omitting circumstance whether child injured suddenly ran in front of car.

In action for death of boy struck by automobile as he walked along highway, instruction dealing with care required of defendant in driving automobile, including element whether deceased's conduct indicated he was aware of approach of defendant's automobile, held not erroneous, as omitting question whether deceased suddenly ran out on pavement in front of car.

5. Trial ⇨194(16)—Instruction, telling jury what to consider in determining whether defendant used due care in driving automobile, held not to direct verdict.

In action for death of boy killed by automobile as he walked along highway, instruction, telling jury what to consider in determining whether defendant used due care and drove car at reasonable speed, held not to amount to direction of verdict, if certain facts were found from evidence.

6. Trial ⇨234(4)—In action for death of boy killed by automobile, instruction directing verdict, if certain facts were found, held not erroneous.

In action for death of boy killed by automobile as he walked along highway, instruction directing verdict, if certain facts were found, held not erroneous, where such facts, though very much condensed, included lack of due care by defendant, proximate cause, and lack of contributory negligence.

7. Highways ⇨174—School children have right to travel highways without being accompanied by parents to guard against injury by automobiles.

Children going to school have right to travel highways of state; parents not being required to accompany them nor to send them through fields where stock are frequently grazing in order to avert possibility of injury from careless driver of automobile.

8. Highways ⇨174—Child traveling along highway need not indicate intent to run in front of automobile before care is required of driver.

It is not necessary, before care on part of automobile driver is required toward child traveling along highway, that child must first indicate intent to immediately run on highway in front of machine.

9. Death ⇨104(5)—Instruction, limiting parent's recovery for child's death to pecuniary loss considering duty to provide for child during minority, held proper.

In action by parent for death of seven year old boy struck by automobile as he walked along highway, instruction, limiting recovery to financial and pecuniary losses suffered by plaintiff, and allowing jury to consider, in fixing amount of verdict, that plaintiff was bound to provide for, maintain, clothe, and educate child during minority, held proper.

10. New trial ⇨143(1)—Jurors' affidavits cannot impeach verdicts.

Verdicts cannot be impeached by affidavits of jurors.

11. New trial ⇨44(2)—Juror's expression during deliberations held not sufficient reason for new trial, as showing prejudice, in action for death of minor struck by automobile.

Expression of individual juror during deliberations prior to arriving at verdict, in action for death of seven year old boy struck by automobile, held not sufficient reason for setting aside verdict for plaintiff and granting new trial, as showing prejudice against defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Two separate actions by A. B. Metcalf against D. Romano and another were consolidated for trial. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, and J. S. Garnett, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. L. Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought two separate actions in the superior court of Fresno county, Cal., for the sum of $10,000 damages for the death of Byron Metcalf, a seven year old son of plaintiff, alleged to have resulted through the boy being struck by an automobile negligently operated by the defendants on the morning of December 4, 1923, while the child was traveling on his way to school along a public highway of Fresno county, Cal., commonly known as the Whites Bridge road. The cases were consolidated for purposes of trial, and one verdict returned and one judgment entered, verdict and judgment being for the sum of $5,000. A motion for a new trial was made and denied and the appeal is taken from this order and from the judgment on a typewritten manuscript.

[1] The collision which caused the boy's death was at a point on the Whites Bridge road about 15 miles west of the city of Fresno. At the place where the fatal injuries were received, the road, which is a paved one, with dirt shoulders, runs east and west upon a straight line. Plaintiff resided on a small ranch on the north side of the road. On the morning in question Byron Metcalf and two other boys of about his age were on their way to school, traveling on foot, no other person being with them. To reach the schoolhouse the route they were traveling led from plaintiff's ranch to the Whites Bridge road; thence west along this road for about a quarter of a mile; and thence north along another road a half mile to the schoolhouse. The three boys were walking west along the north side of the dirt shoulder of the road just before the collision occurred. Coming towards the boys from the west was a large truck and trailer, which is referred to in the evidence as the "cotton truck." Coming from behind them going west was an oil truck, and behind that, also going west, came the defendants in their automobile. At a point 75 or 100 yards east of the place of collision defendants drove their car around the oil truck and pulled over to the north side of the pavement. The cotton truck was then running along the south side of the pavement. The boys were seemingly watching the cotton truck and giving no attention to the oil truck and defendants' automobile. As he passed the boys the driver of the cotton truck waved his hand at them in an endeavor to call their attention to the other machines. Before passing the cotton truck the right wheels of defendants' machine were off of the north edge of the pavement, but all four wheels seem to have been on the pavement close to its edge when the boy was struck. The evidence is conflicting as to just what occurred at the moment of the collision on the part of either the boys or the defendants.

The fatal injury was a fracture at the base of the skull on the left side. The only bruises on the child were at a point above the left ear near the end of the fracture and on the left side of the right knee. The cotton truck was 38 feet long with its trailer and was being driven at a speed of about 13 miles an hour when it met defendant's machine. Its driver testified that when he passed the children they were in line about 3 feet off the pavement; that as he passed them he saw defendants' car approaching about 60 feet away at a speed which he estimated to be between 30 and 35 miles per hour, and that they passed him at the same rate of speed; that he waved to the children and pointed to the approaching car; that he did not see them move; that all of this time the right wheels of defendants' car were off the pavement; that none of the children looked in the direction of defendants' car; and that he did not hear defendant sound his horn. Defendants testified they were 250 or 300 yards from the boys when they first saw them; that they were then walking off the pavement along the shoulder of the road; that they passed the oil truck and then first saw the boys; that they were then going 30 or 32 miles an hour; that the oil truck when they passed it was going 15 or 20 miles an hour; that they blew their horn when they saw the children first, and again blew it twice when 75 or 100 feet away from them; that when about 6 feet away from them one of the children stepped into the highway; that the car could not be turned to the right, as it would have killed all three children; that the only chance was to twist the car to the left; that this was done and the child saved from the front wheel, but that it was hit by the rear fender as the machine passed; and that at the time of the impact the speed of their machine had been reduced to about 12 miles an hour.

The evidence of the driver of the oil truck is not at all clear or convincing as to the details of what came within his opportunities of observing and his evidence given at the coroner's inquest and on the trial are so conflicting and uncertain that no useful purpose would be subserved by attempting to digest and set it forth in this opinion. Taken altogether, there is sufficient evidence to justify the verdict rendered by the jury and the judgment entered, and the same should not be disturbed, unless the alleged errors of law complained of by defendants warrant a reversal.

These errors are claimed to be, first, the permitting of a boy, Tony Soares, aged eight years, one of the companions of Byron Metcalf, to testify before the jury; second, the giving of certain of the court's instructions; third, the refusing to give some instructions requested by defendants; fourth, in the trial court not setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on a claim that one of the trial jurors gave false answers on his voir dire examination, thereby concealing an alleged violent prejudice of the juror against the defendants.

[2] The boy, Tony Soares, was permitted to testify after a careful preliminary examination conducted in the presence of the jury by the trial judge and participated in by the attorneys for both plaintiff and defendant. The determination of the question of competency of children under ten years of age to testify is peculiarly a matter for the trial court to determine in its discretion and there is nothing in the evidence here that would justify an appellate court in declaring that there was an abuse of the sound discretion exercised by the trial court in admitting the evidence of this child.

[3-6] Appellant urges that error was committed in giving the following instructions:

"You are instructed that it is the duty of a person operating an automobile upon a public highway to drive the same with due care and circumspection, and at a careful and prudent speed, not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, and he has no right to drive at such speed or in such manner as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person.

"You are instructed that, in determining whether or not the defendant Romano used due care and circumspection and drove the car at a reasonable and prudent speed, it is your duty to take into consideration all the circumstances which would have influenced the conduct of an ordinarily prudent driver in the same situation, including the relative positions of the children and the truck and trailer, the amount of space which the automobile had in which to pass between them, the apparent age and physical capacity of the children, and whether or not their conduct indicated that they were aware of the approach of the automobile.

"You are instructed that, if you find that the driver of the automobile did not drive with due care and circumspection and at a speed which, under all the circumstances of the case, was reasonable, and that such unreasonable speed or want of due care and circumspection was a proximate cause of the death of plaintiff's child, it will be your duty to find for the plaintiff, unless there was some negligence on the part of the child, or of the plaintiff himself, which contributed to the injury."

Concerning the first paragraph of said instructions, it is urged that it is subject to the same error as was pointed out in Garrison v. Pearlstein, 68 Cal. App. at page 339, 229 P. 353. While the instruction there was similar to the instruction here, the statute then was different and the instruction failed to follow the wording of the statute as it existed at that time; whereas, the instruction here under consideration, so far as applicable, followed the wording of the statute as it existed at the time of the accident involved. Section 113, Motor Vehicle Act of 1923 (St. 1923, p. 553). In the Garrison v. Pearlstein opinion it is expressly stated:

"If the instruction complained of had used the statutory language there would have been no possible objection."

The next paragraph of the above-quoted instructions is criticised by appellant upon the grounds that it emphasizes certain particular circumstances without mentioning all of the material circumstances disclosed by the evidence. The only one specified as omitted is whether or not the plaintiffs' deceased child suddenly ran out upon the pavement in front of the defendant's car. The instruction included the element of whether or not the children's conduct indicated that they were aware of the approach of the automobile. We think this was sufficient, inasmuch as the instruction purports only to deal with the amount of care required of defendant in driving his automobile. The instruction does not purport to deal with contributory negligence, and the element said to be omitted from the instruction relates more properly to a consideration of contributory negligence than it does to a consideration of the negligence of defendant.

Next, it is also urged concerning the second paragraph of said quoted instructions that it should be held to be erroneous upon the same grounds that certain instructions were held to be erroneous in Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Keena v. United Railroads of S. F., 57 Cal. App. 124, 207 P. 35; Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 209 P. 1015. That is to say, appellant contends that the instruction amounts to a direction that the jury find for the plaintiff, if certain facts are found from the evidence. The instruction is not open to this criticism, for it does not purport to direct a verdict; it only purports to assist the jury in the determination of whether or not the defendant driver used due care. The most that could be said for this instruction is that it purports to say what would constitute negligence. It is only in the third paragraph of the above-quoted instructions that a direction for a verdict is found, and there, although the facts are very much condensed, we find all the material elements are incorporated; first, lack of due care on the part of defendant; second, proximate cause; and, third, contributory negligence.

[7, 8] No error was committed by the trial court in the refusal of the instructions requested by the plaintiff that were not given. Children going to school have a right to travel the highways of the state and it is not necessary, before any care on the part of an auto driver is required towards a child, that it must first indicate an intent to immediately run upon the highway in front of the machine, as was requested by the first instruction refused. Neither is it required of parents that they accompany their children traveling a public road on their way to school, nor that they send the children through fields where stock are frequently grazing in order to avert the possibility of injury from the careless driver of an auto on a public road.

[9] The jury was correctly instructed as to the subjects which they could consider in determining the amount of damage occasioned by the death. The instructions given limited a recovery to the financial and pecuniary losses suffered by plaintiff. The court also instructed them that they must take into consideration, in fixing the amount of their verdict, that the plaintiff was legally bound to provide for, maintain, clothe, and educate his child during minority. There is no showing that the verdict is excessive, or that its rendition was influenced through passion or prejudice on the part of the jurors.

[10, 11] The action of the trial court in refusing to grant a new trial on account of the alleged prejudice of one of the trial jurors must be upheld. It does not appear from the transcript or briefs how many of defendants' peremptory challenges were used, the record saying one or more was exercised. Whether or not the jury was polled on the rendering of the verdict does not appear. The motion was heard on the affidavits of two of the jurors and the attorney for defendants. If verdicts could be set aside because of the expressions of individual jurors during their deliberations prior to arriving at a verdict a procedure novel in the administration of justice would be introduced, for by a long line of decisions of the appellate courts of this and of many other states it is held that verdicts cannot be impeached by the affidavits of jurors. The affidavits of the two jurors as to the remarks made during the deliberations of the jury and the testimony given by the juror on his voir dire do not disclose any biased and prejudiced mind against the defendants or their case when he was examined. Regardless of how the juror may have been affected by and regarded the evidence in this case, after it was introduced, it is possible that the evidence in some of the automobile accident cases which have become so frequent all over the state may sometimes have a tendency when heard by jurors to bring about the use of language while deliberating not couched in the choicest English, nor expressive of kindly sentiment towards careless drivers. But such expressions cannot be made a reason for the setting aside of a verdict and granting of a new trial. Methods are provided by law under which jurors, should they violate their oath on their voir dire, or as jurors, can be punished.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HEADLEY et al. v. VAN GINKEL et al.*
(Civ. 4844.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. May 27, 1927.

1. Limitation of actions $\S$ 37(3)—Petition to cancel registration under Land Title Law held not barred by limitations, in view of allegation of fraud (Land Title Law, $\S$ 37; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 338).

Petition to set aside order rendered in proceeding, instituted under so-called Land Title Law (St. 1915, p. 1932), for registration of land held not barred by limitations of section 37, where more than one year had elapsed after registration, in view of allegation of fraud and Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 338, providing that action for relief for fraud may be commenced within three years after discovery by aggrieved party; petition being filed within period provided by latter statute.

2. Pleading $\S$ 8(15)—Allegation of fraud must be based on facts.

In an action arising out of fraud, the bare allegation of fraud in the complaint is insufficient without alleging the facts on which the conclusion of fraud may be based.

3. Records $\S$ 9(11)—Findings in suit to set aside registration of land for fraud held not insufficient because court made no direct finding of fraud (Land Title Law).

Findings in suit to set aside registration of land, under Land Title Law (St. 1915, p. 1932), for fraud held not insufficient because court made no direct finding of fraud, where facts established by findings showed that defendant was guilty of fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Suit by Sears Roberts Headley and another against Henry Van Ginkel and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Loenholt & Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. E. Ricketts, of Covina, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in a suit brought for the purpose of setting aside an order theretofore rendered in a proceeding instituted under the so-called Land Title Law (Stats. 1914 [1915] p. 1932), for the registration of land, by which order a former order made in the same proceeding was vacated.

Briefly stated, the history of the matter is as follows: By virtue of an appropriate proceeding, a decree was rendered by which certain land apparently belonging to the plaintiff herein was duly registered. Seventeen months thereafter, on the ground of fraud as to him, the defendant herein petitioned in said proceeding for the cancellation of the order formerly made therein and for equitable relief in the premises. Following a hearing in said matter, the order originally made in said proceeding was vacated and a new order was made affecting the title of the properties of the respective parties. After the lapse of a period of more than 11 months following the date of the order last made, the instant action was commenced for the purpose of canceling the second order made in the Land Title Law proceeding, which action, as hereinbefore indicated, resulted in a judgment by which the cancellation of the said second order was denied. It is from such judgment that the appeal is taken herein.

In effect, appellants contend that the trial court was without jurisdiction to make the said second order, and that it should be set aside for the reason that it is void on its face. The reasons assigned by appellants for the invalidity of the second order, in substance, are that the statute (section 45 of Stats. 1914 [1915] p. 1932) places a limit of one year on the time for the bringing of an ordinary action for the recovery of any interest in land after its "first registration"; that by section 37 of the same act it is provided that, in case of fraud, the same rights are available to the person defrauded as he "would have had if the land were not under the provisions of his act"; and that, although in the complaint of plaintiff fraud was pleaded, no findings of fraud, as such, were made by the trial court.

More than one year having elapsed after the "first registration" before the defendants herein petitioned the court for an order vacating the first order made in the registration proceedings, by the terms of the statute it is plain that, unless fraud was pleaded and proved in the petition which was filed by the defendants herein, the defendants would have had no standing in court. The petition, however, after setting forth the several facts which the petitioners alleged constitute ground for the relief for which they prayed, contained the allegation:

"That the facts hereinbefore alleged constitute a fraud on the court and these petitioners.

"That the decree aforesaid and land certificate No. 16044 were obtained by fraud as alleged, and are null and void as against them."

[1] By such allegation, assuming that the facts stated in the petition were sufficient to constitute an allegation of fraud, the petition was brought squarely within the purview of the provisions of section 37 of the statute (Stats. 1914 [1915] p. 1932), which in such circumstances purports to accord to petitioners the identical rights which they "would have had if the land were not under the provisions of this act." As section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in effect, that an action for relief on the ground of fraud may be commenced within three years after discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud, and as it appears that the petition was filed within such statutory period, it becomes clear that any point as to the time when the proceeding was commenced by the petitioners for the relief claimed by them is unavailing to appellants.

The remaining point affects the question of the sufficiency of the findings on the question of fraud to support the said second order made by the court. It is not contended by appellants, that the facts alleged in the petition were insufficient to support the conclusion of fraud therein contained and hereinbefore set forth. Indeed, in the brief filed by appellants the following statement may be found:

"The petition of Van Ginkel to set aside the original registration alleges fraud. But the court denied said petition and made no finding of fraud. * * *"

Neither is any complaint made by appellants that the evidence adduced on the hearing was insufficient to support a finding of fraud had the court seen fit to make such direct finding, nor that the facts as found are not the equivalent of such a finding. Consequently it must be taken as admitted that the pleading and the proof were sufficient in all respects; the only thing lacking, according to the intent and purpose of the contention made by appellants, being that the court made no direct finding of fraud committed by the appellants in the premises.

[2] In an action arising out of fraud it is thoroughly established law that the bare allegation in the complaint, that the defendant has been guilty of fraud in the transaction on which the action is founded, is insufficient as a pleading. The facts on which the conclusion of fraud may be based must be alleged. See 12 Cal. Jur. p. 800 et seq. and cases cited.

The case of Hick v. Thomas, 90 Cal. 289, 27 P. 208, 376, was an action to set aside a conveyance of property on the ground of fraud and duress. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appealed. Among his contentions was one that the findings were insufficient in that they did not specifically state that the representations made by defendant were false. With reference thereto the syllabus states the law as follows:

"A finding of facts inconsistent with and contradictory of the representations made sufficiently shows that the representations were false, without a specific finding thereon."

In the case of Bates v. United Construction Co. (Cal. App.) 253 P. 328, a question somewhat similar to that here under consideration was involved in that the appellant there contended that as the action was one "for the recovery of money as return of consideration on an action for rescission," the failure of the judgment in so many words to recite that a rescission was adjudged rendered the judgment of no validity. The following statement of the law affecting the particular point appears in the syllabus (52 Cal. App. Dec. 438):

"In such action it cannot be said that the judgment was invalid for the reason that there was no conclusion of law stating that a rescission had been effected, where it was apparent that the facts found and the judgment rendered thereon meant nothing other than that the contract was extinguished or rescinded."

[3] It therefore is manifest that the facts are what is of paramount importance, and upon which the judgment must ultimately rest. The legal conclusion following from the facts that fraud has been practiced upon the plaintiff either may or may not be tenable, dependent entirely upon what is actually shown by the findings of fact. The facts being established by the findings, if, as a matter of law, they show that the defendant has been guilty of fraud in the premises, it is a matter of no consequence either that they have been misnamed, or that they have received no label whatsoever.

Assuming that which seems to be conceded by appellants, to wit, that aside from the conclusion of fraud the findings made by the court were sufficient to support the said second order, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

PFUNDER v. GOODWIN et al. (Civ. 4703.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Husband and wife ⇨149(1)—Wife's right to exemption of earnings from execution for husband's debts may be waived (Civ. Code, §§ 168, 3268).

Wife can waive the right to the exemption of her earnings from execution for her husband's debts, given by Civ. Code, § 168, under section 3268, providing that benefit of certain statutes, may be waived by any party entitled thereto unless such waiver would be against public policy.

2. Husband and wife ⇨268(2)—Wife waives exemption of her earnings from execution for husband's debts by investing them in community property held in name of husband (Civ. Code, §§ 168, 3268).

Where wife, after first receiving her earnings, which are exempt from execution for husband's debts under Civ. Code, § 168, allows the money to be invested in community property held and possessed in the name of her husband, she waives its further exemption from execution for her husband's debts under section 3268, permitting such a waiver.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨154(1)—That bill of sale alleged fraudulent as against creditor was recorded is of no importance (Civ. Code, § 3440).

In determining whether a bill of sale was void as a fraud on creditors under Civ. Code, § 3440, no importance is to be given to the fact that the bill of sale was recorded.

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨146(2)—Sale of tractor by husband to wife held fraud on creditors and void, where tractor remained on same premises as before, though thereafter driven by wife (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Where tractor alleged to have been sold by husband to wife remained at their home and in other places where the husband had been using it, the same as before the sale, though the wife thereafter drove the tractor, sale held fraudulent as against creditors and void, under Civ. Code, § 3440; delivery being insufficient where the transferor continues to have the use and control in the same manner and to the same extent as before.

5. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨135—Statute declaring what conveyances shall be presumed fraudulent and void as to creditors must be construed the same where husband and wife are parties to sale as in other cases (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Construction of Civ. Code, § 3440, providing that certain transfers of personal property shall be presumed fraudulent and void as to creditors if made by person having possession or control, and not accompanied by immediate delivery followed by actual and continued change of possession, must be construed in the same manner when the sale is between husband and wife as in other cases.

York, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action for conversion of personal property brought by Alice Pfunder against Frank J. Goodwin, administrator of the estate of Wm. H. H. Goodwin, deceased, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

C. H. Scharnikow, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. S. Maloney and C. O. Thompson, both of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The judgment from which defendants appeal, covers 80 per cent. of the value ($500) of a tractor, which was sold by the sheriff in execution of a judgment against the respondent's husband.

It is conceded that the tractor as originally purchased by respondent's husband was community property of the husband and wife. It was found by the court that said tractor had been purchased under a sales contract, in the name of the husband, and that 80 per cent. of said purchase price was paid by the plaintiff with her separate earnings. Said earnings were deposited in a joint bank account of the plaintiff and her husband, and that account was checked upon in making the payments for the tractor. The remaining 20 per cent. of the purchase price "was paid out of community funds belonging to plaintiff and her husband." The court found also that, until seized by the sheriff, the tractor had remained "in joint possession" of the plaintiff and her husband.

Section 168 of the Civil Code says: "The earnings of the wife are not liable for the debts of the husband." In this case the wife had earned certain money by her personal industry. That money went into the joint bank account, and was checked out by the husband to pay for the tractor. How far may funds, thus obtained and invested, be pursued and defended by the wife as against creditors of the husband who have given him credit in the purchase by him of community property? Suppose the tractor had been sold by the husband, and suppose the proceeds had been reinvested in other merchandise, or in real property. May the wife, at any time thereafter, hold such property as against creditors of the husband (the seeming owner of the property) by proving that the original investment, years before, was made with funds earned by her?

Reasonable justice would appear to require that there be some limit to the assertion of such claims, if the "community property" laws under which we live are to continue in force.

[1, 2] The wife's right to hold exempt from execution for her husband's debts moneys classed as "earnings of the wife" is within the class of rights which "may be waived by any party entitled thereto, unless such waiver would be against public policy." Civ. Code, § 3268. Section 168, Civil Code, is a declaration of public policy in relation to "the earnings of the wife." But it would seem that such public policy is adequately satisfied when the wife, having first received such earnings, voluntarily waives further right of exemption by allowing the money to be invested in other community property held and possessed in the name of her husband. We think that the terms of said section 168, and the practical effect of such further investment of money with the wife's consent, alike mark the limit of the exemption. "Section 168 does not provide that the earnings of the wife are her separate property, but that they are not liable for the debts of her husband. * * * Likewise without foundation is appellant's contention that, even though the earnings of a wife be incorporated, with the other community property, a sum equal to the amount of these earnings will always remain exempt from the community creditors." Street v. Bertolone, 193 Cal. 751, 754, 226 P. 913, 914.

The views herein stated are in harmony with those expressed long ago by Prof. John Norton Pomeroy, who made a careful study of the community property laws. 4 West Coast Reporter, 305 et seq. See, also, McKay on Community Property (2d Ed.) § 298.

[3-5] In addition to respondent's claim that her original interest in the tractor was exempt from levy under the attachment, she further contends that the judgment should be sustained for the reason that, as found by the court, respondent's husband prior to the sheriff's levy upon the tractor had executed to her a bill of sale of said tractor "in consideration of love and affection and $10," and that on the same day the bill of sale was received in the recorder's office of San Bernardino county, Cal. Appellant, on the other hand, contends that said transfer to the plaintiff was void, under section 3440 of the Civil Code, for want of sufficient delivery and change of possession. On this issue of law we are in agreement with appellant. We do not understand that the recording of the bill of sale is a matter of any importance. Our attention has not been called to any statute providing for the recording of such an instrument, or giving to such recording any legal effect. The judgment creditor of the husband was such creditor while the husband remained in possession of the property, and therefore the transfer by the husband to the wife must be conclusively presumed to be fraudulent as against such creditor, and therefore void, unless the transfer by bill of sale was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the thing transferred. Civ. Code, § 3440. The evidence shows without conflict that the tractor remained at the home of respondent and her husband, or in other places where the husband was using it, after the execution of the bill of sale, the same as before that event. The only exception to this evidence is found in the testimony of respondent that, although the tractor remained on the place, she herself drove it after that time on said premises. This did not amount to a change of possession. Where the transferor, subsequent to the delivery of a bill of sale of personal property, such as an automobile, continues to have the use and control thereof in the same manner and to a like extent as before, there is no such delivery as the law contemplates as requisite to constitute a valid transfer. Tenant v. Cline, 47 Cal. App. 461, 190 P. 1065. The fact that the transferor and transferee were husband and wife furnishes no reason why the provision of the statute should receive a construction different or more liberal than in cases of such transfer between strangers. Blaney v. Cline, 53 Cal. App. 686, 200 P. 751.

The judgment is reversed.

GILDE v. SCHUSTER. (Civ. 5648.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 397(2)—Extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to vary, modify, or contradict written contract, since all written negotiations are presumed merged therein (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to vary, modify, or contradict terms of written instrument by showing intention of parties different from that clearly expressed in the writing, since all previous negotiations and agreements are presumed merged in written contract, in view of Civ. Code, § 1625.

2. Contracts $\Rightarrow$ 169—Where written contract is ambiguous, court must consult conditions, situation, and motives of parties to ascertain intention.

It is duty of court, when language of written contract is not clear, positive, and certain, to consult conditions, situation, and motives of respective parties for purpose of ascertaining intention.

3. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 461(1)—Parol evidence of circumstances and situation of parties to ambiguous contract may be considered to ascertain true intention, and fact issue may be presented.

Where there is latent ambiguity in written contract, or language will admit of more than one interpretation, or intention of parties is doubtful, parol evidence of circumstances and situation of parties may be considered to ascertain true intention, and in this matter issue of fact may be presented.

4. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 450(5)—Parol evidence held admissible, affecting intention of parties to written instrument acknowledging receipt of money, agreement to invest, and promise to repay (Civ. Code, § 1647).

Instrument signed by defendant, acknowledging receipt of money from plaintiff, agreement to invest it, and promise to repay in 30 days, is ambiguous, and parol evidence is admissible to ascertain true intention of parties by reference to circumstances under which it was made, in view of Civ. Code, § 1647.

5. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 1010(1)—Finding of trial court, supported by evidence, that ambiguous instrument was intended as promissory note cannot be disturbed (Civ. Code, § 1647).

Where evidence was sufficient to show that instrument stating receipt of money, agreement to invest it, and promise to repay was intended by parties to be promissory note, finding of trial court that it was one cannot be disturbed on appeal, in view of Civ. Code, § 1647.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James E. Quinn, Judge.

Action by John Gilde against George A. Schuster for money had and received. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for appellant.

Breed, Burpee & Robinson, of Oakland (William M. Thornton, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for money had and received. The complaint is in two counts. Under the first it is alleged that plaintiff, on December 26, 1923, lent to the defendant at his request the sum of $1,000, which he promised to repay with interest 30 days after date. The second count alleges that defendant received said sum from plaintiff under a promise to repay the same within such time.

Defendant in his answer set up as a special defense to each of the two causes of action that the money was obtained to be loaned by him to the Great Western Auto Finance Company for the benefit of plaintiff, along with the sum of $1,500 which defendant was lending to the company on his own behalf; that plaintiff's portion thereof had been so loaned to the company by defendant at the request of plaintiff and at his direction. Upon the trial, plaintiff, as part of his case, introduced in evidence a document signed by plaintiff and delivered by him to defendant in words and figures as follows:

"Oakland, Cal., December 26, 1923.

"Received from John Gilde one hundred dollars which I agree to invest at open interest rate for a period of thirty days, at which time $1,000.00 plus open interest will be paid on demand.

Geo. A. Schuster."

The lower portion of the document contained the additional words and figures:

"I have in hand security of the value of $5,000.00 on 3 notes, of which John Gilde has an interest of $2,000.00. Geo. A. Schuster.

"P. S. These notes under date of 12/27/23."

All of the lower portion to the original document was written thereon by defendant two or three days subsequent to the delivery of the writing in its original form, under circumstances hereinafter referred to. It was contended by plaintiff at the trial that the agreement was a promissory note. Defendant, on the other hand, claimed that the document was a mere receipt and agreement to invest, and that defendant had loaned the funds to the Great Western Auto Finance Company in good faith, and that therefore he could not be held liable upon the instrument. The trial court admitted parol testimony for the purpose of interpreting the meaning of the writing. Under this ruling all of the surrounding circumstances of the transaction were brought out. It appears therefrom, in substance, that on or about December 23, 1923, defendant visited a barber shop conducted by plaintiff and in the presence of several employees stated that he could obtain 10 per cent. per month on automobile loans. Doubts were expressed as to his ability so to do and of the safety of loans of this character. Defendant informed plaintiff that he wanted to invest in a loan of $2,500 and had only $1,500, and requested that plaintiff loan him $1,000 to make up the difference. Defendant assured plaintiff that the investment he intended to make was a perfectly safe one, as the company, in placing the loans limited the value of the automobiles to 50 per cent. of their value. Defendant then informed plaintiff that he would give him his personal note, but would not guarantee to pay him $100 for the month's interest, but that it would not be less than $70. After thinking the matter over, plaintiff advanced to defendant $1,000 and received from him the instrument in question. On the following day defendant delivered to the Great Western Auto Finance Company the sum so obtained from defendant, together with $1,500 of his own funds, and received from said company three promissory notes secured by three conditional sales contracts. After receiving the same, he met plaintiff and offered to turn over to him the security he had received from the finance company. Plaintiff suggested that he place them in his safe deposit box, which defendant did. At the same time defendant asked for his note and wrote thereon the addenda concerning the security which he held. Shortly thereafter the finance company became insolvent, and it developed that two of the promissory notes and conditional sales contracts were forgeries. In addition to these facts, one of the plaintiff's employees testified that defendant had requested a loan from plaintiff of the amount involved. Under this evidence the trial court found that plaintiff had loaned defendant the amount of the note, and it thereupon gave judgment for plaintiff without the usurious interest. It is conceded that, if parol evidence of the transaction was properly admitted, the case comes within the conflict of evidence rule, and must be affirmed, but it is urgently contended that, aside from the admission of parol evidence to explain the words "open interest," the right of the court to receive such evidence was not authorized, as the instrument in other respects was plain and unambiguous and amounted to nothing more than an agreement to invest.

[1-5] It is, of course, elementary that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to vary, modify or contradict the terms or provisions of a written instrument by showing the intention of the parties to be different from what is clearly expressed in a writing; for, when the parties have deliberately put their engagements into writing in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of their engagement, all previous negotiations and agreements with reference to the subject-matter are presumed to have been merged in the written contract, and the whole engagements of the parties and the extent of their undertaking is presumed to be contained therein. This rule is so well established that it is needless to cite authorities in its support, for it has found expression in our Code. Civ. Code, § 1625. The rule is likewise universal, however, that it is the duty of a court, when the language used is not clear, positive, and certain, to consult the conditions, situation, and motives of the respective parties for the purpose of ascertaining their intention. Though the agreement of the parties be reduced to writing, if there be a latent ambiguity therein, or if the language of the writing will admit of more than one interpretation, or if the intention of the parties is left in doubt from a reading of the document, parol evidence of the circumstances and of the situation of the parties may be considered in order to ascertain their true intention; and in this matter an issue of fact may be presented to the trial court for its determination. Los Angeles High School Dist. v. Quinn, 195 Cal. 377, 234 P. 313; Shelley v. Byers, 73 Cal. App. 44, 238 P. 177. That the instrument in question is ambiguous to our minds admits of no doubt. This is evidenced by the argument of the very able counsel on both sides of the case. The very first portion thereof indicated that it is a receipt. The next portion states its purpose, and then follows an absolute promise to repay at a stated period with an indefinite rate of interest. It is difficult to imagine how so short an instrument could be more ambiguous. Having some features of a receipt and some of a promissory note, it was not only the right but the duty of the court to receive parol evidence to ascertain the true intention of the parties by reference to the circumstances under which it was made. Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 99 P. 476; Civ. Code, § 1647. Such evidence being abundant to prove that the parties intended the instrument to be a promissory note, the finding of the trial court that it was one cannot here be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CORPORATION v. ETIENNE. (Civ. 4560.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 4, 1927.

1. Eminent domain ⇨200—Property owner has burden of establishing damages in condemnation proceeding.

In action to condemn realty, burden of proof is on property owner to establish damages.

2. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Testimony showing special affection for premises held properly excluded in measuring damages in suit to condemn property having market value.

In action to condemn realty shown to have market value, testimony to prove special affection for premises by owner held properly excluded as element in measuring damages.

3. Eminent domain ⇨240—Court's statement that experts whose figure was accepted as damage for land condemned alone testified to familiarity with other sales in vicinity did not show acceptance of other sales as measure of damages.

Where trial court accepted highest figure of plaintiff's experts as measure of damages for property condemned, court's statement that such experts alone testified to familiarity with actual sales in vicinity did not show that trial court based measure of damages solely on sale of other lands, but is to be construed as consideration by court of experts' knowledge of other sales for purpose of testing their knowledge as to reasonable market value of land.

4. Evidence ⇨558(8)—Knowledge by experts in condemnation proceeding of other sales in vicinity held admissible to test knowledge of market value.

In condemnation proceedings, knowledge of experts concerning sales of other lands in vicinity is admissible to test their knowledge and dependability of opinion as to reasonable market value of property in dispute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation against Alexander Etienne. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Prescott, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

S. W. Guthrie, Paul Overton, and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The respondent was plaintiff in a condemnation proceeding by which it was sought to take a certain lot with two houses thereon belonging to the appellant. A trial was had at which three witnesses testified on behalf of the respondent, and a like number on behalf of appellant. The court accepted the opinions of the former set of witnesses, and rendered judgment that the property be condemned, and that the price of $5,670 be paid to the defendant and appellant herein. This appeal is taken from that judgment.

[1] Complaint is made of the rule in this state which places the burden of proof on the defendant to establish damages in an action of this character. However, appellant's counsel recognizes that such is the law, and we concur with him in that view.

[2] It is urged that the court should have received in evidence testimony which was offered, but denied admission, to prove the special affection for the premises which the owner entertained because of past associations and other considerations, such as that it held hallowed souvenirs of his deceased wife. Authorities are cited to the effect that, where property has no market value, the measure of damages is its value to the owner. This rule is inapplicable here, because all of the witnesses testified that the property had a market value. We are cited to no authorities, and are aware of none, holding that the testimony offered would afford a proper element in measuring damages in a condemnation suit.

[3] Finally, it is said that the trial judge excluded every consideration except one in deciding the case, and that the one consideration relied upon by him is not a proper basis for measuring damages in this character of actions. In announcing its decision the trial court stated, in part, as follows:

"The three witnesses for the plaintiff testified that they were familiar with the actual sales made within the past year or two. * * * Defendant's witnesses testified that they were not familiar with any sale at all within that length of time. * * * I don't see any other figure to use. * * * It will be the judgment of the court that the property be condemned at the price of $5,670, the highest figure fixed by the plaintiff's experts will be allowed for it."

[4] From this it is argued that the court based its decision alone upon the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses as to sales, and that the value of land being condemned cannot be determined by proof of what other land of similar locality in the district has brought upon a sale. The rule announced in Reclamation District v. Inglin, 31 Cal. App. 495, 160 P. 1098, is that, while the prices at which other sales of land in the same district were made cannot be used to fix the value of land in dispute, it is proper to ask questions on cross-examination concerning such sales and the prices paid "for the purpose of testing the witness' knowledge and impeaching his opinion." The object of testing the witness' knowledge is obviously to ascertain the dependability of his testimony on direct examination and of his opinion as to the reasonable market value of the property in dispute. In the instant case the court no doubt had in mind at the time of rendering its decision all of the testimony which had been submitted and which was proper for consideration in determining the damages to be assessed for appellant's property. Apparently, exercising its proper prerogative as a trial court in the weighing of testimony, it had resolved the matter down to a balancing and comparison of testimony of the expert witnesses. Under the authority above cited and numerous decisions referred to therein it was entirely within the rule to consider the knowledge displayed by these experts concerning sales of other lands in that vicinity "for the purpose of testing the witnesses' knowledge." We think that, construing, as we must, all intendments in favor of upholding the decision of the trial court, no different construction can be placed upon its quoted statement than this, and that, so construed, no error was committed, nor did any prejudice result to appellant's legal rights.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOYCE et al. v. KRUPP et al. (Civ. 5489.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 26, 1927.

1. Covenants ⚡79(3)—Restriction may be enforced by lot owner only if it creates servitude burdening defendant's lot in favor of complainant's lot as dominant tenement.

That building restrictions in deed to lot in a tract restricted under a uniform plan of improvement may be enforceable as between lot owners, their insertion in deed must burden defendant's lot as servient tenement in favor of lot of complaining owner as owner of dominant tenement.

2. Covenants ⚡108(2)—Under covenant limiting lot owner's right to enforce restrictions to owners in same block, nonobservance of restrictions in other blocks did not affect owner's right to enforce restrictions.

Where covenant in deed to lot in restricted tract gave one lot owner a right of action against others for violation of restrictions occurring on lots facing on same street and in same block only, lot owner's right to enforce restrictions against an owner in the same block who purchased lot with knowledge of restrictions was not affected by nonobservance of restrictions by owners in other blocks.

3. Covenants ⚡108(2)—Defendants are entitled to show that lot owners suing to enforce building restrictions have themselves violated restrictions.

In lot owners' action to enforce building restrictions, defendant is entitled to show in abatement of plaintiffs' action that plaintiffs themselves have violated restrictions.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1048(7)—Sustaining objection to cross-examination of plaintiff, suing to enforce building restriction, as to whether he rented building in rear of his lot, not limited to whether building was occupied for residence purposes, held not reversible error.

In action to enjoin violation of uniform building restrictions and for damages, sustaining objection to defendant's question asked of plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether plaintiff did not have a building on the rear of his lot occupied by persons from whom plaintiff received rent, if offered to show that plaintiffs themselves violated restrictions by using such structure for residence purposes, held not reversible error, since question did not limit occupation of such building to residence purposes, and restriction permitted customary outhouses, including private stable or garage, which if not used by plaintiff could have been rented by him without violation of restriction.

5. Deeds ⚡144(1), 157, 165—"Condition" is created by mutual agreement of parties binding on both, and breach forfeits estate.

A condition is a qualification annexed to an estate on the happening of which the estate is enlarged or defeated, and it is created by mutual agreement of the parties and is binding on both so that breach of condition works forfeiture of estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Condition.]

6. Covenants ⚡1—"Covenant" is agreement of covenantor only, and breach is ground for recovery of damages and injunctive relief.

A covenant is an agreement of the covenantor only, breach of which is merely ground for recovery of damages with right to equitable remedies of injunction restraining further violation and to abate structure illegally erected.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Covenant.]

7. Injunction ⚡62(3)—Lot owners held entitled to sue for damages for violation of restrictions limiting use of property to private dwellings, and to enjoin such use.

Where deed contained a covenant restricting use of premises to first-class, private, one-family residences and a covenant and restriction providing that restrictions and conditions shall run with land and that breach thereof may be enjoined, abated, or remedied by appropriate proceedings, held that lot owners were entitled to maintain an action for damages for breach of covenant, and, irrespective of provisions to that effect, were entitled to equitable remedies.

8. Injunction ⚡13—Proof of actual or substantial injury is not necessary to enjoin violation of uniform building restriction.

Proof of actual or substantial injury is not essential to entitle lot owners to restrain violation of uniform building restriction, but mere proof of violation of restriction is sufficient.

9. Covenants ☞103(2)—Substantial injury must be shown to justify award of damages for violation of uniform building restriction.

In action at law for damages for violation of uniform building restriction, substantial injury must be shown to justify award of damages.

10. Covenants ☞119—Court properly considered nature and appearance of building violating uniform building restriction in determining whether injury occurred and amount thereof.

In action for damages for violating uniform building restriction, limiting use of premises to first-class one-family private dwelling, court properly considered fact that defendant's building was not of a pleasing and beautifying appearance nor artistically constructed in determining whether plaintiff's property had been injured by the erection thereof and the amount of depreciation resulting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by Roy E. Joyce and another against Lena Krupp and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Erwin P. Werner, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ellis & Vickers, Kimpton Ellis, and Joseph W. Vickers, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment awarding damages in an action based upon the alleged violation of certain building restrictions contained in a deed.

Plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, were the owners of lots numbered 366 and 367 in a tract of land which had been theretofore subdivided and platted into a large number of blocks and lots and sold pursuant to a map thereof filed in the county recorder's office. All deeds thereto, including those conveying the lots to plaintiffs and defendants, contained the following uniform building restrictions: That until January 1, 1930, "the said premises shall be used for residence purposes only. That no building or structure whatever other than a first-class private residence, with customary out-buildings, including a private stable or garage, shall be erected, placed, or permitted on said premises, or any part thereof. * * * That only one such residence building shall be permitted on said lot at one time." The evidence shows that said restrictions were inserted in said deeds pursuant to a general plan or scheme for the improvement of said tract, and the court so found.

All of said deeds also contained a condition and covenant reading as follows:

"Provided, that a breach of any of the foregoing conditions shall cause said premises to revert to the said grantor, its successors or assigns, each of whom, respectively, shall have the right to immediate re-entry upon said premises in the event of any such breach; and, as to the owner of any other lot in said tract fronting upon the same street and in the same block with the said premises, the foregoing restrictions and conditions shall operate as covenants running with the land, and the breach of any such covenant or the continuance of any such breach may be enjoined, abated, or remedied by appropriate proceedings by such grantor, its successors or assigns or by any such owners, their heirs, devisees, executors, administrators, successors or assigns, but by no other person."

Plaintiffs acquired lot No. 366 in June, 1922, and about a month later established their residence thereon. In the interim defendants started to erect the building in controversy on their lot No. 367, which adjoins plaintiffs' lot on the south in the same block and fronts on the same street. It was not until August 14, 1922, however, that the construction of said building had progressed far enough to enable plaintiffs to determine the style and character thereof, at which time they discovered that it was designed to be a duplex or two-family dwelling, and consequently violated said building restrictions. The next day, August 15, 1922, and again on August 16, 1922, plaintiffs notified defendants in writing of such violation, against which plaintiffs protested and demanded that defendants comply with the terms of their deed; but the latter, ignoring said written notices and demands, proceeded to and did complete said structure as originally planned by them, which resulted in plaintiffs instituting this action on September 30, 1922. The complaint sets forth two causes of action, the first being an equitable one under which injunctive relief was sought, both prohibitory and mandatory; the second was one at law for damages. Upon trial the injunctive relief prayed for was denied, but under the second cause of action plaintiffs were awarded damages in the sum of $1,500, the trial court having found that "said building or structure erected (by defendants) upon said lot 367 is not a first-class private residence, but, on the contrary is, and is intended to be, a duplex or two-story residence which can be conveniently used by two families entirely separate and apart from each other"; and that the same "is an unsightly looking structure or building and * * * is so constructed and designed as to clearly show that it is a two-family dwelling or duplex house and not a first-class private residence"; and therefore violated the building restrictions contained in the deed (Walker v. Haslett, 44 Cal. App. 394, 186 P. 622), for which plaintiffs were entitled to damages in the amount of the depreciation caused thereby to their property.

Defendants make no claim that the above findings are not supported by the evidence, nor do they question the validity of said building restrictions, nor that of the condition and covenant upon which plaintiffs' action is founded; but they seek to defeat plaintiffs' right of recovery upon the ground that said building "restrictions were not being observed and complied with generally by the owners of the lots on the same street and in the same tract"; that plaintiffs purchased their lot in said tract with full knowledge of those conditions, and that consequently none of the remedies provided for in said covenant were available to the latter, citing Bryant v. Whitney, 178 Cal. 640, 174 P. 32.

[1, 2] We find no merit in the point. In order that such restrictions have force, not merely as between the original parties, but as between lot owners, it must appear that their insertion in the deed by the original grantor was, in effect, the creation of what amounts to a servitude, to the burden of which the lot of the defaulting owner is subjected as the servient tenement, and to the benefit of which the lot of the complaining owner is entitled as dominant tenement. Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945; McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 215 P. 678. In other words, the right to enforce said restrictions by a lot owner depends upon the existence of a privity of estate or of contract between himself and the defaulting owner. As will be noticed, the covenant under consideration conferring upon one owner a right of action against another for a violation of said building restrictions limits his right of action to a violation occurring on a lot "fronting on the same street and in the same block" with his own, and is therefore unenforceable against those owning property in the same tract but beyond the boundaries mentioned, the reason being that as between himself and the latter owners no privity of estate or of contract exists. The evidence here shows without dispute that neither at the time plaintiffs acquired their lot nor at any later period was there any violation of such building restrictions on property situate within the same block and fronting on the same street as plaintiffs' property, except the violation committed by defendants. Therefore, even though it be conceded that there was a nonobservance of such restrictions by owners of lots situate in a portion of said tract against whom plaintiffs were given no right of action, such fact did not affect plaintiffs' right under the covenant to enforce the building restrictions against defendants and other owners with whom such privity existed. Werner v. Graham, supra; McBride v. Freeman, supra. The case of Bryant v. Whitney, supra, upon which defendants rely, is different from the instant case in many of its material facts, and, besides, it appears that "there was no privity between the plaintiffs and the defendant.

[3, 4] Defendants assign as error a ruling of the trial court sustaining plaintiffs' objection to the following question propounded to one of the plaintiffs while under cross-examination: "Is it or is it not a fact that you, in the rear of your house, and on the same lot, you have a building there that is occupied by two people for which you collect rent? * * *" claiming that thereby they were denied the right to prove that plaintiffs themselves were violating said building restrictions. If it be assumed that in the absence of any affirmative allegation in the answer charging plaintiffs with having violated said building restrictions defendants were entitled to urge that defense, we think the court might well have allowed the question to be answered as a preliminary question, for defendants were entitled to show in abatement of plaintiffs' action, if such was the fact, that plaintiffs themselves had violated said building restrictions. Bryant v. Whitney, supra. But we are not prepared to say that the error, if any there was, in sustaining the objection to this particular question warrants a reversal of the judgment for the following reasons: At the time the objection was made, and in support thereof, plaintiffs asserted, and correctly so, we think, that if this particular question were answered in the affirmative, the fact would not be established thereby that a violation of the building restrictions had been committed, because, as they argue, under the terms of said deeds plaintiffs were entitled to build "customary outbuildings, including a private stable or garage," and, in the absence of any prohibitive clause to that effect, to rent the same provided such structures were not rented or used for residential purposes in violation of the restrictions in said deed that "only one such residence building shall be permitted on said lot at one time." If, therefore, defendants' intention in asking said question was to prove this latter condition, their purpose could easily have been made clear by reframing the question after objection thereto had been sustained, so as to make it less ambiguous; and failure to pursue the matter further after the grounds of plaintiffs' objection had been amplified by the comment mentioned fairly implies that defendants' only purpose in asking said question was to prove that plaintiffs had collected rent for the use of their garage or stable or other outbuilding as such, and was not to prove that any such structure was being utilized for residential purposes. In that state of the record we are of the opinion that the single ruling complained of, if erroneous, does not justify a reversal of the judgment.

[5, 6] Further contention is made that said deeds, having provided that "the breach of any such covenant or the continuance of any such breach may be enjoined, abated or remedied by appropriate proceedings by such grantor * * * or by any such owners, * * * "restricted plaintiffs to the exercise of the remedies mentioned, and consequently gave them no right of action for damages. We are unable to sustain this contention. In volume 9 of California Jurisprudence, at page 335, it is said:

"The distinction between conditions and covenants is a decided one and the principles applicable quite different. A condition is a qualification annexed to an estate, upon the happening of which the estate is enlarged or defeated, and it differs from a covenant, in that it is created by mutual agreement of the parties, and is binding upon both, whereas a covenant is an agreement of the covenantor only. A breach of a condition on which an estate is granted works a forfeiture of the estate, while the breach of a sole agreement of the covenantor is merely ground for the recovery of damages."

And in volume 7 of the same work, at page 778, it is again stated that

"The ordinary remedy for nonfulfillment of a covenant is that the delinquent party must respond in damages"—citing a large number of cases.

In addition to an action for damages, however, the complaining owner is entitled to invoke equitable remedies to enjoin further violation and to abate the structure illegally erected (Walker v. Haslett, supra; Pomeroy, Equitable Remedies, vol. 1, p. 283; 7 Cal. Jur. p. 779); and where, as here, both equitable relief and damages are sought in separate causes of action the defendant may not complain when the court, as it did in the instant case, denies the former and grants the latter. Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 503, 126 P. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1.

[7] It will be observed that the deeds under consideration contained both a condition and a covenant, the latter running with the land and inuring to the benefit of said owners. Therefore, under said covenant, plaintiffs were allowed to maintain an action for damages for the breach of said covenant, and, regardless of any provisions to that effect inserted in said deeds, were also entitled to the exercise of equitable remedies. The insertion in said deeds of the provision purporting to confer upon owners the right to exercise equitable remedies was apparently intended to grant additional and not to restrict their remedies, although such provision was obviously unnecessary in view of the fact that in the absence thereof equitable remedies would have been available.

[8, 9] Contrary to the allegations made in defendants' answer, the court found that defendants' building "is not of a pleasing and beautifying appearance and is not of constructive value and a benefit, and is not a credit and advantage to the property of plaintiffs and every other property within said immediate vicinity * * * and is not artistically constructed"; and defendants claim that the court erred in considering the facts thus found as an element of damage. Where equitable relief is sought, proof of actual or substantial injury is not essential, the establishment of a violation of a uniform building restriction being all that is necessary to entitle a complaining owner to relief (Walker v. Haslett, supra); but in an action at law, substantial injury must be shown to justify an award for damages (Alderson v. Cutting, supra).

[10] It would therefore appear that the facts embodied in the foregoing finding were rightly considered by the court in determining whether or not plaintiffs' property had in fact been injured by the erection of defendants' building, and, if so, the amount of depreciated value it had sustained as a result thereof. The asserted waiver to which defendants call attention was entirely foreign to the question of damages, having related to the allegation in plaintiffs' complaint that defendants' building was constructed in violation of an additional building restriction contained in said deeds which provided that no residence shall be constructed within two feet of either side line of the premises.

The judgment is affirmed.

4. Contracts ⇨322(4)—Evidence held to support award of damages against contractor for cracks in interior plastering of building.

In owner's action against contractor for failure to properly construct building in accordance with contract, evidence held to support award of damages for crack in interior plastering, alleged to have resulted because it was not done in good, workmanlike manner.

5. Contracts ⇨322(4)—Evidence held to sustain finding that contractor constructing building delayed construction beyond period named in contract.

In owner's action against contractor for damages for failure to construct building in accordance with contract, evidence held to sustain finding of delay in completion beyond period named in contract.

6. Damages ⇨122—Rental value held properly allowed for contractor's failure to complete building within period named.

Allowance of rental value of premises as damages for delay in failing to complete construction within period named in contract held proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Anna R. Mahone against Joseph Thompson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Charles H. Adkins and E. C. Bowen, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Curtis Peck, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action growing out of a building contract made March 17, 1920, between plaintiff as owner and defendant as contractor, which plaintiff asserted, and the court found, had not been duly performed by defendant. Judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor for $815 as damages, and from that judgment defendant appeals.

Plaintiff's amended complaint alleges the making of the contract for the erection of a residence building, all the work of which, except heating and painting, was to be done by defendant according to plans and specifications of Frank O. Eager, architect, for the sum of $5,200. The contract provided that the work should be completed within 120 working days. Plaintiff avers also that defendant failed to construct the building according to the plans and specifications in numerous particulars; further, that completion was delayed, and that plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of $3,000. In reference to some, but not all, of the defects specified, the court found that defendant had not complied with his contract, and particularly that he failed to nail down the hardwood floors properly, or to construct in workmanlike manner the windows and outside wall, or to plaster the house properly. In each of these matters the court assessed separately the damages sustained by plaintiff, in amounts aggregating $230. The court further found that there was delay in completion of the building beyond 120 working days, the time allowed by the contract, and that the contract was not in fact completed until April 1, 1921. For the delay, the court fixed the damages at $585. Judgment having been rendered against him for a total of $815 and costs, defendant made a motion for a new trial, and, upon denial of the motion, appealed from the judgment.

Defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's findings as to either the defects or the delay.

[1] In regard to the hardwood floors, the court found that defendant failed to nail them down properly or in good and workmanlike manner, and assessed the damage at $60. The defendant contends that the evidence shows that these floors were properly nailed, but that they buckled because the plans prepared by plaintiff's architect did not provide sufficiently for ventilation. Defendant's contention on this point is correct. Plaintiff testified that the buckling occurred in the dining room and in part of the living room at the north side of the house, where there was no ventilation, and that this lack of ventilation was the cause of the buckling. Likewise, Irwin Beatty, a building contractor who was called by plaintiff as a witness, testified that the floors were laid right, but that the buckling was due to lack of ventilation on the north side of the house, and that any floor, no matter how well nailed, would buckle if there were not ventilation beneath. He put the expense of repairing the floor at $60 to $65; and the court in its finding evidently adopted his estimate. Defendant testified that he followed the plans and specifications, which did not call for ventilators on the north side, and that the floors were nailed in the usual way at intervals of eight inches. He did not see the floors after they buckled, and the court would not allow him to express an opinion as to the cause of the buckling. The contract and specifications are included in the record on appeal, but not the plans. The testimony of the witnesses mentioned comprises all the evidence in relation to the hardwood floors, and, such being the state of the record, it is apparent that there is no support for the court's finding that defendant failed to nail down the hardwood floors properly or in good and workmanlike manner. The allowance of $60 for this item is therefore not sustainable.

[2] As to the windows, the court found that they leaked because of poor workmanship. The defendant contends, however, that the leaks were due to defects in the architect's plans. Plaintiff testified that the leaks occurred where the frames were set into the hollow tile, and that for want of proper filling beneath the frames, openings were left through which water leaked into the interior and damaged the walls and wallpaper. The witness Irwin Beatty corroborated plaintiff's statement, and placed the damage at $75, as found by the court. There was some conflicting testimony on behalf of the defendant, but the testimony adduced by plaintiff is sufficient to support the court's finding.

[3] Concerning the outside wall, the finding of the court is that the wall was not constructed in a good, workmanlike manner, or so as to be weatherproof, in consequence of which water leaked through, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $75. The specifications prescribed the mixture for the outside walls and the finishing coat, the component parts of which were to be combined "in the proper proportions to make weatherproof." Plaintiff testified that the outside wall showed small cracks all over the house, that water came in everywhere, and that the plaster was not weatherproof. Her witness Irwin Beatty testified that there were spots in different places where the water had soaked through the outside walls and had damaged the wallpaper in two rooms; and that this was due to seepage through the tile, stucco, and plaster. He fixed the expense of proper waterproofing at $75, and this amount was accepted by the court in its finding. The defendant in his testimony did not deny that the walls were not waterproof. He said merely that he used the material specified, and put the mixture on with the usual thickness and in the usual manner. Similar testimony was given by the plasterer who did the work; but he said also that leaks might be caused by shrinkage of green lumber. The testimony on behalf of the defendant does not afford sufficient ground for disturbing the court's finding.

[4] Another defect specified was in the interior plastering, which, the findings state, cracked, owing to the fact that the plastering was not done in good, workmanlike manner. The damage awarded for this item is $20. Plaintiff testified to cracks throughout the house, and spoke particularly of a crack about one-eighth of an inch wide in some places, which ran the entire length of the house through the ceiling of several rooms, from east to west. She testified also that the plastering had popped in various rooms. Concerning the large crack, the witness Beatty said that the only explanation he could give was that there was faulty construction, either in using damp lumber or in some other way, whereby the wood partition was caused to start away from the tile and the outside wall. He said also that in a house properly built the plastering might check, but not crack open to the extent of an eighth of an inch. He testified further that he noticed what he called blisters in some of the unpapered rooms, and that such blisters or popping should be fixed in order to make a first-class job. Defendant admitted that there were blisters and cracks, but stated that the plaster was mixed and applied in the usual manner. In this he was corroborated by the plasterer; but neither that witness nor the defendant himself attempted any explanation of the large crack running through the entire length of the house. The court's award on this item finds ample support in the evidence.

[5, 6] The only remaining item is that of the allowance for delay in completion beyond the period of 120 working days named in the contract. By amendment to the complaint made at the trial, plaintiff alleged that defendant did not complete his contract until April 1, 1921; and the finding accords with this averment. Defendant contends that he completed his work by August 28, 1920, but admits that the plumbing and electric wiring, which were included in his contract, still remained to be done at that time, and that thereafter certain finishing work would be required. His testimony as to the actual time of completion is of the vaguest character, his memory being so weak that he was unable to state even the month. There was never any certificate of acceptance; but plaintiff testified that the architect came to her in November, 1920, with bills for materials to be paid, and that she refused to accept the house as completed and made objection to the leaky walls and windows. She testified further that when she examined the house she found that the thresholds were not in, the front door was without hinges, and the garage doors without lock, and other hardware which she had furnished was not in place. It appears that defendant did some further work in December, but still there remained carpenter work to be performed; and, after waiting until March, plaintiff hired other workmen to do what defendant had left undone, and these men continued work until some time in April. Plaintiff testified that she did not enter into actual occupancy until some months later. The court accepted the plaintiff's testimony and, as damages for delay, allowed the rental value of the premises to April 1, 1921, at the rate of $75 per month, which amount, according to uncontradicted testimony, represents the fair rental value at the time. The evidence justifies the action of the court in respect of the delay in completion.

The amount of $60 awarded for the hardwood floors should be deducted from the judgment, reducing it to $755; and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

BALDWIN v. PACIFIC AUTO STAGES, Inc.BERNZOTT v. SAME.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Findings that defendant was not negligent and that both plaintiffs were negligent, supported by evidence, must be affirmed.

Where only ground urged on appeal in personal injury actions was that evidence was insufficient to support findings that defendant was not negligent and that both plaintiffs were contributorily negligent, if there was any competent evidence in the record to support either finding, the judgment must be affirmed.

2. Highways $\S$ 184(2)—Evidence held to sustain finding of negligence in driving automobile on left side of highway and into defendant's motorbus.

In action for damages from collision of automobile with defendant's passenger bus on a public highway, evidence held to sustain finding of plaintiff driver's negligence in parking the automobile along highway with lights out and suddenly flashing lights after car was driven onto the left side of the highway and into defendant's approaching bus.

3. Negligence $\S$ 88—Where plaintiffs' intoxication was direct cause of accident, rule that intoxication does not constitute contributory negligence is inapplicable.

In action for personal injuries, where it was claimed that plaintiffs' intoxication not only contributed to accident, but was direct cause of it, rule that intoxication under certain circumstances does not constitute contributory negligence is inapplicable.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Separate actions by Margaret L. Baldwin and by William Bernzott against the Pacific Auto Stages, Inc. From judgments for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Walter E. Dorn, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The plaintiff Bernzott sued for damages to his automobile caused by a collision with a passenger bus operated by the defendant on the public highway near San Carlos. The plaintiff Baldwin, a passenger riding with Bernzott at the time of the collision, sued for personal injuries. Both causes were consolidated for trial and were heard on the same evidence. The trial was had before the court sitting without a jury, and resulted in judgments for the defendant in both cases.

The plaintiffs have appealed on a joint bill of exceptions.

[1] The only ground urged on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the defendant was not negligent and the finding that both plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence. Either finding would support the judgments, and, under the well-known rule, if there is any competent evidence in the record to support the findings, the judgments must be affirmed.

[2] The plaintiff Bernzott was driving a Buick car up from San Jose going toward San Francisco at about 8:30 p. m. on November 19, 1920. With him at the time were his brother, the brother's wife, and Mrs. Baldwin. As they neared San Carlos, an autobus, operated by the defendant corporation and traveling southerly from San Francisco, collided with plaintiff's car near the middle line of the highway. Mrs. Baldwin suffered some personal injuries caused by glass flying from the broken windshield. The other occupants of the plaintiff's car were not injured. Both complaints charged the defendant with negligence upon the specific ground that the autobus was being operated on the wrong side of the highway. The trial court found that this allegation was not true, and also found that, at the time of the accident, the plaintiff's car was driven on the left, or wrong, side of the highway.

Evidence was offered to show that, as the bus was traveling south, it was preceded immediately by a Cole sedan and by a Ford, which suddenly pulled up and stopped near the right-hand outer edge of the highway; that the Cole swung sharply to the left to pass the Ford, and the driver of the bus followed the Cole to a point near the middle of the highway; that the Buick, driven by Bernzott, suddenly flashed on its lights and approached from the left-hand side of the highway, running diagonally across the highway until struck by the autobus. It was shown that when the collision occurred the autobus was alongside of the parked Ford; that it had been compelled to turn into the middle of the highway to avoid a collision with the Ford; that the other side of the highway was clear and free of all traffic; and that the collision might easily have been avoided if the plaintiff Bernzott had been driving in a careful and prudent manner.

Testimony was offered that automobile tracks were seen from plaintiff's car to a point off his right-hand side of the highway; that both plaintiffs were intoxicated at the time of the collision; that the plaintiff Bernzott was in such a bad state he was taken to the Redwood City jail and confined for the night; and that Mrs. Baldwin admitted to witnesses at the time that she had been drinking.

It was the theory of the defense that plaintiffs had parked their car off the right-hand side of the highway with the lights out for "another little drink"; that as it was driven onto the highway the lights were suddenly flashed on and the car was driven into the approaching bus. In support of this theory testimony was offered to show that all the members of plaintiff's party had been drinking, that after the collision one of them hid a bottle of wine near a telegraph pole besides the highway, and that this was recovered and turned over to the traffic officer.

[3] On this appeal the plaintiffs point out that all the testimony tending to prove intoxication was denied, and they insist that we should rule that the preponderance of the evidence is with them. This was the function of the trial court, and, from a full examination of the record, we are satisfied that it made no mistake in its finding. Cases are cited to the point that intoxication under certain circumstances does not constitute contributory negligence. The rule is not applicable to a case where, as here, it is claimed that the intoxication not only contributed to the accident, but was the direct cause of it.

Judgments affirmed.

GRAHAM v. REED et al. (Civ. 4843.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 2, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1927.

1. Public lands $\S$ 54(9)—Patent from state held not subject to collateral attack, on ground land was mineral, by one subsequently establishing placer location (Act Cong. March 3, 1853 [10 Stat. 244]).

In action to quiet title, patent from state issued in 1890 held not subject to collateral attack by one claiming under placer location established in 1921, on ground that state did not acquire title; land being mineral, in view of Act Cong. March 3, 1853 (10 Stat. 244), granting land to state.

2. Public lands $\S$ 54(9)—Finding that lands claimed under patent from state, which was not subject to collateral attack, were mineral, held void.

Where patent from state was not subject to collateral attack, in action to quiet title, on ground that, land being mineral, state never acquired title, finding that lands were mineral since time of grant from national Government to state was beyond court's power, and void.

3. Taxation $\S$ 697(6)—One acquiring quitclaim deed from owners of undivided two-thirds of land sold for taxes held entitled to redeem whole; "party in interest" (Pol. Code, $\S$ 3780, 3817).

Where land was sold to state for taxes, one procuring quitclaim deed from persons holding undivided two-thirds may redeem whole of land, as against one claiming under placer location established after sale for taxes, since grantee in quitclaim deed having interest at time of redemption was "party in interest," within Pol. Code, $\S$ 3780, in view of section 3817.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interest.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action to quiet title by John Graham against George Reed, also written George Reid, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John L. Campbell, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Chas. L. Allison, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit to quiet title to certain portions of section 36, township 6 north, range 4 west, San Bernardino base and meridian, situated in San Bernardino county. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals therefrom.

Plaintiff claims title through mesne conveyances from Charles S. McDuffee, patentee from the state of California, under date of April 14, 1890, and also as a redemptioner from a tax sale to the state of California for delinquent taxes for the year 1915; said redemption being made on the 17th day of March, 1923. Defendant claims title by virtue of a placer location under date of February 2, 1921.

[1] The chief question involved in the decision of this case is whether the patent to McDuffee is subject to collateral attack. Appellant contends that he is entitled to a reversal of the judgment and an order directing judgment to be entered upon the findings quieting his title to his said placer mining claim. In support of his contention appellant calls attention to the findings of the court and the allegations of the complaint as follows. Finding II of the court reads:

"That on the 3d day of March, 1853, and continuously ever since and on said 14th day of April, 1890, when said patent was issued to the said Charles S. McDuffee, the lands included in said section 36 were mineral in fact, and at the time of the survey of said lands and the return thereof by the United States, said lands were mineral and well known to be so."

As this appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, it does not appear upon what evidence the trial court based its finding that on the 3d day of March, 1853, and ever since, said lands were mineral in fact and were well known to be so at the time of the survey of said lands and the return thereof by the United States. In so far as disclosed by the findings, the placer claim of the defendant was not located until the 2d day of February, 1921. No other facts appear in the findings to indicate that said lands were well known to be mineral at the time of the survey and the return thereof by the United States. Paragraph IV of the second cause of action in the complaint reads:

"That said lands and premises are valuable only for the lime rock and lime ore therein contained; that the surface of said lands is barren and unproductive and has no value for agricultural purposes and yields no income whatsoever except the income derived from the mining, extracting and sale of lime rock and lime ore therein contained."

Appellant concedes that said patent is not subject to collateral attack unless, first, the state had no title; second, it is absolutely void upon its face; third, the issuing thereof was without authority; or, fourth, was prohibited by statute; citing Patterson v. Winn, 11 Wheat. 380, 6 L. Ed. 500, and Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 324, 325. Appellant claims that the title to the land in question did not become fixed and absolutely vested in the state of California at the time of the survey and the return thereof by the United States, and that said title did not so rest in the state of California at the date of the issuance of said patent on April 14, 1890. As recited in the patent, whatever title was possessed by the state at the date of the issuance of the patent was held by virtue of the Act of March 3, 1853 (10 Stat. 244), granting to the state of California sections 16 and 36 of each township in said state for school purposes. Section 6 of said act reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted, that all the public lands in the state of California, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the exception of sections sixteen and thirty-six, which shall be and hereby are granted to the state for the purposes of public schools in each township, and with the exception of lands appropriated under the authority of this act, or reserved by competent authority, and excepting also the lands claimed under any foreign grant or title and the mineral lands, shall be subject to the Pre-emption Laws of 4th September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, with all the exceptions, conditions, and limitations therein, except as is herein otherwise provided; and shall, after the plats thereof are returned to the office of the register, be offered for sale, after six months' public notice in the state of the time and place of sale, under the laws, rules, and regulations now governing such sales, or such as may be hereafter prescribed."

In support of his argument appellant cites the case of Ivanhoe Mining Co. v. Keystone Consolidated Mining Co., 102 U. S. 167, 26 L. Ed. 126, where the court interpreted the statute hereinbefore mentioned as follows:

"It follows from the finding of the court and the undisputed facts of the case, that the land in controversy being mineral land, and well known to be so when the surveys of it were made, did not pass to the state under the school section grant."

In the foregoing case, however, the facts are to be distinguished from those in the instant case. In that case plaintiff asserted title to the land in controversy under a patent from the state of California and the defendant under patents from the United States. The trial court found the land to be mineral, and that the patent of the United States was issued to defendant for three several mining claims—one located in 1851, one in 1853, and one in 1863; that the original locators of said claims and their grantees have held undisputed possession thereof ever since, and by such possession and the working of said mines the possessory title was vested in defendant at the time it filed its application for said patent in the land office of the United States on January 6, 1871, unless the state of California had acquired title to section 36 by grant from the United States. On the 18th day of June, 1870, application was made to the state authorities to purchase the land on which these claims were located, and a state patent was issued to plaintiff's vendee on October 3, 1872. The township in which the land lies was surveyed in the field in March, 1870, the survey approved September 3, 1870, and the plat filed in the United States land office at Sacramento October 7, 1870. Within three months after this latter date the application of the defendant was made for patent for the three mining claims and the patents were issued July 14, 1873.

On the other hand, in the present case it does not appear from the findings that the defendant ever received a patent from the United States, but merely that on the 2d day of February, 1921, 30 years after the state patent was issued to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, the defendant located placer mining claims on said land by posting thereon a notice of location, and that a copy of said location notice was recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county in 1921. In the preceding case the claims were located about 20 years before the state patent was issued to defendant. In the case at bar it does not appear at what time the survey of said lands or the return thereof was made by the United States. Nor does it appear that the defendant ever made application for patents of the mineral claims from the United States.

The question as to whether a land patent issued by the state is subject to collateral attack is ably discussed in Saunders v. La Purisima Gold Mining Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656. The facts in that case are in many respects very similar to the facts in the present case. In that case defendants located a mineral claim on certain lands 6 years after the state patent therefor had been issued to plaintiff's predecessor in interest. On the trial defendants offered "to prove that the land in controversy—namely, the north extension of the La Purisima quartz mining claim—was expressly excepted from the grant to the state of California by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1853, as the same is mineral land." Plaintiff's objection to the offer was sustained and thereafter the court granted a new trial on the ground that the court erred in sustaining the objection to defendant's offered evidence as to the mineral character of the land in controversy. Plaintiff appealed from the order granting a new trial. In reversing the order for a new trial, the Supreme Court said:

"The respondents rely upon Hermocilla v. Hubbell, 89 Cal. 5 [26 P. 611], in support of the order of the court granting them a new trial. Although the facts in that case are different from those in this, still it must be confessed that said case furnishes support to the contention of respondents. The opinion seems to rely upon Mining Co. v. Consolidated Min. Co., 102 U. S. 168 [26 L. Ed. 126], and it is said with reference thereto: 'That decision is controlling and must be followed here. The question then remains, Were the disputed premises at the time of the grant mineral land—that is, known to be valuable for minerals?'

"The facts as found in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, supra, were that during the year 1850, and continuously ever since, and when the said patent was issued on the 10th day of December, 1870, and at the time of the survey of said lands (being a portion of the sixteenth section), 'they were and have been, and now are, known to be public mineral lands of the United States, having therein known valuable mineral deposits.' Whereas, in the United States case, referred to by the Commissioner as controlling, and to be followed by this court, the facts were that there were three mining claims on the land in controversy—one located in 1851, another one in 1853, and the other in 1863, the last being 7 years before the public survey of the tract, which was in 1870. The mining patent was applied for on these locations nearly 2 years before the state patent was issued and subsequently and within a year thereafter the United States patent was issued on said mining locations. Hence the contest in that case was between two conflicting patents. Whereas, in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, supra, the contest was in the nature of a collateral attack upon a state patent, on the ground that the land was mineral land. It is said in the latter case: 'The question then remains, Were the disputed premises at the time of the grant mineral lands—that is, known to be valuable for mineral lands?' But another and equally important question seems to have been overlooked by the court in that case, and that is, By whom and at what time are the facts to be ascertained and determined as to the character of the land at the time of the grant, whether mineral or non-mineral? And another question of equal importance is as to the effect of a patent, issued by competent authority, purporting to convey such land. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon both of these questions are so numerous and so uniform (and the decisions of this court are in the same line, with few exceptions) that both questions now ought to be considered well settled. The first is that by the laws of Congress providing for the patenting of certain public lands, upon the as-certainment of certain facts, the proper officers of the land department of the general government have jurisdiction to inquire into and determine those facts; that is, if a large body of public lands be subject to sale or other disposition, but subject to reservation of such parts as may be found to be of a particular character, as swamp or mineral land, the land department has jurisdiction to determine the character of any part thereof, and its decision is conclusive. In Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447 [1 S. Ct. 389, 27 L. Ed. 226], Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, says: 'We have so often had occasion to speak of the land department, the object of its creation, and the powers it possesses in the alienation by patent of portions of the public lands, that it creates an unpleasant surprise to find that counsel, in discussing the effect to be given to the action of that department, overlooked our decisions on that subject. That department, as we have repeatedly said, was established to supervise various proceedings whereby evidence of a title from the United States to portions of the public domain is obtained, and to see that the different requirements of acts of Congress are fully complied with. Necessarily, therefore, it must consider and pass upon the qualifications of the applicant, the acts he has performed to secure the title, the nature of the land, and whether it is of a class which is open to sale. Its judgment upon these matters is that of a special tribunal, and is unassailable except by direct proceeding for its annulment or limitation. Such has been the uniform language of this court in repeated decisions.'

"In this case it was shown that the land in question was surveyed and sectionized—whereas the act of Congress directed that in case of mineral lands it should not be sectionized—and that the plat of survey showing the land to be agricultural land, in other words, not mineral, was returned and properly approved. As a further measure of precaution, and to allow abundant opportunity for a full investigation and ascertainment of the character of the land, the disposal of the same was suspended for a number of years, and, finally, it having been determined that it was of the character of land subject to be granted to the state, a certificate was issued by the proper United States authorities to the state of California, certifying its right to the section of land in question under the grant of 1853. The state's patent thereupon issued to the plaintiff's grantor long prior to the intrusion of the defendants for the purpose of mining. Under the rule just cited, this concluded the investigation as to the character of the land, except on a direct proceeding to set aside the patent on the ground of fraud or other invalidity."

In Gale v. Best, 78 Cal. 235, 20 P. 550, 12 Am. St. Rep. 44, the plaintiff claimed under a patent to a tract of land under a railroad grant. The defendants claimed by right of possession, upon the ground that it was mineral land, and that all mineral lands are reserved in the grant of Congress to said railroad company. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court said:

"Our opinion is that, where a patent issues for public land under a law which provides for its disposal as agricultural land, either to a railroad company or to pre-emption or homestead claimants, and there is no reservation in the law except a general one of mineral lands, and no reservation at all in the patent, then the patent must be considered as a conclusive determination by the government that the land is agricultural; and afterward, in an action in a court of law, it is not competent to reopen the question of the character of the land. The opposite view would render the titles to a large region of California now rapidly filling up with agricultural settlers unstable, insecure, and almost worthless. It would affect, also, those holding through patents under the pre-emption and homestead laws, for mineral lands are exempted from the provisions of those laws. The theory of that view is that, if the land previously patented as agricultural can at any time be shown to be in fact mineral, then the title to it never passed from the United States, but it had always remained a part of the public domain; and as no statute of limitations runs against the government, the insecurity of the title under the patent would be perpetual, and an attack upon it could be made as successfully 100 years hence as now. Such, in our opinion, is not the law."

The foregoing case was cited and approved in Dreyfus v. Badger, 108 Cal. 58, 41 P. 279, where the plaintiff relied upon a state patent issued on state lieu school lands, and the defendant as a pre-emptioner antedating his right as such prior to the patent by the state. In affirming the judgment of the lower court, the Supreme Court says:

"A defendant may defeat an action of ejectment by showing that plaintiff has no title. But where a patent, regular on its face, has been issued by the government (federal or state) for land which it owns, under a law providing for the disposal of the land patented upon the ascertainment of certain facts, the officers of the land department of the government have jurisdiction to determine such facts, and the issuance of a patent is, upon collateral attack, a conclusive declaration, as against all claiming under said government, that the facts have been found in favor of the patentee. 'And this rule applies to the determination of the particular character of the land which is the subject of the patent.' This was expressly held in Gale v. Best, 78 Cal. 235 [20 P. 550] 12 Am. St. Rep. 44, where we alluded to the authorities at some length, and, basing our conclusion on decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in St. Louis Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636 [26 L. Ed. 875], Steel v. St. Louis, etc., Co., 106 U. S. 447 [1 S. Ct. 389, 27 L. Ed. 226], and French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 169 [23 L. Ed. 812], we declared the law to be as above stated. It would be useless to here repeat the views there expressed. See, also, the late case of Barden v. North. Pac. R. Co., 154 U. S. 288 [14 S. Ct. 1030, 38 L. Ed. 992], and Irvine v. Tarbat, 105 Cal. 237. These cases involved patents of the general government; but, upon principle, the rule applies with equal force to a patent of the state government. Moreover, it has been so expressly held by this court in Doll v. Meador, supra, where it was decided that 'the patent is the record of the state, that the land was subject to location under the grant of the United States, and has been located,' and in Ah Yew v. Choate, 24 Cal. 562, where it was held that the patent is also 'a record of the judgment of the state, by its officers duly appointed for that purpose, that the conditions and characteristics of the land were not such as to constitute it mineral within the meaning of the provisions of the statute.'" etc.

Worcester v. Kitts, 8 Cal. App. 181, 96 P. 335, is a case in which the question of collateral attack on state patents was again considered. The court said:

"The sole question in the case is, Are the state patents, under which plaintiff claims, conclusive as to the character and condition of the land? Concededly, the learned trial judge decided the case upon the authority of Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656. In that case the land had been surveyed in 1870 and the survey approved and official plat filed. In this official plat the section was marked and returned as agricultural land and unoccupied. In 1884 the United States certified, through its proper officer, to the state of California, that the land was unoccupied, and that there were no valid claims thereto adverse to the state. The land had been surveyed and returned by the government as agricultural in character, and so certified by the government, 20 years before the state sold it, and the purchaser had occupied it for 6 years before any claim was made that it was mineral. The case referred to decided that it was too late to inquire into the character of the land, and that upon the facts as shown the patent was a conclusive determination of the question. The facts here are wholly different. Without stating all the allegations of the answer, it was shown that most of the land in question was mineral land, and well known so to be before the grant to the state; that when it was surveyed in 1867 some of the land was occupied and being mined for gold under mineral locations; that the survey and report and plat filed in the United States land office showed the land to be mineral; that subsequently many mineral locations were made and were being worked up to the time this action was commenced and after the patents issued; that the land never was certified to the state as nonmineral, or agricultural, and has never been listed to the state as school land or at all. The case, then, is altogether different in its facts from the facts in Saunders v. Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656, and it is contended, therefore, that it should not be governed by the latter case. But this is a collateral attack upon a state patent, which takes it out of the rule in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, 89 Cal. 5, 26 P. 611, relied on by appellants. Besides, that case was practically overruled in Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656, and it was therein pointed out that a very important question was overlooked in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, 89 Cal. 5, 26 P. 611, namely, 'By whom and at what time are the facts to be ascertained and determined as to the character of the land at the time of the grant, whether mineral or nonmineral? And another question of equal importance is as to the effect of the patent, issued by competent authority, purporting to convey the land.' The court proceeds to show, by adopting the rule laid down in Dreyfus v. Badger, 108 Cal. 53, 41 P. 279, and other cases quite fully commented upon, that 'where a patent, regular on its face, has been issued by the government (federal or state) for land which it owns, under a law providing for a disposal of the land patented, upon the ascertainment of certain facts, the officers of the land department of the government have jurisdiction to determine such facts, and the issuance of a patent is, upon collateral attack, a conclusive declaration, as against all claiming under said government, that the facts have been found in favor of the patentee. And this rule applies to the determination of the particular character of the land which is the subject of the patent.' In the Dreyfus Case the issue was between a state patent to lieu land and a claim under the pre-emption and homestead acts. Mr. Lindley states that 'the land department of the government, in recent years at least, by a uniform line of decisions, has held that mineral lands did not pass to the state under the school grants.' 1 Lindley on Mines, § 136. Still, the question must be determined by appropriate proceedings and may not be by collateral attack. Strong as the facts are as set forth in the answer, and conclusive as they might be if shown to be true, on a direct attack, we do not think they can be advanced in this action to overthrow the state patent. Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656, seems to so hold, and if the doctrine of that case is to be modified, it must be by the court that enunciated it."

[2] The principles discussed in the foregoing authorities are deemed decisive in the case at bar. On the authority of these cases we hold that, where the state's patent was issued to plaintiff's predecessor in interest long prior to the location of defendant's mining claim, investigation as to the character of the land is concluded and the state's patent is not subject to collateral attack, but can only be attacked on a direct proceeding to set aside the patent on the ground of fraud or other invalidity. It follows that the finding of the trial court made on August 22, 1923, that on March 3, 1853, and ever since, the said lands were mineral in fact and well known to be so, was of no force and effect as being beyond the power of the court in a collateral proceeding, and therefore void. Defendant has not shown himself entitled to bring such suit under the circumstances of this case, where the state patent was issued in 1890 and neither the defendant nor any other person, so far as appears from the findings, made any attempt to locate a mineral claim on said lands or to do any mining thereon until more than 30 years had elapsed after the issuance of the state patent.

It is claimed by appellant that the patent issued to plaintiff's predecessor in interest is void ab initio, for the reason that "the patent was issued in violation of the statutes of California providing for the disposition of mineral lands." This argument assumes the premises which we have already held could not be shown by way of collateral attack, namely, that the said land was mineral in fact and well known to be so at the date of the issuance of the patent. On its face the said patent is valid in every particular. It grants the said land to Charles S. McDuffee, and to his heirs and assigns forever, without any determination whatsoever as to the character of the land so granted. Appellant concedes that the grant by Congress to this state of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections by the act of 1853 was a grant in praesenti, and that at the time of the grant there were no known minerals or other exceptions noted in the grant. Appellant then proceeds to the conclusion that the patent issued by the state was void because violating its statutes as to mineral lands, thus assuming the very point in issue which, according to the language of the foregoing authorities, cannot be determined in collateral proceedings. Nowhere does it appear in the record that the state authorities ever took any affirmative action indicating the land to be mineral in character. On the other hand, the state issued its patent in the year 1890, as its patents are issued for all agricultural lands, without any terms, restrictions, or conditions whatsoever. Neither does it appear from the record or the findings that the land was ever designated by the United States survey as of mineral character.

[3] It appears from the findings that the property involved was sold to the state on June 30, 1916, for the taxes of 1915 assessed against Charles S. McDuffee; that on July 1, 1921, the tax collector of San Bernardino county made a deed conveying the said land to the state and a corrected deed dated September 22, 1921; that prior to July 1, 1921, the title to an undivided two-thirds of said land was granted by Charles S. McDuffee to S. Vere McDuffee. The court further finds:

"That on or about the 27th day of September, 1922, and while defendant was so occupying said mining claim, with full knowledge upon his part of the mineral character of said land, and the further fact that defendant Reid was in possession of said placer mining claim, working the same, for the mineral-bearing rock contained therein, plaintiff John Graham procured from said S. Vere McDuffee and wife a quitclaim deed conveying to him all their title, right, and interest in and to said 570 acres of land."

Appellant now urges that the plaintiff is a stranger to the title and could not redeem for the reason that the right of redemption was personal to former owners or those in privity with them before a deed was issued to the state. Section 3780 of the Political Code provides:

"A redemption of the property sold may be made by the owner, or any party in interest, within five years from the date of the sale to the state, or at any time prior to the entry or sale of said land by the state, in the manner provided by section three thousand eight hundred and seventeen."

Appellant contends that the words "any party in interest" appearing in the foregoing section refer to an interest in the land during the 5 years prior to the deed to the state. We are cited to no case which supports appellant's position, and in the absence of such authority, we prefer to construe the words "any party in interest" as being without limitation, and therefore including any person who has an interest at the time of the redemption, though such interest was acquired after the deed was made to the state. In this conclusion we are fortified by the language appearing in section 3817 of the Political Code, as follows:

"In all cases where real estate has been sold, or may hereafter be sold for delinquent taxes to the state, and the state has not disposed of the same, the person whose estate has been, or may hereafter be sold, his heirs, executors, administrators, or other successors in interest, shall, at any time after the same has been sold to the state, and before the state shall have disposed of the same, have the right to redeem such real estate by paying to the county treasurer of the county wherein the real estate may be situated, the amount of taxes, penalties and costs due thereon at the time of said sale, with interest on the aggregate amount of said taxes, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum.

While the plaintiff acquired title to an undivided two-thirds interest only, we believe his interest was such as to entitle him to redeem the whole of said land as against this defendant.

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

MAHANA et al. v. LOS ANGELES ENGINEERING & MFG. CO. (Civ. 4469.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. June 3, 1927.

1. Sales ¶412—Cross-complaint in buyer's action for breach of contract to manufacture electric flashers held insufficient to state cause of action requiring submission to jury.

In buyer's action for breach of contract for electric flashers which failed to function properly, cross-complaint alleging a modification of the original contract, and that plaintiffs agreed to assume full responsibility for successful operation of the flashers to be delivered under the modified agreement, but not alleging that any flashers were actually delivered, excepting 50 cams, held insufficient to state a cause of action requiring submission to jury.

2. Appeal and error ¶1071(6)—Failure to make finding which would have been adverse to appellant will not work reversal.

Judgment will not be reversed for failure of trial court to make a finding, where such finding, if made, would have been adverse to the appealing party.

3. Sales ¶89—In buyer's action, defendant had burden of proof on counterclaim alleging plaintiff assumed responsibility for successful operation.

Defendant, in buyer's action on contract for manufacture of electric flashers which failed to operate, held to have burden of proof on counterclaim alleging modification of original contract and plaintiff's assumption of responsibility for successful operation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas O. Toland, Judge.

On motion for rehearing. Judgment modified and affirmed, and rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 256 P. 279.

Fred Horowitz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone and Perry F. Backus, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On motion for rehearing.

The opinion of this court in the above-entitled cause, reported in 256 P. 279, is amended as follows:

Strike out the last paragraph on page 281, commencing with the words "By its cross-complaint," and ending with the words "lack of such a finding," on page 281, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

[1] Appellant next insists that a material issue was presented by the pleadings and the evidence upon which the trial court made no finding, and that, because of such omission, reversible error was committed. By amendments to its answer and to its cross-complaint the defendant alleged:

"That on or about the 14th day of March, 1921, the plaintiffs and this defendant entered into an agreement, which said agreement provided that the original agreement, dated November 22, 1920, as aforesaid, be modified in the following respects: That a steel plunger, to be made in conformity with a model then and there determined upon, would be used in the dash pot or cylinder of said sign flasher, in the place and stead of the aluminum plunger thereto agreed upon between the plaintiffs and this defendant; that the said dash pot or cylinder in which said steel or aluminum plunger operated would be changed, and made in conformity with a certain design then and there determined upon. Said agreement further provided that, in the event said changes were so made, the plaintiffs would relieve this defendant of any responsibility, and that the plaintiffs would assume the full responsibility for the successful operation of the sign flashers to be delivered as agreed in said agreement dated November 22, 1920, as modified by the aforesaid agreement; that this defendant thereupon immediately undertook to, and did, make the said changes in conformity to said model and design at a cost to this defendant of $1,550."

This allegation required no finding, for it fails to state a cause of action on behalf of the defendant against the plaintiffs. It alleges that the plaintiffs assumed all responsibility for the successful operation of the sign flashers "to be delivered as agreed in said agreement of November 22, 1920, as modified by the aforesaid agreement," but it fails to allege that any sign flashers were delivered under said agreement as modified by the aforesaid agreement.

The amendment to the answer and to the cross-complaint further alleged:

"That on or about the 28th day of March, 1921, this defendant and plaintiffs entered into another agreement, which said agreement provided that the original agreement dated November 22, 1920, as modified as aforesaid, be further modified in the following particulars: That a fiber cam, to be made in conformity with a model prepared by plaintiffs, be used in the place and stead of the cam (the said cam being a part of said sign flashers) theretofore agreed upon between the plaintiffs and this defendant, and that this defendant should furnish to the plaintiffs, without cost, fifty of said cams to be placed upon the flashers theretofore delivered to plaintiffs. Said agreement further provided that, in the event said changes were so made the plaintiffs would relieve this defendant of any responsibility, and that the plaintiffs would assume full responsibility for the successful operation of the said sign flashers to be delivered as agreed in said agreement dated November 22, 1920, as modified as aforesaid. That this defendant immediately undertook to, and did, make the new cams in conformity with said model, and did deliver to plaintiffs fifty of said cams. That said changes cost this defendant the sum of $150."

This paragraph contained an allegation that fifty of the cams were delivered, but appellant has pointed to no evidence in the record, and we have found none, showing that these particular cams provided for under this alleged amendment were in fact ever delivered. Besides, the allegation that fiber cams were delivered is insufficient to show a compliance with the requirement that "said sign flashers" be delivered as agreed in the original contract as modified by this amendment to the agreement, for, according to the amendment above quoted, the defendant was required to make delivery of the sign flashers, and not merely of cams, in order to be relieved of responsibility for the successful operation of the sign flashers.

[2, 3] A judgment will not be reversed for failure of the trial court to make a finding where such finding, if made, would have been adverse to the appealing party. Of course, the burden of proof was on the appellant as to this issue, and the absence of evidence to sustain it would have left an unsupported finding.

With the foregoing amendment of the opinion, the judgment will stand modified and affirmed as previously decided, and a rehearing is denied.

BRYSON v. GROSS. (Civ. 4841.) ★

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 4, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 917(2)—Allowing motion to file another amended complaint, if copy stated cause of action, did not warrant presumption that only general and not special demurrer was sustained.

Provision of court on sustaining demurrer, where demurrer both general and special was interposed, that motion might be made to file another amended complaint if copy was filed with notice of motion stating cause of action, did not of itself warrant presumption that only general demurrer was sustained.

2. Limitation of actions $\Leftrightarrow$ 178—Administrator's complaint to impress trust on proceeds of property conveyed by decedent, who had possession within five years previous, held not barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 318).

Action by administrator to impose trust upon proceeds of sale of land alleged to have been obtained from deceased through undue influence, if action for recovery of real property subject to five-year limitation under Code Civ. Proc. § 318, was not barred, where complaint alleged that deceased was owner and in possession of land described until his death within five years prior to commencement of action.

3. Executors and administrators $\Leftrightarrow$ 129(3)—Administrator's complaint to impress trust on property alleging defendant obtained property by fraud when deceased was in impaired mental condition held to require trial upon merits (Civ. Code § 1575).

Complaint, in action by administrator to impress trust on property conveyed by decedent, alleging decedent was in impaired bodily and mental condition and that defendant, in whom deceased had confidence, took advantage of such condition and of deceased's financial distress by procuring him to execute deed by fraud and without adequate consideration, held sufficient to require trial upon merits rather than determination upon demurrer; "undue influence" being defined by Civ. Code § 1575, as using confidence or another's weakness of mind or necessity for purpose of taking unfair advantage.

4. Deeds $\Leftrightarrow$ 188—Complaint alleging obtaining deed for inadequate consideration from distressed person held sufficient to obtain court's careful scrutiny of transaction.

Transaction by which conveyance is obtained from person in impaired mental or physical condition or in financial straits for inadequate consideration will be examined by court of equity with careful scrutiny, even though facts alleged do not constitute undue influence.

5. Executors and administrators 129(3)—Administrator in suit to impress trust on moneys received from property allegedly obtained from deceased by undue influence was not required to restore consideration.

In suit by administrator brought to impose trust on certain moneys received by defendant from sale of property alleged to have been obtained from decedent by exercise of undue influence, plaintiff was not required to offer to restore anything of value which decedent may have received, as rules of rescission did not apply.

6. Trusts 361—Rules of rescission do not apply to suit to impose implied trust.

Rules of rescission do not apply in suit to impose implied trusts on moneys received and to require accounting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Frank Bryson, as administrator of the estate of Edmund Kochan, deceased, against Fred W. Gross. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

F. R. McNamee, L. C. Preston, and Luke J. McNamee, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Allender and William J. O'Brien, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend. The order provided that if plaintiff desired he could move to be allowed to file a fourth amended complaint, provided he served with his notice of motion a copy of his fourth amended complaint stating a cause of action. Plaintiff elected to stand on his third amended complaint.

[1] The third amended complaint consists of three alleged causes of action, and was filed July 20, 1923. It does not appear from the record at what date the original complaint was filed. The demurrer is both general and special. It is contended by appellant that the demurrer was sustained wholly on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reason that the court provided that a motion might be made to file a fourth amended complaint if a copy was filed with the notice of motion "stating a cause of action." It does not otherwise appear in the record on what ground the demurrer was sustained, and we do not think the foregoing provision sufficient to warrant the presumption that the trial court sustained only the general demurrer. Accordingly, we address ourselves to a consideration of the whole demurrer and to a discussion of the grounds of demurrer relied upon by respondent.

[2] Respondent urges that the action is barred by the provisions of section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

"No action for the recovery of real property, or for the recovery of the possession thereof, can be maintained, unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor, was seised or possessed of the property in question, within five years before the commencement of the action."

It may well be questioned whether this is an action brought for the recovery of real property, or for the recovery of possession thereof, since nowhere does it appear in the complaint that plaintiff seeks to recover real property or the possession thereof, but only that the plaintiff seeks to impose a trust against the defendant solely, and not against defendant's grantee, upon the proceeds of the sale of land described in the complaint and to require an accounting therefor. It is not an action brought by the heirs of a deceased person to set aside a conveyance of land, nor to enforce a trust against the defendant and a purchaser with notice and to recover the possession of the lands, as was the case in Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 P. 820, cited by respondent. Without deciding this to be an action for the recovery of real property or the possession thereof, we do not think that if such were the case the action would be barred by the provisions of section 318, Code of Civil Procedure since the complaint alleges that the decedent, Edmund Kochan, until his death on February 16, 1919, was the owner and in possession of the land described in the complaint, and that the deed from the decedent to defendant reserved a life estate to decedent; also, the deed attached to the complaint and made a part thereof contains the following language:

"Reserving nevertheless to the party of the first part the right to the use and occupation of the said property and to such crops as he may grow thereon during the period of the balance of his natural life."

It does not appear from the record when the original complaint was filed, but it must have been filed before July 20, 1923, the date the third amended complaint was filed. Five years had not elapsed from February 16, 1919, until July 20, 1923.

[3] It is contended by respondent that the complaint does not show undue influence in the transaction. The complaint alleges, in paragraphs V and VI of the first cause of action, as follows:

"That plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that during the month of August, 1915, the said Edmund Kochan was in failing health, of advanced age, to wit, of the age of more than seventy-five years, and while the owner and in possession of said land and premises, and residing thereon, said Edmund Kochan suffered a stroke of paralysis which afflicted his body to such an extent that he lost his power of speech and of locomotion and rendered him practically helpless and unable to care for himself and impaired his mind to such an extent, that he lost his power of memory and thought, and he was thereafter incapable of knowing what he was doing, and of comprehending the ordinary routine of his daily life, and the terms and effect of any business transaction, or the management of his business affairs, and by reason of his said impaired bodily and mental condition and resultant lack of understanding, was incapable in law and in fact of transacting any business or of making any valid disposition of his property, and that from the time of said stroke of paralysis to and including the time of his death, said Edmund Kochan experienced no lucid periods whatsoever, but continued to be afflicted with such lack of understanding as aforesaid.

"That plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that on the 30th day of November, 1915, while said Edmund Kochan was incapable of understanding what he was doing by reason of said stroke of paralysis and the result—and consequences thereof as aforesaid, said defendant Fred W. Gross, well knowing said Edmund Kochan's mental and physical condition, and that he was then and there unable to resist, and unable to understand what he was doing, or to comprehend the terms and effect of business transactions, and particularly the conveyance of all his property to said defendant Fred W. Gross, went to said Edmund Kochan's home, dressed him up in clean clothes, lifted him into an automobile, and conveyed him to the downtown portion of the said city of Los Angeles, to the office of a lawyer and notary public, and then and there taking advantage of said Kochan's impaired mental condition and exercising an authority over said defendant by reason thereof, and for some nominal consideration, the amount of which plaintiff is unable to ascertain, said defendant procured said Kochan to sign and deliver to said defendant Fred W. Gross, a certain purported deed, under and by virtue of which said Kochan purported to convey to said defendant all of the land and premises hereinbefore described, reserving, however, a life estate therein in favor of said Edmund Kochan, under certain terms and conditions in said deed recited; said defendant then and there well knowing that on account of said Edmund Kochan's impaired mental and physical condition, that said Kochan had but a short time to live."

Paragraph VI of the second cause of action contains similar allegations, and further alleges that decedent reposed great confidence in defendant, and that decedent confided in and sought the advice and counsel of defendant, and that defendant, without any adequate consideration therefor, fraudulently induced and persuaded decedent to sign and deliver said deed under the circumstances hereinbefore related, and while decedent was in the impaired physical and mental condition as hereinabove stated. Paragraphs V, VI, and VII of the third cause of action contained similar allegations. It is further alleged:

"That plaintiff is informed and believes and upon such information and belief alleges, that at the time said Edmund Kochan suffered said stroke of paralysis as aforesaid, and for several months prior thereto, said Kochan was greatly disturbed and worried by reason of his financial inability to meet certain taxes and special assessments levied upon and against his property for a public library, flood outfall, and other purposes, and on account of his advanced age and inability therefrom to acquire money as a wage earner, was unable to meet his obligations, and after said decedent suffered said stroke of paralysis he was unable to borrow money by reason of his impaired mental condition; that while said Kochan was in such mental condition and incapable of intelligently understanding the nature of any business, said defendant, Fred W. Gross, well knowing said Kochan's worry and anxiety over his inability to meet his obligations, and his mental condition and affliction as aforesaid, did then and there advise with said Kochan and promise to advance him from time to time money to meet his said obligations and to live upon, until his condition should improve, if said Kochan would secure the same in writing; that said Kochan, relying upon the statements and promises of said defendant Fred W. Gross, signed the said purported deed marked 'Exhibit A' hereto attached, believing the same to be as security for the money loaned and to be advanced by said defendant as aforesaid, and not otherwise; that said defendant Fred W. Gross, did from time to time advance to said Kochan under his promise aforesaid, certain sums of money, the amount of which plaintiff is unable to determine."

Undue influence is defined in section 1575 of the Civil Code as follows:

"Undue influence consists:

"1. In the use, by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, or who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over him;

"2. In taking an unfair advantage of another's weakness of mind; or

"3. In taking a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of another's necessities or distress."

[4] Even though the facts alleged did not constitute undue influence, transactions such as alleged in the case at bar will be examined by courts of equity with zealous scrutiny. In Richards v. Donner, 72 Cal. 207, 210, 13 P. 584, 586, it is said:

"It is claimed that the donor was not entitled to relief from a court of equity, admitting the facts found to be true, because he failed to show undue influence on the part of the donee, and because the mistake of the donor, as to the character of his act, was the offspring of his own weakness, with which the donee had nothing to do. The learned judge of the court below evidently based his conclusion upon the doctrine enunciated and applied by this court in the case of Moore v. Moore, 56 Cal. 89. The court there refers to the case of Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 506 [24 L. Ed. 260] and quotes approvingly from the opinion of Mr. Justice Field. That was an action brought to set aside a conveyance made by a person advanced in years, of great weakness of mind, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, for an inadequate consideration, and without independent advice. There was no showing or claim of undue influence on the part of the grantee. The court there said: 'It may be stated as settled law that whenever there is great weakness of mind in a person executing a conveyance of land, arising from age, sickness, or other cause, * * * and the consideration given for the property is grossly inadequate, a court of equity will, upon proper and reasonable application of the injured party, or his representatives or heirs, interfere and set the conveyance aside.' (See, also, Haydock v. Haydock [34 N. J. Eq. 570] 38 Am. Rep. 385)."

Accordingly, we think that the complaint contains a sufficient allegation of fact, though mixed with conclusions, to require a trial upon the merits rather than a determination upon demurrer.

Respondent further insists that the third amended complaint does not state a cause of action, first, by reason of the fact that it appears on the face of the complaint the cause of action is barred by laches. We have examined the allegations of the complaint, and think that the delay in not bringing the action before the year 1922 is sufficiently explained by these allegations.

[5, 6] Respondent argues that the complaint is faulty in that the plaintiff did not offer to restore anything of value which the decedent may have received under the contract or deed. The rules of rescission do not apply to this case, as this is not a suit for rescission, but a suit brought to impose a trust on certain moneys received by the defendant for the sale of certain property, and to require an accounting.

The remaining grounds of demurrer have been examined and are not believed sufficient.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed.

PETERSON v. GILBERT et al. (Civ. 4855.)★

1. Appeal and error ⇨994(3)—Credibility of evidence held solely for trial judge.

Credibility of evidence of attempt, within statutory period, and readiness at all times, to redeem property from execution sale, and refusal of tender, held solely for determination by trial judge.

2. Mortgages ⇨606—Evidence held to support findings of timely attempt and continuing readiness to redeem from execution sale and refusal to accept tender.

In action to compel defendants to file and record certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale, evidence held sufficient to support court's findings that defendant attempted to redeem property in good faith within statutory period after plaintiff purchased it at subsequent execution sale, that plaintiff failed and refused to accept tender, and that defendant was ready and willing at all times to make redemption and pay amount to which plaintiff was legally entitled.

3. Execution ⇨300—Purchaser not objecting to form of tender in redemption from execution sale, and refusing to state amount required, held estopped to deny that tender was made (Civ. Code, § 1511; Code Civ. Proc. § 2076).

Purchaser not objecting to form of tender in redemption of property from execution sale, declining to state amount to which he claimed to be legally entitled, and making excuses and evasions for purpose of lulling redemptioner into sense of false security until expiration of statutory period, with knowledge of latter's credulity and without suggesting that he was under no legal obligation to compute amount, waived technical defects in tender and was estopped to claim that no tender was made, under Civ. Code, § 1511, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2076.

4. Mortgages ⇨606—Answer, alleging attempt to redeem from execution sale and tender and refusal of amount required, held sufficient, though not alleging continuing readiness to redeem.

In action to compel defendants to file and record certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale of property purposed by plaintiff at execution sale, answer alleging that defendant in good faith attempted to redeem property from subsequent execution sale to plaintiff and tendered all sums to which latter was legally entitled, but that he neglected and refused to accept tender, and containing offer to deposit sum in court in payment of all of plaintiff's legal demands, held sufficient to enable person of ordinary intelligence to comprehend its meaning, though not alleging continuing readiness to redeem.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1170(5)—Defendant's failure to allege continuing readiness to redeem from execution sale did not entitle plaintiff to new trial, where he introduced controverting evidence (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where plaintiff, in suit to compel recording of certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale, introduced evidence controverting defendant's continuing readiness to redeem from subsequent execution sale to plaintiff, absence of allegation of such readiness in answer did not result in miscarriage of justice within Const. art. 6, § 4½, so as to entitle plaintiff to new trial.

6. Mortgages ⇨606—Evidence of defendant's mental incapacity held inadmissible in action to compel recording of certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale.

In action to compel recording of certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale prior to execution sale to plaintiff, testimony as to defendant's mental incapacity to manage her business affairs held inadmissible, where pleadings presented no issue as to defendant's sanity and no attempt was made to explain theory on which testimony was offered.

7. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 1033(3)—Admission of evidence of defendant's mental irresponsibility, precluding any dependence on her statements, held not prejudicial to plaintiff.

Admission of evidence, in action to compel recording of certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale prior to execution sale to plaintiff, that defendant was mentally irresponsible and that no dependence could be placed in her statements, held not prejudicial to plaintiff.

8. Mortgages $\Leftrightarrow$ 606—Judgment awarding purchaser at execution sale his entire outlay and quieting title in defendant, in action to compel recording of certificate of redemption from prior mortgage foreclosure sale, held proper.

In action to compel recording of certificate of redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale prior to execution sale to plaintiff, judgment awarding plaintiff his entire outlay, including legal interest and costs, and quieting title to property in defendant, held proper.

Conrey, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Emile Peterson against Lillian M. Gilbert and another. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Clifford, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in an action wherein the relief sought was that of compelling defendants to file and record a certificate of redemption from a sale by a sheriff in execution of a judgment in a suit to foreclose a mortgage.

In substance, the facts are as follows: Defendant Lillian M. Gilbert, who by reason of her marriage after the institution of the action is now known as Lillian Mary Ann Hall, was the owner of several lots of land upon which she had given a mortgage to her codefendant herein, Louis Brown, as security for a certain indebtedness which Mrs. Gilbert owed to him. Neither the interest nor the principal indebtedness having been paid, the mortgage was foreclosed. Within the time allowed by law Mrs. Gilbert redeemed the property from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings, and a certificate of redemption was issued and delivered to her, but which she failed to place of record. In the meantime the plaintiff in the present action secured a judgment in another action against Mrs. Gilbert on an indebtedness owing by Mrs. Gilbert to the plaintiff. In execution of his judgment the plaintiff levied upon the same property which theretofore had been sold under the execution in the foreclosure proceedings against

Mrs. Gilbert and which property she had redeemed. At the sheriff's sale, under plaintiff's judgment against Mrs. Gilbert, plaintiff became the purchaser of the property. After the expiration of the statutory period from the date of plaintiff's purchase, no redemption from the sheriff's sale having been made and the certificate of redemption from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings not having been recorded, plaintiff brought the present action for the purpose of compelling defendants to record such certificate.

No answer to the complaint was filed by defendant Brown and his default was duly entered. In the answer filed by defendant Gilbert, in effect, she set up that in good faith she attempted to redeem the real property involved in the action from the sale to plaintiff, and for said purpose had offered and tendered to pay to plaintiff all sums of money to which in law plaintiff was entitled, but that plaintiff neglected and refused to accept such tender. By her answer said defendant also renewed said tender and offered to deposit a sum of money in court in payment of all legal demands by plaintiff, as by the court might be directed, and upon such payment being made, defendant prayed that her title to the property in question be quieted.

The court found in accordance with the allegations of the answer filed by Mrs. Gilbert, and by an interlocutory judgment decreed that upon the deposit by her in court for the use and benefit of plaintiff of the amount of money to which the court found plaintiff was entitled, the title to said property be quieted in Mrs. Gilbert. The conditions imposed by the trial court in its interlocutory judgment having been complied with, a final judgment was rendered by which the title to the property involved in the action was quieted in the said defendant.

[1, 2] The principal contention by appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings of fact that within the period allowed by law after plaintiff purchased the property at the sale thereof by the sheriff, defendant Gilbert in good faith attempted to redeem said property; that plaintiff failed, neglected, and refused to accept the tender and offer made by said defendant; and that at all times pertinent to said tender said defendant was ready and willing to make said redemption and to pay to plaintiff therefor the amount of money to which he was legally entitled.

It would serve no useful purpose to set forth at length the evidence given by defendant Gilbert relating to the time of making such tender, the manner in which it was made, nor the specific language and conduct employed by plaintiff in refusing same. Suffice it to say that said defendant testified in substance that on many occasions within the time allowed by law for the redemption of property from sales of the character of that here involved, she had stated to plaintiff personally, as well as to his attorney, that she desired to redeem the property and to that end wished to ascertain the amount of money necessary to make such redemption—at the same time informing each of them respectively that she either had the money in her possession, or at least was in a position to get the money with which to do so; that on none of such occasions did plaintiff make any objection to the form or manner of such tender, but that at each of such times either plaintiff or his attorney, or both of them, declined to state the amount of money which plaintiff claimed as that to which he was legally entitled, but made various excuses and evasions, by reason of which said defendant was prevented from making such redemption until after the statutory period for so doing had expired, at which time plaintiff absolutely refused and declined to permit such redemption to be made. From other reliable evidence it appeared that on each of such occasions said defendant, through her codefendant, Brown, was ready, able, and willing to pay to plaintiff the full amount of money to which plaintiff was legally entitled, which latter fact was communicated to plaintiff.

While the evidence given by said defendant was somewhat voluminous, confused, and at times inconsistent, one part with another, the question of the credibility to be attached thereto was one solely for determination by the judge of the trial court. Separating the questionable portion of defendant's testimony from that part thereof which stood out clearly and unmistakably in support of the defense which was interposed by her, from an examination of the record herein it is clear that sufficient evidence was presented upon which to base the findings of which complaint is made.

"The person to whom a tender is made must, at the time, specify any objection he may have to the money, instrument, or property, or he must be deemed to have waived it; and if the objection be to the amount of money, the terms of the instrument, or the amount or kind of property, he must specify the amount, terms, or kind which he requires, or be precluded from objecting afterwards."

See, also, Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 P. 1115; Smiley v. Read, 163 Cal. 644, 126 P. 486.

As hereinbefore noted, plaintiff made no objection to the form of tender made by defendant. In the case of Latimer v. Capay Valley Land Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 P. 82, a similar situation was presented. Among other things, the court said:

"No objection was made at the time of the offer on the ground that it was insufficient in amount, or on any other ground, and consequently the objection made on this appeal, that the offer and tender was insufficient in amount, was waived, and must be now disregarded. Civ. Code, § 1501; Code Civ. Proc. § 2076; Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 P. 1115. The appellant is also precluded from now objecting: (1) That the interest was not included in the tender; and (2) that the tender was too indefinite, because no such objections were made at the time of the tender. This is clearly illustrated in Kofoed v. Gordon, supra (122 Cal. 314, 54 P. 1115).

"It is also clear that the respondent was not required to produce the money or permit it to be counted in order to constitute a valid tender, so long as the appellant did not accept the offer. 'The thing to be delivered, if any, need not in any case be actually produced, upon an offer of performance, unless the offer is accepted.' (Civ. Code, § 1496.)"

To the same effect, see Sheller v. Livingston, 25 Cal. App. 572, 144 P. 547; McCue v. Bradbury, 149 Cal. 108, 84 P. 993; Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 77 P. 996.

In the case of Howard v. Galbraith, 13 Cal. App. 373,¹ is held that the want of ability or disposition of a defendant to perform a contract and the equivalent of his refusal to perform the same, not withdrawn before the expiration of the time limited by the contract, established a legal excuse for failure to make exact tender and demand for performance by the other party to the contract.

In Benson v. Bunting, 127 Cal. 532, 59 P. 991, 78 Am. St. Rep. 81, it is held that where one entitled to redeem from a sale under proceedings for the foreclosure of a mortgage was prevented from doing so within the statutory period by reason of the misrepresentations of the plaintiff in the suit, the principle of estoppel would be applied to the plaintiff in order that the defendant be enabled to make such redemption after the expiration of such statutory period.

In the instant case, during the entire time covered by the efforts made by defendant to induce plaintiff to state the amount of money which he claimed was owing to him on account of his judgment, it sufficiently appears from the evidence that in effect plaintiff was misleading defendant and lulling her into a sense of false security to the end that the statutory period allowed for redemption might expire and defendant thereby be foreclosed of her rights in the premises. While it may be said that plaintiff was under no legal obligation to compute for defendant the amount of money which would be legally required to make redemption, no statement or suggestion to that effect was ever made by plaintiff or by his attorney to defendant. From the various contacts with the defendant, plaintiff knew of defendant's credulity and led her to believe in his sincerity in the matter, at the same time apparently fully intending to trade upon her weakness and eventually to take an unfair advantage of her. In such circumstances, following the principle announced in the case of Benson v. Bunting, 127 Cal. 532, 59 P. 991, 78 Am. St. Rep. 81, the plaintiff should now be held to have waived whatever technical defects which may have existed in the attempted tender made by defendant, and to be estopped from claiming that no tender was actually made.

Section 1511 of the Civil Code provides that—

"The want of performance of an obligation, or of an offer of performance, in whole or in part, or any delay therein, is excused by the following causes, to the extent to which they operate:

"(1) When such performance or offer is prevented or delayed by the act of the creditor, * * *

"(3) When the debtor is induced not to make it, by any act of the creditor intended or naturally tending to have that effect. * * *

If the payment of a judgment, upon which execution has been levied, may be considered as an "obligation" within the meaning of such statute, the application thereof to the facts in the instant case may not be doubted.

It therefore becomes manifest that neither on the facts nor in the law relating thereto, as decided by the trial court, should appellant be heard to complain.

[4, 5] Appellant also suggests that the answer of defendant Gilbert to the complaint fails "to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action * * * in that it does not contain an allegation of continuing readiness to redeem." While it is possible that in some respects the answer might have been more certain in its language, we are of the opinion that it contained allegations of sufficient directness to enable a person of ordinary intelligence to comprehend its meaning. That plaintiff thoroughly understood its import is made manifest by the evidence which was introduced at the trial on behalf of plaintiff in his attempt to controvert the very allegation which he now specifies was lacking in such answer. Whatever may have been the weaknesses of the pleading to which reference has been had, it clearly appears that they were overlooked by plaintiff on the trial, and that in any event he suffered no detriment by reason of any defects of the answer. The error (if such it was) did not result in a miscarriage of justice, and under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution cannot avail plaintiff to the extent that a new trial should be had on account of the frailty of the pleading.

[6] Appellant also complains that the trial court erred in admitting evidence, over plaintiff's objection, relating to the mental capacity and sanity of defendant Gilbert. The pleadings in the action presented no issue regarding the sanity of Mrs. Gilbert; nor is any attempt made by respondent to explain upon what theory testimony of the character of that of which complaint is made was offered in evidence. It was to the effect that Mrs. Gilbert was incapable of managing her business affairs; that she was irrational in her speech and conduct; that she had no comprehension of ordinary business or legal terms; that she contradicted herself continually on unimportant matters; and that "she just simply does not know what she is talking about most of the time."

[7] While in the state of the pleadings we are convinced that such evidence was inadmissible, still we are unable to see how any injury resulted to plaintiff by reason of its admission. To the contrary, it would seem to have been a help to plaintiff in that it tended to weaken the credibility of Mrs. Gilbert's testimony relating to every vital issue in the case. It certainly did no harm to plaintiff to have the evidence introduced which tended to show Mrs. Gilbert's irresponsibility and that no dependence could be placed in her statements. It therefore clearly appears that, even though it be conceded that error was committed by the trial court in admitting the evidence to which reference has been had, the result was not prejudicial to plaintiff's substantial rights, and consequently cannot suffice as a reason for reversal of the judgment.

[8] By the judgment, the plaintiff was awarded his entire outlay in the premises, including legal interest thereon and costs, and title to the property involved in the action was quieted in the defendant. In equity and good conscience, what more could have been rightfully expected by the plaintiff is not apparent.

This court is convinced that a just judgment was rendered by the trial court. It should be, and it is, affirmed.

I concur: YORK, J.

CONREY, P. J. I dissent. The sole ground of respondent's defense is that she attempted to redeem from a sheriff's sale, by making to the purchaser an indefinite offer to pay the amount required for redemption, but that the plaintiff by his conduct prevented her from redeeming, by failing to give her information concerning the actual amount necessary to make such redemption. The evidence absolutely fails to show that any stated sum of money was ever tendered to the purchaser. The sale was a matter of record. The sheriff's return was on file. The amount required to redeem was merely a matter of computation from the figures in the record. The amount so ascertained could have been tendered. Then it would have been the duty of the purchaser to accept the amount offered, or else to state, to the party offering to redeem, any facts showing that the amount offered was not sufficient.

But until an actual tender made, of some definite sum, the purchaser was not under obligation to act in the matter. He did not mislead respondent at all. He simply stood upon his rights. This he was entitled to do. The fact that the plaintiff might have been, or should have been, more kind and considerate in dealing with the defendant because she was losing her property, or more chivalrous toward her because she was a woman, does not affect the merits of the case. The law does not yet impose penalties for failure to observe any fixed standard of those moral and social virtues.

PEOPLE'S FINANCE & THRIFT CO. v. SHUMAN. (Civ. 3208.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 1, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨79—Agent sued for money had and received for plaintiff held to have no claim for damages for breach of contract to grant exclusive rights to organize branch company under evidence.

In action for money had and received by defendant as agent in sale of stock for plaintiff corporation, in which defendant cross-complained for damages for breach of contract to give defendant exclusive right to organize branch finance company, evidence that defendant sent plaintiff check for balance due mistakenly made for less amount without claiming damages at time, together with statements and transactions between parties, justified finding that defendant's cross-complaint was entirely unfounded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by the People's Finance & Thrift Company against C. G. Shuman, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Henry Heidelberg, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff, a finance promotion corporation, organized and existing under the laws of this state, whose principal place of business is in the city of Los Angeles, instituted this action to recover from defendant, as alleged in the first count of the complaint, the sum of $1,165, as for money "had and received," and, as alleged in the second count of the complaint, for the additional sum of $84.30, on account of moneys paid out by plaintiff for defendant at the special instance and request of the latter. The plaintiff prayed for judgment in the total sum of $1,249.38, being the sum of the amounts sued for in both counts of the complaint.

The answer filed by defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, admitting, however, that plaintiff, prior to the commencement of the action, demanded payment from defendant of the sum alleged in the first count to be due it from the latter and that defendant refused to pay said sum or any sum to plaintiff; alleged that defendant has fully paid and discharged any debt or obligation he ever owed to plaintiff or that ever existed against him in favor of plaintiff, etc.

Defendant also filed a cross-complaint, demanding judgment against plaintiff for damages in the sum of $12,000 for an alleged breach of a contract wherein and whereby plaintiff, so said pleading alleges, agreed to give and did give to defendant the exclusive right to organize and establish for plaintiff, in the city of Eureka, Humboldt county, a branch finance company, and to solicit subscriptions for and sell corporate stock therein, the alleged damages being based and computed upon the probable amount of stock therein which defendant would have sold had he not been prevented by plaintiff from proceeding with the carrying out of the terms of said agreement. It is alleged in the cross-complaint that plaintiff's business is that of "organizing and establishing branches and auxiliary connections in the state of California for the purpose of doing business in buying securities and making loans to customers on securities"; that plaintiff, for the purpose of extending the scope of its operations in that line of activity, appointed and constituted defendant its agent with authority to organize and establish such finance company and, to that end, to solicit and receive subscriptions for 750 shares of stock in such finance company, and agreed to pay the defendant for the services so performed the sum of $16 per share for each share for which the said defendant should obtain a subscription, or which he should sell and that the said "defendant was skilled and experienced in said line of work and thoroughly understood the manner and method of organizing such branch institution and operating and conducting the same and receiving subscriptions for the stock thereof, all of which was well known to plaintiff, and in consideration thereof the said defendant did accept said employment and was ready, able, and willing to fully perform and discharge said employment, and in order to discharge said employment, and organize the said institution in the territory aforesaid did cancel and forego other remunerative employment then offered him and other work at which he could have received and made a valuable profit, for the purpose of engaging in the work and employment offered by plaintiff and accepted by defendant and the said plaintiff did promise and agree with defendant that they would not employ any other person, or use any other means, either directly or indirectly for the purpose of selling and receiving subscriptions for said corporate stock of said corporation in the territory aforesaid, but notwithstanding, the said plaintiff did, against the wish and consent of defendant, enter the said territory aforesaid, and by other persons did solicit subscriptions for and sell said stock to the amount of 750 shares thereof and thereby did prevent this defendant from soliciting such subscriptions or selling such stock, and by reason thereof this defendant was prevented from earning and did lose the sum of $16 per share for said 750 shares of said stock, and this defendant could have obtained said subscriptions and made said sales had he not been prevented by the acts of plaintiff, and by reason thereof defendant has sustained damages in the sum of $12,000."

The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, specifically denying the averments thereof, and alleging, "upon information and belief," that defendant never visited the city of Eureka in relation to the sale of the stock in any institution or financial corporation for or on behalf of plaintiff herein.

The court found that the allegations in plaintiff's first count or cause of action "are, and each of them is, true," and that the allegations of the second cause of action set up in the complaint "were not sustained by competent evidence or sufficient evidence, and they are, and each of them is, untrue." Those findings are followed by the following findings:

"The court further finds that on or about the 20th day of August, 1923, defendant, C. G. Shuman, became indebted to plaintiff herein in the sum of $1,165 as and for payment of commission due plaintiff on 233 shares of stock sold by said defendant under agreement with plaintiff wherein and whereby said defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $5 per share upon each and every share of stock sold by said defendant in the People's Finance & Thrift Company, of Napa, Cal.

"The court further finds that all of the allegations and denials contained in defendant's answer and cross-complaint are, and each of them is, untrue."

Judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,165, and the defendant appeals therefrom.

[1] The sole contention here of the defendant is that no evidence was offered or received "to overcome the evidence offered by appellant in support of the cross-complaint," and that therefore the finding "that all the allegations and denials in defendant's answer and cross-complaint are, and each of them is, untrue," is wholly devoid of evidentiary support. The contention is without substantial support.

It was not questioned at the trial, nor is it here, that, if the claim of damages as set up and demanded by the cross-complaint is unfounded, the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum for which it was awarded judgment. In other words, it is not disputed that defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,165, and that the judgment should stand, if the former's alleged offset by way of damages is, as the court found, not sustained by the proofs. It will be necessary, however, to present the facts of the transaction out of which that indebtedness originated, inasmuch as they are directly connected with the defendant's claim of damages.

As the cross-complaint states, the plaintiff is a corporation and engaged in the business of buying and also in making loans on securities and, to extend the scope of the activities of said business, has established branches in a number of different communities in the state. These organizations were and are commonly called "industrial finance companies," and the defendant's principal business was in installing such organizations in the smaller cities and the towns of the state of sufficient importance, industrially and otherwise, reasonably certain to assure success in the prosecution thereof. The defendant, as is alleged and admitted, was employed by the plaintiff as an organizer of these "industrial finance companies." Among the places in which he operated for the plaintiff in this line was the city of Napa. The terms of his employment for the organization and establishment of such finance company in said city were that he (defendant) was to negotiate for the subscription and sale of 750 shares of stock, at $125 per share, to be disposed of as follows: One hundred dollars to go into the treasury of the company on the par value of the stock thereof, $5 to be paid to the parent corporation (plaintiff), and $20 to be paid to the defendant as compensation for his services in organizing and installing the local company. Defendant, under this arrangement, started operations in the city of Napa, either in the month of March or April, 1923, and completed the sale of the 750 shares of stock and the organization and establishment of the company within a few months thereafter. The defendant thereupon forwarded a check to the plaintiff for the full amount of the commissions on 517 shares of the stock, and, in return, plaintiff paid to defendant, out of said amount, the sum of $20 for each share of the 517, retaining for itself the sum of $5 per share. Thus there were left, to be accounted for by defendant to plaintiff, the commissions on 233 shares of the 750 shares sold. In August, 1923, the defendant forwarded to plaintiff a check for $1,065, as the balance due the latter from the former for the amount unaccounted for by defendant to plaintiff (as above indicated), on the 233 shares. On said check the defendant indorsed a statement to the effect that said check was to operate as a receipt for the full settlement of the claims of plaintiff against defendant on account of the sale of the 750 shares of stock sold by defendant in the Napa city branch. This check was received for the plaintiff by its secretary-manager, Earl D. Pillsbury, at the city of Seattle, Wash., in the month of August, 1923. Perceiving that the check did not represent the full amount due plaintiff from defendant on the 233 shares of stock of the Napa company, to wit, the sum of $1,165, Pillsbury returned the check to defendant (then at Stockton), together with a letter, dated at Seattle, August 27, 1923, in which, among other things it was stated:

"Am returning herewith your check for $1-065.00, with your indorsement on the back reading as follows: 'This check is settlement in full for all accts. of C. G. Shuman and settlement in full for contract of organization of People's Finance & Thrift Co. of Napa, Calif.' Cannot accept this check with the indorsement as written for the reason it is not settlement in full as written, not even covering the settlement on Napa alone, which should be for 233 shares at $5.00 per share, or $1,165. The settlement heretofore made on Napa was for 517 shares, leaving 233 shares to be settled. * * * Please send corrected check for Napa, mailing it to me at San Francisco, where I will be next Saturday. If you wish to put any indorsement on the back, make it read as complete settlement on Napa, and leave out the balance of the matters, which are not settled at all" (referring to money claimed by Pillsbury to be due plaintiff for work at Oakland, and for bills for advertising in Stockton and Modesto, where companies had been formed).

The only question involved in this controversy is, as has been stated, whether the plaintiff violated its agreement with the defendant, giving him, as he alleges in his cross-complaint, the exclusive right to establish a branch or local finance company for plaintiff in the city of Eureka. Defendant was subjected to an extended examination as a witness—first by plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and then as a witness for himself—and his testimony covered the entire period of time during which he was in the employment of plaintiff, commencing about September 1, 1922, and terminating with the organization and establishment by him of the Napa city branch of the latter. It will not be necessary, though, to enter upon a minute examination herein of the testimony. That the defendant and the plaintiff entered into a written contract on December, 1922, but dated January 1, 1923, whereby the former was granted by the latter the right or "privilege," on certain specified terms and conditions, to organize and establish a local finance and securities company in the city of Eureka, said contract limiting the life thereof to the period of 90 days from its date, is not disputed. At some time—whether within the life of said contract or after the time during which it was by its terms to exist had expired does not clearly appear—the defendant, so he testified, visited Eureka and made a preliminary survey of the situation with reference to the contemplated organization of a finance company there, and interviewed two bankers and secured their promise to co-operate with him after the organization of such company by acting as escrow agents, and also talked with and obtained the promise of certain automobile dealers in said city that they would hypothecate with or sell to the company, if organized and established in Eureka, their commercial paper. Whether said contract was in writing renewed or the time for its performance thus extended, the record does not show, but it does appear that he was given some further time after the termination of the period of time during which the written contract was of force and effect within which to organize and open for business a branch company for the plaintiff in Eureka; that, however, he proceeded no further in that direction than as above indicated. But it appears from his own testimony that, either in March or April, 1923 (defendant did not seem to be certain which of those two months), Shuman went to Napa city and proceeded to organize a company in that place for himself and not for the plaintiff. Those two months, it will be noted, were comprehended within the period during which the life of the Eureka contract was to exist. At some time before the month of March or April, 1923, the plaintiff, so defendant testified, gave him the right or privilege of organizing and installing for it a branch company in the city of San Francisco. It appears that, just prior to the time at which defendant proceeded with and was engaged in organizing a company in Napa city, the plaintiff gave another party the privilege of organizing the San Francisco branch, without the consent of Shuman. Subsequently, E. D. Pillsbury, manager of plaintiff, had an interview or conversation with defendant relative to the work the latter was doing in Napa city. In that interview or conversation, defendant referred to the act of plaintiff in taking from him (defendant) the San Francisco territory to operate in, and declared in effect that the plaintiff had mistreated him in that particular matter; that for that reason he intended henceforth to operate for himself or some other company. Several other conversations were thereafter had between the parties relative to operations in Napa city, when, finally, so testified the defendant, it was agreed upon the part of Pillsbury that defendant should be granted and given the right to open a branch company in the city of Eureka and, as a consideration therefor, the defendant would turn over to plaintiff the Napa city branch which he had organized for himself and not for plaintiff or as its agent. The defendant, as above explained, was to receive $20 per share, the plaintiff to receive $5 per share and the balance ($100) to be turned over to the treasury of the local company. A short time later, the formal work of organizing the branch in Napa took place, Pillsbury being present. At that time the defendant, so he testified, said to Pillsbury that he intended to go to Eureka within a few days and proceed with the organization of a company there. Pillsbury, testified defendant, said "All right." About a week after that, so defendant said, he called Pillsbury on the phone from Napa, and stated to him that he (defendant) intended immediately going to Eureka to proceed with the organization in that city of a company, and that Pillsbury replied by saying that he had sent another party to organize a company there, and offered to give defendant the right to organize a company in Petaluma in place of Eureka, which proposition defendant testified that he refused. After some further talk on that occasion, in the course of which defendant charged Pillsbury with breaking his contract with him with respect to the Eureka transaction, defendant said to Pillsbury:

"If you have gone into Eureka, naturally, I will withdraw out of there, but I am going to start a business for myself."

Continuing, defendant stated that Pillsbury "still wanted me to operate in Santa Rosa for them, and I refused to do it, and went ahead for myself." Defendant soon thereafter, and simultaneously with the operations prosecuted in Eureka by plaintiff's agent in the establishment of a company at that place, proceeded with and pressed the organization of a similar company in Santa Rosa, either for himself or a corporation in Spokane, Wash., carrying on business of the same character as that in which the plaintiff is engaged. Some time (the date is not given) after Pillsbury returned to defendant the check for $1,065, with a letter, stating that, because the check erroneously bore the indorsement that it represented payment in full of all demands held by plaintiff against defendant, the former could not and would not accept the same, inasmuch as there was still a balance due plaintiff on the Napa transaction, the defendant addressed a letter to Pillsbury, evidently in response to the letter in which said check was returned as stated, in which, among other things he said that—

"On my (defendant's) return from a trip East, I found your letter regarding check which I mailed you for settlement of Napa. I did make a mistake of $100, but, since you bring up the advertising accounts, I think it is best to arrange a meeting to settle all matters."

The "advertising accounts," referred to in said letter, it is to be borne in mind, involved the expenses incurred in the different localities in which defendant organized companies for the plaintiff for advertising and publicity purposes; that a dispute arose between plaintiff and defendant as to the payment of those expenses, that is, whether defendant was to pay all such expenses, or only half thereof, or, in certain instances, whether he was obligated to pay any part thereof; that the said "advertising accounts" constituted the foundation for the second count or cause of action set up in plaintiff's complaint, in which it was alleged, in general language, that the plaintiff, having paid those accounts in full, was entitled to reimbursement from defendant for the proportion thereof that he was to bear.

While under examination by plaintiff under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant, after stating that, upon completing the organization of the Napa company, he remitted to plaintiff by check the full amount received by him on 517 of the 750 shares of stock sold in said company, and that plaintiff, upon receipt of said check, returned to him $1,034, or $20 for each share of said stock, testified as follows:

"Q. (By counsel for plaintiff) That left a balance of 233 (of the 750) shares to be accounted for, didn't it, Mr. Shuman? A. There were 233 shares I made no statement on.

"Q. As a matter of fact, about August 20, 1923, you did send them a check for $1,065, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How is it you sent them a check for $1,065 instead of $1,165, which would be $5 a share? A. I fully intended to send them a check for the total amount, but through an error in computing the balance due them, which was unintentional, I sent them only $1,065.

"Q. And you intended to send them a check for $1,165? A. I did.

"Q. And through a mistake of your own, you sent $100 short; that is correct, is it? A. Yes, sir."

In the fall of 1923, and after the check above mentioned was returned by Pillsbury to the defendant, the two met at Santa Rosa, so testified the first named, in his deposition, which was received in evidence, and talked over their business affairs. In the course of this conversation, Pillsbury, among other matters, introduced the subject of the balance due the plaintiff from defendant in the sum of $1,165 on the Napa transaction. The defendant in that conversation, Pillsbury deposed, did not make any reference to any counterclaim that he claimed to have against the plaintiff or which he intended setting off as against the indebtedness here sued for, but did say, in effect, that the plaintiff had agreed to pay one-half of the bills incurred in the organization of companies in Modesto and Sacramento. He further stated on that occasion, Pillsbury proceeded to say, that his attorney had objected to any action being taken by him without his (the attorney's) consent. Defendant thereupon made an appointment to meet Pillsbury "the following week," but failed to keep the appointment. Subsequently, however, Pillsbury met defendant in the law office of the latter's attorneys (Case & Forslund) in the city of Stockton, and there, in the presence of a Mr. Arbaugh, Mr. Forslund, and plaintiff's attorney, held a conversation with him. In that conversation defendant admitted that he owed plaintiff $1,165 as a balance on the Napa transaction, but declared that he had a counterclaim against the plaintiff. Pillsbury, in his deposition, stated that defendant had never before made any claim against or demand, written or otherwise, for the payment of a claim upon plaintiff for or on account of the latter's alleged violation of any agreement between him and plaintiff relative to the organization of a company in the city of Eureka. The sole subject of controversy between defendant and plaintiff, Pillsbury deposed, related to differences between him and plaintiff in regard to the matter of the expenses incurred in the organization by defendant for plaintiff of companies in certain localities. Pillsbury testified:

"Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Shuman ever had a contract for the installation of a company at Eureka? A. No written contract, to my knowledge.

"Q. Did you ever have any communication with Mr. Shuman in regard to the installation of a company at Eureka? A. Yes.

"Q. Where did that conversation take place? A. At the time the Santa Rosa conversation took place.

"Q. That was long after Eureka had been established by this company itself? A. Yes."

On October 20, 1922, it appears from Pillsbury's deposition, one Wimsett, then president of plaintiff, wrote and sent to defendant a letter in which, among other things, the writer said:

"Pursuant to our telephone conversation, I will advise that I will hold the contracts on Santa Rosa and Eureka for a period of two weeks from today during which time you may take your choice as to which of those two points you care to enter after you have completed the work on the Oakland Bank. I wish, however, that you would make your choice as soon as you possibly can in order that I may give one of the places to some of the men who will be out of territory very shortly."

This letter, having been sufficiently identified as Wimsett's letter, was admitted in evidence here, with Pillsbury's deposition.

Further examined by counsel for plaintiff, Pillsbury testified:

"Q. Did Mr. Shuman complete the installation of the Oakland institution? A. No.

"Q. Did Mr. Shuman ever notify you or the plaintiff here, in any way, to your knowledge, that he accepted the option given him for the installation of Eureka? A. No.

"Q. Did Mr. Shuman ever engage in the sale of stock in the city of Eureka for this company? A. No.

"Q. Did Mr. Shuman ever sell any stock for this company, or in any institution in Eureka? A. No.

"Q. Did this company, or its officers, or yourself, as far as you know, ever give Mr. Shuman any contract for the establishment of an institution in the city of Eureka? A. No."

On October 26, 1923, Pillsbury addressed a letter to defendant, in which, among other things, he said:

"Have been expecting to hear from you ever since I received your telegram that you could not meet me in San Francisco at the time we had the appointment. I would have been glad to have met you and Mr. Case (the latter defendant's attorney) to have gone over these matters, but really do not see that it is necessary to get together, as there is no dispute as to the amount due."

The letter proceeds to remind defendant of the meeting of himself and Pillsbury at Santa Rosa, at some time, not stated, at which meeting Pillsbury agreed that the plaintiff "would stand one-half of the bills due" for certain advertising for publicity purposes, provided defendant would pay the other half, and then continues:

"As far as Napa is concerned, there is no question as to the amount due being $5 per share on 233 shares, or $1,165. I cannot for the life of me see why you should not send us this amount so that we can get these matters straightened out."

The foregoing letter, so far as the record gives any information on the subject, was never answered by the defendant. It is well to note that the letter was dated, and presumably sent to and received by defendant, before the commencement of this action by plaintiff on the 7th day of December, 1923.

It would seem that no review, by way of analysis, of the foregoing statement of the evidence is necessary to show that the finding that the salient allegations of the cross-complaint are untrue is not justly subject to attack. The evidence relative to the Eureka proposition, aside from that afforded by the letter to defendant from Wimsett, and dated October 20, 1922, and the written agreement dated January 1, 1923, is very indefinite. As before suggested, it is not made to appear that, upon the expiration of the term specified in the agreement dated January 1, 1923, there was, either by writing or verbally, an extension or a renewal of said agreement, except in so far as such renewal may be inferred from defendant's testimony that, after he had completed the Napa organization, he said to Pillsbury that he purposed going to Eureka within a few days and proceed with the organization of the Eureka branch, and that, in reply, Pillsbury said, "All right." But it is clear from an examination of the testimony in its entirety that defendant not only permitted the contract dated January 1, 1923, to lapse without taking any substantial steps within the term prescribed thereby looking to the exercise of the privilege or option therein given him to install a company in Eureka, but expressly abandoned all intention of taking up and carrying out the organization of a company in said city. It will be noted that it was either in the month of March or April, 1923, and within the period of time prescribed by the contract dated January 1, 1923, to which the life of his option as to Eureka was limited, he began preliminary operations for the establishment of the Napa company, and, so it is fairly and reasonably inferable from the testimony, he devoted himself exclusively to that territory until the organization of the Napa company was completed; and then (accepting his own testimony) he declared it to be his intention not to go into Eureka and then proceeded; on his own account, or for a Spokane company, to organize the Santa Rosa institution. The testimony of Pillsbury supports this conclusion. He stated, as shown, that defendant never attempted to exercise his option to establish a company at Eureka; that he never solicited or attempted to solicit stock subscriptions in Eureka for a company in that city. The only differences existing between plaintiff and the defendant during the entire period of time from the date of the refusal by plaintiff to accept defendant's check for $1,065 as in full settlement of the Napa transaction to the later date on which, for the first time, defendant, in the city of Stockton, asserted a counterclaim to his $1,165 indebtedness to plaintiff for and on account of the Napa business, were relative to certain bills incurred for publicity purposes in the establishment of companies in certain places. And it may parenthetically be suggested that, as to these differences or the subject-matter thereof, the court's decision in this case is adverse to plaintiff. (Vide findings on second count of plaintiff's complaint.) That defendant's claim of damages as to the Eureka matter was an afterthought and having for its basis the dispute upon the proposition whether defendant was to bear any of the expenses for publicity, etc., is clearly sustained by the consideration that, in the month of August, 1923, he sent his check for $1,065 to plaintiff as in settlement of the Napa transaction, and his admission in the trial of this case that his failure to make the check in the full amount due plaintiff on that account ($1,165) was owing entirely to an error of his own in computation; that his intention was to forward to the plaintiff the full amount due on the sale of the 750 shares of stock at $5 per share. It is entirely improbable that any business man of experience and intelligence would, as defendant did, forward to plaintiff a check for $1,065, only $100 less than the amount due, in payment of the balance due it from him on the Napa transaction, if, at the time, he believed he had a just claim for damages against plaintiff far in excess of his entire indebtedness to plaintiff. This suggestion at least addressed itself to the question of the credibility of the defendant's testimony, and was sufficient to justify the trial court, to which the decision of the questions of fact was submitted, in rejecting the defendant's testimony, in so far as thereby he undertook to support the validity of his asserted claim for damages against the plaintiff for the reasons alleged in the cross-complaint and herein explained. And it is to be assumed from the decision that the trial court did reject it.

[2, 3] The plaintiff contends that the defendant could not, in any event, recover damages for a breach of the contract as to the Eureka transaction for the reason that the case here is one in which a reasonable estimate or appraisal of damages cannot be made or awarded. The cases of Friedman v. McKay Leather Co., 179 Cal. 566, 569, 178 P. 139, Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1, 96 P. 884, and Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 364, are cited in support of that proposition. But we do not deem it necessary to consider that proposition to determine whether the rule as stated in the cases named applies to the facts of the instant case. After a painstaking examination of the record, we are prepared, as must be manifest from what has been said before, to rest the decision here upon the proposition that this case, upon the evidence, is one for the trial court's decision; that is, for the decision of the question whether there was a breach of any contract between plaintiff and defendant as alleged in the cross-complaint. It was, as is well understood, for that court, as the trier of the facts, to resolve all conflicts, if any, arising in the evidence, and to determine the evidentiary value or probative force of the testimony of any witnesses testifying before it by tests which are obviously not available to a court of review. The findings are conclusive upon this court upon the questions of fact.

KORNMAN v. NELSON. (Civ. 4428.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 6, 1927.

1. Brokers ~~43~~(2)—Oral contract to pay tenant commission for selling house held void under statute requiring such agreements to be in writing (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Oral contract to pay tenant commission for selling house held void under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, requiring agreement authorizing or employing agent or broker to sell real estate for commission or compensation to be in writing, and notwithstanding tenant may have performed valuable services at owner's request.

2. Brokers ~~42~~—Tenant cannot recover commission for sale of house where not licensed as broker (Real Estate Brokers' Act, § 20).

Where tenant was not licensed as real estate broker or real estate salesman, he cannot recover commission for sale of house of landlord under Real Estate Brokers' Act (St. 1919, p. 1252, § 20).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action to recover commission on sale of real property, brought by Willie Kornman against A. C. Nelson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. C. Mishler, John F. Keogh, and Julius V. Patrosso, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ira L. Brunk, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. In this action the complaint alleges that the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $350 for services rendered at the special instance and request of the defendant. This issue was met by appropriate and sufficient denials on the part of the defendant. In response to this issue the court found, "that within one year prior to the filing of the complaint and issuance of summons herein the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to pay plaintiff as a consideration for assisting in the sale of certain real estate 5 per cent. upon the sale price of a certain parcel of real estate located in the city of Los Angeles, should he, the defendant, sell said real estate, and that said defendant sold said real estate for $7,000"; upon which finding judgment went for plaintiff for the amount demanded. The testimony adduced at the trial stated in the most favorable light to support the plaintiff's contention is substantially as follows: Respondent rented a house from the appellant in the city of Los Angeles, which house appellant had for some time, unsuccessfully, endeavored to sell. Upon the occasion of the renting of the house respondent states that the appellant agreed that if she would show the property to prospective purchasers while occupying it as a tenant and would place intended purchasers in touch with appellant, he would pay the respondent a commission of 5 per cent. of the selling price in the event that a sale of the property was made to any such person. The testimony further shows that the respondent did not show the house to a great many persons and did show the house several times to one Maguire, who became the purchaser thereof; that the respondent and her husband performed considerable work in rehabilitating and caring for the lawn on the premises during the time they occupied the house and prior to the sale thereof.

Assuming this to be a correct statement of the facts of the employment and disregarding the strenuous and specific denials of the appellant, it is the contention of the appellant, first, that the findings of the court are without support in the evidence; second, that the alleged oral contract for the payment of a commission is void under the provisions of subdivision 6, § 1624, of the Civil Code; and, third, that the alleged contract for the payment of a commission was illegal and void for the reason that the respondent was not licensed under the Real Estate Brokers' Act. It is an admitted fact that the alleged agreement was not evidenced by any writing nor any written memorandum of any kind or character. It is also admitted that the respondent had no broker's license.

[1] The respondent has not favored this court with any brief in support of the conclusions of the trial court. Whether this was because his investigations were fruitless in that behalf or because he considered the conclusions so manifestly impregnable that to supply authorities would be a work of supererogation and an insult to the intelligence of this court is not disclosed. Whatever may have been his disposition in the matter, we have been unable to find any authorities to support this judgment. It is apparent that respondent's compensation was contingent upon the sale of the property and the amount thereof dependent upon the sale price. We are unable to distinguish this case either as to the facts or the law applicable thereto from the situation developed by the case of Dolan v. O'Toole, 129 Cal. 488, 62 P. 92. At page 489 (62 P. 92) it is said:

"Defendant was the owner of a certain mine, and had contracted with a third party for the sale of it upon certain terms—in substance, that the purchaser should be put in possession for a specified time for the purpose of examination and development, and, if found satisfactory, to pay therefor a specified price. Plaintiff was an experienced miner and expert, and was well acquainted with the location of the mine and the work done in it, and while the conditional purchasers were in possession under their contract and prospecting for ore, defendant made a contract with the plaintiff for his services 'to be rendered in aiding him (defendant) to consummate the sale under the contract' and for which, if the sale was made, he was to receive 10 per cent. of the purchase price. It appearing that the said contract for plaintiff's services was oral, objection was made and sustained to the evidence. It was then offered by the plaintiff to be shown that at the request of the purchasers plaintiff gave them directions where to work to develop ore, that his directions were followed successfully and resulted in such development of ore as induced the purchase under said contract. The court sustained the objection to the offered evidence and rendered judgment for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Section 1624 of the Civil Code provides: "The following contracts are invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. * * * 6. An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to * * * sell real estate for compensation or commission." In Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 26 [34 P. 636], the court below made the following findings of fact: "That on the 17th day of April, 1890, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral agreement, whereby it was agreed between them that plaintiff should use his knowledge and influence on behalf of, and render his services to, defendant to enable him to sell or exchange the lands mentioned in the complaint herein, for which plaintiff was to be paid by the defendant the sum of $450 as soon as the sale or exchange was effected through his, the plaintiff's, knowledge, influence, or services rendered to him, the defendant," and that the plaintiff rendered the services as agreed, and that a transfer of the land was made by virtue of such services of plaintiff; and the court below concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Upon appeal this court came to the opposite conclusion, holding that the contract was void under the provisions of the Code above cited. Counsel for appellant attempts to distinguish Shanklin v. Hall, supra, from the case at bar, and for this purpose refers to the testimony in that case, showing that Shanklin was engaged in the real estate business, and that he made new terms with the proposed purchaser which were accepted by Hall. But this statute is not confined to those who make a business of buying and selling real estate for others, but includes every person who in any case comes within its provisions."

In this connection it may be noted that this court in the case of Patterson v. Torrey, 18 Cal. App. 349, 123 P. 224, stated that the fact that plaintiff performed valuable services at defendant's request constitutes no ground for recovering compensation therefor in the absence of some note or memorandum subscribed by the defendant whereby plaintiff was employed or authorized to negotiate the sale. To the same effect is Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878, where the Supreme Court said:

"The fact that, acting under an invalid agreement, he made efforts to find purchasers, cannot, of course, operate to prevent the other party from asserting the invalidity of the contract. To hold the contrary would be to abrogate the statute of frauds." [Quoting Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 26, 34 P. 636; Dolan v. O'Toole, supra.]

[2] There are numerous cases cited in each of the foregoing cases and a long line of authorities independent of these and to the same effect which are in our judgment conclusive as to this phase of the case. Furthermore, we are satisfied that the respondent's case comes squarely within the inhibition of the Real Estate Brokers' Act (St. 1919, p. 1252), the material portions of which, having a bearing on this controversy, are as follows:

"A real estate broker within the meaning of this act is a person, copartnership or corporation who, for a compensation, sells, or offers for sale, buys, or offers to buy, or negotiates the purchase or sale or exchange of real estate. * * * One act, for a compensation, of buying or selling real estate of or for another, or offering for another to buy or sell or exchange real estate, * * * shall constitute the person, copartnership or corporation making such offer, sale or purchase, exchange or lease, * * * a real estate broker within the meaning of this act." Section 2.

Section 20 bars a recovery of a commission by a person not licensed as therein provided, and reads as follows:

"No person, copartnership or corporation engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real estate broker or a real estate salesman within this state shall bring or maintain any action in the courts of this state for the collection of compensation for the performance of any of the acts mentioned in section two hereof without alleging and proving that such person, copartnership or corporation was a duly licensed real estate broker or real estate salesman at the time the alleged cause of action arose."

The contract sued upon is clearly comprehended within the terms of this statute, and is therefore illegal and void, and cannot support a judgment in favor of the respondent, who was not licensed in the manner therein provided.

The judgment is reversed.

YOUNG v. SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CORPORATION. (Civ. 3264.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 4, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨843(1)—Trivial objections, not affecting parties' substantial rights, will not be considered on appeal.

Minor and trivial objections, not affecting substantial rights of parties, will not be considered on appeal, in this case.

2. Negligence ⇨136(17)—Negligence in failing to extinguish fire near inflammable matter on adjoining property held for trial of fact.

Evidence held to present question of fact for trial of fact as to whether defendant's employees negligently left fire within 10 or 12 feet of inflammable matter on plaintiff's adjoining property, when a wind was blowing from fire towards plaintiff's property, in condition likely to set fire to such material, and as to whether fire was caused thereby.

3. Negligence ⇨21—Maintenance of fire near combustible material, when wind is blowing toward material, may be negligence.

Maintenance of fire in close proximity to combustible material during dry season of year, and when wind is favorable for causing burning embers to be carried to the nearby combustible material, may be reasonably held to be negligence, though under other circumstances it might be ordinary care.

4. Appeal and error ⇨996—Reasonable inferences, drawn from evidence by trial court, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

If inferences of fact, drawn from evidence by trial court, be reasonable, they cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. S. Young against the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. H. Pearson, for appellant.

W. J. Minville, of Dinuba, and Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, of Fresno, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment in an action brought to recover losses sustained by reason of a fire resulting from the alleged negligence of the defendant's employees, and the defendant appeals.

The record shows that on the 25th day of August, 1923, and for some time preceding, the plaintiff owned and occupied a certain lot of land in the city of Dinuba, county of Tulare, state of California, on the front of which was situated his residence, and on the rear of which was located certain machinery, buildings, etc., known and called the Alta Soda Works. The tract of land just referred to extended in a westerly and easterly direction; immediately to the north of the lot of land just referred to was a certain other lot occupied by the defendant and used by the defendant as a storage yard. This lot was so occupied by the defendant under a lease from the plaintiff. The two lots referred to faced upon a street, and along the rear thereof existed an alleyway. The lot occupied by the appellant, as just stated, was used for storage purposes in its business as a public utility. A roadway or driveway extended from the rear to the front of the lot occupied by the appellant, the lot itself being completely inclosed by a woven wire fence 7 feet in height. A gate was maintained both at the front and the rear of said lot. The driveway just referred to extended over said lot practically along the center line thereof. The material on the lot occupied by the defendant was piled up along the south side thereof adjoining the buildings in which the plaintiff conducted his soda works, the material consisting of cross-arms, crates, barrels, boxes, excelsior, and other wooden articles intended to be disposed of or used for fuel purposes. On the day in question, certain employees of the defendant were engaged in burning the insulation off of a quantity of copper wire. This fire was kindled and maintained in the roadway just mentioned a few feet north of the pile of material to which we have referred.

The record shows that some two tons of copper wire were handled by the employees of the defendant on the day in question and the insulation burned therefrom; that the coils of wire from which the insulation was burned were allowed to remain in the place where the fire had been kindled and maintained. It would appear from the testimony that two fires were kindled and maintained and used in the burning of insulation from copper wire, as just stated. This process continued from some time in the forenoon until approximately 1:30 in the afternoon. The time when the defendant's employees ceased the operations referred to appears to be only approximately stated, but the conclusion is reasonable that the operation ceased at about the time stated. The record shows that the last time any of the employees of the defendant were upon the premises mentioned was in the neighborhood of 2 o'clock. A short time after the defendant's employees had left the premises, to wit, about 3 o'clock, a fire was discovered in the pile of material to which we have heretofore referred, which fire was communicated to the plaintiff's soda works, and the building in which the soda works were maintained was completely destroyed and the machinery more or less damaged.

[1] Upon this appeal it is urged that the testimony is insufficient to justify the findings of the court that the fire resulted from the negligence of the defendant's employees.

Some minor objections are also urged, but as they are only trivial in their nature and do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, they will not be considered in this appeal. The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and the opinion filed by the court in deciding the action is so clear and distinct and so accurately portrays the situation revealed by the record that we will take therefrom the following excerpts:

"The defendant occupied and used the lot just north of plaintiff's property. On this lot and piled along and against a woven wire fence which separated defendant's lot from plaintiff's, defendant had piled a lot of material consisting of crates, excelsior, barrels, cross-arms, and other material. This pile was, on the day of the fire, placed along the fence for 15 or 20 feet, being either piled against or very close to the little building used as a storeroom by plaintiff; the pile of material was as high as the fence, 7 feet, and was about 10 feet in width.

"Some time during the forenoon of the day of the fire several of the employees of the defendant came to the lot occupied by defendant and there proceeded to burn the insulation off of several tons of copper wire. A driveway extended from east to west, lengthwise through the lot, and at about the center line running east and west. To burn this insulation the employees built two fires in the driveway. Each fire was 10 or 12 feet north of the pile of material or rubbish. One of the fires was about 15 feet from the storeroom building, and the other about 25 feet. The insulation was burned by placing the copper wire on the fire. All the wire from which the insulation was burned was left in a pile on the place of the fire. The burning of the insulation continued until noon and then, with a short intermission, until some time in the afternoon, but ending before 2 p. m.

"It cannot be said positively that the fire kindled by defendant's employees, and by them left smouldering, set fire to the rubbish in defendant's lot, for no one actually saw how the fire caught in the pile of rubbish. But there was no other fire near the rubbish except the fires kindled by defendant's agents. No persons were on the lot except defendant's employees. The lot was inclosed with a 7-foot woven wire fence. The gate at each end of the lot was kept locked when defendant's employees were absent therefrom. The fire they kindled was seen to be still burning as late as 2:30 p. m. It was within 10 feet of the pile of inflammable material, and the wind was blowing from the fire toward the material. It must therefore be held that the fire which caught the rubbish came or spread from the fire kindled by defendant's agents.

"The evidence established that defendant's employees were negligent. The burning of the insulation from the wire was in the course of their employment for defendant, and defendant is, therefore, liable for damages which arose from their negligence. The fire occurred at the driest season of the year. A wind was blowing from the north toward the pile of rubbish. It is a matter of common knowledge that in this valley the prevailing wind in the summer season is from the northwest, and that it is generally of strength sufficient to carry sparks quite a distance. Yet the defendant's employees left a smouldering fire within 10 feet of an inflammable pile of rubbish, which defendant had piled against or almost against a frame building occupied by plaintiff. Ordinary care required that defendant's employees see that the fire was entirely out at the time they left the premises. They knew that the fire was within 10 feet of a large pile of inflammable rubbish, and that the wind might carry sparks from the fire to the rubbish."

There is also testimony in the record that the fire was still burning at about 2:30 p. m., being about 30 minutes after the last of the defendant's employees had visited the premises. There is also testimony that some of the defendant's employees, who visited the place about 2 o'clock, saw heat waves coming from the place of the fire and felt heat as they passed by the place or places where the fire had been maintained. The testimony further states that shortly after 3 o'clock the pile of material in the defendant's lot was seen to be on fire. Effort was made to put out the fire by the use of a garden hose and at the same time the fire department was called out, but by the time it arrived the fire had spread to the plaintiff's buildings. The testimony in the record also shows that the wind was blowing from a northerly to a southerly direction, which would be from the fire toward the pile of material distant some 10 or 12 feet therefrom.

A witness by the name of Borthwick, called on behalf of the plaintiff, testified that he saw black smoke on the lot occupied by the defendant's employees, where the fire was maintained some time in the forenoon of the day in question, that he last saw black smoke coming from said premises about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He fixed the time by stating it was some time after he got back from lunch.

The testimony of Mrs. Young, the wife of the plaintiff, was to the effect that she saw smoke during the forenoon, and in the afternoon a short time before the fire she also saw smoke arising from the place where the fire had been maintained in the forenoon; that she saw two or three men working on the premises in the forenoon, but one only was there in the afternoon; that when they were burning a great mass of stuff, the flames would shoot up several feet; that during the forenoon the fire gave off a black smoke; that later on, as it burned down, it gave off a "sort of blue smoke." There was also testimony to the effect that in addition to the lumber, crates, cross-arms, etc., there was excelsior taken from the crates that had been used as packing around the insulators, the language of the witness being "excelsior brought up there and dumped in there"; that the pile of material extended down to within about 10 feet of the driveway.

The testimony on the part of defendant indicated that the burning of insulation in the afternoon was conducted by a man by the name of Clark, who was no longer in the employ of the company, and no one seemed to know his whereabouts.

One of the witnesses for the defendant testified as to the distance of the fire from the edge of any of the material just referred to. His statement was that it was about 10 or 12 feet; that the fire was maintained in the driveway; that the driveway was all clear, that there was no debris in the driveway; that in burning the insulation, it fires up and makes a big smoke for a while, and then is gone; that no ashes are left. This witness stated that a man by the name of Clark did the burning in the afternoon; that he and another employee of the defendant left the premises and returned to the premises along about 2 o'clock; that on their way back they picked up Clark, who had been left at the premises, and stopped at the gates to see that they were locked; that the gates were locked; that Clark was working at the fire when this witness left, but whether he was burning insulation or not, he did not know; that when they returned to the lot they looked at the gate to see that it was locked, "looked at the gate, and looked over the fire where we had been burning this stuff, everything looked all right."

"Q. What did you see there at the time? A. Nothing but little heat waves coming a little bit hot.

"Q. Did you go inside the yard? A. No.

"Q. Was there anybody in there at that time? A. No. My purpose in going back to the lot was to see if the gates were locked, also, to get Clark if the fire was out. When I came back to see if the gates were locked, I also noticed the heat waves."

This witness and the others mentioned then went out on a job about two miles away. On redirect examination, this witness then testified as follows:

"Q. You say you noticed heat waves coming from the fire? Do you mean from the fire? A. No.

"Q. Or from the place where the fire had been? A. From the wire, where the wire was at.

"Q. In other words, you mean the wire was probably still hot? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You did not see any fire there, and you didn't see any smoke? A. There was no fire or smoke."

Another witness called by the defendant testified that he went into the lot about 2 o'clock p. m., found the gates locked, and there was no one in the yard when he arrived and when he left; that he locked the gate when he left; that he did not see any smoke; that he and another employee walked on the north side of the piles of wire and noticed the heat; that one of the piles was about two or three feet high; that it was dry and dusty around the fire; that he did not notice anything combustible; that he could feel the heat, but there was no smoke.

Another employee of the defendant also testified that he did not notice any of the heat waves; that he accompanied Mr. Furman, who testified as to the heat waves; that he saw no smoke.

The testimony of all of the witnesses was that the wind was blowing from the northwesterly direction, that is, from the fire toward the material piled as mentioned herein. There is no testimony on the part of any witness as to anything having been done toward putting out the fire. The witness, who testified that he visited the premises to see if the gates were locked, did not go inside; he only looked in. He saw heat waves only and no smoke. The testimony of this witness that he saw no smoke and no fire, after having testified that he saw heat waves, was in response to the following question:

"Q. You did not see any fire there, you did not see any smoke? A. No; there was no fire or smoke."

The weight to be given to this suggested testimony was primarily for the trial court in determining whether there was or was not any fire or smoke upon the premises at the time the defendant was examining the gates to see if they were locked and only looked over and did not enter upon the lot.

[2] Other witnesses had testified that they saw smoke, a thin blue smoke. It is evident that whether it was a thin blue smoke or only heat waves, whatever it was the different witnesses saw, it came from a fire and the trial court was at liberty to draw such an inference or conclusion. The trial court was at liberty, also, to draw the inference that it was negligence for the employee to leave any substance that would cause either heat waves or smoke to arise therefrom within 10 or 12 feet of such an inflammable substance as excelsior, when a wind was blowing from the direction of the fire toward the excelsior.

There is also testimony in the record to the effect that, when the firemen came to put out the fire, the hose which they used caught on fire, when drawn across one of the places where the employees of the defendant had kindled and maintained a fire, as referred to.

While, as said by the trial court, no witnesses saw the actual start of the fire, and, as shown by the record, no witness testified as to what, if anything, was done toward putting out the fire, the fact that any burning substance was in such close proximity to the material of the kind and character piled upon the premises sufficient to cause either blue smoke or heat waves to arise therefrom, when the wind was blowing in that direction, that might reasonably be calculated to carry the fire to the inflammable material, lays a foundation sufficient to justify the court in inferring from such facts that the employees of the defendant left the premises without taking the reasonable precautions, which the circumstances demanded, to see that the fire which they had kindled was extinguished.

[3] It is evident that when a fire is maintained in such close proximity to combustible material at a time of the year when everything is dry, and when the wind is favorable for causing burning embers to be carried to the nearby combustible material, that what might be ordinary care, under other circumstances, might reasonably be held by the trial court negligence under the circumstances attendant upon this case, and so clearly set forth in the excerpts which we have taken from the opinion of the trial court.

As said in the case of Cobb v. Twitchell (Fla.) 108 So. 186, 45 A. L. R. 865:

"Upon the state of facts before us, and in the absence of mitigating circumstances, a jury might reasonably conclude that the defendant, or his servants, did not observe reasonable prudence and ordinary care under the circumstances, in that they were not sufficiently thorough in extinguishing the original fire."

And, also, on the point of negligence, the court in that case further says:

"Such negligence, however, may be predicated not alone upon the circumstances under which the fire was kindled, or upon a failure to observe requisite precautions preliminary thereto, but may be established as well by appropriate proof that the defendant, after properly setting out the fire, failed to manage and attend it with reasonable prudence and ordinary care appropriate to the circumstances" (citing cases).

"The degree of care required to be used in any given case to avoid the imputation of negligence must be according to the circumstances or in proportion to the danger reasonably to be anticipated; such care as is ordinarily sufficient under similar circumstances to avoid danger and secure safety. Negligence may be inferred from circumstances properly adduced in evidence, provided those circumstances raise a fair presumption of negligence; and circumstantial evidence alone may authorize the finding of negligence. * * *

"When the question of negligence depends upon a disputed state of facts, or when the facts, though not disputed, are such that different minds may reasonably draw different conclusions from them, the question is for the jury," or the trial court.

We think, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, it was reasonable and proper for the trial court to draw the inference that the defendant's employees had been negligent in not seeing that the fire was not entirely extinguished.

[4] While, of course, we cannot say that the defendant's employees were guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, in placing the fire where they did, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether they did or did not properly safeguard the same before leaving the premises, and if the inference drawn by the court is reasonable we are not at liberty to disturb the same. We think the testimony reasonably justifies the inference drawn by the trial court and the findings based thereon.

This court, in the case of Paiva et al. v. California Door Co., 242 P. 887, had occasion to set forth the law relative to inferences that might be drawn from facts established by circumstantial evidence, and in that case held, from the circumstances so established, the inference could be reasonably drawn as to the origin of the fire. In the Paiva Case the stump of a tree was shown to be on fire at a certain time, and that no other fires were kindled thereafter. This court said:

"Taking it then as a justifiable inference that the stump was burning on Monday morning, and giving consideration to the further proved fact that a strong wind was blowing past the stump in the general direction of the place where the fire started, it would not be unreasonable, in the absence of other explanation, to infer that the fire was caused by sparks from the burning stump" (citing a number of cases).

This language is pertinent to the instant case. It was not unreasonable for the trial court to draw the conclusion that the fire was communicated to the inflammable material 10 feet away by reason of the wind that was blowing in a direction that would tend to communicate the fire in question started and left by the defendant's employees in close proximity thereto.

In view of the testimony that a blue smoke was arising from where the fire had been maintained and also that heat waves were arising therefrom, whichever statement may be considered as correct, the inference is certainly reasonable that proper precautions were not taken to extinguish whatever remained of the burning embers, or of the burning insulation, or of the heated wire, under the circumstances disclosed by the testimony, especially with the wind blowing from a northerly direction and the season of the year, which, common knowledge teaches us, renders all kinds of wooden materials readily susceptible to fire.

As stated in 11 Ruling Case Law, 945:

"In determining whether a person in starting a fire on his own land exercised such care, caution, and diligence as a prudent and reasonable man would have exercised under the same circumstances, an important factor to be taken into consideration is whether there was at the time a wind which was reasonably calculated to spread fire. It has also generally been considered that the condition of the season as to dryness is an important element in determining whether a person exercised proper care in starting a fire on his own land."

This principle would apply equally whether one had taken reasonable care in the extinguishment of a fire which had been maintained by one on his own premises.

All the subjects which we have discussed in this opinion are fully considered in an elaborate note contained in 45 A. L. R. beginning on page 870. See, also, Dibble v. San Joaquin Light & P. Co., 47 Cal. App. 112, 190 P. 198.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

FINK & SCHINDLER CO. v. GAVROS et al.
(Civ. 5747.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 4, 1927.

1. Sales $\S$ 358(1)—In action on account, evidence of independent account between parties is properly excluded, where there is no confusion of items.

In action on account for goods sold and delivered, evidence that other work not involved in the suit had been performed by the plaintiff is properly excluded, where there is no evidence that items in the two accounts were confused.

2. Evidence $\S$ 213(2)—Evidence of statements made during mere discussion of disputed account is admissible, discussion not necessarily being attempt at compromise.

The parties' mere discussion of items of the disputed account is not an attempt at compromise so as to render statements then made inadmissible in an action on the account.

3. Judgment $\S$ 251(1)—Court may enter judgment partly on findings of agreed price and partly on value, where both are pleaded in separate counts for entire claim.

Court may properly enter judgment in part on the findings on first count of an action for goods sold and delivered pleading their reasonable value and in part on the findings on second count pleading the agreed price.

4. Sales $\S$ 181(1)—Evidence failing to show delivery or tender of fixtures held insufficient to support recovery therefor.

Evidence failing to show delivery or tender of fixtures sold held insufficient to support recovery therefor notwithstanding evidence of manufacture and countermand by defendants after failure of business.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action for goods sold and delivered by the Fink & Schindler Company against John Gavros and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Dahlin & Jackson and Lloyd Peterson, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

George W. Walker and Russell W. Cantrell, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The appeal is by the defendants from a judgment rendered against them in an action brought against them by the plaintiff to recover on an account for goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff pleaded its cause of action in two counts. In the first count it pleaded the reasonable value, and in the second count it pleaded the agreed price. Each count was for the sum of $1,404. On the first count the plaintiff was by the findings awarded $730, and on the second count it was awarded $599. The services rendered by the plaintiff consisted of installing certain alterations and additions to the premises known as 6294 Mission street in an attempt to improve it as a restaurant or café.

[1] The appellants complain because the trial court excluded evidence to the effect that the respondent had performed other work on the premises at or about the same time as the work which is the subject of this dispute. Conceding that appellant had done so, the two accounts might be confused and commingled by the litigants. Nevertheless the appellants have not called to our attention any ruling made by the trial court that tended to create confusion. To have gone indiscriminately into other collateral matters would have tended to create, rather than to avoid, confusion.

[2] The appellants also claim that the trial court erred in receiving evidence of an attempt to compromise the dispute. The vice in this contention is that the trial court did not do so. The parties met and discussed the items of the account. Some of the statements made by the respective parties were received in evidence. A matter of compromise was not suggested nor attempted, and no evidence on that subject was received.

The last item included in the respondent's bill of particulars was "three oak booths." After the trial was had the appellants made a motion for a new trial and offered affidavits purporting to show the nonexistence of the booths. The motion was denied, and the appellants claim the ruling was error. We will not stop to discuss the contention, for it will presently appear that the respondent was not entitled to recover on that item.

[3] The appellants claim that the judgment does not accord with the findings. In support of the point they contend that the trial court should have given its entire award on the first count or on the second count, and should not have given a part of the award on the first count and a part on the second count. The point is without merit.

[4] Finally, it is contended by the appellants that the findings are not supported by the evidence. At least in part that contention must be sustained. As appears from the bill of particulars, the appellants placed fifteen separate orders with the respondent. The last order was for three oak booths. The uncontradicted evidence is to the effect that said order was placed October 5, 1922; that the price, $390, was agreed upon; that the booths were to be installed in a week or ten days. In February, 1923, the appellants were "closed up." At no time were the booths built. The respondent offered evidence that the booths were not installed because the appellants subsequently countermanded the order. The respondent also offered evidence that when the order was countermanded the lumber had been framed and was ready to be glued together and to be installed, and that all expense in the manufacture had been incurred except the sum of $75. In reply the appellants offered evidence that they never countermanded any order until after their place of business was closed in February, 1923; that continuously after the order was placed they requested the respondent to install the booths, but they were not installed, and the fact that they were not installed was one of the reasons for the failure of the venture of the appellants. To this evidence the respondent made no reply. When the trial court ordered judgment the expression used was "that plaintiff be granted judgment herein as prayed." A judgment according to that order would have included the full price, $390, for the booths; nevertheless counsel drew findings deducting $75, apparently as an allowance on the booths. Under such a set of facts the respondent was not entitled to make any charge whatever for the booths. 35 Cyc. 169, 175. It follows that the allowance contained in the findings, $599, covering the agreed price on part of the goods, was excessive to the extent of $315.

The judgment is modified by deducting therefrom $315, and, as so modified, it is affirmed. The appellants will recover their costs incurred on this appeal.

JAMESON v. SHEPARDSON et al. (Civ. 3270.) ★

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1927.

1. Gifts ⚡5(1)—Purchaser's transfer of interest under sale contract by agreement whereby defendant relieved purchaser from obligations thereunder held not "gift" (Civ. Code, § 1146).

Agreement under which defendant undertook to relieve plaintiff from obligations which she had assumed under contract to purchase land and plaintiff assigned interest under sale contract held not to constitute gift, in view of statutory definition in Civ. Code, § 1146.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Gift.]

2. Escrows ⚡9—Performance must be made within time limited by escrow agreement, or within reasonable time in absence of stipulation, and depository cannot accept performance thereafter.

Performance must be made within time limited by escrow agreement, and depository has no authority to accept performance thereafter, but, in absence of stipulation as to time, performance within reasonable time is sufficient.

3. Escrows ⚡9—Time is not of essence of escrow agreement unless clearly specified.

Time will not be held to be of essence of escrow agreement unless it is so clearly specified.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⚡179—Equity will not deprive party of property rights for technical breach of contract, where there was substantial compliance with requirement to make payment under land contract.

Where agreement was executed for purpose of securing payment of certain sum under land contract on particular day, and such sum was paid before there had been default or forfeiture under agreement calling for its payment, there was substantial compliance, and equity is unauthorized to deprive party paying of property rights on technical objection that he failed to deposit one-third gross receipts of property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Carrie M. Jameson against Marin J. Shepardson and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, and Conley, Conley & Conley, of Fresno, for appellant.

Arthur Allyn, of Fresno, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff began this action to recover possession of 9.57 acres of land situate in the county of Madera, state of California, to quiet her title thereto and for other relief. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

This action involves the question of the performance of the conditions of a certain agreement entered into between the plaintiff and Marin J. Shepardson, dated February 16, 1924.

The record shows that on or about the 3d day of August, 1923, the plaintiff entered into a written contract with the Sierra Vista Lands, Inc., to purchase the 9.57 acres of land above referred to; that on the 16th day of February, 1924, there remained due on the contract with the Sierra Vista Lands, Inc., certain payments, falling due and in the amounts here stated, to wit: $1,510 on August 3, 1924; $1,887.50 on August 3, 1925, and $1,887.50 on August 3, 1926, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

The agreement with the Sierra Vista

Lands, Inc., contained the following condition:

"In the event that the buyer defaults in the payment of any sum of money herein agreed to be paid when the same becomes due hereunder, or shall make default in performing any of the covenants or conditions herein contained, by him to be kept and performed, and if any such default shall continue for a period of 30 days, then the seller, at its option, shall have the right to immediately terminate this agreement and enter into and take possession of said land, and the whole thereof."

The agreement further provides that in such a contingency the buyer forfeits all right to recover any payments made previous to the taking of the possession of the premises by the seller.

On the 16th day of August, 1924, the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, entered into an agreement concerning said premises, which agreement states the reasons for the entering into such agreement, and so far as material here is in the following words and figures:

"This agreement made and entered into this 16th day of February, 1924, between Carrie M. Jameson, of the county of Merced, state of California, the party of the first part, and Marin J. Shepardson, of the county of Madera, state of California, the party of the second part, witnesseth:

"That, whereas, the party of the first part has heretofore purchased under contract from the A. R. Bishop Company, Inc., a certain tract of land, consisting of about 10 acres, near Minturn in the county of Madera, state of California, together with certain buildings and improvements thereon; and

"Whereas, said party of the first part feels unable to carry on the business for which said property was purchased and is desirous that said property and business be properly managed and handled; and

"Whereas, the party of the second part and her husband, Clyde Shepardson, are willing to undertake the management of said property and business and assume the contract heretofore entered into by the party of the first part:

"Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto as follows:

"The party of the first part agrees to transfer and assign to the party of the second part her interest under said contract, said assignment to be placed in escrow and to be delivered to the party of the second part on August 3, 1924, in the event that the covenants to be performed by the party of the second part are duly performed; said assignment shall be a gift, by the party of the first part to the party of the second part, of the interest of the party of the first part under said contract and in and to said land. The party of the second part agrees that in consideration of the foregoing, she and her said husband will carry on, conduct, and manage said business and said property in a diligent, careful, and competent manner and will exert every energy to make said business a success."

"Said party of the second part further agrees that she and her said husband will render to the party of the first part a monthly statement of said business showing the receipts and expenditures thereof and in general the condition of said business, said monthly statement to be rendered on the first day of each month.

"Said party of the second part further agrees that not less than one-third of the gross receipts of said property and business shall be deposited in the Chowchilla National Bank of Chowchilla, to the credit of Carrie M. Jameson and Marin J. Shepardson, and that no money deposited in said account shall be withdrawn therefrom except upon check signed by both Carrie M. Jameson and Marin J. Shepardson; it being understood and agreed that said money so deposited in said account shall be applied upon the payment due to the said A. R. Bishop Company, Inc., on account of the purchase of said property, on August 3, 1924.

"It is understood and agreed that the party of the first part shall reserve the privilege of building a home on one-half acre of said land, within one year from date, and that if said party of the first part shall desire to build such home one-half acre shall be granted to her by the party of the second part.

"In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written, executing in duplicate. Carrie M. Jameson, Party of the First Part. Marin J. Shepardson, Party of the Second Part.

At the same time and as a part of the same transaction, the plaintiff executed an assignment in favor of Marin J. Shepardson of all and singular the rights acquired in and to the premises hereinbefore referred to, obtained by her under and by virtue of the contract of purchase theretofore entered into with the Sierra Vista Lands, Inc., and of the contract so entered into with the said land company. This assignment was consented to and approved by the Sierra Vista Lands Company. The agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, and the assignment just mentioned were drawn by one A. R. Schottky, and the latter instrument was left with the said Schottky, to be delivered to the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, upon compliance with conditions mentioned in the agreement entered into between her and the plaintiff. The witness Schottky testified that there were no written instructions given to him concerning the delivery of the agreement to the defendant, but that certain oral instructions were given to him, of which he made a memorandum upon the envelope in which the assignment was inclosed, when he placed it in a safe in his office. This witness testified that the assignment was to be delivered by him to the defendant if the payment called for in the contract with the Sierra Vista Lands, Inc., company, to be made on August 3, 1924, was complied with. His version of what the plaintiff stated, when the assignment was delivered to him in escrow, is as follows:

"If the payment is made, so I am not stuck on this contract to the Sierra Vista Company, then this is to be delivered to Marin."

And, further, in reply to the court, the witness said:

"She [referring to the plaintiff] made it very clear and definite to me that this was to be delivered to Marin J. Shepardson if the payment to the Sierra Vista Company was made."

And, further, upon cross-examination, the escrow agreement was drawn first, and the assignment drawn second.

"I remember this, before they left the office, and that assignment was acknowledged by Mrs. Jameson, that either by question of mine, or by direct word from her to me, that that understanding was repeated, and so when she left there, I put those instruments, the assignment, away with the understanding that I got from her that it was to be delivered when the payment was made. * * * The last thing I got from them was this escrow proposition, because, naturally, I wanted to make that clear to myself, as to just how I was holding that, because I was charged with the responsibility as escrow holder."

The controversy in this case revolves entirely around that part of the agreement, dated February 16, 1924, which provides that:

"The party of the second part shall deposit not less than one-third of the gross receipts of the property and business in the Chowchilla National Bank of Chowchilla to the credit of Carrie M. Jameson and Marin J. Shepardson, and that no money deposited in said account shall be withdrawn therefrom except upon check signed by both Carrie M. Jameson and Marin J. Shepardson; it being understood and agreed that said money so deposited in said account shall be applied upon the payment due to the said A. R. Bishop Company, Inc., on account of the purchase of said property, on August 3, 1924."

It may be here stated that the A. R. Bishop Company was the representative of the Sierra Vista Lands Company, and was attending to the business of the company, in so far as the payment of the lands were concerned mentioned in the agreements under consideration. The testimony shows that this provision of the contract was not strictly complied with, in so far as it required the deposit of certain moneys in the Chowchilla Bank, but the testimony does show that the $1,510 required to be paid to the Sierra Vista Lands Company on the 3d day of August, 1924, but, under the terms of the contract executed and delivered to the plaintiff and assigned by her to the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, 30 days were allowed within which to make any such payment before a default could be declared. This appears from the provisions of the land company's contract, which we have hereinbefore set forth. The testimony also shows that instead of making the deposits of money in the Chowchilla National Bank, as called for in the agreement with the plaintiff, the defendants, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, spent several hundred dollars in making improvements upon the property.

The court also found that the plaintiff waived the deposit of the portion of the proceeds of the business in the Chowchilla Bank, as called for therein. This finding is challenged as not being supported by the evidence. Whether such finding is or is not sufficiently supported, we think wholly immaterial.

Upon being presented with proof of the payment of the sum of $1,510 by the defendants, as called for in the contract of sale executed by the Sierra Vista Lands Company, the escrow holder, Schottky, delivered the assignment to the defendant Marin J. Shepardson.

With these circumstances existing and transactions being had, the appellant sought recovery of the premises, the annulling of the delivery of the assignment, and the setting aside of the agreement entered into between her and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, and a decree of the court quieting plaintiff's alleged title to the premises.

[1] In the court below, and upon appeal, the contention is made that the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson constituted only a gift; that, being a gift, the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract complied with strictly or according to the letter thereof. While the contract uses the word "gift," it is evident from the reading thereof and the obligations to be performed by the defendant and the undertakings on her part therein set forth that the transaction was not and is not a gift. Section 1146 of the Civil Code defines a gift:

"A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration."

In 28 Corpus Juris, 620, we find the word "gift" defined as follows:

"A gift has been defined as a voluntary transfer of property by one to another, without any consideration or compensation therefor. The term is also used to designate that which is given; anything given or bestowed; any piece of property which is voluntarily transferred by one person to another without compensation. A gift is a gratuity, and not only does not require a consideration, but there can be none; if there is a consideration for the transaction it is not a gift. A gift is dependent upon no agreement, but upon the voluntary act of the donor only. The word 'gift' ordinarily applies to personal property only, but, in its larger signification, it applies to either realty or personalty."

Measured by the authorities cited to support the text, which we have quoted from Corpus Juris, the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson cannot be classed as a gift. It was an undertaking on the part of said defendant to relieve the plaintiff from the obligations which she had assumed, when entering into the contract with the Sierra Vista Lands Company, which alone, irrespective of other considerations mentioned, took the agreement out of the category of gifts.

[2-4] The paragraphs from the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, which we have last quoted, shows clearly the intent and purpose of the parties in providing for the deposit of the proceeds of the business in the Chowchilla Bank, to wit, the accumulation of a fund to be applied upon the payment coming due on August 3, 1924. That is the whole intent and purpose of the requirements set forth in the agreement concerning rendering of accounts and the deposit of money. While this was not strictly complied with, the testimony shows that the agreement was substantially complied with, from the fact that the $1,510 were paid on the contract during the 30 days allowed therefor. It will be here observed that in the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant Marin J. Shepardson time is not made the essence of the contract. There is not one word in the contract which would justify the conclusion that the parties entering into the same had in mind or intended that the agreement should become of no force or effect unless the $1,510 were paid exactly on the 3d day of August, 1923, or if the specific portion of the proceeds of the business was not deposited in the Chowchilla Bank, nor, so far as the testimony shows, was there anything limiting the time when the assignment should be delivered to the defendant Marin J. Shepardson, save and except the making of the payment called for in the land company's contract. Under such circumstances, the rule of law, stated in 10 Cal. Jur. 954, § 14, applies, to wit:

"Performance must also be made within the time limited by the escrow agreement, if any, and a depositary has no authority to accept performance thereafter. If there is no stipulation as to the time within which performance of the condition must take place, performance within a reasonable time is sufficient; and time will not be held to be of the essence of the escrow agreement unless it is so clearly specified."

We do not need to cite authorities to show that, where an agreement has been executed for the purpose of securing the payment of a certain sum of money upon a particular day, if the sum of money is paid before there has been any default or forfeiture under the agreement calling for its payment, there has been a substantial compliance, and that a court of equity is not authorized, under such circumstances, to annul an agreement and deprive a party of property rights upon mere technical objections, none of which reach the substantial merits of the questions involved.

We have not set forth anything herein concerning the notices served by the plaintiff upon the escrow holder, and the defendants, in seeking to annul and have annulled the agreement and assignment herein referred to, as they do not affect anything which we have hereinbefore stated, or the conclusions that have been arrived at in considering the matters determinative of this appeal.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA NAT. SUPPLY CO. v. PORTER et al. (Civ. 4671.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 13, 1927.

1. Payment ⇨73(4)—Delivery and acceptance of note for materials, together with parties' conduct, held to justify conclusion that payment resulted, precluding foreclosure of lien.

Delivery and acceptance of note for materials for building, derrick, outbuildings, and appurtenances and drilling of oil well, together with conduct of parties, especially seller's action in suing on note, held sufficient to justify conclusion that such delivery and acceptance constituted payment so as to preclude foreclosure of mechanic's lien filed by seller.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨214—Cause of action on mechanic's lien abated after seller secured judgment on note given for materials covered by lien.

Where seller of materials for construction of building, derrick, outbuildings, and appurtenances and for use in drilling oil well secured judgment on note given therefor, cause of action based on mechanic's lien was at once abated, since, though seller might have foreclosed lien or sued on note, it could not do both.

3. Judgment ⇨562—Judgment by court of competent jurisdiction on merits bars future suit between same parties on same cause of action.

A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits bars any future suit between same parties on same cause of action so long as it remains unreversed and is not vacated or annulled.

4. Mechanics' liens ⇨214—Seller, by securing judgment on note given for materials, waived right to foreclose mechanic's lien.

Seller's securing judgment on note given for materials resulted on principle of estoppel, in a waiver of right to seek another remedy by asserting and foreclosing mechanic's lien as a means of realizing on the same obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Suit by the California National Supply Company against Arthur Lee Porter, the Richfield Union Petroleum Company, and others. Judgment for defendants named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Flint & MacKay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Minor Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The appellant instituted a suit against the respondent Porter as the owner of certain real property in Orange county, and the respondent corporation as lessee, praying foreclosure of a mechanic's lien filed by appellant and evidencing an alleged indebtedness for materials furnished the respondent Richfield Union Oil Company for the construction of a certain building, derrick, outbuildings, and appurtenances and the drilling of an oil well upon the premises. The case was tried before the superior court and a judgment was rendered in favor of the respondents, from which the plaintiff appeals.

It appears from the pleadings that on the 6th and 7th days of April, 1921, appellant furnished and delivered materials of an alleged value of $2,500.22, for which it filed a mechanic's lien dated October 17, 1921, and that on January 13, 1922, this action was commenced for the foreclosure of the lien, and appellant alleged in its complaint that no part of the price of the materials had been paid.

Upon the trial respondents introduced evidence tending to show that the other defendants named in the complaint had no interest in the subject-matter of the action, which the trial court found to be a fact. There was also introduced a promissory note for the same amount, signed by the respondent corporation, together with a letter addressed to appellant, dated July 1, 1921, purporting to inclose "our company's note in the sum of $2,500.22, dated June 15, 1921, and due August 1, 1921, with interest from date until paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and which note we are sending you in settlement of the account which you hold against our company." Respondents further introduced a letter from the appellant supply company, dated July 2, 1921, reading, in part, as follows:

"We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 1st, inclosing note for $2,500.22 in payment of your account with the California National Supply Company."

It was also shown, and it is not denied, that appellant subsequently to the dates last mentioned had filed in the superior court of Orange county a suit upon said note, and had recovered judgment thereon, which judgment was introduced in evidence, and it was stipulated that the sums of money specified in the note upon which the suit was founded, and in the mechanic's lien which appellant was seeking to foreclose, represented the agreed price of the same materials.

The trial court found that "said defendant executed its promissory note to the plaintiff"; that the plaintiff accepted the same in full payment and satisfaction of its claim; that the plaintiff filed a notice of its claim of lien in the office of the county recorder, but that the same was not filed within the time required by law; the conclusions of law recited that the notice of claim of lien was invalid, "that the claim sued upon has heretofore been paid to defendant, * * * and for this reason plaintiff should recover nothing by its action," etc. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Appellant contends that this judgment was erroneous for the reason that a note, if not paid, does not constitute payment and satisfaction of the original obligation, unless the creditor shall have expressly so agreed upon its acceptance, and that the evidence of indebtedness does not constitute a bar to subsequent proceedings for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. Many authorities are cited which announce this rule, and appellant argues that the language of the correspondence above quoted, transmitting and acknowledging receipt of said note "in settlement of the account," and "covering your account," was not such as to amount to an unqualified acceptance of it in satisfaction and extinguishment of the indebtedness represented thereby.

[1] That the rule contended for has been declared in numerous cases is beyond cavil, but there are other equally important considerations which the appellants apparently overlook. It is not denied that they retained the note from its date until October 15, 1922, brought a suit upon it, and caused judgment to be entered thereon for the purchase price of the identical goods, wares, and merchandise for which recovery is sought in this proceeding. The judgment may be affirmed upon the ground upon which the decision of the trial court was apparently based, that the delivery and acceptance of the note constituted payment. The language of the letters above quoted, together with the conduct of the parties, especially the action of the plaintiff in suing upon the note, justified the conclusion that the parties intended to and did expressly make the settlement by the giving and receiving of a promissory note, payment, and satisfaction of the claim which the plaintiff theretofore had against the defendants.

[2] However, no possible doubt can exist that the plaintiff's cause of action abated when it recovered judgment on the note. In the defendant's answer it is affirmatively alleged that they had theretofore executed and delivered to the plaintiff a promissory note for the full amount demanded, in settlement and satisfaction of such obligation, and that the plaintiff had brought suit upon said note and converted the same into a judgment on October 15, 1922, and prior to the trial here in controversy. The parties stipulated that such judgment was founded upon the promissory note above mentioned, and that it was docketed. There was no finding upon this particular issue, but in view of the pleadings there should have been one. However, under the evidence and the stipulation, had a finding been made it could only have been to the effect that the allegations contained in the answer in that behalf were true. When the judgment on the promissory note was secured, plaintiff's cause of action on the claim here sued upon was at once abated. There was but one obligation. Assuming that the giving of the note did not constitute payment, it did not create a new obligation, but only a new and different evidence of the one which theretofore existed. It might have right to sue upon the note, but it could not do both. The object of either action would be to obtain a personal judgment against the defendants. Fresno Planing Mill Co. v. Manning, 20 Cal. App. 766, 130 P. 196, presents a situation the same in principle as that under consideration. Suit was instituted for proceeded to foreclose its lien, or it had a the purchase price of materials furnished, and the pendency of proceedings for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien was pleaded in bar. Upon motion of the plaintiff, the trial court struck out such defense, and in reversing the judgment it was said:

"It is not the policy of the law to permit different suits to be instituted and pending between the same parties concerning the same subject-matter; and hence the rule that an action abates upon a showing of the institution and pendency of a prior action between the same parties upon the same subject-matter.

"The reason for this rule is founded upon the theory that if the first suit affords an ample remedy to the party claiming to be aggrieved, it would be not only unnecessary but vexatious to permit the prosecution of a second suit formed upon the same cause of action.

"* * * The only possible purpose in making the defendants in this action defendants in the prior action would be to secure a personal judgment against them for the satisfaction of the identical debt which is made the basis of the present action. The purpose of the present action is also to secure a personal judgment against the defendants upon practically the same cause of action upon which they were joined as defendants in the previous action. In short, the causes of action and the relief sought in the two suits, in so far as the defendants here are concerned, are alleged to be substantially the same. Consequently the pendency of the prior action was a material defense in the present one, which it was proper to present by way of answer; and it follows that the trial court erred to the prejudice of the defendants in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike out such defense upon the ground of its immateriality."

[3, 4] It is true that in the present action the plaintiff sought to avail itself of an additional remedy not afforded in the former suit on the note, but the causes of action are identical. The obligation is the same whether the suit be to foreclose the lien or to secure judgment on the note. It is elementary that a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits bars any future suit between the same parties upon the same cause of action, so long as it remains unreversed and is not vacated or annulled. 23 Cyc. p. 1106, and many cases there cited. Appellant admits that the judgment merged the cause of action upon the note, and that the latter became extinct, but it is argued that the "extinguishment of the notes * * * cannot extinguish a claim which the notes themselves leave alive." This reasoning is fallacious. Adopting appellant's own theory that the note did not extinguish the original obligation, it is obvious that the obligation represented by the note is the same obligation as existed before the note was executed, and that both give rise to but one cause of action. Therefore, if the judgment extinguished the cause of action upon the note, it extinguished the entire obligation against the defendants in this transaction. The cause of action upon the note became merged in the judgment, and, also, it may be said that upon the principle of estoppel the securing of a judgment upon the note results in a waiver of appellant's right to seek another remedy by asserting and foreclosing the lien as a means of realizing upon the same obligation. This doctrine is stated in many cases, and has been held applicable to mechanics' liens. 2 Herman on Estoppel and Res Judicata, p. 966. The same principle is also stated in volume 10 of the California Jurisprudence, at pages 1 and 3.

And so, whether we consider the court's finding that the note was received as full payment and satisfaction of the existing obligation to have been supported by the evidence, or accept appellant's contention that the note was intended only for the purpose of evidencing the account and of changing the form of the account without affecting its existence, the plaintiff and appellant has proved no cause of action in this suit. It therefore becomes unnecessary to consider other points raised.

The judgment is affirmed.

Minor Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The action involved in this appeal was filed against the same defendants as those named in that of the California National Supply Company, this day decided, and was instituted for the foreclosure of the appellant's mechanic's lien upon the same property and for materials furnished for the same project, as therein described. Both cases were tried together upon similar facts, and the findings, conclusions of law, and judgments are the same in form and effect. Hence, upon the authority of California National Supply Co. v. Arthur Lee Porter and others, 257 P. 161, the judgment in this case must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

JOHNSON et al. v. CURLEY et al.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 6, 1927.

1. Cancellation of instruments ¶45—Where assignees of beneficiary under trust deed were silent as to actual notice of suit to cancel, court presumes they had such notice.

Where assignees of beneficiary under trust deed made no showing that they were without actual knowledge of pending of suit to cancel deed for fraud, and their assignor actually appeared and defended, court will presume that assignees had such notice.

2. Judgment ¶691—General rule is that cestui que trust must be party to suit affecting trust estate to be bound by judgment therein.

General rule is that, in proceedings affecting trust estate, trustee and cestui que trust are so independent of each other that latter must be party to suit to be bound by judgment or decree rendered therein.

3. Trusts ¶246—Trustee may sue or defend suit respecting trust estate, if instrument creating trust does not inhibit.

Trustee may sue at law respecting trust estate or defend suit brought against him, if instrument by which trust is created does not inhibit, and cestui que trust, though absolute owner in equity, is regarded in court of law in light of stranger.

4. Appeal and error ¶913—In absence of record of evidence, reviewing court assumes trustee was authorized to act for beneficiaries under trust deed, where judgment was against beneficiaries.

Where record of evidence is not before reviewing court on appeal from judgment against beneficiaries of trust deed in quiet title action, court presumes that such deed conferred on trustee authority to act for beneficiaries.

5. Cancellation of instruments ¶35(3)—Assignees of beneficiaries under trust deed held proper but not necessary parties to action to declare deed void for fraud (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 367, 369, 387).

Assignees of beneficiaries under trust deed held not necessary parties to action to have deed declared void for fraud, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 367, 369, since, under declaration of trust, trustee had duty to represent them, notwithstanding that they were proper parties and might have been joined on application under section 387.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action to quiet title by L. E. Johnson and others against Mrs. J. A. Curley and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

David Cosgrave, of Burlingame, for appellants.

McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff, and V. S. Kipp, of San Diego, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree rendered in favor of plaintiffs, quieting title to 200 acres of land in Tehama county.

The question involved in this action is whether the beneficiary under a trust deed is a necessary party to an action to set aside the deed on the ground that it was procured by fraud, or whether, on the contrary, the trustee as a party defendant represents the beneficiary so as to bind him by a decree declaring the deed void.

The plaintiff Johnson is the owner of the property in question, subject to two bona fide trust deeds represented by parties plaintiff. L. W. Lovey was the former owner thereof. March 22, 1920, while Lovey was the owner, one L. H. Brown purported to execute another trust deed affecting the title to the premises in question to the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company, as trustee, and in which Alpha E. Thornbury was named as beneficiary. October 22, 1920, Lovey instituted an action in Tehama county against Brown, as trustor, the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company, as trustee, Alpha E. Thornbury, as beneficiary, and others, to set aside said alleged trust as fraudulent. After trial, a decree was duly made, entered and recorded October 13, 1921, declaring said purported deed of trust from Brown to the Berkeley Bank of Savings fraudulent and void, and directing the cancellation thereof and a reconveyance from Brown to Lovey. This purported trust conveyance was accordingly duly canceled by Brown on November 17, 1921, and a deed of grant from Brown to Lovey was duly executed and recorded January 4, 1922. No appeal was taken from this decree, and it became final. No claim of interest in this property was made by the defendants in this case until May 22, 1924, more than 3½ years after the filing of said suit to cancel the Brown deed. No claim has ever been made in this action, or at all, that said decree canceling the Brown deed was procured by fraud.

lent Brown deed appeared by attorney and defended in the action to cancel that instrument, it now appears in this action that she had previously executed an assignment of her interest in this trust deed to the three defendants in this action, Curley, Westover, and Goggin, and that said assignment was recorded July 1, 1920. It does not appear why Thornbury, who claims to have previously disposed of all her interest in this deed, should have defended against that action to cancel the deed, unless we may presume that she represented and defended the interest of her assignees. These beneficiaries, by assignment, however, were not made parties defendant in that action, which resulted in the cancellation of the Brown trust deed of March 22, 1920. It is now claimed by the appellant in this case that the failure to make them parties defendant in the former action was a fatal omission, and that these beneficiaries by assignment are not bound by that decree of cancellation of the trust deed.

[1] It is also a significant fact that no showing or claim, by these defendants, was alleged in the pleadings, nor made at this trial, to the effect that they were without actual knowledge of the pending of the suit to cancel the Brown deed for fraud. From their silence as to actual notice of this trial, and from the fact that their assignor, actually appeared and defended in that action, we must presume that these beneficiaries did have such notice.

On May 22, 1924, these defendants, as beneficiaries by assignment, purported to substitute David Cosgrave as a trustee thereof in the place of the Berkeley Bank of Savings. Whereupon said substituted trustee proceeded to publish notice of sale under said canceled Brown deed, and on July 5, 1924, purported to sell and convey said property to these defendants, Curley, Westover, and Goggin, as purchasers thereof. This suit to quiet title was then instituted, and the trial court found that said purported sale was void, and that these defendants have no right, title, or interest in or to said real property.

[2, 3] The general rule is that, in all proceedings affecting a trust estate, whether brought by or against third persons, the trustee and cestui que trust are so far independent of each other that the latter must be made a party to the suit in order to be bound by the judgment or decree rendered therein. Hence a judgment against the trustee alone, the beneficiary not being a party thereto, does not bind the latter as a general rule, and so, in an action where it is sought to subject the trust estate to the satisfaction of the judgment, the beneficiary may challenge the validity of the judgment and show that it is not enforceable against the trust property. 26 R. C. L. 1343, § 208. But this general rule is subject to many exceptions, and the necessity of making a beneficiary a party to an action involving the trust depends altogether upon the nature of the action and the authority conferred upon the trustee by the declaration of trust, and these elements must be determined by the particular facts of each case. 26 R. C. L. 1344, § 209; Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. at page 7, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. The trustee "may sue at law respecting the trust estate or defend a suit brought against him if the instrument by which the trust is created does not inhibit. The cestui que trust, though the absolute owner in equity, is regarded in a court of law in the light of a stranger." 26 R. C. L. 1341, § 205.

Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 357, says:

"There is a broad distinction between the case of an action brought in opposition to the trust to set aside the deed or other instrument by which it was created, and to procure it to be declared a nullity, and that of an action brought in furtherance of the trust to enforce its provisions, to establish it as valid, or to procure it to be wound up and settled. In the first case, the suit may be maintained without the presence of the beneficiaries, since the trustees represent them all, and defend them."

In Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 155, 23 L. Ed. 843, the syllabus gives a concise and clear statement of this principle as it was applied in that case, as follows:

"Where a trustee represents his beneficiaries in all things relating to the trust property, they [the beneficiaries] are not necessary parties to a suit against him by a stranger, to enforce or declare void the trust. In such cases the beneficiaries, although not parties, are bound by the judgment, unless it is impeached for fraud or collusion between [the trustee] and the adverse party."

See In re Franklin Brewing Co. (D. C.) 254 F. 911.

[4] In the instant case the appeal is from the judgment only. The record of the evidence is not before this court. It must therefore be presumed that the trust deed involved in this action conferred upon the trustee all necessary power and authority to act for and in behalf of the beneficiaries in everything relating to the trust, including the right to appear and defend the action in their behalf, in which the deed was canceled as fraudulent and void. And in this case no contention has ever been made that there was collusion on the part of the former trustee or that the decree of cancellation was procured by fraud.

In Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 379, and in Wakeman v. Grover, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 23, the court distinguishes between actions attacking the validity of the trust deed itself and actions adverse to the beneficiaries, but consistent with the validity of the deed, holding that in the former the beneficiaries are bound by the suit against the trustee alone, while under the latter circumstances the beneficiaries will not be bound unless they are parties to the action.

In the case of Sherman v. Goodwin, 15 Ariz. 47, 135 P. 719, in a suit to quiet title against a trust deed, a decree against the trustee was held to be binding upon the beneficiary, although he was not a party to the action. In support of this conclusion the court quotes at length and with approval the decision of our Supreme Court in the case of Watkins v. Bryant, 91 Cal. 492, 27 P. 775. With respect to the failure to include the beneficiary as a party defendant, Mr. Justice Cunningham, in his opinion says:

"The duty of the trustee under the trust deed to protect the interest of the holder of these notes would have been only partially performed, if, when the action was commenced in hostility to the trust, he should fail to notify the beneficiary of such action pending, or to inform the court of the rights of a beneficiary not a party to the action, to the end that the court could perform its duty and bring in the omitted party, if such party was necessary to a complete determination of that action."

In the case of Rejall v. Greenwood (C. C. A.) 92 F. 946, Mr. Justice Morrow says:

"The general rule is that a judgment or decree is not evidence against one who is a stranger to the proceeding; but to this rule there is at least one exception, and that is, in an action brought in hostility to a trust, to set aside a deed or other instrument by which the trust was created, and to procure it to be declared a nullity, the suit may be maintained without the presence of the beneficiaries, since the trustee represents all, and defends for all. A decree rendered in the suit binds them as effectually as if they had been made parties, and is conclusive against them."

In 15 Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, 639, it is said:

"In the case of trust relations, the doctrine of representation is very clearly applicable, for such relations are created for the very purpose of furnishing a representative for the cestui que trust. Accordingly, in many but not all cases, trustees sufficiently represent their cestuis que trustent, either as complainants or defendants, and the latter are therefore not necessary parties."

Upon examination of the authorities cited by appellant there appears to be nothing in conflict with the foregoing rule which binds a beneficiary by a judgment rendered against his trustee in an action to declare a trust deed void, even though the beneficiary is not a party to the action. Appellants' authorities uphold the general rule to the effect that an action must usually be prosecuted against the real party in interest, but they do not refute the well-established exception to that rule, which exception is so clearly expressed by

Mr. Pomeroy in his text on Remedial Remedies, and which is consistently supported by a long line of authorities.

In the case of Watkins v. Bryant, 91 Cal. 492, 27 P. 775, relied upon by respondents, the facts were quite similar to those in the case at bar. In that case an assignee of an interest in the property involved sought to escape from the effect of a former judgment canceling a trust deed on the ground of fraud, for the reason that the beneficiary had not been made a party to the suit. It is true, as the appellant in this case contends, that the statute of limitations was involved in that case, and that that decision might have rested upon another exception to the general rule, to wit, that the beneficiaries were so numerous as to make it "intolerably oppressive to require the plaintiff to bring them all into court." But these additional reasons for upholding the former decree canceling the trust deed involved in the Watkins Case deprives it of none of its force in holding that the facts of that case brought it within the doctrine of the exception to the rule announced in Pomeroy's Remedial Remedies, § 357, heretofore quoted. After reciting this language with entire approval, the court then said:

"It is contended, however, for the appellant that the decree canceling the deed of trust was absolutely void as to this plaintiff, as he was not a party to the suit in which that decree was rendered. The answer to this is that, although not named as a party in that action, he was represented therein by the trustee, Davis. * * * Pomeroy's Remedial Remedies § 357. This, as an exception to the general rule, applies to the case at bar, and seems to be well supported by the following and other authorities: Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 155 [23 L. Ed. 843]; Corcoran v. Chesapeake Canal Co., 94 U. S. 744 [24 L. Ed. 190]; Rand v. Walker, 117 U. S. 344 [6 S. Ct. 769, 29 L. Ed. 907]; Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 246 [8 S. Ct. 106, 31 L. Ed. 132]; Union R. R. Co. v. Dull, 124 U. S. 173 [8 S. Ct. 433, 31 L. Ed. 417]; Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Paige [N. Y.] 378 [379]; Winslow v. Minn. R. R. Co., 4 Minn. 313 [Gil. 230] 77 Am. Dec. 519; Paul v. Fulton, 25 Mo. 156; Bank of British N. Am. v. Suydam, 6 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 379; Jones on Mortgages, 1399; Mitchell v. Bank of St. Paul, 7 Minn. 252 [Gil. 192]; Chew v. Brumagen, 80 U. S. [13 Wall.] 497 [20 L. Ed. 663]; Code Civ. Proc., § 369."

The statute provides that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. Code Civ. Proc. § 367. But several exceptions to this rule are included within section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that:

"An executor or administrator, or trustee of an express trust, or a person expressly authorized by statute, may sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. * * *

This section is construed with respect to its application to trustees in Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. at page 7, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. Construing a statute in language precisely like that of section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Supreme Court of Washington, in Merz v. Mehner, 57 Wash. 324, 106 P. 1118, with respect to section 8256, Pierce's Code of Washington, says:

"He [the trustee] is authorized to sue without joining the person for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted. If that is true, it necessarily follows that he could be sued as a representative of the cestui que trust."

Since this statute is intended to authorize the maintenance of litigation through a representative of the real party in interest, as a matter of convenience, there appears to be no real reason to distinguish between the case in which the trustee is the actor affirmatively seeking relief in behalf of the beneficiary, and those cases in which, in the performance of his duties, he may be called upon to defend the interests of the beneficiary, so long as the trustee acts in good faith, and his own interests are not in conflict with those of the beneficiary.

[5] In the case at bar, we conclude that these defendants were not necessary parties to the action declaring the Brown deed of trust void on the ground that it was procured by fraud, for the reason that under the declaration of trust it became the duty of the trustee to represent them, and all beneficiaries, in the prosecution of that case. These defendants were, however, proper parties to that action, and, upon application pursuant to section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, might have been joined as parties defendants. Their assignor, Thornbury, did appear and defend in said action in their behalf, and since it is not denied by these defendants, we must presume they had full knowledge of the prosecution of that action and voluntarily refrained from intervening or defending in person. They are therefore not in a position to complain.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

LOVEALL v. BEVERLEY. (Civ. 4594.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Quieting title ⇨15—Defendant failing to exercise option for oil lease cannot complain that plaintiff was only life tenant without power to grant mineral right.

In action to quiet title to interest in real property against claims based on option for an oil lease, defendant, who did not exercise option in accordance with agreement, is in no position to complain that plaintiff was not able to perform because of being only life tenant without power to grant right to withdraw mineral resources from freehold.

2. Quieting title ⇨44(2)—Testimony that option for oil lease against which plaintiff was seeking to quiet title was associated with similar option held properly excluded.

In action to quiet title against claims based on an option for oil lease, testimony to show that option for lease was associated with a similar option obtained from plaintiff's daughter on adjoining land held properly excluded.

3. Quieting title ⇨44(2)—Evidence of escrow instructions in transaction with defendant after expiration of option held properly excluded, in action to quiet title against option.

In action to quiet title to interest in real property against claims based on option for an oil lease, evidence of escrow instructions in transaction by another with defendant after expiration of option held properly excluded.

4. Quieting title ⇨44(2)—Testimony as to whether plaintiff suing to quiet title against option had given other option held properly excluded.

In action to quiet title to interest in real property against claim based on option for oil lease, testimony relative to whether plaintiff had made any other option or lease since executing such option held properly excluded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Emma R. Loveall against F. L. Beverley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kennicott & Williams, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. F. Holland, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title to plaintiff's interest in certain real property situated in Los Angeles county against claims of defendant, based on an agreement, which, in terms, gave defendant, for a limited period, an option for an oil lease.

The complaint alleges ownership and possession by plaintiff of a tract of land comprising 8.77 acres, and an adverse claim by defendant which is without right. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and alleges that by a written agreement dated November 23, 1921, plaintiff agreed to lease the property in suit to defendant or his nominees for the purpose of prospecting for and developing oil and other substances, but that plaintiff had refused to perform, notwithstanding defendant's readiness to perform his obligations; and defendant prays that his interest under the agreement be established and plaintiff be required to perform on her part. The court found that plaintiff owned a life interest in, and was in possession of, the property; and that by the agreement of November 23, 1921, plaintiff gave the defendant the right to obtain and draw a lease of plaintiff's interest in the property for the purpose of prospecting for and developing oil and other substances, with provision for a royalty of one-sixth of such oil as might be produced, and for a rental of a certain fixed sum for the first 12 months and a larger fixed sum for the next 12 months; and that the agreement had been recorded in the records of Los Angeles county. The court further found that on May 18, 1922, plaintiff gave defendant written notice that he had failed to comply with the terms of the agreement or of the lease, and that, unless he did comply and pay the agreed rent within 30 days, plaintiff would terminate the agreement and lease. There are findings, in addition, that defendant did not comply with the agreement; that his rights had terminated; and that plaintiff had not failed or refused to comply with her part of the agreement. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff quieting her title, and from this judgment defendant appeals.

The evidence shows that the agreement of November 23, 1921, was one whereby, in consideration of $1, plaintiff gave defendant "the exclusive right to obtain and draw up a lease upon my property," being the property described in the complaint and comprising 8.77 acres. The agreement specifies certain terms and conditions of the proposed lease, including royalty and cash rentals, as found by the court; and it provides, further, that:

"The right to draw a lease shall extend to the 8th day of December, 1921, and if bona fide negotiations are on that day going forward it shall be extended to the termination of such negotiations."

It stated also that the lease should contain the general standard terms, and was to be approved by a competent attorney. From the evidence it appears that within a few days after the agreement was made defendant had a lease drawn by his attorney, which was laid before plaintiff. Plaintiff signed the lease so presented, and almost immediately left it in the hands of defendant's attorney, who, however, regarded it as deposited with him in escrow and not as delivered to him for transmission to the defendant. At any rate, it was never put in the possession of the defendant, nor did he ever sign it. There was no exercise of the option within the time specified in the agreement, nor were any negotiations then pending whereby defendant became entitled to an extension. About March 7, 1922, which was three months after the term of the option had expired, Percy Kingsland, a broker, called on plaintiff at the instance of defendant, and stated to plaintiff that he had arranged with a man named Howard to purchase the lease from defendant, and that certain money for the purpose had been deposited in escrow, but that he had learned from defendant that there was some difficulty about getting the necessary papers to complete the transaction. From the testimony offered it appears that a deposit had been made with the Security Bank & Trust Company under written escrow instructions signed by Howard and approved by defendant. Plaintiff referred Kingsland to her son, who, when visited by Kingsland, informed him that plaintiff had only a life estate in the property, and that other parties in interest could not be gotten together to complete the title. The proposed transaction with Howard seems then to have been abandoned. Thereafter plaintiff served the written notice mentioned in the court's findings, which is dated May 15, 1922, but nothing further was done by defendant; and this action to quiet title was begun on June 29, 1922.

[1] Defendant contends that the judgment quieting plaintiff's title should be reversed on the ground that she was never at any time able to perform, since a life tenant is without power to grant the right to withdraw mineral resources from the freehold. That, however, is not a pertinent argument when addressed, under the circumstances in evidence, to this particular agreement. The agreement was not one whereby plaintiff agreed to give, and defendant to take a lease. It was a mere option, and by its terms the option was expressly limited to December 8, 1921. There is no contention of any exercise of the option within the time named, nor was there any extension in writing, though there was a letter dated January 18, 1922, in which plaintiff asked for an explanation as to the delay in payments to her. She appears to have been under the impression that she was entitled to rents from the date of her agreement, but, as a matter of fact, no rentals were paid at any time. The notice, dated May 15, 1922, given by plaintiff to defendant, was equivalent to a renewal of the option for 30 days, but defendant did not avail himself of the privilege. Since the option was not exercised, it can make no difference to defendant in this action whether plaintiff was a life tenant or owner in fee. As the agreement was recorded by defendant and casts a cloud on plaintiff's title, she is entitled to have whatever title she has quieted.

[2] Defendant specifies as error the exclusion of certain testimony offered by him to show that the option for a lease from plaintiff was associated with a similar option obtained by defendant from plaintiff's daughter for a lease on adjoining land belonging to the daughter. Though such other option was obtained at the same time as plaintiff's, and though plaintiff acted therein as agent for her daughter, plaintiff was affected only by the option to which she was herself a party, and the daughter's option had nothing to do with the issues in this case. The exclusion of the offered testimony was therefore proper.

[3] Error is also charged in refusing to receive in evidence escrow instructions dated March 7, 1922, given by Howard to the Security Bank & Trust Company. Howard's transaction, however, was with defendant and not with plaintiff; and while the witness Kingsland told plaintiff that money had been deposited in escrow, the escrow instructions were never exhibited to her; and, besides, defendant's option had expired three months previously. The court was correct in its ruling.

[4] The court was likewise correct in excluding testimony as to whether plaintiff had made any other option or lease since November 23, 1921. There was evidence, however, that there had never been any attempt to produce oil from the land, and that at the time of the trial it was used only for agricultural purposes.

The judgment is affirmed.

RIECK v. CHAPMAN. (Civ. 5334.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 13, 1927.

1. Attorney and client §123(1)—Relation of attorney and client requires utmost good faith and honesty on part of attorney.

Relation of attorney and client is one of highest trust and confidence, requiring on part of attorney the utmost good faith and honesty.

2. Attorney and client §127—Evidence in accounting action held to support conclusion that attorney was indebted to client.

In action by client against former attorney for money had and received and accounting, evidence held to support conclusion of trial judge that attorney was indebted to client in certain amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Emilie E. Rieck against Arthur E. T. Chapman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robert M. Clarke and Albert Sidney Brown, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Youngworth, McClean & Hartman and Wm. B. Ogden, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action by a client against her former attorney for money had and received and an accounting.

The complaint contains three causes of action. Under the first it is alleged in substance that on or about the 1st day of May, 1919, plaintiff employed the defendant as her legal adviser at an agreed fee of $10,000, which sum plaintiff paid to the defendant; that between the 1st day of May, 1919, and the 1st day of November, 1920, plaintiff paid into the hands of defendant at his request, but for her use and benefit, the sum of $6,950.75, for which defendant promised and agreed to truly and honestly account for, which he failed to do. The second cause of action alleges that between the 6th day of August, 1919, and the 1st day of January, 1921, the defendant received from divers and sundry persons the sum of $8,093.95 to and for the use of plaintiff. The third sets forth that between the 1st day of January, 1920, and the 31st day of December, 1920, plaintiff, at the request and upon the advice of defendant, paid into his hands the sum of $20,500, which defendant represented he could loan to third persons upon their secured promissory notes, and that, acting upon such promise, plaintiff paid over to defendant said sum to be used for such purpose; that thereafter plaintiff demanded of defendant an accounting of the money so received; that in compliance therewith defendant delivered to plaintiff five promissory notes and mortgages purporting to secure the principal sum of $20,500; that plaintiff thereafter discovered that one of said notes represented an indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff which was secured by a mortgage upon property standing in the name of a third person who held the legal title thereto to the use of defendant, but that such security was insufficient in value to secure the payment of the note; that another of said notes represents an indebtedness of a business partner or associate of defendant and is secured by a second lien of mortgage upon real property of insufficient value to secure the payment thereof; that the remaining notes are also secured by mortgages upon property insufficient in value; that plaintiff upon discovering the facts offered to rescind and reassign and return the notes to defendant, who refused to accept the same or repay plaintiff her money. The prayer is for an accounting and general relief. Defendant in his answer denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and by way of counterclaim set up that on or about May 1, 1919, she received from him the sum of $2,000, which she agreed to pay upon demand; that thereafter defendant demanded payment thereof, but plaintiff failed to pay the same. Defendant also filed a cross-complaint, and in the second cause of action therein set forth alleged that he had rendered professional services as an attorney to plaintiff in the sum of $25,000, of which only $15,867.75 had been paid, leaving a balance due in the sum of $9,132.25, for which sum judgment was prayed. The allegations of the cross-complaint were denied by plaintiff. At the close of the trial judgment was rendered that cross-complainant, Chapman, take nothing by his cross-action; that plaintiff and cross-defendant have and recover the sum of $5,452.59. Motion for a new trial was made and denied. The appeal is from the judgment and order.

[1] The sole question here presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. From a careful reading of the entire testimony we are of the opinion that the findings are fully supported by the evidence. The relation of attorney and client is one of the highest trust and confidence, requiring on the part of the attorney the utmost of good faith and honesty. A client, and especially a woman without business experience, as the record shows plaintiff to have been, is largely, if not wholly, guided and influenced by the advice of the attorney, for which reason his conduct and acts, when questioned, should be closely scrutinized, and the burden is upon him to show that he has been fair and honest. That plaintiff did have full confidence in defendant there is no doubt. Certain allegations in his answer indicate that he not only won his client's complete confidence, but her affections as well, and she testified that no one else had so completely controlled her. In disposing of the case the learned trial judge filed a written opinion and ordered that findings be prepared in conformity with the views therein expressed. As his conclusion carefully reviews the facts, we adopt it as part of this opinion. It is as follows:

"This is an action for accounting between a client and her former attorney. The evidence shows that the defendant, Mr. Chapman, was first employed by Mrs. Rieck, the plaintiff, in February, 1919, for the purpose of securing a divorce for her and handling negotiations regarding a property settlement between herself and husband. Apparently, various sums of money were paid by the plaintiff to Mr. Chapman, of which neither party kept any record. The plaintiff, unfortunately, was able to assist the court but little, her testimony being most vague and unsatisfactory. It may be said, in fact, that she displayed a most lamentable ignorance concerning her affairs, and a lack of memory that verged upon the extreme. The matter and manner of her testimony during the trial of this case would indicate that Mrs. Rieck was a woman almost devoid of business acumen and of knowledge of business affairs. This being the case, it would seem to have been particularly incumbent upon the defendant to have so handled her affairs that no doubt whatever could be cast upon any of the transactions between them. It appears, however, that Mr. Chapman kept no account whatever, and both parties were compelled to rely upon their memories as to the purpose for which payments were made by Mrs. Rieck, and as to the purposes for which money was expended by Mr. Chapman, and as to the amounts expended by the latter on behalf of his client.

"It appears that for his services in and about the divorce action and the property settlement it was agreed that Mrs. Rieck should pay Mr. Chapman a fee of $10,000. And at this point it may be well to note that one branch of the case involves the question of what arrangement was made as to this fee, the plaintiff contending that $10,000 was to cover all of the services and that she guaranteed to pay him that amount if he did not secure it from Mr. Rieck; the defendant, on the other hand, claiming that the arrangement was that he was to receive a fee of $10,000 from Mrs. Rieck irrespective of any amount which he might succeed in obtaining from Mr. Rieck. The question of the fee will be discussed later on in this opinion.

"It also appears that this $10,000 was paid by Mrs. Rieck to Mr. Chapman, not in cash, but in United States Liberty bonds in the denomination of $1,000 each, Mr. Chapman's contention in this regard being that these bonds, which at the time of their receipt by him had a market value of $830 each, were not taken at their par value, but at their market value. And on this point I am inclined to agree with Mr. Chapman, because it appears from the testimony that subsequently Mrs. Rieck took back two of these bonds, paying full par value for them.

"Without attempting to go into details of the transactions between the parties or to review the evidence in detail, it may be stated that the evidence shows to the satisfaction of the court that Mr. Chapman received the following sums for or on behalf of Mrs. Rieck, most of them being evidenced by exhibits filed in the case."

The amounts of these exhibits are then set forth. They total the sum of $8,448.62. The opinion continues:

"This sum of $8,448.62 is, of course, irrespective of the $10,000 fee.

"I find that the defendant, Mr. Chapman, is entitled to the following credits, the respective items being evidenced in some cases by exhibits filed in this action."

Then follows an enumeration of defendant's exhibits, totaling the sum of $6,386.03. Continuing, the opinion recites:

"Deducting the latter amount from the $8,448.62 received by the defendant leaves a balance of $2,062.59 unaccounted for by the defendant, and which the court finds due from defendant to plaintiff.

"Turning now to the subject of fees, the evidence was extremely conflicting as to a written agreement signed by the parties covering this matter. This agreement was prepared in the office of Mr. Chapman, and apparently no copy was furnished to his client. It remained in his possession for some time, and Mr. Chapman testifies it was inadvertently lost or destroyed. The testimony of the plaintiff and her witnesses is to the effect that this agreement was in the nature of a guarantee that Mr. Chapman should receive at least $10,000 as fees and that if he did not succeed in obtaining this amount from Mr. Rieck she would either pay the same or make up the deficit. Mr. Chapman and his witnesses, on the other hand, testify that the agreement bound Mrs. Rieck to pay $10,000 to Mr. Chapman, irrespective of any sum he should receive from her husband. It seems exceedingly strange that an attorney preparing such an agreement should not supply his client with a copy; and it further seems a strange circumstance that this agreement should have been lost or destroyed, important as it was to Mr. Chapman. It further seems very strange that a lawyer should prepare such an agreement without at the same time making an office copy. But this carelessness seems to be on a par with the other financial and business transactions between the parties.

"With respect to the terms of the agreement referred to, I find that it was in accordance with the testimony of the plaintiff and that $10,000 was the total fee charged and agreed upon. I am more inclined to this view because the nature and value of the services as testified to would seem, in my opinion, to have been most liberally compensated by a fee of this size, bearing in mind that Mr. Chapman's efforts did not result in obtaining the whole of the very large property settlement secured by the plaintiff, but at most in raising it from $150,000, the sum offered by Mr. Rieck, to $200,000.

"The evidence shows that Mr. Chapman received from Mr. Rieck the sum of $6,250 to be applied on attorney's fees, certain attorneys in Pittsburg who represented Mrs. Rieck at that place, where Mr. Rieck resided, sharing in the total sum paid by Mr. Rieck for legal services rendered to Mrs. Rieck in and about the divorce and property settlement. Mr. Chapman received from Mrs. Rieck the sum of $2,000 through the redemption by her of two of the Liberty bonds originally paid him, and he further received eight Liberty bonds at a value of $830 apiece, making a total of $6,640. The total amount received by him, therefore, was $14,890. Mr. Chapman, therefore, was overpaid in the sum of $4,890, and should account to Mrs. Rieck for this amount in addition to the amount heretofore found.

"Mr. Chapman in his cross-complaint claims to be entitled to additional fees for services rendered subsequent to and apart from the divorce and property settlement case. His testimony as to this is to the effect that he drew several wills for Mrs. Rieck, one for another person at her request; that he attended to certain property matters for her, advised her with relation to a motorcycle in which she was hurt, and gave her a great number of consultations at his office. I find that these subsequent services were of the value of $1,500, which in the final accounting should be deducted from the amount found due from Mr. Chapman to Mrs.

Rieck. The figures may be summarized as follows:

Due from defendant to plaintiff on the accounting apart from attorney's fees.....	$2,062 59
Due from defendant to plaintiff on account of attorney's overpaid.....	4,890 00
Total	$6,952 59
Due from plaintiff to defendant for legal services outside of divorce and property settlement matter	1,500 00
Balance due from defendant to plaintiff	$5,452 59

"As to the defense that an accounting has already been had between the parties the finding will be for the plaintiff.

"In conclusion, * * * the relations between the parties were of a fiduciary nature. The plaintiff is very evidently a woman utterly unused to business affairs. She left everything to Mr. Chapman in the fullest trust and confidence. She paid him large sums of money apparently whenever he requested her to do so. It would seem that the most ordinary prudence and good faith, to say nothing of proper business methods, would have suggested to the defendant—nay, would have commanded him—to keep a proper account of every sum received from his client and of every sum spent on her behalf; instead of which it appears that no record whatever was made in any book of account or otherwise of any sum paid to the attorney by his client, nor did the former even give receipts to the latter.

"Counsel for the plaintiff will, unless findings be waived, prepare findings and a judgment in accordance with the foregoing.

"Dated February 1, 1923.

"[Signed] Charles S. Burnell, Judge."

[2] The conclusion reached by the learned trial court finds full support in the evidence. No other question is presented.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GEORGE et al. v. DALY CITY BANK et al.*

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 9, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 8, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 8, 1927.

1. Trusts $\S$ 44(1)—Evidence held to clearly establish that husband's bank account was in trust for wife.

Evidence affecting husband's opening of bank account jointly with wife held to clearly establish a trust in favor of wife.

2. Husband and wife $\S$ 49½(8)—Evidence held to warrant finding of husband's gift of bank account to wife.

Evidence held sufficient to warrant finding of valid gift of bank account by husband to wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by William George and another, executors, against the Daly City Bank and Florence Smart Daly, to recover money on deposit, in which second named defendant filed a cross-complaint claiming the deposit as her own. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the second named defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SEAWELL and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

Joseph T. O'Connor, Alexander McCulloch, and A. H. Brandt, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Karl C. Partridge, Edward F. Treadwell, and Cullinan & Hickey, all of San Francisco, and Earl F. Treadwell, of San Mateo, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. During his lifetime, John D. Daly, deceased, opened a savings account in the Daly City Bank. After his death, the executors of his will commenced an action against the bank and Florence S. Daly, the surviving widow of the deceased, to recover the amount then on deposit, together with interest. Mrs. Daly appeared and filed an answer and cross-complaint, claiming the deposit as her own. The plaintiffs answered the cross-complaint, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs, and, from a judgment entered thereon, Mrs. Daly has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

The appellant contended in the trial court, and now contends, that the facts show that the deposit was (1) a gift to her; and (2) a trust in her favor as the sole beneficiary. The pertinent evidence is brief and is uncontradicted.

[1] Among other things, Mrs. Daly testified that she and John D. Daly were married about 1919. At that time Mr. Daly was a widower, the owner of a considerable sized estate and about 77 years of age. There were then living a son and four daughters, all adults, and the offspring of the first marriage. Mrs. Daly at the time of her marriage was 35 years of age, resided at 1884 San Jose avenue, San Francisco, and was the owner of the premises. She and her sister were the joint owners of a considerable sized estate which was not producing very much of an income, and she was engaged in teaching music to pupils in her own home. Before their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Daly discussed the location of their future home. It was the desire of Mrs. Daly that the husband should come and jointly occupy her house as a home. On the other hand, Mr. Daly was reluctant to do so, and declared a husband should provide a home for his wife. After the marriage, Mr. Daly went to live at Mrs. Daly's home. The accounts for the upkeep of the home were paid by Mr. Daly, and they continued to occupy the same residence until his death. Mr. Daly had a commercial bank account in the Crocker Bank, and he also had a commercial account in the Daly City Bank, of which institution he was a large stockholder and the president. Both accounts were his separate property. They had a safe deposit box in the Daly City Bank, and to that box Mr. Daly and Mrs. Daly each had a key. The bank book, herein discussed, was in the box at the time of Mr. Daly's death.

About three years after they were married, Mr. Daly said that he wished his wife would go up to the bank, that he wished to open an account for her—for her little home. That was not the first time he referred to the subject of home. They discussed the subject several times. Nobody else was present on those occasions. He said that he felt that every husband should provide a home for his wife; however, as Mrs. Daly's interests were at her residence, he went to her home to live. When he asked her to go to the bank, the two of them went up to open the account. Mr. McArthur was the cashier at the window. Mr. Daly went to that window and said to Mr. McArthur: "I wish to open an account for my wife." The cashier prepared a book and a card. Mrs. Daly insisted that Mr. Daly's name should also appear on the account. Mr. Daly drew a check on his commercial account in the same bank for the sum of $5,000. This was on November 23, 1921. The cashier entered the deposit in the savings account book and handed the book to Mr. Daly. Mrs. Daly and Mr. Daly signed the deposit card. The book was marked, "Savings Deposits No. 1032, Daly City Bank, in account with John D. Daly or Florence Smart Daly." The following instruction was set forth in the passbook:

"To withdraw money: Payments will in no case be made by the bank except the passbook be produced and the amount entered therein, and only on the written order of the depositor, or his or her legal representative."

Immediately after Mr. Daly had received the book, he gave it to Mrs. Daly, saying, "This is your little home." She took it home and kept it in a drawer until Mr. Daly asked for it to make a second deposit. That deposit was in the sum of $4,000, and was made on August 24, 1922. When she delivered him the book, he took it to the bank and made the second deposit, but did not return the book to his wife. He told her that he had left it in their safe deposit box, as he thought it was a safer place than it would be in his pocket, as he was "going down the road." On that particular day he "was going down the road" with a friend. After the first deposit had been made, but the exact date does not appear, Mr. Daly stated to his wife that in case anything happened to him she was immediately to go and draw the money so she would in no way be embarrassed for funds.

Mr. McArthur, the cashier named above, was called as a witness by the plaintiffs and was called as a witness by the defendant. Among other things, he testified that each deposit was moneys drawn by Mr. Daly from his commercial account and put in the savings account. Among other things, he testified:

"I recall the occasion on or about the 23d day of November, 1921, when Mr. Daly opened up the account in question. Mrs. Daly was with him at that time. Mr. Daly stepped up to my window and said he wished to open an account for his wife. I got the necessary papers out, and he signed the signature card, and I made the entry in his book, and he handed me a check on the commercial department of the bank; he also at the same time said he wished his name placed on the book, and he signed, and Mrs. Daly stepped up to the window and she signed, and I made an entry on the book, 'John D. Daly or Florence Smart Daly.' There was no other conversation. * * * There was no discussion at all as to his plans of any kind or his wishes. That was his wish, that he wanted the account made out for his wife. He did not discuss this account with me at any subsequent occasion. When he made the second deposit of $4,000, nothing was said. I had no discussions with Mr. Daly about the account. When he made the second deposit of $4,000, nothing was said except how he wanted it deposited. The book was handed in with the check."

The foregoing evidence is uncontradicted. Mr. Daly committed no act and made no declaration at any time which in any way further explained or modified the transaction either in the presence of, or in the absence of, Mrs. Daly or the officers of the bank, or any other person.

As stated above, the appellant claims that the foregoing shows both a gift and a trust. The respondents on the other hand contend that the evidence is insufficient to show either, and, furthermore, if there was any evidence in the record on which the trial court could base an inference in favor of the respondents and against the appellant, then, and in that event, the record presents a conflict of evidence, and, under well-settled rules, this court should affirm the judgment. Taking up the latter part of the contention of the respondents, the record discloses that the decedent made a will; that in the will he recited that he had previously made certain gifts to certain members of his family; that in the will he made a bequest to the appellant; that in the will he made no mention of the fact that he had made any gift to, or that he had created any trust in favor of, the appellant. On these facts the respondents contend that the trial court might infer that the decedent had not made the gift and had not created the trust. There was nothing on the face of the will, or the codicils thereto, from which it may be inferred that in any one of those documents, or all of them, the decedent had recited every gift which he had made to every one or all of the persons therein named. We are unable to sustain the contention that the inference claimed creates a conflict in the evidence. Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal. App. 323, 324, 325, 183 P. 198. The case entitled County of Sonoma v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 32, 57 P. 681, is inapplicable. On the other hand, the case is far stronger in its facts than were the cases entitled Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 664, 665, 34 P. 504, Bauer v. State, 144 Cal. 740, 745, 78 P. 280, and Hynes v. White, 47 Cal. App. 549, 190 P. 336, each of which is opposed to respondents' contention. In the instant case there were the two witnesses, Mrs. Daly and Mr. McArthur, who testified positively, and to the same effect, to the facts which proved the appellant's case. The testimony of neither individual was broken down in the least by the cross-examination.

The evidence introduced clearly proved a trust in favor of the appellant. Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 P. 370; Bell v. Moloney, 175 Cal. 366, 165 P. 917.

Furthermore, as stated in Bell v. Moloney, supra, "there was also abundant evidence to support the finding of a valid gift inter vivos."

[2] In her cross-complaint on which she went to trial, the appellant alleged a trust payable to her "in case of the death of said John D. Daly." After the evidence was all in, by permission of court, she filed an amended cross-complaint. In that pleading she repeated the limitation as to when the trust was payable, and she inserted for the first time the allegations concerning a gift. An examination of the evidence above set forth discloses no limitation to the effect that the money was payable only "in case of the death of said John D. Daly."

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, with directions that the parties may be allowed to amend their pleadings as they may be advised before going to trial.

MELLOR v. RIDEOUT. (Civ. 3265.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 6, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 4, 1927.

1. Bills and notes §167—Note secured by mortgage held not negotiable, having been executed before statute was passed (Civ. Code, § 3265, as amended in 1923).

Note secured by mortgage on real property held not negotiable, and hence subject to Civ. Code, § 1459, having been executed before section 3265 was amended in 1923 to make notes secured by mortgages negotiable.

2. Evidence §208(2), 265(8)—Admission in pleading is admissible in another action, but, if pleader can amend and thereby destroy admission, it is not ordinarily entitled to overwhelming weight.

An admission contained in a pleading in an action is admissible in evidence in the trial of another action, but, if the first action has not been brought to trial and it is within the power of the pleader to destroy the effect of the admission by amending his pleading, it is not ordinarily entitled to overwhelming weight.

3. Bills and notes §518(1)—Evidence held to warrant finding that cross note was supported by valuable consideration (Civ. Code, § 3110; Negotiable Instruments Law, St. 1917, p. 1531; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957, 1963, subd. 2; § 2061, subd. 2; Civ. Code, § 1614).

Where parties exchanged promissory notes at the same time, for equal amounts, bearing the same rate of interest, trial court was warranted in finding that the notes were cross notes, and hence that one of such notes had a valuable consideration and was not an accommodation note, under Civ. Code, § 3110, and Negotiable Instruments Law (St. 1917, p. 1531), presumptions authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957, 1963, subd. 2, and section 2061, subd. 2, and Civ. Code, § 1614, not being overcome by allegation in complaint in another action that note was without consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County;
Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action to foreclose mortgage brought by Roy M. Mellor against Dunning Rideout, as executor of the last will and testament of the estate of Lycurgus Orr, deceased. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Perky, McConnell & Hill, of Los Angeles, and Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Warren Steel and Homer Lingenfelter, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This action was instituted to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of a promissory note for $5,000, dated June 6, 1922, payable on or before one year after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Both instruments were executed by Lycurgus Orr, who died prior to the commencement of this action. The answer denies the execution of the instruments and, "as a further and separate defense herein and by way of counterclaim," alleges that plaintiff's assignor, John R. MacLean, for a valuable consideration, on June 6, 1922, executed and delivered to Orr a promissory note for $5,000, payable 30 days after date, and bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and that the amount thereof became due and payable prior to the assignment by MacLean of Orr's alleged note. The complaint alleges and the court found that MacLean assigned the Orr note and mortgage to A. P. Knox July 8, 1922, and that on the same day Knox assigned them to the plaintiff.

At the trial the plaintiff introduced proof to establish the execution of the instruments, their assignment to him, and that the note had not been paid. The proof of the defendant was equally formal as to the MacLean note. In rebuttal, the plaintiff introduced in evidence the complaint in an action instituted by Orr against MacLean for the cancellation of the Orr note and mortgage. The complaint in that action, duly verified by Orr, was filed July 3, 1922, five days before the assignment by MacLean. It is therein alleged that Orr was induced by MacLean's false representations to purchase 13,800 shares of the capital stock of Standard Petroleum Company at 10 cents a share; that thereafter, "on and immediately prior to June 6, 1922," MacLean made similar false representations to Orr and falsely stated that he, MacLean, then "had an option to purchase $5,000 worth of the said capital stock of said Standard Petroleum Company at the said par value of 10 cents per share; that if plaintiff would execute to him, the said defendant John R. MacLean, the plaintiff's promissory note for the sum of $5,000, secured by a mortgage on plaintiff's real property hereinabove described, he, the said John R. MacLean, could and would hypothecate the same for cash and secure the said capital stock pursuant to his said option, and could and would sell the same to other parties at 50 cents per share; and that he, the said John R. MacLean, could and would so take up such option and resell the said stock within two or three weeks from said date, and would then repay plaintiff the amount of plaintiff's said note and mortgage, together with interest, and also the amount in full that plaintiff had theretofore paid for the said 13,800 shares of the said stock so that plaintiff would then have all of said 13,800 shares of stock without cost to himself; * * * that plaintiff was at said time of the age of 79 years and was then, and had been for some time prior thereto, infirm physically, and in mind, by reason of his advanced years"; that by reason of said false representations the plaintiff was induced to execute the promissory note and mortgage; that subsequent to June 6, 1922, plaintiff learned and discovered for the first time that such representations were false; "that no consideration passed to or has been received by this plaintiff or by anybody else for his use and benefit, for the execution and delivery of the said promissory note of $5,000 and the mortgage so executed and delivered to secure the payment thereof."

The court found, in the instant case, that each of the aforesaid notes was executed "for a valuable consideration," and that "the said promissory note executed by said John R. MacLean to said Lycurgus Orr on the 6th day of June, 1922, as aforesaid, now is and at the time of the commencement of this action was a full and complete set-off to the said promissory note in plaintiff's complaint set forth." Judgment was entered in favor of defendant for costs, and the plaintiff has appealed.

Appellant contends that the evidence does not support the finding that the Orr note was given for a valuable consideration, but that it shows that the instrument is an accommodation note, upon which Orr was liable to MacLean's assignee, notwithstanding MacLean's note to Orr was due and payable at the time of the assignment. All other grounds urged for a reversal are based upon that contention and, hence a determination against appellant thereon will be decisive of the case. Appellant relies on the provisions of section 3110 of the Civil Code, which defines an accommodation party and his liability to a holder for value, in the language of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law. The title of the act adopting that law is as follows:

"An act to repeal title fifteen of part four of division third of the Civil Code of the state of California, and to add a new title fifteen of part four of division third of said Code in place thereof, relating to negotiable instruments, and to make the law of negotiable instruments in the state of California uniform with the law of other states." Stats. 1917, p. 1531.

[1] The Orr note was not negotiable, it having been executed prior to the amendment in 1923 of section 3265 of the Civil Code, making notes secured by mortgages negotiable. Section 1459 of the Civil Code provides:

"A nonnegotiable written contract for the payment of money or personal property may be transferred by indorsement, in like manner with negotiable instruments. Such indorsement shall transfer all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement."

It is not necessary, however, to decide whether the provisions of section 3110 of the Civil Code are applicable to nonnegotiable notes, because the evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that the Orr note was given for a valuable consideration. It is a disputable presumption "that a promissory note * * * was given * * * for a sufficient consideration." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 21. "A written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." Civ. Code, § 1614. A presumption is evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1957. Jurors "are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against * * * a presumption * * * satisfying their minds." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2. Appellant contends that Orr's statement in his verified complaint that the note was given without consideration "must of necessity overcome and dispel the legal presumption arising from the written instrument," quoting from Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 390, 137 P. 9, 11, as follows:

"Disputable inferences or presumptions, while evidence, are evidence the weakest and least satisfactory. They are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of them. The facts being proven contrary to the presumption, no conflict arises; the presumption is simply overcome and dispelled."

In Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corporation, 190 Cal. 1, 7, 210 P. 269, 272, it is said:

"There seems to be some confusion in the decisions of this state with respect to the extent to which, under various circumstances presumptions of law are to be regarded as evidence of facts."

[2] The court then reviews the authorities in this state, including Williams v. Hasshagen, supra, and proceeds:

"From the foregoing we deduce that a fact is proved as against a party when it is established by the uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or of his witnesses, under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence; and that when the fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, the latter is dispelled and disappears from the case."

Disregarding the question whether the facts alleged in the Orr complaint show a consideration for the execution of his promissory note, it cannot be said that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding under discussion. Parties frequently fail to comprehend fully the legal phraseology in which their attorneys state the facts in a pleading. It does not appear whether any steps were taken in the action instituted by Orr further than filing the complaint. It has been held in this state "that a pleading which has been superseded by an amendment can no longer perform any office as a pleading, and cannot be used on the trial as admissions to contradict a fact alleged in a subsequent amendment." Schuh v. R. H. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 17, 169 P. 682, 683. While an admission contained in a pleading in one action may be received in evidence against the pleader in the trial of another action, if the first action has not been brought to trial and it is within the power of the pleader to destroy the effect of the admission as evidence by amending his pleading, the admission is not ordinarily entitled to overwhelming weight.

[3] Besides, there is persuasive evidence in support of the presumption of a consideration. Orr and MacLean exchanged promissory notes at the same time, for equal amounts and bearing the same rate of interest. The correspondence in date, amount, and interest warrants the inference that the instruments were cross notes. Mutual Loan Ass'n v. Brandt, 35 Misc. Rep. 270, 71 N. Y.

S. 770. "The rule is well established that a promissory note given by the maker, in exchange for a note given by the payee, is for a valuable consideration, and not an accommodation paper, although made for the mutual accommodation of the parties." Elliott on Contracts, § 3402; Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (6th Ed.) § 187; Ambrose v. Hammond Lumber Co., 43 Cal. App. 597, 600, 185 P. 691.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHLAKE v. McCONNELL. (Civ. 5802.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 11, 1927.

1. Principal and agent ⇨23(5)—Finding that another was defendant's agent in exchanging stock for realty held supported by evidence that defendant told plaintiff such other person was his agent.

In action to rescind contract for exchange of real property for stock in concessions corporation, evidence that defendant stated to plaintiff that another was his agent and directed plaintiff to transact business with other person as such agent supported finding of agency for defendant in exchange of stock.

2. Principal and agent ⇨116(1), 119(1)—Agent exchanging stock for realty held presumably authorized to talk, and liability of principal could not be limited to words authorized by principal's undisclosed instructions.

Where evidence showed that person procuring exchange of stock for realty was agent of defendant in disposing of stock, such person is presumed to have had authority to talk, and liability of defendant as principal cannot be limited to such portions of agent's talk as may have been authorized by defendant's undisclosed instructions.

3. Exchange of property ⇨8(1)—Finding that company whose stock was exchanged for realty was represented to be free from debt would support false representation, though insolvency was not proven.

In action to rescind for fraud contract to exchange stock in concessions company for real property, finding that company was represented as "free from debt and not indebted in any manner" would be material fact sufficient to support alleged false representation, though insolvency of company was not proven.

4. Exchange of property ⇨8(4)—Finding that stock taken by plaintiff in exchange for realty was worthless held supported by evidence in action to rescind for fraud.

In action to rescind for fraud contract to exchange stock in consolidated concessions company for realty, evidence that stock had no value when delivered to plaintiff, and that concessions company possessed no property except stock in separate corporations composing consolidation, and that company was indebted to defendant on promissory note, supported finding that stock was worthless.

5. Evidence ⚡596(1)—Slight evidence is sufficient to sustain burden of introducing prima facie case by proving existence of negative.

Where party had burden of introducing prima facie case by proving existence of a negative, slight evidence is sufficient.

6. Exchange of property ⚡8(4)—Contract to exchange stock for realty could be rescinded if finding as to one material fraudulent representation was sustained, without proving every alleged false representation.

In action to rescind for fraud contract to exchange stock in concessions company for realty, it was not necessary that plaintiff prove every alleged false representation, but he was entitled to rescission if finding was sustained as to one material, fraudulent representation.

7. Exchange of property ⚡8(4)—Finding that plaintiff, seeking to rescind contract to exchange realty for stock, relied on representations by defendant's agents as to company's financial condition, held sustained by evidence.

In action to rescind for fraud contract to exchange stock in concessions company for realty, finding that plaintiff relied on representations of defendant's agent held supported by evidence that plaintiff would not have made deals if he had not believed agent's statement as to company's financial condition of which he had no independent knowledge.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Trial court determines conflicts in testimony.

Conflicts in testimony are addressed to trial court.

9. Exchange of property ⚡5—Rescission of contract to exchange realty for stock day after plaintiff learned facts showing fraud held sufficiently prompt (Civ. Code, § 1691).

In action to rescind for fraud, contract to exchange realty for stock in concessions company, rescission by plaintiff day after he learned facts showing fraud held sufficiently prompt under Civ. Code, § 1691.

10. Contracts ⚡270(1)—Facts of particular case determine whether contract was rescinded in time.

Whether notice of rescission of contract has been given in time must be determined by particular facts of each case.

11. Exchange of property ⚡5—Plaintiff cannot be held not to have rescinded contract after sending rescission notice, introduced at trial without objection, to defendant's place of abode, and filing lis pendens shortly thereafter.

Where notice of rescission of contract to exchange realty for stock in concessions company was delivered into hands of express company to serve on defendant at place where he had been residing, and was produced at trial and received without any objection, and notice of lis pendens was recorded few days after notice of rescission was sent, it could not be claimed that plaintiff did not rescind at all.

12. Exchange of property ⚡5—Plaintiff seeking rescission of contract to exchange realty for stock held relieved from offering to return certificates before suit by defendant's refusal to return land.

In suit to rescind for fraud contract to exchange realty for stock, plaintiff was relieved from necessity of offering to return or cancel stock certificates prior to beginning action, where defendant refused under any circumstances to return title to land conveyed to him.

13. Exchange of property ⚡5—Plaintiff seeking rescission of contract to exchange realty for stock was required to restore everything of value, and need not have restored stock found to be worthless.

In action to rescind for fraud contract to exchange realty for stock, duty to restore or offer to restore extends to "everything of value," and hence where stock was found to have been worthless there was nothing which plaintiff was required to restore.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Christian Schlake, Jr., against Emmett W. McConnell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Goldman & Altman, of San Francisco, and Wm. S. Wells, of Oakland, for appellant.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, and Fry & Wood, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff was the owner of two different tracts of land located near Sebastopol in Sonoma county. He executed a contract of exchange whereby he transferred under two separate contracts the said lands to the defendant for shares of stock in the Consolidated Concessions Company, a corporation. Thereafter he discovered certain facts which he believed entitled him to rescind the contracts of exchange by reason of alleged false representations of the defendant and one J. O. Wyatt, the agent of the defendant, and thereupon he gave a notice purporting to rescind the contracts. Thereafter he commenced this action, and he so framed his pleadings that he prayed separately, as to each exchange, that it be (1) rescinded as for fraud; and (2) that his deed be canceled as for a total failure of consideration. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

Prior to 1913 preparations were made to hold an international exposition at San Francisco in 1915. For the purpose of conducting the enterprise the Panama Pacific Exposition Company was incorporated. That company granted certain concessions. Among them it granted a concession to install and operate the (1) Inside Inn; (2) Scenario of the Creation of the World; (3) Scenario of the Evolution of the Dreadnaughts of the United States Navy; (4) Cyclorama of the Battle of Gettysburg; and (5) the Palace of Amusement. Each of said concessions was incorporated, and each corporation conveyed to the defendant a block of stock. Thereafter, on July 15, 1913, another corporation was formed, the Consolidated Concessions Company, having $600,000 preferred stock and $1,200,000 common stock. It was provided that the preferred stock of the Consolidated Concessions Company should be sold at par $10 per share, and with each share of preferred stock so sold there would be given as a bonus one share of the common stock. After its organization the defendant conveyed to it his shares of stock in the corporations above mentioned and received in payment the promissory note of the Consolidated Concessions Company and 60,000 shares of the common stock of the Concessions Company. Also, 3,750 shares of its common stock "as collateral security for the payment of the promissory note." The defendant's contract with the Consolidated Concessions Company in the third paragraph thereof contained a covenant that the company would pay the promissory note out of the first moneys which it should receive "from any source whatsoever."

Prior to the initiation of any of these transactions the plaintiff was a farmer at Sebastopol, and so far as the record discloses entirely uninformed regarding corporations, the management thereof, and the methods of ascertaining the value of the securities thereof, and in particular of corporations engaged in the operation of concessions at or in connection with public fairs. Whereas the defendant, according to the prospecti offered in evidence, had "had more than 25 years experience in the handling of international exposition concessions" covering international expositions of the world 1893-1911.

The plaintiff alleged and the trial court found that the defendant's agent, J. O. Wyatt, made the following representations and that each and all were false:

"(A) That the said Consolidated Concessions Company was a solvent corporation and was free from debt and was not indebted in any manner.

"(B) That the said Consolidated Concessions Company, a corporation owned and controlled the following concessions or places of amusement in the Panama Pacific International Exposition, which was to be opened and held in the city and county of San Francisco, in the year 1915, to wit, the Inside Inn; the Narren Palast (Palace of Amusement); the Scenario of the Creation of the World; the Scenario of Evolution of the Dreadnaughts of the United States Navy (Monitor and Merrimac); the Cyclorama of the Battle of Gettysburg.

"(C) That the said Consolidated Concessions Company had paid for all of its buildings and equipments as far as the same had been constructed and supplied for said concessions and places of amusement up to said date, and that said corporation would be financially able to fully equip and construct said concessions and places of amusement and would equip and construct the same, and that the same would be fully constructed and equipped at the time of the opening of said Panama Pacific International Exposition, and that the same would be open so as to secure the patronage of the public and would earn large profits which would be paid to the stockholders of said corporation at least twice each month during the continuance of said exposition.

"(D) That owing to the condition of stringency prevailing in financial circles it was deemed advisable to exchange the shares of said capital stock of said Consolidated Concessions Company for real estate in the state of California, and that said corporation had arranged to receive such land and have it held for the use of said corporation, and that money would be borrowed thereon by said corporation to complete the buildings and equipment for said concessions, and that plaintiff's said land would be taken in said defendant's name, in accordance with said arrangement.

"(E) That said Consolidated Concessions Company, a corporation, had an agreement that it was to pay to the Panama Pacific International Exposition 20 per cent, and no more of the gross receipts of said concessions and places of amusement respectively.

"(F) That the preferred capital stock of the Consolidated Concessions Company, a corporation, was then worth the sum of $10 per share, and that for each share of preferred stock sold a bonus of one share of the common stock of said corporation was given to the purchaser, and that the shares of preferred stock in said company were practically the same as cash at par value, and that if said plaintiff would exchange his said land for said stock, he, the said plaintiff, would be getting substantially cash for his land."

[1] 1. The plaintiff alleged and the trial court found that J. O. Wyatt was the agent of the defendant in the negotiations. The appellant contends that the finding is not supported by the evidence. True it is that the defendant and J. O. Wyatt gave testimony in effect supporting the claim now made by the appellant. However, it is equally clear that the plaintiff testified that the defendant stated to him that J. O. Wyatt was his agent and directed the plaintiff to transact the business with and through Wyatt as such agent.

[2] 2. The appellant also contends that Wyatt's representations were not shown to be within his authority. As we have just stated, there was evidence introduced to the effect that Wyatt was the sales agent of the defendant and as such he presumably had authority to talk. The appellant cites us to no authority, and we know of none, to the effect that in a case of this kind when it transpires that an agent is authorized to transact a line of business which can only be brought about by talking, that then and in that event his principal will be liable for only such portion of the words of mouth as may be authorized by the undisclosed instructions of the principal.

[3] 3. The appellant contends that there is no evidence that the Consolidated Concessions Company was insolvent or that its stock was worthless. Solvency, as a factor, is a part of finding (A), supra. However, it is only a part. If it is stricken out of the finding, the finding is not deprived of all materiality. As so deleted the finding would stand "that the said Consolidated Concessions Company was free from debt and was not indebted in any manner," and, standing alone, this would be a material fact sufficient to support an alleged false representation.

[4, 5] The attack is also, in part, an attack on finding (F), supra, in which the trial court found that the shares of stock transferred to the plaintiff were worthless. The appellant contends that there is no evidence to support the finding. However, some of the witnesses testified that the stock had no value when it was delivered to the plaintiff. Furthermore, the uncontradicted facts are that at the time of the first exchange and continuously thereafter, the Consolidated Concessions Company possessed no properties except a block of stock in each of the corporations above named; that it was indebted to McConnell on its promissory note, which was written for the sum of $500,000. It was also developed in evidence that said note is still outstanding and unpaid, at least in part; that moneys were not subsequently received. All of these facts were properly received in evidence and were doubtlessly considered by the trial court in making its findings. It is patent that the stock had no value until the promissory note was paid. However, the appellant calls attention to the amount of corporate stock in other corporations which this corporation held, and he argues that the respondent's proof did not go far enough. The respondent was in the position of introducing a prima facie case to prove the existence of a negative. When such is the burden of a party, slight evidence is sufficient. In view of all the facts of this case, we may not say that respondent's evidence was insufficient to support the finding that the stock was worthless.

[6] Although this point is addressed to the facts found in findings (A) and (F), these findings are only a part of the alleged misrepresentations. There are many others in findings (B), (C), (D), and (E). It was not necessary that the plaintiff prove every alleged false representation. "If the finding is sustained as to one material fraudulent representation, it is enough." Beeman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 280, 282, 196 P. 774, 775.

[7, 8] 4. The appellant asserts that the plaintiff did not rely upon Wyatt's statements. The plaintiff in one place testified that he would not have made the deeds if he had not believed the statements made by Wyatt and McConnell; that at the time he executed the deeds he had no independent knowledge as to the financial condition of these corporations—only that they were all paid for as far as they had gone; that that was all he knew about it; that Wyatt was the only one who gave him the information. The foregoing testimony squares with the surroundings and the location of the witness at the time the deeds were executed. It may be conceded that in another passage the same witness testified that the only representation which was made to him by Wyatt upon which he relied was that the company was to pay dollar for dollar for his stock. The conflicts in the testimony were addressed to the trial court and do not support a contention in this court that there was no evidence.

[9, 10] 5. The appellant contends that the plaintiff did not rescind promptly. In this connection appellant calls attention to the fact that one of the deeds was made on the 4th day of November, 1914, and one was made on the 12th day of December, 1914. He then calls to our attention the fact that the exposition opened on February 20, 1915. The appellant argues that therefore as early as March 6, 1915, no dividends having been paid, plaintiff knew that at least one representation (finding [C], supra), was false, and he further argues that inquiry would have demonstrated that the others were false and therefore the delay is fatal. Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 313, 75 P. 899. The argument is not convincing. The appellant is resting it on the weakest portion of the plaintiff's case, to wit, when a dividend would be paid or the amount thereof. The authority cited is clearly distinguishable in its facts. The respondent contends that he was not bound to give a notice of rescission until he was "aware of his right to rescind." Civ. Code, § 1691. In that connection he points out that on August 13, 1915, in a conversation with Mr. Cappelman, he learned the facts. The record discloses that the next day he served his notice of rescission. Every case must largely depend on its own facts. Considering, as we must, each and all of the facts with reference to each particular point, in so far as any fact throws any light whatever, we think it is patent that the notice of rescission in the instant case was not given at a date too late to be effective as a notice of rescission.

[11] In this same connection the appellant argues that the plaintiff did not rescind at all. Thereupon he cites the record to the effect that the notice of rescission was delivered into the hands of Wells Fargo & Co., with directions to serve it on the defendant at the Inside Inn; that two or three days later the express company returned the document with the information that the defendant could not be found, that nobody knew where he had gone, and that it was impossible to have the paper delivered to him. Appellant then quotes the record on several matters which the appellant knew regarding his whereabouts, but there is no showing that the respondent knew any of those facts. In view of the importance of the defendant as the creator of so much of the exposition, as is disclosed in the prospecti, and in view of the fact that during at least a part of the year 1915 the defendant resided at the Inside Inn, it is quite impossible in the absence of fraud to explain how those in authority at the Inside Inn could have truly made such statements as those that were made to Wells Fargo & Co. Furthermore, the notice of rescission was produced at the time of the trial and was offered in evidence. It was received without any objection whatever. Mr. Cowan testified that three or four days after the notice of rescission was sent that the plaintiff's suit in rescission was prepared and filed, and at the same time there was duly recorded a notice of lis pendens. Taking into consideration the entire record in this case, and assuming for the moment that the service of the notice would have been held defective if the attack had been made in time, nevertheless, we are unable to say that the record before us showed error or that the error was prejudicial.

[12, 13] 6. When each exchange was made a certificate of stock was issued in the name of the plaintiff. At the same time other certificates were issued to Wyatt, Sanborn, or Dorwood. The appellant contends that in his notice of rescission the plaintiff did not offer to return the stock so issued to Sanborn, Wyatt, and Dorwood, and therefore the offer to restore was insufficient. To this point there are several sufficient answers. The court found that as to the first exchange Wyatt proposed and the plaintiff consented to exchange certain parcels of land for 2,014 shares, of which 100 shares would be delivered to Sanborn in settlement of a claim for compensation as broker. As to the other parcel the trial court made a similar finding except that 70 shares were delivered to Sanborn. The trial court also made a finding which is very full and complete and finds that the plaintiff offered to restore everything received by him and did restore by depositing the certificates by him received with the clerk of the court for the use of the defendant. The court also found that the certificates delivered to Sanborn were for shares of stock which had no value whatever and that Sanborn destroyed them without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, but that Sanborn had conveyed his interest to the plaintiff and that such assignment had likewise been deposited in court for the use of the defendant and that the defendant had suffered no loss or damage because the certificates were destroyed. The defendant's answer and the evidence introduced by the defendant and his objections made at the trial were in effect a positive refusal under any circumstances to return the title to the lands which had been conveyed to him, and his positive refusal relieved the plaintiff from the necessity of offering to return or cancel the certificates prior to the beginning of the action. McDonald v. Pacific Debenture Co., 146 Cal. 667, 672, 80 P. 1090. Furthermore, in an action of this kind the duty to restore or to offer to restore extends to "everything of value." As stated above, the trial court found that neither the plaintiff nor Sanborn had received anything of value. It follows that there was nothing to be restored. Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. Y. 264, 273, 80 Am. Dec. 259; Martin v. Lawrence, 156 Cal. 191, 194, 103 P. 913.

7. As stated above, the plaintiff's pleadings placed his case as to each exchange on two different grounds: (1) Rescission; and (2) cancellation. All that has been said regarding the points made by the appellant does not take into consideration the second theory presented by the plaintiff's complaint. The appellant makes no attack thereon except as the same may be found in the attack on the findings (A) and (F), supra. We have shown that those attacks are not well founded. As to the second theory the trial court made findings on all allegations in favor of the plaintiff. Those findings each and all were sustained by the evidence. On that theory alone the judgment should not be disturbed.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

DELLEPIANE v. HYNES et al. (Civ. 5816.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 6, 1927.

1. Gifts ⇐30(3)—Delivery of passbook on savings account with intention of making gift of deposits is sufficient to pass title without written assignment (Civ. Code, §§ 663, 953, 1146, 1147).

Delivery of passbook on savings account, with intention of making gift of deposits represented by it, is sufficient to pass title to deposits without written assignment or order, in view of Civ. Code, § 1146, defining gift, section 663 defining personal property, section 953 defining choses in action, and section 1147 relative to verbal gifts.

2. Gifts ⇐28(2)—Delivery of passbook on savings account, containing voucher for safe-keeping of bonds, with intention of making gift of bonds, held sufficient to pass title without written assignment.

Delivery of passbook on savings account, containing voucher for safe-keeping of bonds, with intention of making gift of bonds, is sufficient to pass title without written assignment or order, where bank held bonds under agreement to deliver, on presentation of book, bonds of like amount, and withdrawals were required to be noted in passbook.

3. Appeal and error ⇐117(6)—After reversal cause must be remanded, in absence of findings supporting contrary judgment.

Where judgment must be reversed but there are no findings sufficient to support contrary judgment, cause must be returned for new trial notwithstanding that evidence covers all elements necessary to constitute such contrary judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by George Dellepiane against W. J. Hynes, administrator of the estate of Sophia Reith, deceased, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Walter S. Brann and Edgar H. Rowe, Jr., both of San Francisco (Brann, Van Duyn, Boekel & Rowe, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco (William T. Sweigert, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent Hynes.

T. E. K. Cormac and S. V. Bolles, both of San Francisco, for respondent Lourens.

J. Carfraie Birnie, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to five United States Liberty bonds valued at $4,500 held by the Bank of Italy as a depository for safe-keeping. Judgment went for the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The complaint is in the ordinary form in an action to quiet title to personal property. It alleges that on the 6th day of July, 1920, Sophia Reith and the plaintiff opened a joint savings account with the defendant Bank of Italy, numbered 126900, said account being payable to either of said depositors or to the survivor of each; that Sophia Reith died in April, 1924, and at the time of her death there was and still is on deposit in the said account in said bank Liberty bonds of the value of $4,500 and accrued and accruing interest thereon; said bonds and said interest are and were for some time prior to the death of said Sophia Reith the property of plaintiff. The answer of the Bank of Italy denies that there was at the time of the death of said Sophia Reith on deposit in any account in said Bank of Italy Liberty bonds of the value of $4,500, or in any amount, but admits that said bonds were deposited by said Sophia Reith and alleged that the deposit was made in her sole name. By way of separate defense it is alleged that there is on deposit with said bank $4,500 worth of Liberty bonds; that the plaintiff claims said bonds as the survivor of the joint savings account of said parties; and that the defendant Bank of Italy claims no right, title or interest thereto. The public administrator also denies that there is on deposit with the defendant bank to the joint account of plaintiff and Sophia Reith Liberty bonds of any value, and alleges that at the time of the death of said Sophia Reith there were and are now on deposit with said bank Liberty bonds of the value of $4,500 in an account under the sole name of said Sophia Reith. Trial was had before the court without a jury, and findings of fact and conclusions of law were made from which it appears that the trial court found, in accordance with the denials of the issues raised by the complaint, that no bonds were held by the defendant Bank of Italy in the joint savings account of the plaintiff and Sophia Reith; that the said bank had on deposit $4,500 in Liberty bonds in the sole account of Sophia Reith; and that plaintiff had no right, title, or interest in or to said bonds or any part thereof.

The facts of the case, which are not disputed, are that on July 5, 1920, Sophia Reith and the plaintiff opened a savings account with the defendant Bank of Italy payable to either or the survivor of them and received from the bank a passbook numbered 126900. Deposits and withdrawals were made from time to time from this account, and no question is now raised as to the right of plaintiff to the balance of said account. At the same time the deceased deposited in a safe deposit box at another branch of the same bank five United States Liberty bonds of the par value of $4,500. This box was in the joint names of the deceased and the plaintiff and both had access to it. Some 16 months later the depositors relinquished this box and the deceased deposited the bonds with the defendant Bank in what is termed the "safe-keeping deposit account." This deposit was made in the sole name of the deceased and was designated as "S. K. D. No. 2510 Savings Account No. 126900." At the time of this deposit a printed form of deposit slip or passbook was issued to the deceased and pasted into passbook No. 126900. This was the only form of voucher or passbook issued to cover the deposit of the Liberty bonds. It contains the rules under which the deposit is made, from which it appears that the bank undertakes to safely keep the bonds deposited, to collect the interest coupons when due, and pay the proceeds thereof into the savings account represented by the passbook to which the voucher is attached. The bank assumes no obligation other than of returning upon demand made prior to maturity United States bonds of the same issue and of the same par value as the securities deposited. It agrees, however, to secure payment from the government of the principal of the bonds upon maturity, and of the interest coupons, and to pay the same into the savings account of the depositor. The bank also reserves the right to require three days' notice for the withdrawal of any of the securities and stipulates that such notice must be noted in the passbook. In accordance with these rules the bank regularly collected the proceeds of the interest coupons and deposited these in the joint savings account No. 126900.

Sophia Reith retained possession of the passbooks and made deposits and withdrawals from the joint savings account over a long period of time and gave considerable sums of money so withdrawn to the plaintiff, who during this time was engaged to marry her and was being assisted by her in operating a grocery store. Three days before she died, and while critically ill in a hospital in San Francisco, she called the plaintiff to her bedside and asked him to hand her her purse, from which she removed the passbook covering the joint account of the plaintiff and herself and to which the voucher covering the deposit of the bonds was attached. She then handed this book to the plaintiff and said, "Take this book; it is yours." Immediately following her death demand was made upon the bank in behalf of the plaintiff for delivery of the bonds, but the bank refused to make delivery and now agrees to deliver the bonds in accordance with any final judgment determining the question of their ownership.

As we have said, the evidence is all without contradiction. It is true that the evidence of the manual delivery of the book to the plaintiff is found in the testimony of the plaintiff alone. This delivery took place in the presence of the plaintiff and the donor, no one else being present. His testimony of what occurred is not controverted, however, and is not impeached by any competent or relevant testimony. The only attack upon this testimony by the respondents is based upon conjectures and unjustifiable innuendoes which are founded upon statements of counsel and are unsupported by any competent testimony. Though the trial court was not called upon to find upon the specific question of the manual delivery of the passbook and the donative words accompanying it, we are satisfied from the review of the entire record that if a finding had been made it would necessarily have been in accordance with the testimony of the plaintiff. We must, however, in view of the record, take it as a fact proved that the passbook was actually delivered to the appellant with the intention on the part of the donor to transmute everything of value that it called for.

[1] The question next arises whether the delivery of the passbook was a sufficient delivery of the right to the bonds on deposit within the terms of section 1147, Civil Code. This section reads:

"A verbal gift is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee."

In view of the peculiar nature of the deposit it is manifest that the bonds which were deposited by the deceased in November, 1921, were not capable of actual delivery to the appellant in April, 1924. These bonds were held by the bank under a special form of deposit which called for their safe-keeping and the delivery upon demand of bonds of the same issue and par value. It was not a bailment or deposit such as would be made in a safe deposit box where the identical bonds deposited must be returned. It was necessary, therefore, for the appellant to show that by the delivery of the passbook he was given "the means of obtaining the possession and control" of the bonds which the bank held on deposit or of bonds of a similar character and value which the bank had agreed to deliver on demand.

A gift is defined by section 1146, Civil Code, as "a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." Personal property is defined by section 663 of the same Code as "every kind of property that is not real." Within this definition are included choses in action, which are defined by section 953 of the same Code as "a right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding." The universal rule is that a chose in action which creates a liability against a third person and which is in writing is the subject of a gift causa mortis by mere delivery. In 28 C. J. p. 699, it is said that this rule has been applied to promissory notes, bonds, bills of exchange, savings bank books, certificates of deposits, or deposit notes and insurance policies. It is also the general rule that where a chose in action is not evidenced by a note or other instrument in writing which can be delivered, but is merely a claim against a third person which must be established by parol, a written assignment of the demand by the donor is necessary to complete delivery. Id., and see Adams v. Merced Stone Co., 176 Cal. 415, 419, 178 P. 498, 3 A. L. R. 928; O'Shea v. Sicotte, 52 Cal. App. 331, 334, 198 P. 812. It is an equally well-settled rule that delivery of a savings bank passbook is a valid gift of the money deposited because such book is the record of the depositor's account and its production authorizes control of the deposit. 28 C. J. 702, and cases cited.

In stating that this rule is well established we should not be understood as implying that it has always been so. In 1819 the Court of King's Bench in the case of Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & Ald. 551, 552, said: "In order to transfer property by gift there must either be a deed or instrument of gift, or there must be an actual delivery of the thing to the donee." That case was cited and approved by the Supreme Court of New York in 1858 in the case entitled Huntington v. Gilmore, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 243. In 1806 the question coming before Chancellor Kent as Chief Justice, in the case entitled Noble v. Smith, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 52, 56 (3 Am. Dec. 399), the learned jurist said:

"Here was not even an attempt at a symbolical delivery, and giving the testimony the strongest possible construction, in favor of the defendants, it amounted to nothing more than saying, I give, without any act to enforce it. A mere symbolical delivery would not, I apprehend, have been sufficient. The cases in which the delivery of a symbol has been held sufficient to perfect the gift, were those in which it was considered as equivalent to actual delivery, as the delivery of a key of a trunk, of a room or warehouse, which was the true and effectual way of obtaining the use and command of the subject."

Later Chancellor Kent wrote his Commentaries, and in volume 2, p. 439, he cited the Irons Case as stating the law. In Hunter v. Hunter, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 631, 635, the court cites with approval from 2 Kent's Commentaries, 439. In Woodruff v. Cook, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 505, 512, the court cites with approval the foregoing authorities. In a note to section 1147 of the Civil Code the commissioners stated specifically that they are stating the rule as contained in the foregoing authorities and that they are not stating the rule in some of the later authorities in England. The rule of the Irons Case has been criticized by many of the later authorities as being far too broad, particularly as it barred every form of "symbolical" delivery where the "thing" itself was not capable of manual delivery. Though the case was controlling in the common-law states, it cannot be taken as expressing the rule of those code states where symbolical delivery is expressly permitted.

Section 1147 of our Civil Code was enacted in 1872, based upon Field's Draft of the New York Civil Code, § 501. Our courts have not been called upon to pass on the specific question of the effect of a delivery of a savings account passbook, and our attention has not been directed to any California cases which depart from the rule that, where the chose in action is evidenced by a writing, a delivery, without assignment, is sufficient. Respondents cite Bryson v. Security Trust, etc., Bank, 29 Cal. App. 596, 156 P. 987, to the point that great danger might lie to the depositor if the bank should carelessly pay out upon the production of the passbook without first satisfying itself that the holder was legally entitled. The rule of that case was based entirely upon Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 4 N. E. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 653, and though it is not important here, as it does not in any way criticize or depart from the rule for which appellant contends, it is interesting to note that the Smith Case does not state the prevailing rule in New York, but that the rule of that jurisdiction is found in the later case of Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572, 577, 28 N. E. 627, 11 L. R. A. 684, 21 Am. St. Rep. 758. In the latter case the decedent, who was about to enter a hospital for an operation, delivered to the plaintiff a tin box containing 16 passbooks covering deposits in an equal number of savings banks, with no other donative declaration than that he gave him the box and its contents. In holding that a gift was made to the plaintiff of the entire deposits the court said:

"The gift was consummated by the delivery of the books, and no other formality was needed to constitute the actual delivery of the bank deposit needful to vest the possession and title in the donee. In savings banks in this state such deposit books are issued as evidence of the indebtedness of the banks. * * * It answers the same purpose in the case of a savings bank that is answered by a certificate of deposit in the case of other banks."

In Pierce v. Boston Sav. Bank, 129 Mass. 425, 432 (37 Am. Rep. 371), it was said that "the book is the instrument by which alone the money can be obtained, and its possession is thus some evidence of title." In the same case it was said that the savings bank passbook is the depositor's voucher for the amount held on deposit by the bank and is the only security he has as evidence of the debt. It is upon the theory that the passbook is written evidence of the obligation of the bank that it is placed within the same class as promissory notes, bills of exchange, bonds, mortgages, certificates of deposits and like other written evidences of indebtedness. Thus it is said in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 3, § 1148, that the rule is well established that choses in action of the character just mentioned, including savings bank, passbooks may pass by delivery and become the subject of a valid gift. Thornton on Gifts and Advancements, § 273, says that "any written obligation is the subject of gift without indorsement or assignment." The rule stated is in harmony with the provisions of section 1147, Civil Code, which requires in the case of an oral gift that "the means of obtaining possession and control" of the subject of the gift must be given to the donee. It may be stated generally then that the rule is that where a chose in action is not evidenced by a written instrument the only means of obtaining control over it and hence the only means of making a valid gift is by an assignment in writing or some act equivalent thereto. Adams v. Merced Stone Co., supra. But where the chose in action is evidenced by a writing sufficient to represent the indebtedness it may be the subject of a gift without indorsement or assignment.

A case in point is Snidow v. Brotherton, 140 Va. 187, 124 S. E. 182, 40 A. L. R. 1246. There a laborer, who was fatally injured in the course of his employment, delivered to the superintendent of the company by which he was employed a key to his trunk, which was located in his room some distance away, with instructions to the superintendent that in his trunk would be found his savings bank book, United States war savings stamps and receipts for Liberty bonds which he wished the superintendent to procure and deliver to Anna Brotherton. He died a few hours later, and upon an examination of his trunk the superintendent found the passbook, showing $1,372 on deposit in a savings bank, $240 in United States war savings stamps, and a receipt from the bank for United States Liberty bonds of the value of $500 held by the bank for safe-keeping. The Virginia court held that the delivery of the savings bank passbook constituted a valid delivery of the money on deposit, and therein drew the distinction between a passbook upon a savings account and a passbook upon a general deposit account. See, also, Thomas' Administrator v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848. As to the war savings stamps, the court held that the validity of the transfer could not be questioned, as all the elements of a gift were present. As to the bonds held by the bank, it was said that the receipt of the bank of its obligation to return a like amount of bonds of the same issue on demand was sufficient evidence of title and that the delivery of the receipt was equivalent to the delivery of the bonds themselves. In an exhaustive note in 40 A. L. R. at page 1249 cases are cited showing the universal rule to be that the delivery of the passbook in a savings account with donative intent is a valid gift of the moneys on deposit. The rule of the cases cited is based upon the theory that the passbook is the written evidence of the chose in action which the depositor holds against the bank for payment of the moneys on deposit. They are all in accord with the general rule that a chose in action evidenced by a writing may be the subject of an oral gift without assignment or other writing, and that it is only when the chose in action is not in writing, such as an unliquidated account (Adams v. Merced Stone Co., 176 Cal. 415, 178 P. 498, 3 A. L. R. 928), that a written assignment or order is necessary to complete the gift.

These cases are in full accord with Mellor v. Bank of Willows, 173 Cal. 454, 160 P. 567. That case involved the validity of a gift of certificates of deposit in a commercial account without the indorsement of the depositor. The Supreme Court there held that the gift was complete notwithstanding the failure to indorse the certificates of deposit, upon the general rule applying to choses in action evidenced by writing to which we have heretofore adverted, and (page 461, 160 P. 570) says:

"In this state it has been well settled that 'negotiable paper payable to order is the subject of a donatio causa mortis, even though it is not indorsed by the payee.' Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 P. 821. This rule has been applied to a promissory note (Druke v. Heiken, 61 Cal. 346, 44 Am. Rep. 553), United States bonds (Vandor v. Roach [73 Cal. 614, 15 P. 354], supra), and bills of exchange (Edwards v. Wagner, supra). It applies with equal force to a certificate of deposit, payable to order, when transferred as a gift causa mortis."

The great weight of authority is, therefore, that the delivery of a passbook upon a savings account with the intention of making a gift of the deposits represented by the book is sufficient to pass title to the deposits without a written assignment or order. The authorities are not agreed as to the sufficiency of the transfer where the rules of the bank under which the deposit has been made require a written order upon the bank in addition to the presentation of the passbook. In Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572, 578, 26 N. E. 627, 11 L. R. A. 684, 21 Am. St. Rep. 758, the New York court held that the rights of the donee were not affected by a by-law of the bank requiring a written order of the depositor when some one other than the depositor seeks to draw the money. It was pointed out that the depositor could draw the money without making an order simply by the presentation of the passbook, and that this right was one which could be transferred to any legal owner of the passbook. The effect of the decision is that the passbook is in itself the evidence of the obligation of the bank and that the question as to the ownership of the book was one to be determined by competent evidence. That the donee of the passbook had the same right to enforce payment as the donee of any nonnegotiable chose in action, certificate of deposit, or unindorsed note. In such a case he may be called upon to prove his ownership, but this goes only to a question of evidence of title and not to the substantial right of the parties. Putting it in another way, if a party has come into possession of a passbook by purchase or gift a written order or assignment would merely be evidence of the right and not the means of enforcing the right. Such is the rule in New York, but it is not necessary for us to go that far, because the passbook covering the deposit of the bonds in suit did not require a written order or assignment of any character.

[2] While no authorities of this state have been called to our attention relating to a passbook or voucher for the safe-keeping of bonds such as we have here, we can see no distinction between such a book and one issued by a savings bank for the safe-keeping of money. In both cases the bank agrees to pay out or deliver on presentation of the book, not the money or bonds which were deposited, but money and bonds of like amount, and in both cases the rules of the bank provide that withdrawals of either the bonds or the money must be noted in the proper passbook. In the rules of the bank governing the deposit of the bonds the voucher issued to the decedent is treated throughout as a passbook of a character similar to the passbook issued for the savings account. In the savings account passbook, which is included in the record, printed notice is given to the depositor that no money will be paid out from the account without the passbook and that no transfer of the passbook shall be valid until actually made in the books of the bank. In the statement of the terms and conditions governing the savings account no instructions are made as to the transfer of the passbook, but it is provided that all deposits may be withdrawn only as provided in the by-laws of the bank and upon presentation of the passbook. However, in the printed rules covering the deposit of the bonds for safe-keeping no limitation is made upon the transfer of the passbook, and it is not required that written notice for the withdrawal of the bonds must be given to the bank, but merely that the bank reserves the right to require three days' notice of such withdrawal. As between the passbook covering the bonds and the passbook for the savings account, the principal difference is that the bonds will be delivered on presentation of the book alone, while in the savings account a written order by the depositor is required in addition to the passbook when presented by one other than the depositor. A bankbook covering an ordinary commercial account differs from both of these passbooks in that payment is not made on presentation of the book, but is made on a check against the account only. Thus the transfer of a commercial account book does not give any power of possession or control of the money in the general account. On the other hand, this voucher, or passbook, covering the bond account, contains a receipt on the part of the bank of the bonds therein listed and is accordingly evidence of the obligation of the bank to return bonds of a like issue and amount to the depositor on demand. This obligation of the bank is, therefore, a chose in action running to the depositor evidenced by the writing and as such was the subject of a gift from her to the donee. It is of little importance that before the bank would feel safe in delivering the bonds to the donee it would require proof of the legal ownership of the book by him. As we have said that is merely a matter of evidence and not a matter of right. Thus when the depositor delivered the passbook to the appellant she placed in his hands the means of obtaining the dominion and control of the bonds which she had deposited with the bank or of bonds of like character and amount.

It was not, as argued by respondents, the chose in action between the United States government and the decedent to pay the bonds at their maturity which she attempted to transfer to the appellant, but the chose in action which was transferred by the gift was that represented by the passbook, to-wit, the right of the depositors to demand and receive from the bank bonds of like issue and amount to those deposited. This chose of action was represented in writing by the passbook and the entries therein and, inasmuch as the bonds themselves were not capable of actual delivery, the depositor complied with all the terms of section 1147, Civil Code, when she delivered to the appellant the passbook which was "the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing" given.

We have intentionally refrained from entering into a discussion of the distinctions drawn between a gift causa mortis and one inter vivos, because to do so would extend the opinion beyond reasonable limits. In view of the serious illness of the donor in this case and her death resulting from that illness within three days thereafter, it may be presumed that the gift was one causa mortis. But the question is wholly immaterial, because if the gift was a good one as a donatio causa mortis (and as we have seen from the authorities such must be the conclusion), it was certainly good as a gift inter vivos.

[3] The evidence covers all the elements necessary to constitute a completed gift of the bonds in suit, and if a finding had been made on that specific issue it would have required a judgment for the appellant, but inasmuch as there are no findings of fact which would support a contrary judgment, the cause must be returned for a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

POETKER v. DYCK. (Civ. 4571.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 14, 1927.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨21—Writings showing intention to have contract prepared in future filed in escrow held not to constitute land sale contract.

In action to recover money paid during negotiations for purchase of land, writings not describing land and showing intention to have contract prepared by bank following indefinite and uncertain suggestions by parties, which was never done, signed by plaintiff and defendant and filed in escrow, held not to constitute contract for sale of land.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—In action to recover money paid for land, admitting testimony that plaintiff had received nothing for money and compelling defendant to answer that plaintiff had received nothing held harmless under record.

In action to recover money paid for land where writings filed by party in escrow did not constitute contract, permitting plaintiff to testify over defendant's objection that he received nothing of value for money, and on cross-examination, compelling defendant to answer that plaintiff received nothing, was harmless, since answers only confirmed what was manifest on face of entire record.

3. Evidence ⇨413—Testimony as to agreement that check would be placed with escrow papers held not to vary written instrument.

In action to recover money paid in negotiations for purchase of land, where writings filed in escrow which did not constitute contract failed to disclose what parties intended with regard to such payment, permitting plaintiff to testify that at time check was deposited it was agreed defendant would place it with escrow papers was not error as attempt to vary terms of written instrument by parol.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨334(1)—Where purchaser obtained nothing for down money and no land sale contract was made judgment for its return was proper.

In action by purchaser to recover money paid in negotiations for purchase of land, where writings by parties filed in escrow did not constitute contract and plaintiff received no consideration, judgment for its return was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by J. D. Poetker against P. R. Dyck. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. Borton, of Bakersfield, for appellant. Mark H. Edwards, of Reedley, and Andrew R. Schottky, of Merced, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,000 paid by the plaintiff to defendant during the pendency of negotiations for the purchase and sale of a tract of land in Fresno county. Judgment went for plaintiff in the trial court, and defendant appeals. The record discloses that the title to the tract of land involved in this litigation was vested in one Beshaw, subject to a mortgage of $7,000; that there was an agreement by Beshaw to convey to one Wickstrom, who in turn had agreed to convey to the defendant; a crop contract with the California Raisin Association and a renewal option, which together covered a period of six years.

[1] The plaintiff, after having been shown the property by a real estate agent, went to the defendant and as a result of their negotiations the following writings were signed:

"Shafter, California, Nov. 12, 20. First National Bank, Reedley, Cal. Gentlemen: Inclosed please find two insurance policies and some temporary escrow instructions by which you may be guided when Mr. Poetker calls at your bank. Thanking you in advance for the courtesy, I remain, Yours very truly, P. R. Dyck."

"Shafter, Nov. 12, 1920. Escrow Instructions. If J. D. Poetker can assume the balance of my equity of $4,000.00, I will allow accrued interest from Dec. 1st, 1919 to Nov. 12, 1920, which is $1,064.02, leaving $2,935.08, amount due me in addition to $6,000.00, first payment. In this event, Mr. Poetker will assume the contract I made with Radish and Miljarak. P. R. Dyck, J. D. Poetker."

"Escrow Instructions. Purchase Price $26,000.00—Cash to be paid $6,000.00—Accept receipt held by J. D. Poetker for $1,000.00 as part of said $6,000.00 cash payment. Date of contract November 12th, 1920. Terms: $3,000.00 including Interest to be paid Nov. 12, 1921, and Nov. 12th, 1922. After that $3,500.00 per year. Seller pays 1st half of 1920-21 taxes. Prorate insurance. Pay Hagan & Anderson $1,000.00 commission. Seller pays water tax for 1920. Two horses, harness, harrow, cultivator, 2 plows and 50 sweet boxes and hay in the barn go with the place. Write new contract showing that J. D. Poetker assumes contract dated Dec. 1, 1919, between P. R. Dyck and Radish & Miljarak and that he will make payments direct to said Radish & Miljarak beginning 1921. Payments to be $2,500.00 to Radish & Miljarak; $500.00 to P. R. Dyck, $1,000.00 from 1923. P. R. Dyck, J. D. Poetker."

"Escrow Instructions. 2,600.00 total purchase price. 6,000.00 cash—20,000.00—terms—Pay 2,500.00 less $6.00 due me from Miljarak, on contract to Radish & Miljarak, show on new contract amount due on former contract and that $2,500.00 will be paid thereon by Mr. Poetker & 500.00 on my balance for 2 years after that $1,000.00 per year. Show exact amount due R & M & amount due P. R. Dyck on new contract. Have R & M bring abstract to time of their contract, I will bring same to Nov. 12, 1920—date of this contract. Give possession of farm as soon as papers are signed, and of house as soon as tenant vacates, not later than Dec. 15, 1920. Date new Nov. 12, 1920. Nov. 17, 1920. P. R. Dyck, J. D. Poetker."

On December 6th the defendant wrote to the assistant cashier of the First National Bank with whom all the papers were deposited as escrowee as follows:

"* * * Would you be so kind and meet me at your house or some place that you choose to designate next Saturday night at 8 p. m. or near that time, where I might also meet J. D. Poetker, in order that I may finish the deal, or rather have the contract started for the deal that was made by us some time ago. I shall surely make it right with you. * * *"

These documents were identified by the assistant cashier above referred to, who testified that he did not receive any other or further communications in this matter prior to May 11, 1921, this being the date upon which the plaintiff demanded the return of the $1,000 here involved, and that he did not do anything in the matter either as agent of the defendant or the plaintiff and did not have any conversation with the parties when together with reference to the matter. At the time of the signing of the first document above referred to, plaintiff gave to defendant a check for $1,000, which defendant contends was first payment on the purchase price, but plaintiff claims that the defendant agreed to forthwith deposit this check in the bank in escrow. However, whatever may have been the understanding, the defendant cashed the check and appropriated the money to his own use. It is manifest from the foregoing that there never was and never has been any meeting of the minds or any contract between these parties. Nowhere does there appear any description of the lands to be conveyed. It is apparent throughout the memoranda that it was their purpose and intent to have a contract prepared by the bank following certain indefinite and uncertain suggestions by the parties for the signature of both of the parties to the deal. This was never done. One of the memorandums recites that an abstract is to be prepared and plaintiff let into the possession of the property not later than December 15, 1920. No abstract was ever submitted to him, and he testifies, and there is no contradiction, that he inquired on the 15th day of December of the escrowee with regard to the abstract and was informed that it had not been delivered. The other evidence positively shows that the abstract was mailed on the 18th day of December to the escrowee, but that it was never presented to or called to the attention of the plaintiff. In his brief the defendant admits that the writings are undoubtedly incomplete, in which conclusion we readily concur.

In these writings it is difficult to find where the defendant has expressly agreed to do any single act. The most that can be said of this so-called contract is that it was a fruitless effort of laymen to perform services requiring the exercise of professional skill, with the inevitable result of making business for lawyers, trouble for courts, and burdensome outlays for the parties.

On the 11th of May, 1921, six months after depositing the writings with the bank, the plaintiff, through his attorney, in a letter bristling with criminal charges and closely verging on extortion, demanded a return of the money, which, being refused, this litigation resulted.

[2-4] The errors relied upon for a reversal relate entirely to the admission of certain testimony over the objection of the defendant. The court permitted the plaintiff to testify over the objection of defendant that he had received nothing of value from the defendant for the $1,000. On cross-examination, under the same conditions, the defendant was compelled to answer that the plaintiff had received nothing. If these questions were objectionable no harm was done, as the answers simply confirmed what was manifest and apparent on the face of the entire record. The court permitted the plaintiff to testify that it was agreed between the parties that at the time the $1,000 check was deposited, he, the defendant, would immediately place said check with the escrow papers in the bank. It is the defendant's contention that this is an attempt to vary the terms of a written instrument by parol. An examination of the writings fails to disclose just what disposition the parties intended with regard to this payment, and we are satisfied that the circumstances and statements surrounding the transaction were not erroneously admitted. Furthermore under all the circumstances developed in the case, it seems to us that the question as to where the custody of this fund should be or remain was entirely immaterial, the real issue being as to whether there ever was a contract and as to whether there was any consideration running to the plaintiff for the payment of this money. As to both of these issues, the holding of the trial court was adverse to appellant, and this conclusion is in full accord with our views in the matter.

The judgment is affirmed.

KOEHLER v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF CORONADO et al. (Civ. 5504.)District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 7, 1927.1. Pleading ⚡8(1)—Conclusions of law are disregarded.

Conclusions of law in pleading are disregarded.

2. Appeal and error ⚡761—Special demurrer to petition for mandamus for uncertainties, ambiguities, and unintelligibilities need not be considered, in absence of supporting argument.

Court need not pass on special demurrer attacking petition for writ of mandate for alleged uncertainties, ambiguities, and unintelligibilities, where no argument is presented to support specification, and but one authority, which goes to merits of general demurrer.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡159(1)—Clerk's certificate under recall election laws is not final on fraud in verification, forgery, nor where clerk failed to perform duty (St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 128).

Certificate of city clerk under laws relating to recall elections is final as to matters properly comprehended by correct performance of duty, but not final if there has been failure to perform duty, and not final on question of fraud by verification deputy, nor as to forgery, in view of St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 128.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡159(1)—Certificate of clerk, comparing names on recall petition with printed indices, instead of original affidavits of registration, held insufficient (Pol. Code, §§ 1083a, 1096, 1115).

In proceeding for recall election, certificate of city clerk, who compared names on petition with printed indices provided for by Pol. Code, § 1115, furnished by county clerk, rather than original affidavits of registration, held ineffective to warrant mandamus to compel calling of election, in view of St. 1913, pp. 1379-1388, and Pol. Code, §§ 1083a, 1096.

Application by H. W. Koehler for a writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Board of Trustees of the City of Coronado and others, commanding them to call a special election. Writ denied.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for petitioner.

J. C. Hizar, of San Diego, for respondents Humphrey J. Stewart, George H. Holmes, and Fellows Jones.

THOMPSON, J. [1, 2] This original proceeding by a qualified elector of the city of Coronado is brought to secure a writ of mandate directed to the trustees of that city, compelling them to call a special election for the purpose of determining whether the following trustees: Humphrey J. Stewart, George Holmes, Fellows Jones, J. E. Alcaez, and Margarethe MacMullen—should be recalled and their successors elected. Since the filing of the recall petition making these demands, however, J. E. Alcaez has resigned as trustee and one Frank L. Wilson has been appointed in his stead, and George Holmes has died and Captain Wm. M. Crose has been elected in his stead, also the respondent Margarethe MacMullen failed to join with her cotrustees in either the answer, the demurrer, or the motion to strike, filed in response to the petition and the alternative writ. So far as the motion to strike is concerned, it relates to various conclusions of law, and is submitted by respondents with the statement that a reading of the complaint is sufficient to show that they have no place in the complaint. When no more cogent reason is assigned for their detrimental effect, it is enough in a proceeding of this character to say that conclusions of law in a pleading are disregarded. Nor are we called upon to pass upon the special demurrer which attacks the petition for alleged uncertainties, ambiguities, and unintelligibilities. No argument is presented to support the specification, and but one authority, which goes to the merits of the general demurrer.

The answer to the petition having raised issues of fact, a referee was appointed to try the issues and make his findings, from which, together with the pleadings, it appears that on October 18, 1926, a recall petition was first filed in this present situation, but was apparently abandoned. A second petition, the one here involved, was circulated, and filed on October 21, 1926. The city clerk compared the names on the petition with the printed indices furnished by the county clerk and not with the original affidavits of registration and attached to the petition his certificate as follows:

"I, W. Tilden Clark, city clerk of the city of Coronado, state of California, do hereby certify: That I am the regularly elected, duly qualified, and acting city clerk of the said city of Coronado, state of California. That on the 21st day of October, A. D. 1926, there was filed in my office a petition demanding the recall of and election of successors to the following named members of the board of trustees of the city of Coronado, to wit: Humphrey J. Stewart, George Holmes, Fellows Jones, A. E. Alcaez, and Margarethe F. MacMullen. That said petition contains the names of more than 25 per cent. of the entire vote cast at the last preceding municipal elections at which such officers were respectively voted for. That, in ascertaining such percentage, I have counted only the names of duly qualified electors of said city. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of my office the day and year in this certificate first above written, to wit, the 21st day of October, A. D. 1926. [Seal.] W. Tilden Clark, City Clerk of the City of Coronado, State of California."

[3] The first consideration relates to the matter of the certificate and whether it is conclusive of the matters therein recited. The petitioner contends that it is final and conclusive. The respondents assert that it may be attacked on the grounds of fraud—which fraud may consist of failure on the part of the clerk to perform his legal duty or of the acts of the verification deputy in certifying that he saw each signature appended when in fact three or four signatures were written out of his presence, or of the forging of some of the names to the petition or of making additions to some of the signatures. It has been held that the duty performed by the city clerk, under the general laws relating to recall elections (Stats. [Ex. Sess.] 1911, p. 128), is not judicial but ministerial. Ratto v. Board of Supervisors (Cal. App.) 243 P. 466; Wright v. Engram, 186 Cal. 659, 201 P. 788. Such ruling is not necessarily determinative of the entire question. It is stated in Ratto v. Board of Supervisors, supra, that the certificate of the clerk is final, although the duty performed is not judicial, and yet it will be observed that in that opinion the court referred questions to the superior court for findings, the purpose of which could only be to determine the correctness of the clerk's certificate. The trustees are vested with no discretion to review the action of the clerk; their duty being to call the election upon submission to them of the petition in due form with the clerk's certificate. Ratto v. Board of Supervisors, supra; Laam v. McLaren, 28 Cal. App. 632-639, 153 P. 985. In the sense, then, that the certificate conclusively establishes those things which it is the duty of the clerk to do, the certificate is final and not subject to revision by the trustees. This does not mean, however, that the certificate is final as to those things which it is not the duty of the clerk to do, nor it is final if the clerk has failed to perform his duty. It has been held in a mandamus proceeding that the duty of the trustees does not compel them to call an election where the petition is legally insufficient (Sidler v. City Council of Bakersfield, 43 Cal. App. 352, 185 P. 194), and in Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 173 P. 183, it is said:

"As to all matters comprehended within the proper scope of the examination thus committed to the clerk, his decision thereon is final."

And, speaking of forgery of signatures and unauthorized additions thereto, the court says:

"They are not matters which could become apparent to the clerk in the course of his inspection of the petition or his examination of the great register, and would not be included in the matters passed upon by him in the determination made by him concerning the sufficiency of the petition."

And, as a further indication that the failure of the clerk to perform his duties or the misconduct of the clerk might be the proper subject of inquiry, the court says:

"The superior court has not before it in the injunction case any charge of fraud or willful misconduct upon the part of the city clerk of the city of Watts."

We are of the opinion that the certificate of the clerk is final as to all matters properly comprehended by a correct performance of his duties, but that it is not final if there has been a failure on his part to perform his duty nor is it a final determination upon the question of fraud committed by the verification deputies in certifying that signatures were appended in their presence when, in fact, they were not. Nor as to the forgery of names which might not be apparent by an inspection of the records of registration, nor as to additions made to signatures of a descriptive nature which would not be evident by a comparison with the records of registration. The referee has found that the name of Mrs. B. H. Lyons was not signed in the presence of the verification deputy, Jack R. Alcarez, and from what has been said that signature should not be counted with respect to the finding of the referee that there were three names which were duplicated, and at least three names which should be deducted by reason of nonregistration. It is sufficient to say that the city clerk, upon making a proper examination of the records of registration, will undoubtedly not count those who have not registered and those which have been duplicated.

This conclusion brings us to the next subject to inquiry, to wit, whether or not the city clerk has failed to perform the legal duty incumbent upon him. The section of the "act to provide for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns," supra, defining the duty of the clerk, is as follows:

"Within ten days from the date of filing such petition, the clerk shall examine and from the records of registration ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, and he shall attach to said petition his certificate showing the result of said examination."

It will be noted that the language here used differs from the words employed in the Direct Primary Law of 1913 (Laws 1913, c. 690, pp. 1379-1388), in this, that the Direct Primary Law requires the sufficiency of nominating petitions to be determined by the county clerk or registrar of voters who "shall examine all nomination papers herein provided for which purport to have been signed by electors of his county or city and county, and shall disregard and mark 'not sufficient' any name appearing on such paper or papers which does not appear in the same handwriting on an affidavit of registration (italics, ours) in his office" made on or before the date on which such name was signed. It differs also in the same regard from the provisions of section 1083a of the Political Code, a portion of which reads as follows:

"Wherever, by the Constitution or laws of this state, the county clerk or registrar of voters is required to determine from the records of registration what number of qualified electors have signed such petition or paper, he shall determine that fact with respect to the purported signature of any person from the affidavit of registration, and records relating thereto, current and in effect at the date of such signing of such petition or paper."

[4] It will be further noted that one of the requisites to constitute a person a qualified elector by the provisions of section 1083 of the Political Code is that he shall have conformed to the law governing the registration of voters. And by the provisions of section 1096 of the Political Code the registrant is required to give certain facts of identification, such, for example, as his "place of residence * * * with sufficient particularity to identify the same," his occupation, his height, and his nativity. The printed indices are those indices provided for by section 1115 of the Political Code, in which it is made the duty of the county clerk to prepare an index of each registration book, which index is to contain the names, occupations, and addresses of the registered voters. It is manifest that by the provisions of the law applicable to the nomination of elective officials and the recall of state and county officers, that the county clerk or the registrar should by comparison investigate, identify, and verify the persons and signatures of the purported signers, and that the requirement that signers of petitions should give the information concerning their occupations and addresses was intended as an aid to him in the verification and identification of their persons and signatures. It is said in Conn v. City Council, 17 Cal. App. 714, 121 P. 718, with respect to a charter provision of the city of Richmond, as follows:

"The charter provision, requiring the signer to give his residence by street and number manifestly was intended solely for the purpose of facilitating the work of the clerk in investigating, identifying, and verifying the persons and signatures of the purported signers of the recall petitions. * * *"

If this be the manifest intention of the general law, it is impossible to conceive that the Legislature did not intend by their use of the words "records of registration" to impose upon the city clerk under the act here in question the same responsibility and to require him to investigate, identify, and verify the persons and signatures of the signers of the petition. It would be impossible for him to determine a palpable and flagrant forgery from his examination of the printed indices. It would be impossible for him to verify the signature of a purported signer from the printed index. It will be observed that the law requires him to ascertain whether the petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified voters. If we were to hold that his duty is performed by an examination of the printed indices, the electors of the city would have no assurance of the authenticity of the signatures, and it would be possible for one person to secure a copy of the printed index and write all of the names with their occupations and addresses. It is quite clear, therefore, that the reference to records of registration refers to the affidavits of registration and not to the printed index. From what has been said, the result must be that the clerk has failed to comply with the law, and his certificate is ineffective for any purpose, and the petition for the writ of mandate in this proceeding must be denied.

Exceptions were taken by the respondents to the finding of the referee that the city of Coronado had not used all of the available funds for calling special elections during the year 1926, and to the ruling of the referee which the respondents say prevented them from proving misrepresentation. The view which we entertain renders it unnecessary for us to discuss the matter further, and we cannot see how they might arise again in this proceeding.

BOND INV. CO. v. BLAKELEY. (Civ. 3282.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 9, 1927.

1. Fixtures $\S$ 35(2)—Burden is on one seeking removal of property, affixed to another's land, to show permission to remove it (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1013).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1013, burden is on one seeking removal of property, actually affixed to another's land, to show that it was placed there with permission to remove it, as presumption otherwise would be that it belongs to owner of realty.

2. Fixtures $\S$ 1—Whether buildings were annexed to or imbedded in soil, adapted to intended use of land, and intended to become permanent fixtures, must be considered in determining whether they are permanent fixtures (Civ. Code, $\S$ 660).

In determining whether buildings are permanent fixtures on land, within Civ. Code, $\S$ 660, it must be considered whether structures were annexed to or imbedded in, soil, adapted to purpose for which property on which located was intended to be used, and intended to become permanent fixtures when constructed.

3. Fixtures ⚡1—Whether buildings are fixtures depends on particular facts of each case.

Whether buildings are permanent fixtures on land must be determined on particular facts of each case.

4. Fixtures ⚡1—Manner of construction and character and value of building, its adaptability to uses of land and expressed intent as to permanency, should be considered in determining whether it is "fixture."

In determining whether building is permanent "fixture" on land, entire manner of its construction, its character, value, and adaptability to purposes for which land is used, and expressed intent as to whether or not it was to become permanent, should be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fixture.]

5. Fixtures ⚡1—Declarations of landowner and constructor of improvements do not necessarily determine whether buildings are fixtures.

Bare declarations of owner of land and constructor of improvements thereon do not necessarily control in determining whether buildings are fixtures, but all facts, circumstances, conditions, and declarations should be considered.

6. Fixtures ⚡7—Buildings are not temporary, rather than fixtures, because constructed on mudsills.

Buildings are not merely temporary, because constructed on mudsills; foundations not being conclusive in determining whether they are fixtures or not.

7. Fixtures ⚡7—That mudsills or timbers supporting house rest on surface of soil, without disturbing earth, is not conclusive that it is not fixture.

That mudsills or timbers, on which house is constructed, rest on surface of soil without disturbing earth, is not conclusive in determining whether structure is fixture or not.

8. Fixtures ⚡27(1)—Whether landowner consented to removal of buildings must be determined from particular facts and circumstances.

Whether consent to removal of buildings was granted by owner of land must be determined from all facts and circumstances of particular case.

9. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Judgment on findings, supported by substantial evidence, should be affirmed.

Judgment on findings, supported by substantial evidence in record, should be affirmed.

10. Fixtures ⚡35(2)—Evidence held to support findings that buildings were affixed to soil, not temporary structures, erected with landowner's consent to remove them at will.

In action to enjoin removal of buildings from land, evidence held sufficient to support trial court's findings that buildings were affixed to, and integral part of, soil, not temporary structures, erected with landowner's consent to remove them at will.

11. Fixtures ⚡5—House built on father's land with his permission, by son for latter's use, with expectation of becoming owner of land, becomes irremovable part of realty.

House erected, with landowner's permission, by his son, for latter's own use, with expectation of eventually becoming owner of land, becomes part of realty, and cannot be removed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by the Bond Investment Company against Floyd F. Blakeley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clark Clement, of Lemoore, for appellant.
John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree finding that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of 650 acres of land in Kings county, together with a certain dwelling house and machine shed, and restraining the removal of said buildings.

Appellant claims that, as a mere licensee, he constructed these buildings in question, with the express consent of the owner of the land for him to remove them at will, and asserts that there is no evidence to support the findings of the trial court to the effect that these buildings were "an integral part of the realty" or permanently resting thereon.

Frank Blakeley, the father of appellant, was the owner of the land in question at and prior to April 5, 1921, upon which date he and his wife, Clara M. Blakeley, executed a deed of trust to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, as trustee, to secure a loan of $25,000, borrowed from the Mortgage & Guarantee Company, named in said trust deed as the beneficiary, which mortgage deed was duly recorded May 10, 1921. Subsequently, on October 30, 1922, Frank Blakeley and wife deeded this property to their son Floyd and his brother, which deed was also recorded on November 1, 1922. The appellant was engaged in an extensive enterprise of farming in the vicinity of Tulare Lake, but had no interest or part in farming his father's land, which is involved in this action. The evidence of the appellant and his father was to the effect that about June 1, 1921, express consent of the father was given to the son to remove the buildings "whenever the appellant wanted to." Subsequently appellant constructed on said premises a substantial five-room dwelling house of the value of about $2,000, and also built a large machine shed some 40x80 feet in dimensions, valued at $1,000. These structures were built on heavy mudsills without disturbing the surface of the ground to any extent. They were constructed as a part of a camp for the accommodation of appellant's family and as a convenience in which to store his machinery, while he was farming in the vicinity. Subsequent to the construction of these buildings, the trust deed from Blakeley to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company was duly foreclosed and sold by the trustee to the Mortgage & Guarantee Company on August 9, 1924. On August 30, 1924, said purchaser sold and conveyed this land to Charles Scott, Jr., who, in turn, sold and conveyed it to this plaintiff by deed dated September 2, 1924, and recorded September 12, 1924. On January 7, 1925, this appellant served notice that he claimed the buildings in question and intended to remove them pursuant to the consent of the former owner of the land. Thereupon this action was prosecuted, and the trial court found that the buildings were fixtures, and that the defendant had no right, title, or interest in the buildings, and restrained the removal thereof.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain findings numbered III, IV, and VI, or either of them. So far as it is necessary to quote these findings, they were in the following language:

"III. It is true that there is now situate on said lands hereinafter described, and firmly fixed thereto, imbedded therein, and an integral part thereof, a certain one-story frame, five-room dwelling house, and a frame harvester shed approximately 40 feet wide by 80 feet long, and said buildings were situate upon said land, affixed thereto and an integral part thereof on the said 2d day of September, 1924, when plaintiff became the owner and possessor in fee of the land * * * and said buildings thereon situate and affixed thereto. It is not true that said dwelling house and said shed, or that either of them was erected on said premises as a temporary structure."

Finding No. IV determined that these buildings in question were of great value to plaintiff and necessary for the accommodation of his farm hands and machinery on said premises. Finding No. VI holds that the defendant has no right, title, or interest in said buildings, or either of them, and that he has and had no right or permission to remove them from said land or to molest or interfere with plaintiff's ownership and right to the use and enjoyment of the same.

"When a person affixes his property to the land of another, without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed * * * belongs to the owner of the land, unless he chooses to require the former to remove it."

The only exception to this rule is found in section 1019, Civil Code, and applies only to property affixed by a tenant for trade purposes, etc. Appellant, in the instant case, was not a tenant of the owner of the land in question, and this exception does not apply. It would seem to follow from the foregoing statute, that, when property is actually affixed to the land of another, the burden is upon him who seeks to remove it, to show that it was placed there with permission to remove it, for, in the absence of proof of such permission, the presumption would be that it belongs to the owner of the realty.

[2] The term "fixtures" is defined in section 660 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws."

Even with the aid of the foregoing definition of statutory fixtures, it is still necessary to determine whether there is substantial evidence in the record of this case to warrant the finding to the effect that the buildings in question were "permanently resting" on the land in question, or were "permanently attached" to what was in fact a fixture on the land, for this is the effect of the finding that "said buildings were situate upon said land, affixed thereto, and an integral part thereof."

In determining whether these buildings were permanent fixtures on said land, three things are to be considered: (1) Were the structures annexed to or imbedded in the soil? (2) Are the structures adapted to the purpose for which the property upon which they are located is intended to be used? (3) Was it the intention that these buildings should become permanent fixtures, when they were constructed? 11 R. C. L. 1059; Breyfogle v. Tighe, 58 Cal. App. 305, 208 P. 1008; City of Vallejo v. Burrill, 64 Cal. App. 407, 221 P. 676.

In answer to the first question, it must be conceded that the buildings in question were not annexed to or imbedded in the soil. There can scarcely be any dispute as to the second question, for both buildings were typical, appropriate buildings for just such a farm as the one upon which they were constructed; one was a machine shed and the other was a dwelling house, the only dwelling house on the premises. The third question presents the real issue in this case. Were these buildings intended to become permanent fixtures on the land where they were constructed?

[3-5] It becomes quite apparent that there can be no definition of the term "fixtures" which will embrace all conditions under all circumstances. Each case must be determined on its own particular facts. Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 559, 204 P. 19. For instance, it would be illogical to conclude that, just because a structure was built on a level prairie, and placed upon mudsills without the necessity of disturbing the surface of the soil, therefore it could not become a "fix-ture" or a permanent building. The entire manner of construction, the character of the building, the value, its adaptability to the purposes for which the land is used, and the expressed intent as to whether it was or was not to become permanent, if any were made, should all be taken into consideration. It therefore naturally follows that the bare declarations of the owner of the land and the constructor of the improvements will not necessarily control. It is apparent that the facts and circumstances surrounding a particular case may completely overwhelm and refute mere declarations of interested parties. All the facts, circumstances, conditions, and declarations should be considered in determining the question of fixtures. With respect to the element of intention, it is said in 11 Ruling Case Law, at page 1062:

"The test of intention is to be given a broad and comprehensive signification. It does not merely imply the secret action of the mind of the owner of the property, nor need it be expressed in words, but is to be inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made; which obviously suggests that the other tests are really part of this comprehensive test of intention, and that they derive their chief value as conspicuous evidence of such intention."

See, also, Breyfogle v. Tighe, 58 Cal. App. 305, 208 P. 1008.

In the case of Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 P. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680, upon which the appellant relies, in sustaining the findings of the trial court to the effect that certain dwelling houses built upon town lots were not fixtures, the Supreme Court merely said:

"The finding in the present case that 'said houses were built on redwood mudsills of two-inch by six-inch timber, said mudsills resting upon the soil,' and that 'the soil was not disturbed in building or removing said houses,' is consistent with the determination of the court below that the buildings in question were not fixtures; and, for the purpose of upholding its decision, it may be assumed that such determination was made by it. But, without determining whether or not the buildings were fixtures, we are of the opinion that upon other principles applicable to the case the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief sought."

The foregoing language cannot be construed to mean that our Supreme Court determined as a matter of law that any building which was constructed on mudsills, without disturbing the soil upon which it was built, was therefore not a fixture. All that the court there said was that these circumstances were consistent with the trial court's finding that under all the facts of that particular case the buildings in question were not fixtures. All of the facts of that case do not appear, but it does appear that the owner of certain lots made an agreement with a contractor that he would pay a specified sum for the houses, and that the houses should belong to the builder until they were paid for. And it further appeared that the owner failed to pay for them as he had agreed to do. Yet the Supreme Court specifically refrains from deciding that those houses were not fixtures. Of course the fact that the houses were constructed on mudsills and that the soil was not disturbed in the process of building, are circumstances to be considered, together with all the other facts, declarations, and conditions surrounding the affair. It cannot be said that, if the trial court, in the Miller Case above cited, had found that these same buildings were in fact fixtures and could not be removed, the Supreme Court would have reversed the case on the sole ground that a structure on mudsills built without disturbing the surface of the soil, was necessarily temporary in its nature and not a fixture. The foregoing comments are equally appropriate to the case of Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 559, 204 P. 19, upon which appellant also relies. The finding of the trial court to the effect that the buildings in question were not fixtures was based solely upon a finding that the owner of the land had consented to their removal.

[6, 7] To hold that, because buildings were constructed on mudsills, therefore they are merely temporary, would lead to an absurdity, in view of the fact that in the rural districts of California a large proportion of the more modest dwelling houses, as well as barns, sheds, garages, and outbuildings of various classes, are in fact built upon mudsills. The very evidence in the instant case shows that many other similar buildings in that neighborhood are constructed on mudsills. The mere foundation upon which a house is constructed is not conclusive in determining whether the structure is or is not a fixture; nor is it conclusive merely because the mudsills or timbers upon which a house is constructed rest upon the surface of the soil, without having disturbed the earth in erecting the structure. In the case of Las Animas Land Co. v. Fatjo, 9 Cal. App. 320, 99 P. 393, 394, the late Mr. Justice Burnett says:

"The house and barn were buildings, and * * * we must assume, what is usual and a matter of common knowledge, that they were permanently resting upon the soil."

[8] Whether consent to remove the buildings in question was in fact granted by the owner becomes a question which must be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. In the action at bar the trial court has found, in effect, that no such consent was given, for it specifically determines that the buildings in question are affixed to and an integral part of the soil, that they were not erected as temporary structures, and that the defendant has no right, title, or interest in the buildings.

[9] If there is substantial evidence in the record to support the findings, then the judgment should be affirmed. 2 Cal. Jur. § 921, § 543.

[10, 11] There seems to be a number of substantial circumstances, together with reasonable inferences which the trial court had a right to consider, and which we think are ample to support the judgment. For instance, the relationship of the interested parties was that of father and son. One might legitimately infer that the son was willing to make an investment for his own temporary benefit, with the intent of ultimately contributing the improvements to the betterment of his father's farm. Or one might infer that the son calculated that he would some day become the owner of the ranch and that his temporary investment would then inure to his own profit. Indeed this inference is supported in a measure by the fact that, in October, 1922, a year and a half after the buildings were constructed, the father did, in fact, convey the land to appellant and his brother, and did record the deed. To be sure, both the father and son testify that the appellant had no knowledge of this conveyance, and still it is a circumstance to be considered. Where a son, by permission, builds a house for his own use, upon his father's land, with the expectation of eventually becoming the owner of the estate, the improvements become a part of the realty, and cannot be removed. Leland v. Gassett, 17 Vt. 403. The dwelling house in question was a substantial five-room cottage, plastered and shingled, having a brick chimney, and finished in a fairly good and permanent fashion, at a cost of $2,000. In other words, it had the appearance of being a permanent dwelling structure. The machine shed was built on the side of, and actually attached to a warehouse belonging to the owner of the ranch, which warehouse was a fixture on the premises. The shed was attached to the warehouse by nailing upright timbers to the wall for the adjusting of which holes were cut in the overhanging eaves of the warehouse roof. It was explained that these timbers which attached the shed in question to the warehouse were only toenailed to the outer wall, and that the nails which penetrated the wall of the warehouse were not even clinched on the inside. While this might indicate careless workmanship, it is still a circumstance to be considered. This shed was covered with corrugated iron, and the building was also placed on mudsills, one of which was imbedded four or six inches in the earth. The shed cost $1,000 or $1,200. Mr. Silva, the carpenter who built the shed, testified, in response to questions, as follows:

"Q. Did you * * * nail any part of this harvester shed to the warehouse? * * * A.

Just stick a few nails this way to hold it up. Q. And is it still nailed to the wall of the warehouse? A. I believe so. Q. Now would it be possible to move this harvester shed you built without tearing it down, taking it to pieces? * * * A. Well, we have to take him all down—can't move it that way."

At the same time that the appellant built the dwelling house and shed, he also constructed a tankhouse upon a concrete foundation, and a reservoir, connecting them with the dwelling house by a piping system so as to supply the cottage with water for domestic purposes. Appellant admits that he did not expect to remove this tankhouse or water apparatus, but explained that his father told him that, if he would build it in a substantial manner, he would pay him for it. Yet it was not paid for by the father.

It is true that both the father and the son testified that the buildings in question were constructed with the father's permission to remove them at will. This evidence is not corroborated except in a very indefinite manner by the carpenter, Putnam, who, in response to a question as to what instructions Floyd Blakeley gave him regarding the foundation, said:

"Well when I was making the bill for the lumber, as I remember, he suggested using 6x8's or 8x8's, redwood, so if he wanted to move it—He didn't say he intended to move it, but he said, if he did want to move it, he could hook his tractor * * * on there and move it."

Another circumstance occurred at the trial which was in the nature of impeaching testimony. The appellant had testified positively that his father had consented to his removing the buildings. On cross-examination, in response to a question as to whether, at the previous hearing on motion for a temporary restraining order, he had not said he did not recall what his father had said, it appears that he in fact then testified:

"I asked him if I could put up the harvester shed, and he said, 'Yes,' and I asked him where, and he said over at the end of the workhouse was all right. Q. Was there anything said about whether the buildings were to remain there or all become removable? A. Not that I recall in the conversation with him."

In explanation of this inconsistency in his testimony, the appellant said that his memory had been refreshed since the former hearing.

The appellant admitted that he had never made any claim to either the trustee or the beneficiary under the trust deed to the effect that he was the owner of these buildings. The first claim which he ever made to any one was by means of the notice which he served January 7, 1925, some five months after the property had been actually sold on foreclosure of the trust deed.

It is also a circumstance that in a number of conversations with the holders of the mortgage deed about the prospective foreclosure, the father never mentioned his alleged consent that his son might remove the buildings. On cross-examination, the following occurred:

"Q. Did you have a conversation with any of the officers of the Mortgage Guarantee Company * * * just before the deed was foreclosed? A. Oh, yes; I had several talks with them. I went down there and tried all kinds of deals. Q. At that time, and before the trust deed was foreclosed, did you have any conversation about the buildings that had been put up by Floyd? A. Well, I was pleading with them for more time to give me a chance to get a real loan, told them that the boys had put up buildings on there on the property, that I didn't want to lose it if I could help it."

In view of the foregoing conclusion that the findings of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon the question raised by respondent, as to whether under a trust deed which specifically mortgages the property described, together with the appurtenances, and "all buildings and improvements thereon, or that may be placed thereon," a trustee, without the consent of the trustee or the beneficiary, may consent to a licensee removing from the mortgaged premises improvements constructed by him, which, except for such permission, would become fixtures.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB v. BOARD OF PUBLIC SERVICE COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. ★
(Civ. 4555.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 2, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1927.

Waters and water courses §203(5)—Country club held entitled to water under rate for combined irrigation and domestic service, notwithstanding provision that "irrigation" referred to commercial production.

Under section of ordinance providing one rate for combined irrigation and domestic water service and another rate for intermittent irrigation and providing that "irrigation" should apply only to production of crops for commercial purposes, country club held entitled to water under rate for combined irrigation and domestic service, rather than under another section providing higher rate for commercial or domestic service, since definition of "irrigation" referred only to rate for intermittent irrigation, especially in view of semicolon preceding it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Irrigation.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Country Club against the Board of Public Service Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles and another, to determine the water rate properly chargeable by the City of Los Angeles for a combined irrigation and domestic service. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews and Trent G. Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff after a hearing upon an agreed statement of facts, and involves the determination of the water rate properly chargeable by the city of Los Angeles for a combined irrigating and domestic service under city Ordinance No. 40342, new series, adopted May 28, 1920. By section 3 of the ordinance a rate is named for combined irrigating and domestic service; and plaintiff insists that it is entitled to the benefit of that rate. Defendants contend, on the other hand, that the rates specified in section 3 for water used in irrigating are available only to those consumers who use the water in the production of agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural crops grown for commercial purposes. So construing the section, defendants imposed on plaintiff the rate specified in section 2 of the ordinance, governing what is called commercial or domestic service, which is a higher rate than that fixed in section 3. In opposition to the defendants, plaintiff takes the position, first, that the benefit of the rate for a combined irrigating and domestic service is not dependent on the production of crops for commercial purposes; and, secondly, that, if defendants' construction of section 3 should prevail, an unlawful discrimination would be created between consumers growing crops for commercial purposes and those growing similar crops for noncommercial purposes. Primarily, the controversy is concerned with the proper construction of section 3 of the ordinance.

The system by which water is brought to Los Angeles and supplied to its inhabitants is owned by the city and administered by its board of public service commissioners; the rates being fixed by the commissioners by resolution and approved by ordinance of the city council. The city charter provides that such rates shall be so fixed at least every two years, and that, with certain exceptions not material to this controversy, they "shall be of uniform operation as near as may be, and shall be fair and reasonable, taking into consideration, among other things, the nature of the use, the quantity supplied, and the value of the service."

The plaintiff is a private corporation devoted to social and recreational purposes; and in furtherance of such purposes it acquired and owns a tract of land comprising 400 acres within the city limits. Upon this property plaintiff maintains a clubhouse, with apartment buildings, for the use of its members; and upward of 200 acres of the tract are laid out as a golf course and planted with shrubs and lawns, so disposed as to furnish the customary grass greens and fairways.

By the city ordinance adopted May 28, 1920, rates were prescribed varying according to the kind and class of service. A schedule of specific monthly rates for unmeasured service to dwellings, hotels, shops, industrial consumers, and the like is established by section 1. Where service is provided by meters or weirs, the rates are those prescribed by sections 2 and 3. Under section 2, service known as commercial or domestic service, and being meter service other than that provided in section 3, is made subject to a graduated scale of charges, ranging, according to the quantity supplied, from 10 cents per hundred cubic feet for the first 10,000 cubic feet or less, to 5 cents a hundred cubic feet for all in excess of 100,000 cubic feet used in any one month. In addition, there are fixed monthly charges for meters according to their size.

A separate classification is made in section 3, which is the section requiring construction here. That section reads as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the rates to be charged for water for combined irrigating and domestic service, through the same meter, under constant pressure, and at the will of the consumer, upon tracts or parcels of land under a single occupancy, aggregating not less than one acre, shall be 2 cents per 100 cubic feet, in addition thereto, a flat rental for meter, depending upon the size of the meter, effective continuously throughout the year, regardless of the irrigating season, or the amount of water consumed, as follows: 1" meters, $1.00 per month; 1½" meters, $2.00 per month; 2" meters, $3.00 per month.

"For water consumed intermittently for irrigation, for limited periods and under the control of the local water overseer, the charge shall be 1.4 cents per 100 cubic feet, provided that no delivery shall be made, for any period, for a less amount than $2.00; that the water to be served for such intermittent uses shall be at the convenience of the department with reference to the demand of other consumers, and arrangements for such service must be made in advance; provided that the rates prescribed in this section shall only apply to water furnished by gravity; provided, further, that irrigation shall apply only to the production of agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural crops grown for commercial purposes."

Section 3 thus provides rates for two distinct classes of service: One a rate of 2 cents per 100 cubic feet for combined irrigating and domestic service at will; the other a rate of 1.4 cents per 100 cubic feet for water consumed intermittently for irrigation.

It was stipulated between the parties, and the court found, that the water taken by plaintiff was for a combined irrigating and domestic service, and was furnished to plaintiff by gravity through the same meter, under constant pressure, at the will of plaintiff for use on plaintiff's land constituting a tract under single occupancy of more than one acre. No crops have been grown, however, on plaintiff's lands for commercial purposes.

From the time of the adoption of the ordinance to the end of the year 1921 the charge made to plaintiff for such combined service was at the rate of 2 cents per 100 cubic feet, with the addition of the monthly meter charge as prescribed by the first paragraph of section 3. On December 2, 1921, however, the following resolution was adopted by the board of public service commissioners:

"Resolved, that the regular schedule of rates for water for commercial or domestic use shall be applied for water furnished to country clubs on all bills for metered service rendered and based on regular meter readings taken on and after January 1, 1922."

Pursuant to this resolution the rate applied to the combined service to plaintiff after January 1, 1922, was the commercial or domestic rate fixed by section 2 of the ordinance. The present action is occasioned by the charge so made from May 24 to June 22, 1922, aggregating the sum of $1,122.10. The charge for the quantity of water supplied, if made under the first paragraph of section 3 as for combined irrigating and domestic service, would amount to only $414.04, exclusive of the fixed meter charge. To prevent the water from being shut off, plaintiff paid under protest the sum of $1,122.10, and then brought this action to recover the difference between that amount and the amount chargeable at the rate of 2 cents per 100 cubic feet for the combined irrigating and domestic service. The court held that the service in question was not governed by section 2, but was properly chargeable at the rate of 2 cents per 100 cubic feet designated in section 3; and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for $699.06, with interest and costs.

It will be observed that the change in the method of charging plaintiff was not due to any change in the ordinance itself, but was brought about by a resolution of the board of public service commissioners, whereby they undertook to give to section 3 of the ordinance a construction different from that theretofore followed in practice. The construction thus contended for by the defendants depends upon the application to be given to the concluding proviso of section 3, which reads:

"Provided, further, that irrigation shall apply only to the production of agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural crops grown for commercial purposes."

The commissioners insist that this qualification applies not only to water consumed intermittently for irrigation under the restrictions attached to such service, but also to water for combined irrigating and domestic service at the will of the consumer. The plaintiff urges, on the other hand, that the proviso relates exclusively to restricted intermittent irrigation. Inquiry is thus directed to the intent to be gathered from the language of the section, read in connection with the ordinance as a whole.

The ordinance deals in its first section with flat rates for dwellings and other establishments; and in subdivision 31 it fixes a monthly sprinkling charge of nine-tenths of a cent per front foot for lawns and gardens, where the depth of the lot does not exceed 150 feet, and a proportionate charge for any additional area. Such charge, together with the flat monthly dwelling rate, represents the expense of combined irrigating and domestic service to occupants of residence sites of moderate size. For larger consumers a measured service is provided under section 2, which, read with the other sections, would seem to dictate the rate for irrigation of somewhat extensive grounds, yet of less than an acre. And it seems logically to follow that householders whose grounds embrace an acre or more would be entitled, under section 3, to the combined irrigating and domestic service rate, even though they are not engaged in the production of vegetables, fruit, or flowers for market. It is significant that under the first paragraph of section 3, relating to the combined irrigating and domestic service, the combined service must be through the same meter, and is to be furnished under constant pressure and used at the will of the consumer. When a combined service is furnished through the same meter, there is sound reason for a special rate. Hohenthal v. Consumers' Electric L. & P. Co. (Mo. P. S. Com.) P. U. R. 1916D, 673. Again, the meter charge named in the first paragraph is a regular monthly charge, which must be paid throughout the year, regardless of seasons or the quantity of water consumed. The water being taken through the same meter, there is no segregation of the quantity used for irrigating from that use domestically, and the water may be drawn when, and used where, the consumer will. Not so, however, with water consumed solely for irrigation under the second paragraph of section 3. No constant supply is then assured. The offer is merely for limited periods, and for intermittent use under the control of the water overseer. Furthermore, such intermittent use must be at the convenience of the department, with reference to the demands of other consumers, and special arrangements for the service must be made with the department in advance. This paragraph is evidently conceived with the idea of supplying consumers who have no need of a liberal daily service, usable at will, but who are engaged in enterprises requiring for their fruition considerable quantities of water from time to time, or during the dry season. The section taken as a whole fulfills a double purpose, and offers distinct kinds of service to two separate classes of irrigators—in the first paragraph a steady service at will to those who are able, by surrounding their households with extensive gardens or lawns, to minister to the amenities of urban life; and in the second paragraph an intermittent and restricted service to those who require irrigation only for utilitarian purposes. The word "irrigating," as used in the initial paragraph, is not separable from the word "domestic." The service is a combined service, without discrimination as to the quantity employed for household use and the quantity devoted to sprinkling lawns or flower beds. In its context the phrase "combined irrigating and domestic service" is the direct antithesis of commercial or industrial service. It is with this distinction in mind that the ultimate proviso is to be studied.

The second paragraph of the section contains four provisos. The first two clearly relate to water for intermittent irrigation alone. The third, declaring that "the rates prescribed in this section shall only apply to water furnished by gravity," extends, by its express terms, to both classes of service contemplated by the section. If the concluding proviso were meant to relate likewise to both classes of service, it might more appropriately have been separated merely by a comma from the preceding proviso just quoted. Instead, it is separated by a semicolon, suggestive of an adversative thought, or a change of mental posture; and instead of referring in a definite way to irrigating service in combination with domestic service, it deals solely with utilitarian or commercial irrigation, the language being:

"Provided, further, that irrigation shall apply only to the production of agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural crops grown for commercial purposes."

Since the rate for the combined irrigating and domestic service, available at will, is conditioned on supply through the same meter, and without discrimination between the portions used for one purpose rather than the other, the only reasonable inference is that, if the concluding proviso had been intended to make the rate of 2 cents per 100 cubic feet applicable only when the domestic consumer is raising fruits, flowers, or vegetables for market, language would have been used which would have left no doubt of such intent. But far from employing any such language, reference is made simply to "irrigation," the term used at the beginning of the second paragraph; and that term, as there used, is quite alien to the term "combined irrigating and domestic service," as used in the first paragraph.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the commissioners were in error in annexing the final proviso of section 3 to the first paragraph of the section, and making the rate fixed in that paragraph available only to a user of combined irrigating and domestic service who is engaged in the production of agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural crops for commercial purposes. Accordingly, the plaintiff was entitled to a continuance of its combined service at the rate fixed in section 3; and the charge of the commercial or domestic rate under section 2 was without justification.

As has been indicated, there is a further contention on the part of plaintiff that, if the application given to section 3 by the defendants were to prevail, and the rates there prescribed were to be available only to consumers producing crops for commercial purposes, an unlawful discrimination would be made between consumers growing crops for market, and receiving a combined irrigating and domestic service at the rate fixed in the first paragraph of section 3, and other consumers having the same kind of combined service, and using water for agricultural, horticultural, or floricultural purposes, but not sending their produce to market; and plaintiff argues that in such event it would be entitled to the lower rate for its combined service. The conclusion to which we have come regarding the proper construction of the section makes it unnecessary, however, to pursue the argument on the point of unlawful discrimination.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF OPTOMETRY et al. (Civ. 5596.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 28, 1927.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Certificate of registration as optometrist might be suspended, where practitioner put "Dr." before name and "optometrist" after it (Optometry Law, § 11, subd. 7 [St. 1923, p. 387, § 8]).

California state board of optometry was authorized to suspend the certificate of registration of an optometrist who used prefix "Dr."

before his name and the word "optometrist" immediately following his name, regardless of whether such usage tended to defraud or mislead the general public, under Optometry Law, § 11, subd. 7 (St. 1923, p. 387, § 8).

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨2—Optometry law must be enforced according to its meaning and intent (Optometry Law [St. 1913, p. 1097, as amended by St. 1923, p. 380, and St. 1925, p. 573]).

Courts must enforce Optometry Law (St. 1913, p. 1097, as amended by St. 1923, p. 380, and St. 1925, p. 573), according to its meaning and intent, as properly construed by the judiciary.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨2—State board of optometry can adopt no rules and regulations inconsistent with express provisions of statute (Optometry Law, § 4, subd. 10 [St. 1923, p. 380, § 1]).

No power to legislate is vested in California state board of optometry, and it can exercise any powers it may have to adopt rules and regulations only in a manner not inconsistent with the express provisions of Optometry Law, § 4, subd. 10 (St. 1923, p. 380, § 1).

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Whether rule of state board of optometry discriminated against optometrist whose certificate was suspended for using title "Dr." held immaterial (Optometry Law, § 11, subd. 7 [St. 1923, p. 387, § 8]).

In determining whether suspending certificate of registration of optometrist, because he used title "Dr." as a prefix to his name, was error under Optometry Law, § 11, subd. 7 (St. 1923, p. 387, § 8), providing that use of title "Dr." as a prefix to name shall be cause for suspension of certificate, whether rule of state board of optometry permitting use of title "doctor" or "Dr." as a prefix under certain restrictions was discriminatory held immaterial; board having no power to make rules inconsistent with terms of statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action for certiorari to review an order of the California State Board of Optometry suspending a certificate of registration as an optometrist, brought by H. Davis against California State Board of Optometry and others. Demurrer to the writ was sustained, judgment entered for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. Maxwell Burke and Burke & Catlin, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment following an order by which a demurrer to a writ of review was sustained.

It appears that appellant is an optometrist, duly registered and licensed to practice his profession in the state of California; that, following an accusation preferred against appellant, and after hearing thereon before the respondent California state board of optometry, the appellant herein was convicted by said board of the offense of unprofessional conduct in using the title of "Dr." (doctor) as a prefix to his name; that thereupon said board pronounced judgment against appellant that his certificate of registration as an optometrist be suspended for the period of one year from and after the date of said judgment; that thereafter, by a writ of review issued by the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, appellant sought to have the legality of said judgment determined by said superior court. Respondent demurred generally to the writ, which demurrer having been sustained by the court without leave to amend, judgment was ordered "that petitioner take nothing by his petition, and that his petition for a writ of review be denied." From such judgment appellant prosecutes his appeal to this court.

[1] The Optometry Law (Stats. 1913, p. 1097; 1923, p. 380; 1925, p. 573) declares (subdivision 7 of section 11 of Stats. 1923, p. 380) that the certificate of registration of any person registered as an optometrist may be revoked or suspended by the California state board of optometry for any of the following causes: " * * * When the holder uses the title of 'doctor' or 'Dr.' as a prefix to his name. * * *"

No question is raised by appellant as to the sufficiency of the evidence adduced before the board to justify its judgment against him; his principal point on appeal being specifically that, admitting the use by him of the prefix "Dr." before his name, it also appeared that the word "optometrist" immediately followed his name, and that, unless the use by him of the prefix "Dr." tended to defraud or mislead the general public, no offense of professional misconduct was committed, and consequently that the board acted in excess of its jurisdiction in finding the appellant guilty and pronouncing sentence against him. He argues that, because from his construction of various statutes relating to the practice of several kindred professions, a practitioner in any one of them may be suspended for unprofessional conduct in the use of the prefix "doctor," only where such use "in effect works a fraud upon the public or has a tendency to mislead the public to their injury"—the same construction should be applied to the statute here under consideration. No direct authority is cited by appellant which upholds the construction which he would place either upon the other statutes to which he refers, or on the statute which is the basis for the judgment rendered by the respondent herein. Whatever may be the correct construction or interpretation to be placed upon any other statute (regarding which we express no opinion), the plain language of the statute here in question is that "when the holder (the registrant) uses the title of 'doctor' or 'Dr.' as a prefix to his name," his certificate of registration may be revoked or suspended. The attention of this court has been directed to no language in the statute which would indicate that the action to be taken by the board in any manner depended upon the effect, fraudulent or otherwise, which the use of said title before the name of any registrant under the statute would have on the general public.

In the case of State v. Armstrong, 38 Idaho, 493, 225 P. 491, 33 A. L. R. 835, it was held that, where a woman advertised herself as "Dr. Armstrong, Chiropodist," "the evident intent [of the statute] is to prohibit the use of the word 'doctor' in such a way as to indicate that a person is a licensed practitioner of one of the learned branches of the healing art. No such inference can be reasonably drawn when the qualifying word 'chiropodist' appears in the same advertisement. No one could have been misled."

That case, however, is distinguishable from the instant case in that in the Armstrong Case the statute forbade the use of the prefix "'doctor' or * * * 'Dr.', * * * or * * * any other terms or letters indicating or implying that he [the user of the prefix] is a doctor, physician, and surgeon, or practitioner; * * *" which qualification of the inhibition of the use of the prefix "doctor" left a reasonable leeway for the construction which the Idaho court placed upon the statute. But in the instant case no such qualifying words appear in the statute. The language is simply that, if the holder of a certificate of registration "uses the title of 'doctor' or 'Dr.' as a prefix to his name," the offense is committed, for which the board of optometry is authorized to revoke or suspend the certificate of registration of such person.

In the case of State v. Yegge, 19 S. D. 234, 103 N. W. 17, 69 L. R. A. 504, 9 Ann. Cas. 202, the defendant was charged with the offense of practicing medicine without a license. Among other things, it was shown that the defendant had a sign in front of his office with the name "Dr. Yegge" thereon. In addition thereto, a "notice" signed "Dr. M. F. Yegge" was introduced in evidence, from which it appeared that the defendant advertised his business or profession as that of "Ophthalmology," which is defined as the science which treats of the physiology, anatomy, and diseases of the eye. The statute under which the defendant was prosecuted provided that—

"When a person shall append or prefix the letters M. B., or M. D., or the title Dr. or Doctor or any other sign or appellation in a medical sense to his or her name, * * * (he or she) shall be regarded as practicing within the meaning of this act." Laws S. D. 1903, c. 176, § 21.

In affirming the judgment, the court said, in part:

" * * * In carrying into effect this law, it was competent for the Legislature to define, * * * what evidence shall be deemed sufficient to constitute a practitioner within the meaning of the act. * * * And it is not only clear from the language of the advertisement itself, which would be generally understood as an assumption on his part of being a regular physician, or at least a specialist in that branch of medicine treating of ophthalmology, but the Legislature has declared that prefixing the term 'Dr.' to his name shall be so regarded. The law should not be so construed as to deprive the people of the benefits intended by the act, but such a construction should be given it as to carry into effect the evident intention of the Legislature. * * *"

[2] In the instant case, the question of fraud or injury to the public is not in issue. Neither the reason for the passage of the act, nor its possible or probable effect upon either the public at large or upon designated individuals, is involved. The act has become the law of the land, and should be enforced according to its meaning and intent, properly construed by the judicial branch of the government. In the face of the positive declaration of the statute, this court would not be justified in what on its part would amount to attempted legislation to the effect that by the use of the word "optometrist" following the name of any person unauthorized to use the prefix "doctor" or "Dr." before his name, the public would not be defrauded or misled to its injury, and consequently that in such circumstances the apparently plain intent of the statute might be evaded and rendered of no consequence.

[3] Because of the fact that by the provision of the statute the respondent herein was authorized to adopt rules and regulations, and furthermore purporting to act within such power the respondent adopted a rule by which, under certain specified restrictions, a registered optometrist might use the title "doctor" or "Dr." as a prefix to his name, it is contended by appellant that, notwithstanding the fact that the facts in his case did not come within the specifications set forth in the rule adopted by the respondent, the judgment should be reversed for the reason that the rule was discriminatory as against appellant. But it is clear from the wording of the statute that, whatever powers the respondent may have had with reference to the adoption of rules and regulations, such powers could be exercised in such manner only as was not inconsistent with the express provisions of the statute. Subdivision 10 of section 4, Stats. 1913, p. 1097; subdivision 10, § 4, Stats. 1923, p. 380. That the respondent possessed no power to legislate is illustrated and decided in principle in each of the following cases, to wit: Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148

Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113, Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750; Van Camp Sea Food Co. v. Newbert (Cal. App.) 244 P. 916.

[4] It follows that, even conceding, without deciding, that the rule to which appellant has referred was discriminatory as against him, the point is not available as affecting the rights of appellant in the premises.

The judgment is affirmed.

BLODGETT v. TRUMBULL et al.
(Civ. 4545.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Damages ⇨157(1)—Complaint failing to demand damages from defendant did not authorize recovery of damages from him.

In action against two defendants where the complaint failed to demand damages from one of the defendants, it was insufficient as to him as concerned the cause of action for damages.

2. Principal and agent ⇨189(1)—Complaint alleging fraudulent promises by owner through agent and breach thereof did not authorize recovery of damages against agent.

Complaint alleging that defendant induced plaintiff to purchase lot by fraudulent promises made by her agent to restrict the use of other property, and thereafter conveyed such property to the agent without restrictions, to plaintiff's damage, held insufficient to state cause of action against the agent for damages.

3. Pleading ⇨64(2)—Complaint alleging that restrictions in deed were inserted through fraud, and seeking damages and removal of restrictions, held not demurrable as joining action for damages with one for reformation.

Complaint alleging plaintiff was induced to purchase lot subject to restrictions through fraudulent promises to restrict use of other property and that vendor broke promises, and seeking damages and to remove the restrictions on plaintiff's lot, held not demurrable as joining an action for damages with one for reformation of the deed, the action seeking to quiet title against the restrictions.

4. Covenants ⇨81—Conveyance, subject to restrictions, imposed no servitude in favor of lots not mentioned.

Where conveyance of lot, subject to certain restrictions which should run with the land, did not mention any other lots to be benefited by the restrictions, no equitable servitude was imposed on the lot benefited in favor of lots conveyed by common grantor to third party, there being neither privity of estate nor privity of contract between the first purchaser and the third party.

5. Quieting title $\S$ 34(1)—Complaint to quiet title against restrictions stated no cause of action against defendant who had no right to restrictions and claimed none.

In action to quiet title against restrictions on land, where defendant's land was not entitled to the benefit of the restrictions and defendant asserted no claim to the benefit of the restrictions, complaint stated no cause of action against him.

6. Parties $\S$ 21—Defendant against whom no cause of action was stated was improperly joined.

Where complaint failed to state cause of action against one of the defendants, he was improperly joined as a defendant.

7. Pleading $\S$ 254—Demurrer admitted allegations of amended petition.

Defendant's demurrer admitted plaintiff's allegations that promises to restrict use of other property were made to induce plaintiff to purchase, and that they were made without intent to perform, constituting fraud, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, subd. 4.

8. Fraud $\S$ 41—Complaint, alleging fraudulent promises to restrict use of other property and breach, stated cause of action for damages against vendor (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, subd. 4).

Complaint alleging that plaintiff purchased lot subject to certain restrictions, that she was induced to purchase by promises of defendant to restrict the use of other lots in the same way and to convey only subject to such restrictions, that such promises were made without intent to perform and with intent to defraud and to induce her to purchase subject to restrictions, and that such promises were not kept held to state cause of action for damages against vendor, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, subd. 4, defining fraud.

9. Injunction $\S$ 62(1)—Grantor reserving merely right to remedy breach of restrictions may enforce restrictions while owning property benefited, but not thereafter in equity.

Where deed restricting the use of the land conveyed reserved no reversionary right to grantors, but merely the right to enjoin, abate, or remedy a breach of the restrictions, grantor might enforce restrictions in absence of fraud while owning the property benefited, but after parting with the property benefited grantor might not complain of breach thereof, in equity, at least.

10. Quieting title $\S$ 34(1)—Complaint alleging restrictions were inserted through fraud, and that grantors reserved only right to remedy breach and parted with property benefited, stated cause of action against grantor to quiet title (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, subd. 4).

Complaint, alleging that lot was conveyed subject to restrictions described as conditions running with the land, that the restrictions did not inure to benefit of other lots, and that deed did not reserve reversionary right but merely provided that breach of restrictions must be remedied by grantors, that purchase was induced through fraudulent promises not to convey other property without imposing the same restrictions, and that grantors had breached same and had parted with property benefited, stated cause of action against grantor for quieting title against restrictions, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1572, subd. 4, defining fraud.

11. Quieting title $\S$ 15—Where purchaser alleged fraudulent promises to restrict use of other property and sought damages and to quiet title, agreement restricting other property separate from deed thereto was matter of defense.

Where purchaser alleged fraudulent insertion of restrictions in deed under promises to restrict other property in conveying it, and that common grantor conveyed property without restrictions and sought damages and to quiet title against the restrictions, the existence of a restrictive agreement apart from the deed to the other property was a matter to be pleaded in defense.

12. Action $\S$ 48(1)—Action to quiet title against restrictions inserted through fraudulent promises and action to recover damages for breach of promises might be joined as arising out of same transaction and connected with same subject of action (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8).

Action seeking to quiet title against certain restrictions alleged to have been inserted in deed under promises to insert restrictions in deeds to other property, which were made without intent to perform and with intent to defraud and to induce purchase, was properly joined with action for damages for breach of the fraudulent promises, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8, both causes of action arising out of the same transaction and being connected with the same subject of action.

13. Action $\S$ 48(1)—Statute permitting joinder of causes arising out of same transaction and connected with same subject of action will be liberally construed (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8).

Courts will give a liberal construction to Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8, permitting the joinder of causes of action when they arise out of the same transaction and are connected with the same subject of action.

14. Action $\S$ 48(1)—If causes of action are connected with same transaction or subject of action, complaint may include causes legal and equitable, ex contractu and ex delicto (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8).

One complaint may include causes of action which are legal, causes which are equitable, causes arising ex contractu, and causes arising ex delicto if the causes are all connected with the same transaction or with the subject of the action, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, subd. 8, permitting joinder in such case.

15. Pleading $\S$ 204(4)—That complaint against vendor and agent to quiet title and to recover damages improperly joined agent was not ground for demurrer by vendor whose interests were unaffected.

In action to quiet title against restrictions, which were inserted in deed through fraudulent promises made by agent to insert restrictions in deeds in conveying other land and for damages for the breach of the promises by conveying property to the same agent without restrictions, that the complaint stated no cause of action against the agent was not ground for demurrer by vendor; vendor's interests not being affected by the joinder of the agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action for damages for failure to impose certain restrictions running with the land and to quiet title against certain restrictions, brought by Ida Blodgett against Grace Sherwood Trumbull and Norman E. McFadden. Demurrer to second amended complaint sustained, judgment entered for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed as to the first-named defendant, and affirmed as to the second-named defendant.

Ida Blodgett, in pro. per.

Wm. G. Griffith, of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants, based on an order sustaining their demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint.

The complaint is in two counts. In the first count plaintiff alleges that the defendant Grace Sherwood Trumbull was the owner of lots 1 to 7, inclusive, in block 1 of the Casita tract in Santa Barbara, as delineated on a recorded map, and that on May 3, 1922, the said defendant, together with her husband, Charles W. Trumbull, conveyed lot 7 to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, by a deed of grant, of which a copy is attached to the complaint. The deed recites that the conveyance is subject to certain restrictions, declared therein to be "conditions running with the land." These restrictions continue in force until January 1, 1940, and provide that the premises shall be used only for private residence purposes and shall not be occupied by anyone not of the Caucasian race; also, that the improvements shall cost not less than $2,500, and shall be set back at least 35 feet from the street line. The restrictions are not made to inure to the benefit of any of the other lots in the block, nor is any right of re-entry reserved in case of breach. The deed states merely that any breach "may be enjoined, abated, or remedied by appropriate proceedings had and taken by the grantors, their successors, or assigns." Plaintiff alleges, further, that she was induced to purchase said lot by reason of promises made by the defendant Trumbull, through the defendant McFadden as agent, that defendant Trumbull would restrict in the same way the use of each of said other lots in said block, and would not convey any of them without subjecting the title to the same restrictions to which plaintiff's title was subjected. These promises, plaintiff alleges, were made by the defendant Trumbull without intent to perform and with intent to defraud plaintiff and induce her to accept title subject to the restrictions set forth. It is then alleged that by deed dated February 7, 1923, of which a copy is likewise annexed to the complaint, the defendant Trumbull and her husband conveyed lots 1 to 6 in said block 1, together with other lots in the Casitas tract, to the defendant McFadden, without any restrictions whatever.

The second count sets forth the same averments, and in addition alleges that by reason of defendant Trumbull's promises plaintiff was induced to and did pay $500 more for her lot than she would have paid but for the promises made; and, further, that by the conveyance of lots 1 to 6 to McFadden, without restrictions, the value of plaintiff's lots has been injured in the amount of $500. Plaintiff prays for both actual and exemplary damages against defendant Trumbull, and further prays for a decree that her lot be freed from the restrictions imposed by the terms of her deed.

While defendants Trumbull and McFadden joined in the demurrer, yet they demurred therein separately as well as jointly to the entire complaint and to each separate count. The grounds of demurrer are that in neither count is a cause of action stated against either defendant; that there is a misjoinder of causes, in that a cause of action for damages is joined with a cause of action for reformation of the deed to plaintiff; and that the defendant McFadden is improperly joined as a defendant in the action with the defendant Trumbull.

[1-6] So far as the defendant McFadden is concerned, his general demurrer was well taken. The second count of the complaint seeks damages from the defendant Trumbull, but no damages are demanded of McFadden; nor does the complaint contain any allegations on which to base any claim against him for damages. The first count does not state a case for reformation of the deed, though the demurrer seems so to view that count. It really is aimed at quieting title against the restrictions in plaintiff's deed, but, there being no mention in the deed of any other lots to be benefited by the restrictions, there is neither privity of estate nor privity of contract between plaintiff and the defendant McFadden, and no equitable servitude is in fact imposed on plaintiff's property in favor of any of the other lots in the block. Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945; McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 215 P. 678. As a matter of law, McFadden is a stranger to the restrictions in plaintiff's deed, and there is nothing in the complaint indicating that he has asserted any claim that the restrictions are for the benefit of any of his lots, or that he is in any way interested in their enforcement. Thus no cause of action was stated in either count against McFadden, and he was improperly joined as a defendant. His demurrer was therefore properly sustained.

[7, 8] It is otherwise, however, as to the defendant Trumbull. Her demurrer admits not only that the promises alleged were made in order to induce plaintiff to buy lot 7, but that they were made without intent to perform; and the deed to McFadden shows that, in conveying to him lots 1 to 6, defendant Trumbull did not keep her promises. Hence the second count does state a cause of action for damages against her.

[9] In the first count it is made to appear that at the time when lot 7 of block 1 was deeded to plaintiff subject to restrictions, defendant Trumbull also owned lots 1 to 6; and while no reversionary right is reserved in the deed to plaintiff, the grantors did reserve for themselves, their successors, or assigns the right to enjoin, abate, or remedy by appropriate proceedings any breach of any of the restrictions. The right so reserved would be enforceable, in the absence of fraud, while the defendant Trumbull remained owner of the adjoining lots; but after she had parted with the property which would derive benefit from a continuance of the restrictions, she would have no standing, in a court of equity at least, to complain of a breach. Forman v. Sadler's Ex'rs, 114 Md. 574, 80 A. 298; Genung v. Harvey, 79 N. J. Eq. 57, 80 A. 955.

[10] In this case not only is it alleged that the defendant Trumbull has parted with the adjoining lots, but for purposes of demurrer it is admitted that the restrictions were introduced into the deed to plaintiff through fraudulent promises. Section 1572, Civ. Code, subd. 4. In this respect the case differs from Currie v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 60 Cal. App. 192, 212 P. 409, cited in the respondents' brief. The restrictions are described in the deed as conditions and not as covenants; but whether treated as one or the other, if they were incorporated in the deed through promises made by defendant Trumbull without intent to keep them, they could afford no right of action to her, either in a court of equity or a court of law.

gal grounds for relief through quieting plaintiff's title against the defendant Trumbull. It is intimated in the brief of respondents that though McFadden's deed was without restrictions, yet there is nothing in the complaint to negative the possibility that there may have been a separate restrictive agreement between him and the defendant Trumbull. If such should be the case, it would be a matter to be pleaded in defense. The complaint alleges that the lots deeded to McFadden were conveyed without any restrictions as to their use.

[12-14] So far as the joinder of the two causes of action, one to quiet title and the other to recover damages, is concerned, both causes arose out of the same transaction and are connected with the same subject of action. Joinder is therefore permissible, under subdivision 8 of section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is the disposition of the courts to give this subdivision a liberal construction, to the end that closely related controversies between the same parties may be adjudicated at one time. Provided the causes are all connected with the same transaction or subject of action, the complaint may include causes legal and equitable, ex contractu and ex delicto. Macowsky v. Irvine, 71 Cal. App. 77, 234 P. 839. Other illustrations of the application of the rule are exhibited in Boulden v. Thompson, 21 Cal. App. 279, 131 P. 765; Morris v. Judkins, 36 Cal. App. 413, 172 P. 163; Espinosa v. Stuart, 52 Cal. App. 477, 199 P. 66, and Barberich v. Pooshichian, 59 Cal. App. 507, 211 P. 236.

[15] The demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of the defendant McFadden, while available to him, did not furnish the defendant Trumbull with a valid objection to the complaint. The action properly lies against the defendant Trumbull; and her interests not being affected by the joinder of McFadden as a codefendant, it was not open to her to demur for misjoinder of parties. Gardner v. Samuels, 116 Cal. 84, 90, 47 P. 935, 58 Am. St. Rep. 135; Madary v. City of Fresno, 20 Cal. App. 91, 98, 128 P. 340.

The demurrer of the defendant Trumbull should have been overruled on all the grounds specified.

The judgment in favor of the defendant McFadden is affirmed, but the judgment in favor of the defendant Trumbull is reversed.

ANDREWS v. METZNER et al. (Civ. 5792.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 14, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 14, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 916(1)—In support of judgment abating action for partition of real property, appellate court must presume petition was filed after decree of partial distribution was delivered to courtroom clerk in another action (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1704, as amended by St. 1921, p. 105).

In support of judgment abating action for partition of real property, appellate court must assume that complaint was filed after entry of decree of partial distribution to courtroom clerk in another action, though such decree was not received at main office of county clerk until later, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1704, as amended by St. 1921, p. 105.

2. Records $\S$ 7—Paper is filed of record, when delivered to proper official with intention that it should become part of official record (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1704, as amended by St. 1921, p. 105).

Paper is filed of record, within Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1704, as amended by St. 1921, p. 105, in contemplation of law, when it is delivered to proper official with intention that it should become part of official record, and filing thus made is not impaired by clerk's failure or refusal, without good cause, to receive and record it as filed in records of office.

3. Counties $\S$ 82—Authority of deputy county clerk is coextensive with that of principal.

Authority of deputy county clerk is coextensive with that of his principal in performance of his duties.

4. Evidence $\S$ 83(6)—It is presumed that official duty of county clerk of courts and deputy has been regularly performed (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 14; Pol. Code, $\S$ 4024; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 15).

It is presumed that official duty of clerk of superior court, acting as county clerk of courts, under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 14, and of deputy appointed, under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4024, has been regularly performed, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 15.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Action by Matilda Andrews against Josephine Metzner and others for partition of real property. From a judgment abating the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Durbrow and Frank B. Austin, both of San Francisco, and Eugene S. Selvage, of Eureka, for appellants.

Vogelsang & Brown, Bert Schlesinger and Bradford M. Melvin, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco abating this action on the ground that when it was commenced there was another action pending in the same jurisdiction, based upon the same cause and contested by the same parties in the trial court; the prior action being numbered 146986, and that under discussion 146989. There is no question that the complaint in action 146986 was filed with the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco prior to the filing of the complaint in action 146989; both filings being made upon the same day and within a period of time not exceeding one hour of that day.

Both actions are in partition for the purpose of partitioning or selling 17 parcels of land of a value admitted to be in excess of $1,000,000 situated in several counties of California, which were formerly owned by one James K. Prior, Sr., who died testate on March 22, 1905. On August 3, 1906, the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco distributed the interest of James K. Prior, Sr., in the properties herein involved to the surviving wife of deceased, Mary Prior, and certain sons and daughters of deceased; the proportions in which the properties were distributed being in accordance with an understanding had between the distributees prior to the distribution. Mary Prior died testate on October 14, 1922, and her will was admitted to probate and letters testamentary thereon issued to James K. Prior, Jr., and Toney Prior on November 29, 1922.

After due proceedings had on May 22, 1924, a decree of partial distribution of all the interest of Mary Prior in these 17 parcels of land was made to the devisees of Mary Prior by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; the hearings thereon being held, and said decree being made, in department No. 9 of the said superior court.

The plaintiff, Matilda Andrews, in action No. 146989, is a daughter of James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior, and the other defendants are other children and grandchildren of said James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior. In action No. 146986 plaintiffs are four of the children of said James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior, and the defendants are Matilda Andrews (plaintiff in action 146989) and other children and grandchildren of said James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior.

By their amended answer the defendants in action 146989 set up as a special plea and defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint that, at the time of the filing of the complaint, there was another action pending in the above-entitled court between the same parties to partition the same real property described in the complaint; such action referred to being known and designated as No. 146986 of actions on file and pending in the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco. Attached to this special plea and defense and made a part thereof was a copy of the complaint in action No. 146986. It was also alleged in the said special plea and defense that said action is still pending and has not been determined.

As their relief in action 146989 defendants ask judgment that said action be abated. When the action came on for trial in the superior court defendants offered, and there was received in evidence in support of their plea in abatement, the original files and records of the county clerk's office of the city and county of San Francisco, relating to the two actions. These files showed that the complaint in action 146986 was filed on the 22d of May, 1924, and a summons issued on said date, and that the complaint in action 146989 was filed on May 22, 1924, and the summons issued on said date. The complaints in both actions were also introduced and read in evidence, and on this evidence defendants submitted their pleas for abatement of the action.

Thereupon, against the objections of defendants, plaintiff was permitted to introduce verbal evidence of the proceedings which occurred in department No. 9 of the superior court in relation to a decree of partial distribution made in that department of said superior court on the morning of May 22, 1924, in the matter of the estate of Mary Prior, deceased. The purpose of the evidence was declared by counsel for plaintiff to show that the complaint in action 146986 was filed before the signing and filing of the decree for partial distribution in the estate of Mary Prior. Upon the conclusion of the evidence offered the court granted defendants' motion to abate the action and thereafter made the following findings and conclusions of law, to wit:

"(1) That at the time of the filing of the complaint herein and the commencement of this action there was, and still is, another action pending in said court between all of the same parties above named in the title to this action to partition the same real property described in the complaint herein and embracing the same subject-matter set out, contained in, and embraced within the complaint herein, and that the remedies and relief prayed for in both said actions are identical.

"(2) The first-named action, so brought and referred to, was and is known and designated as No. 146986 of actions on file and pending in said superior court; such last-named action is still pending in said court, and has not been determined.

"And as conclusions of law from the foregoing facts, the court finds that said defendants James K. Prior, Jr., Lester F. Prior, Toney Prior, and Josephine Metzner are entitled to judgment that said action numbered 146989 abate. Let judgment be entered accordingly.

"Dated: August 14, 1924."

On these findings judgment was on the same date given "that said action No. 146989 abate and the same is hereby abated."

Appellant claims that the evidence offered in its behalf on the hearing on respondents' plea of abatement shows that action No. 146986 was commenced prematurely; that it was error to abate action No. 146989; and that the judgment abating said action should be reversed. In support of this contention appellant relies upon the provisions of section 1704 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading as follows:

"Orders and decrees made by the court or a judge thereof, in probate proceedings, need not recite the existence of facts, or the performance of acts, upon which the jurisdiction of the court or judge may depend, but it shall only be necessary that they contain the matters ordered, or adjudged, except as otherwise provided in this title. All orders and decrees of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute book of the court, or must be signed by the judge and filed; but decrees of distribution must always be so entered at length." Amendment approved May 16, 1921, Stats. 1921, p. 105.

[1] The evidence taken at the trial and relied upon by appellant is in many respects contradictory and unsatisfactory, but it is apparent therefrom that on the morning of May 22, 1924, department No. 9 of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco had pending therein for determination by Hon. Frank H. Dunne, the judge thereof, a petition for the partial distribution to the devisees of Mary Prior, deceased, of the interests of said Mary Prior at the time of her death in and to a portion of the properties involved in these actions under consideration; that said matter was heard by the judge of said superior court, evidence being offered in support of the plea for distribution, at the close of which the judge said, "Decree granted"; that thereupon the formal written decree of partial distribution, which had been prepared in advance, and examined and agreed to by all the attorneys for the parties interested in said estate, was presented by one of the attorneys to the courtroom clerk of Judge Dunne's court, who thereupon presented the same to Judge Dunne for his examination and signature; that Judge Dunne thereupon examined and affixed his signature to said partial decree of distribution and delivered the same into the custody of the courtroom clerk of said court. All these proceedings took place and occurred in open court in the courtroom of department No. 9 of the superior court in the city and county of San Francisco at a regular session of the same. As to just what the courtroom clerk did with this document after its delivery to him the record is not clear. Some few minutes thereafter the evidence shows that it was received at the main office of the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and that at this time, and not before, the filing mark showing the day and date of filing was placed upon the document by one of the deputy county clerks in such main office. It cannot be determined from the evidence that at the time the decree of distribution was delivered by Judge Dunne to the courtroom clerk that the complaint in action 146986 had been filed in the office of the county clerk. In support of the judgment of the trial court, we must assume that it had not been when the record does not speak to the contrary. Adopting that assumption, it follows that the trial court decided correctly in abating action No. 146989.

[2] The construction sought to be placed by the appellants upon the word "filed" as used in section 1704, Code of Civil Procedure, is not justified by the many decisions in relation to the meaning of this word that have been made by the appellate courts of this jurisdiction and of other states.

"A paper in a case is said to be filed when it is delivered to the clerk and received by him, to be kept with the papers in the cause. * * * Filing a paper consists in presenting it at the proper office, and leaving it there, deposited with the papers in such office. Indorsing it at the time of filing is not a necessary part of filing. When filed, it is considered an exhibition of it to the court, and the clerk's office in which it is filed represents the court for that purpose." Tregambo v. Comanche, M. & M. Co., 57 Cal. 501.

"A paper is filed of record, in contemplation of law, when it is delivered to the proper official with the intention that it shall become part of an official record, and the filing thus made is not impaired by the clerk's failure or refusal, without good cause, to receive and record the same as filed in the records of his office." Estate of Carroll, 190 Cal. 105, 210 P. 817; Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 344, 21 P. 15, 23 P. 314; Howell v. Slauson, 83 Cal. 539, 23 P. 692; Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 P. 58; Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 254, 53 P. 796; Thomason v. Carroll, 132 Cal. 148, 64 P. 262; Hoyt v. Stark, 134 Cal. 178, 66 P. 223, 86 Am. St. Rep. 246; Dillon v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. App. 760, 142 P. 503; People v. Marsh, 30 Cal. App. 424, 159 P. 191; Keller v. Gerber, 49 Cal. App. 515, 193 P. 809; Hart v. Forgeus, 184 Cal. 327, 193 P. 764; Reed v. Curry, 35 Ill. 536; Grubbs v. Cones, 57 Mo. 83; Bensley v. Haeberle, 20 Mo. App. 648; Poole v. Poindexter, 72 Kan. 654, 83 P. 126; White Co. v. Winton, 41 Cal. App. 693, 183 P. 277.

In the case of Keller v. Gerber, 49 Cal. App. 515, 193 P. 809, in discussing the functions of deputy county clerks, it is said:

"In our opinion each department of the superior court is necessarily a court, and the clerk of each department is the clerk of that court. There is nothing in sections 4178 and 4312 of the Political Code that militates against this conclusion. These sections defining the duties of the county clerk require that he have an office at the county seat and that in such office during the hours from 9 o'clock a. m. until 5 o'clock p. m. of each day in the year, except Sundays and holidays, there shall be present at least one person qualified and prepared to transact the business that may properly come into said office. But neither of said sections supports the contention of appellant that the main, central office, where the permanent records are kept, is the sole and exclusive office of the county clerk. In our opinion every courtroom in which a deputy county clerk is assigned under the law is as much a part of the county clerk's office as if the partitions were removed and it was in fact a part of one room."

[3, 4] The clerk of the superior court is a constitutional officer made ex officio clerk of the courts of record of his county. Const., art. 6, § 14. He may appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Section 4024, Pol. Code. The authority of a deputy county clerk is coextensive with that of his principal in the performance of his duties. Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150, 81 Am. Dec. 108. It is presumed that official duty has been regularly performed. Subdivision 15, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.

In view of the fact that it must be held from the record presented that the action of the trial court in abating action No. 146989 was correct, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the other questions presented by appellant on this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITWORTH et al. v. FERNANDEZ. ★
(Civ. 4466.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. June 8, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1927.

1. Adverse possession ☞89—Claimant of title by adverse possession as against holder of record title must show payment of taxes for five consecutive years during possession.

In order to establish title by adverse possession of land, record title of which is in another, claimant must prove payment of taxes for a period of at least five consecutive years during possession.

2. Adverse possession ☞95—Evidence failing to show payment of taxes for five consecutive years held insufficient to show title by adverse possession.

Evidence failing to show payment of taxes for five consecutive years during possession held insufficient to establish title by adverse possession to lands involved as against holder of record title.

3. Deeds ☞121—That deed is one of quitclaim does not militate against its effectiveness.

The fact that a deed is only one of quitclaim does not militate against its validity or effectiveness.

4. Quieting title ☞10(2)—Owner of equitable interest cannot maintain suit to quiet title against owner of record title.

The owner of an equitable interest cannot maintain a suit to quiet title against the owner of the record title.

5. Quieting title ☞10(2)—Plaintiffs, in suit to quiet title, held not entitled to judgment on theory that they had acquired equitable title superior to defendant's legal title by deed from common grantor.

Where plaintiffs in suit to quiet title established that quitclaim deed from common grantor under which defendant claimed was given without consideration and pursuant to an oral agreement that defendant would divide up amount of any settlement which he succeeded in making with plaintiffs, and produced a quitclaim deed from common grantor to them subsequent to defendant's deed, held plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment on theory that defendant's deed conveyed legal title only and left equitable title in common grantor to which title plaintiffs had succeeded, in view of rule that holder of equitable title cannot maintain suit to quiet title against holder of record title.

6. Quieting title ☞52—Plaintiffs failing to establish title by adverse possession held not entitled to judgment on theory that deed was uncertain and that parties had mutually agreed on correct line.

Plaintiffs in suit to quiet title having failed to establish title by adverse possession relied upon held not entitled to judgment on theory that deed to them from common grantor was uncertain and that parties had mutually agreed upon the correct line, where description of deed was not on its face ambiguous and where evidence showed that boundary line was free from doubt.

7. Appeal and error ☞1071(6)—Absence of finding to support judgment is fatal, where evidence is such that finding would likely be adverse.

Lack of any finding to support judgment is fatal, where the evidence is such as to indicate that finding would not support judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Suit by James C. Whitworth and others against Michael M. Fernandez and certain fictitious defendants. From a judgment for plaintiffs, named defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. De La Monte and Walter W. Little, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Kilgore, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiffs and respondents instituted this proceeding against the appellant and several fictitious defendants for the purpose of quieting title to real property situated in the city of Los Angeles and described in the complaint as all of lot 13 of the Whitworth tract, and those portions of the Preuss road on the west and Pico street on the south within the present fence lines, which lies south of a line described by metes and bounds, and all of lot 13 of said tract and that portion of the Preuss road on the west lying within the present fence lines and such street line. The plaintiffs alleged that they and their predecessors in interest had been in actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse possession of all of said lot 13, including the land embraced within the present fence lines, continuously for a period of 20 years next preceding the commencement of their action, and that they had paid all of the taxes of every kind and nature levied or assessed thereon continuously for a period of 5 years last past immediately preceding the filing of the complaint.

Defendant, Fernandez, by answer and cross-complaint denied the foregoing allegations upon the ground of lack of knowledge or information sufficient to enable him to answer as to ownership of portions of lot 13, and denied the payment of taxes on the whole of said land, or any part of it, for a period of 5 years, or that the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest had been in actual, open, notorious, exclusive, or adverse possession thereof. The defendant affirmatively alleged that by a good and sufficient deed of conveyance from Christopher Greve and Emily Greve, dated February 15, 1915, he acquired title to, and that he had ever since been the owner and entitled to possession of, lands in the Rancho de las Aguas, consisting (1) of those portions of lot No. 1 lying north of Pico street, not included in tract No. 470, or in that portion of lot No. 1 theretofore deeded by Greve to Joseph Whitworth, defendant's parcel being the easterly 42.1 feet of lot No. 13 described in the complaint; and (2) a parcel consisting of a portion of lot No. 13 described and claimed by the plaintiffs, and commencing at the northeasterly corner thereof, which also was described by metes and bounds. By cross-complaint Fernandez alleged that these two parcels had been owned continuously by Christopher Greve and himself for a period of 35 years, and prayed a decree quieting title thereto. An answer to the cross-complaint was interposed, which, among other things, alleged that the deed of February 15, 1915, was one of quitclaim only, and conveyed no right, title, or interest in the lands therein described to the cross-complainant.

The land in controversy consists of a strip 42.1 feet wide on Pico street, and extending northerly therefrom a distance of 298.32 feet. No evidence appears to have been offered concerning the second parcel described by the defendant, and it therefore should not have been made the subject of a finding on behalf of the plaintiffs.

The case was tried by the court, and findings and judgment were rendered in favor of the plaintiffs. It was found that on the 15th day of February, 1915, Christopher Greve and Emily Greve, his wife, executed to Michael M. Fernandez their quitclaim deed, and that the same was recorded on the 11th day of July, 1916, in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county, but that no consideration was received by the Greves for the execution and delivery of the deed, and that it was made pursuant to an oral agreement by the terms of which Fernandez was to endeavor to secure a settlement from the Whitworths without filing an action at law or in equity, and that the Greves were to receive one-half of any sum which might be received by Fernandez in such settlement, and, further, "that by reason of said agreement Fernandez became a trustee for and in favor of Christopher Greve and Emily Greve, his wife." Evidence was received over objections of the defendants tending to show that in 1922 Emily Greve and the heirs of Christopher Greve executed to the respondents a quitclaim deed of the land in question, which the court found to be a fact.

The defendant appeals from the judgment upon the alleged grounds that the uncontradicted evidence shows plaintiffs' land under their purchase from Greve to have been 42.1 feet westerly from the line upon which the judgment awarded them was erroneously based; that defendant's property lay between the "three acres, more or less," belonging to the Whitworths and the westerly line of the lands of Greve, their common grantor; that the plaintiffs had paid no taxes upon appellant's 42.1 feet, except as hereinafter noted; and that the latter's line had never been disputed.

[1, 2] The respondents' first claim to the strip of land in dispute is that of adverse possession. Without stating the evidence in detail it is sufficient to say that the finding of the court to the effect that they had been in actual possession for a period of 20 years has sufficient support in the record to be sustained. The appellant has record title to the same property, and it is essential to the respondents' success in maintaining their claim that they prove payment by them of the taxes for a period of at least five consecutive years during the time that they had possession.

It appears that in 1883 the Greves conveyed to respondents certain lands lying westerly of and adjacent to the westerly line of the 42.1 feet in controversy, but that for a period of about 30 years they occupied and cultivated all of the land lying between their westerly line and the easterly line of said strip. Public records, including the tax assessments, described the respondents' property as "three acres," or, at times, "three acres, more or less." In 1910 a map of a new tract embracing Greve's easterly lands, and known as lot A, tract 470, was recorded. The tax records show that all of the lands lying easterly of respondents' "three acres" were assessed to Greve from 1901 to 1911, and that he paid the taxes thereon, and that from 1911 to the date of the filing of this suit the strip of 42.1 feet lying between said "three acres, more or less," and tract 470 was assessed to, and the taxes thereon were paid by, Christopher Greve or his surviving widow. We are unable to find in the record evidence tending to show that the respondents paid taxes upon the strip of land in controversy, except during the years 1916, 1917, and 1918, when they had also been theretofore paid by the Greves. Therefore respondents failed to sustain their allegations of adverse possession, and the findings of the court in that behalf are unsupported by the evidence. They contend that appellant's quitclaim deed of 1915 was without consideration, and conveyed no right, title, or interest in the property therein described.

[3-5] That the deed was only one of quitclaim does not militate against the validity. "A quitclaim deed is as efficient to transfer title as a grant, bargain and sale deed. Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341, 344; Myers v. City of Oceanside, 7 Cal. App. 87, 93 P. 686." Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892. But it is argued that the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree sought upon another theory. If the deed to Fernandez in 1915 was intended by the parties to convey only the legal title, reserving, by reason of the terms of an oral agreement, the equitable ownership in the Greves and thus creating a trust in their favor, by which Fernandez became the trustee, it is insisted that the Greves could have maintained this action, and that the quitclaim deed of Emily Greve and the heirs of Christopher Greve to the Whitworths executed May 27, 1922, served to transfer all of the interest of the grantors to the grantees; hence, that through the last-named deed respondents became the owners of the property in question, even though they had not acquired title to it through adverse possession. This claim is squarely condemned by numerous decisions in this state, which have definitely established the rule to be that the owner of an equitable interest cannot maintain a suit to quiet title against the owner of the record title. Aalwyn's Law Inst. v. Martin, 173 Cal. 21, 159 P. 158; Buchner v. Malloy, 155 Cal. 253, 100 P. 687; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 P. 521; Chase v. Cameron, 133 Cal. 281, 65 P. 460 (declaring that the rule above stated is elementary); McDonald v. McCoy, 121 Cal. 55, 53 P. 421; Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 664, 31 P. 565; Tuffree v. Polhemus, 108 Cal. 670, 41 P. 806;

In Harrigan v. Mowry, supra, it was held that an action to quiet title will not lie in favor of the owner of the equitable interest for whom the legal title is held in trust, because the legal title of the trustee is not adverse to the equitable title of the beneficiary. It was further said that if the holder of the equitable interest "was entitled to a conveyance of the legal title, and that defendant wrongfully refused to convey it," a suit to quiet title under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not proper nor even permissible. We cannot hold the instant case to be within the exception to the rule upheld in De Leonis v. Hammel, supra, and Cummings v. Cummings, 55 Cal. App. 433, 203 P. 452, which permits an action to quiet title to be maintained by the holder of the equitable title against the legal title owner where the complaint alleges facts on which a plaintiff's equitable claim is based and where general relief is demanded; for the record before us shows that neither in the complaint nor in the answer to the cross-complaint was any attempt made to state the existence of an oral agreement accompanying the execution of the quitclaim deed to Fernandez, which alone provided a foundation for the court's finding that the last-named deed conveyed no legal title, and that Fernandez became a trustee for Christopher and Emily Greve. The objections which were made to the introduction of testimony concerning this oral agreement should have been sustained, since under the pleadings that evidence was irrelevant. In cases of this nature our decisions have consistently adhered to the rule that an action to quiet title is not the proper remedy, but that such equities as the plaintiff may possess are properly protected and enforced in an action for the declaration of a trust and to compel a conveyance.

[6] Respondents most earnestly urge that the judgment of the trial court should be sustained upon the theory that the original deed from the Greves to the Whitworths in 1883 was uncertain; that there was an uncertainty as to the easterly boundary line of the land granted; and that the parties mutually agreed upon the fence as the correct line. There are several reasons why the respondents cannot prevail through this course of reasoning. There is no allegation in the complaint nor in the answer to the cross-complaint of uncertainty as to the boundary line or that the parties, because of such uncertainty or otherwise, agreed upon this particular fence as the correct line. Even assuming that in a suit to quiet title the relief sought might properly be granted without pleading the facts constituting the true source of title, where its origin is otherwise alleged, respondents' case on appeal upon this theory is fatally defective for the reason that the facts relied upon are not found by the trial court. According to the findings, respondents' title is based upon the deed of 1883, followed by adverse possession and the payment of taxes. There is no finding of uncertainty as to the boundary line, and nothing to the effect that the parties recognized such uncertainty or believed that it existed, and consequently came together and stipulated to an acceptance of a boundary line. If the findings that respondents derived their title from the Greves through the deed of 1883 and through subsequent adverse possession be discarded as unsupported by the evidence, which they must be, and if the findings concerning the respondents having received title through the quitclaim deed of 1922 be also disregarded because the grantors had no title to convey, having previously granted their legal interest to Fernandez, and that a suit to quiet title cannot be maintained by the owner of the equitable title against the holder of the legal title, there remains no finding upon which judgment for the respondents can be predicated. We then have a judgment without a finding to support it.

The proposition that respondents are the owners of this land because of an agreement as to the boundary line made to settle an uncertainty existing as to its true location involves different facts than those otherwise found by the court. It reveals a source of title wholly distinguishable from adverse possession and the payment of taxes, for the latter presupposes a grant to the present owner or his predecessors, while the former results from the application of the doctrine of estoppel. Clapp v. Churchill, 164 Cal. 741, 130 P. 1061.

[7] In deciding this phase of the case, the judgment cannot be upheld upon the principle that, although no finding is made supporting the judgment, if the evidence was such that had a finding been made it must have supplied that support, the judgment will not be reversed, for here there is such evidence to indicate that the description contained in the deed was definite and certain, and but little tending to the conclusion that any uncertainty exists in it. Under such circumstances the lack of any finding is fatal. The description in the deed in question reads:

"All that certain lot and parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the Rodeo de las Aguas, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and bounded and particular described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the southwest corner of the land now owned by Jas. A. Whitworth and being one of the corners of lot number two (2) of the Rancho de las Aguas as recorded on page 572 book one (1) of the Miscellaneous Records of Los Angeles county; thence following the north line of lot number two (2) east 6.76 chains; thence south 4.52 chains to the north side of county road; thence north 76° 54' W. along north side of county road 7.94 chains to a stake, thence N. 2° 21' east 4.48 chains to the place of beginning, containing three (3) acres of land more or less."

Considering this language alone, we find no ambiguity. However, respondents insist that the point of beginning is uncertain. In his brief their counsel has expressly stated that "the only question and uncertainty in the deed therefore is as to the easterly boundary line," but during the trial he stipulated that the easterly boundary line as described in the deed is 42 feet westerly from the fence and row of trees alleged by respondents to indicate the true line. This stipulation, regarded in connection with the definiteness of the other three lines, would seem without further inquiry to preclude the claim as to uncertainty in the easterly boundary line. The witness Wheeler, as surveyor, called by the defendant, testified that he located the point of beginning as designated in the deed. To do so he used the county surveyor's official map, as well as the description in the deed, and also the notes in the county surveyor's office. From the latter he found a reference to a certain stone in Pico street, which he located, and, using it as a basis of calculation, was enabled to arrive at the southwest corner of the Whitworth land. From there on the witness apparently found no difficulty in measuring according to the deed and in establishing all the boundary lines of the property conveyed. This witness' testimony, if true, would be sufficient to establish the fact that the boundary line in question was free from doubt. Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285, 18 N. W. 175. There was other evidence tending to the same conclusion. Upon the question as to whether or not Christopher Greve and the respondents' predecessor agreed upon the fence and row of trees as the true boundary line between their properties, there is also some conflict, although one witness testified directly that Greve told him that such an agreement had been made. But since a clear conflict exists in the evidence as to whether or not there was in fact any uncertainty in the line in question, as to whether the parties actually entered into an agreement as to such line, and, also, if they did, as to whether or not they made the agreement arbitrarily or because they believed that there was a doubt on the subject (and upon the latter point the evidence is most meager), without a finding upon these facts the judgment cannot be sustained upon the doctrine of an agreed boundary line based upon actual or supposed doubt as to its location.

We conclude that the findings and judgment below are not supported by the evidence. As to the strip of 42.1 feet, the judgment should have been for the defendant. As to the other portion, no evidence having been introduced, neither party was entitled to judgment.

The judgment is reversed.

LOST BURROS GOLD MINING CO. v. INYO COUNTY BANK. (Civ. 5214.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 9, 1927.

1. Execution ⇐283—Evidence held to sustain finding that debtor corporation was owner through sale of plaintiff corporation's assets, in action to quiet title against purchaser at execution sale.

In action by corporation to quiet title to property taken by defendant under attachment and purchased by it on execution under judgment against another corporation, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that other corporation was, in fact, owner by reason of sale to it of all of stock and property of plaintiff.

2. Execution ⇐283—Defense that transfer of corporation's property was not formally assented to held not available, in transferor's action against purchaser at execution sale (Civ. Code, § 361a).

In action by corporation to quiet title to property sold defendant on execution, under judgment against another corporation, fact that property involved was never legally transferred by plaintiff to the other corporation because of failure to attach written consent of stockholders or to hold stockholders' meeting, under Civ. Code, § 361a, was not available, where sale was in effect consented to by officers and stockholders and no creditor is involved.

3. Corporations ⇐182—Only stockholders and creditors of selling corporation can object to mode of transfer of corporation's property (Civ. Code, § 361a).

Civ. Code, § 361a, requiring written consent of stockholders or vote at stockholders' meeting in connection with transfer or conveyance of corporation's property or business as a whole, was enacted for benefit of stockholders and creditors of selling corporation, and they alone have right to object to mode of transfer.

4. Execution ⇐283—Corporation which sold property and was controlled by transferee could not complain of mode of transfer, in action against purchaser at execution sale (Civ. Code, § 361a).

Corporation, all of whose property had been sold, could not complain that manner and mode in which its property was taken did not comply with Civ. Code, § 361a, in action by it, at instigation of transferee corporation, to quiet title to such property against purchaser at execution sale, under judgment against transferee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Lost Burros Gold Mining Company against the Inyo County Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Scherrer, of Riverside, and Hugh Henry Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Richard S. Miner, of Independence, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to quiet title. The property involved consists of a group of quartz mining locations in Inyo county, this state, together with a milling and reduction plant situate thereon. The sole question at issue in the court below was whether the mine and mill were the corporate assets and property of plaintiff, Lost Burros Gold Mining Company, or whether the same belonged to the Montana-Tonopah Mines Company, at the time defendant acquired the property under an execution sale. The trial court found, in effect, that the property was vested in the Montana company, and it is here claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence.

[1] The record is somewhat voluminous. Briefly summarized, it shows that the Montana company negotiated with one Frank Campbell, of Inyo county, for the purchase of an auto truck to be used in handling supplies for the Lost Burros mill at an agreed price. The sale was completed and Campbell drew two bills of exchange on the Montana company for the purchase price, payable to the Inyo County Bank. On December 30, 1916, the Montana company indorsed its acceptance on the bills, payable 90 days from date. The Inyo Bank discounted the paper. Subsequently the Montana company refused to pay. Suit was thereupon brought against it in Inyo county. A writ of attachment was served on the Lost Burros property on the theory that it was owned by the Montana company. Judgment went in favor of plaintiff bank. Execution issued, and the attached property was sold to the bank, and a sheriff's deed issued to it. Thereupon Lost Burros Mining Company, claiming to be the sole owner of the property, brought this present action against the bank to quiet title to the same. The question presented on appeal is whether the findings of the trial court, to the effect that the Montana company was the owner, are supported by the evidence. There is evidence to show that the Lost Burros Gold Mining Company was incorporated by one W. D. Blackmer and others under the laws of the state of California in May, 1914. The amount of its authorized capital stock was $50,000, and the number of shares into which it was divided was 50,000, of the par value of $1 each. In July, 1916, the outstanding stock of the company consisted of 40,000 shares, which were owned by one Blackmer and others. One Badgett began negotiations with Blackmer and the other stockholders for options to purchase their holdings in the company. The rights acquired by Badgett and his associates were assigned to the Montana-Tonopah Mines Company, it being the intention of the latter company to acquire the property in dispute herein, either through the purchase of stock or by purchase of the lands, and it entered into certain contractual relations with both of these ends in view. It succeeded in acquiring all of the stock in the Lost Burros Company, and the company executed a deed conveying its real estate to a Mr. Knox, who was president of the Montana company, presumably for the benefit of such company. This deed was never recorded. There was also evidence to show that the Montana company paid $40,000 in cash for the stock and property thus acquired, and that it took possession of such stock and all of the property of the corporation in the year 1918, and subsequently paid the taxes thereon. At the time of the attachment, the property was in the possession of and was being operated by the Montana company, which had expended some $103,000 in the development thereof. Other evidence shows that the Lost Burros Company, ever since the acquisition of its property by the Montana company, was simply an instrumentality, conduit, and adjunct of the latter corporation. We do not consider a further recital of the facts necessary.

[2, 3] We have read the record carefully and the evidence upon this subject, together with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, fully support the findings of the trial court that the property of the Lost Burros Company was, by reason of its sale, completely vested in the Montana company. Appellant makes the further contention that, even conceding this to be true, the Lost Burros Company never legally transferred its property to the purchasing corporation for the reason that none of the documents purporting to convey the title of the property complied with section 361a of the Civil Code. This legislative restriction provides, in substance, that no sale, lease, assignment, transfer, or conveyance of the business, franchise, and property, as a whole, of any corporation shall be valid without the consent of stockholders thereof, holding of record at least two-thirds of the issued capital stock of such corporation; such consent to be either expressed in (1) writing, executed and acknowledged by such stockholders and attached to such sale, lease, assignment, transfer or conveyance, or (2) by a vote at a stockholders' meeting of such corporation called for that purpose; but with such assent, so expressed, such sale shall be valid. Here there was no consent of any kind attached to the conveyance, the provision being ignored when the sale was made. We are of the opinion that, notwithstanding that the parties failed to follow the formal method of alienation directed by the statute, that plaintiff is in no position to raise this question.

Here it affirmatively appears that all of its officers and stockholders and every one concerned in the transfer agreed to the sale, and no question of the rights of any creditor is here involved. No one having any connection with the Lost Burros Company at the time of the sale being injuriously affected, an observance of the section in question was not imperative. The legislative restriction in question was enacted for the benefit of stockholders and creditors of a selling corporation, and they alone have a right to object to the mode of transfer. South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 579-584, 93 P. 490.

[4] It is clearly apparent from the record that this action was instituted for the benefit of the Montana corporation in an effort by it to repossess itself of property which it owned and which had been sold for the payment of its debt, and to carry out this purpose it was using, as an instrumentality, a practically defunct corporation which it owned and controlled, and which it maintained as a separate entity as a mere adjunct or instrumentality for purposes of its own. Under these circumstances, the purchased company is a mere empty shell which has no distinct corporate existence in contemplation of law, and it is therefore in no position to complain of the manner and mode in which it has been stripped of its property. 6 Cal. Jur. p. 591; Hunter v. Baker Motor Vehicle Co. (D. C.) 225 F. 1015. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the evidence fully supports the finding of the trial court that the Montana company was the owner of the land in question at the time of the sale, and that respondent acquired title thereto under its execution against said company. Any other conclusion would result in the perpetration of a fraud upon defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

INNER SHOE TIRE CO. v. TONDRO.
(Civ. 4750.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 9, 1927.

1. Evidence ⇨397(1)—Written contract cannot be modified or added to by extrinsic evidence.

Terms of written contract cannot be modified or added to by evidence extrinsic of writing.

2. Trial ⇨75—Permitting proof by incompetent evidence, without objection, waives question of admissibility.

Party, who permits fact to be proved by incompetent evidence, without objection thereto, waives all question of admissibility.

3. Appeal and error ⇨204(3)—Plaintiff, not objecting to admission of parol evidence varying written instrument, waived objection, and cannot raise question for first time on appeal.

Where plaintiff, suing for goods sold, permitted parol evidence tending to vary written contract to be admitted, without objection, he waived objection to its admissibility, and cannot raise question for first time on appeal.

4. Evidence ⇨460(11)—Representations contained in literature inducing purchase held properly admitted, where written order did not contain detailed description of goods sold.

Where written order of goods sold did not contain detailed description of goods, it was proper to show that buyer was induced to enter into agreement by representations contained in placards and literature shown by seller through its agent to buyer.

5. Sales ⇨426—Whether purchaser is barred from other relief by privilege of returning goods on breach of warranty depends on whether contract makes privilege exclusive remedy.

Whether privilege granted by contract of sale of returning goods on breach of warranty bars purchaser from other relief for breach depends on terms of contract which may make privilege exclusive and in lieu of all other remedies, or as additional to other remedies of purchaser.

6. Sales ⇨426—Privilege of returning goods on breach of warranty will be construed as alternative remedy, unless contract clearly indicates contrary intention.

Privilege given purchaser of returning goods on breach of warranty will be construed as an alternative remedy, unless contrary intention clearly appears from contract, since purchaser would otherwise be deprived of undisputed legal rights.

7. Sales ⇨426—Purchaser may return goods or claim damages for breach of warranty, where right to return is not expressly or by necessary construction exclusive remedy.

Where right to return goods on breach of warranty is not in terms or necessarily by construction exclusive of all other remedies, purchaser can elect between that relief and claim for damages; right of returning goods being merely a cumulative remedy.

8. Sales ⇨426—Purchaser held not confined exclusively to remedy of returning goods for breach of warranty under guaranty certificate providing that, if goods failed to give results represented, seller would furnish new goods free.

Under guaranty, providing that, if "Inner-shu" tire should fail to give results represented, seller agrees to furnish new one free of charge on receipt of old one prepaid with certificate of guaranty, purchaser was not obligated to return goods and was not confined exclusively to such remedy in case of breach of warranty.

9. Sales $\S$ 426—Contract will be construed most strongly against person furnishing guaranty, in case of doubt whether privilege of returning goods provided for in guaranty was intended as exclusive remedy.

Where there is doubt whether certificate of guaranty should be construed as confining purchaser exclusively to remedy of returning goods on breach of warranty provided for in guaranty certificate, contract will be construed most strongly against person furnishing guaranty certificate.

10. Sales $\S$ 266, 272—Manufacturer warranting goods to be perfect in material and workmanship held to have also impliedly warranted goods were free from undisclosed latent defects, and sound and merchantable (Civ. Code $\S$ 1769, 1771).

In sale by manufacturer to dealer of "Innershu" for tires expressly warranted to be perfect in material and workmanship and guaranteed to be blow-out proof, there was an implied warranty by manufacturer that goods were free from any latent defects not disclosed to buyer arising from process of manufacture, and that merchandise was sound and merchantable, as provided for under Civ. Code $\S$ 1769, 1771, in addition to express warranty which was not inconsistent with implied warranty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Inner Shoe Tire Company against W. A. Tondro, doing business as the Valley Auto Supply Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for appellant.

Dorsey Whitelaw, of El Centro, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit for the value of goods, wares, and merchandise sold to the defendant, and appeals from a judgment rendered for the defendant.

There is substantially no difference in the contentions of the parties as to the actual facts in the case. Without objection on the part of plaintiff, defendant offered evidence tending to prove an oral contract of warranty. This testimony was uncontradicted by plaintiff. It appears from the evidence that on the 6th day of February, 1922, a salesman for the Inner Shoe Tire Company called upon the defendant. They discussed certain tire reinforcements, which were denominated "Red Innershus." The quality and salability of these Innershus were discussed between them, and among other things the fact that respondent was engaged in the business of retailing automobile supplies, accessories, and equipment, and had acquired therein a good will and a reputation among the purchasers of such articles for furnishing his customers with reliable and trustworthy goods, and that respondent desired to purchase only what is known in trade parlance as "quality goods," to be offered and sold to his customers, and in this connection a general advertising scheme was to be undertaken whereby these goods were to be offered to such customers and prospective purchasers under certain representations to be made by means of large placards, circulars, and otherwise, including, among others, the representations that when said Innershus were cemented into new casings they would prevent punctures and all blow-outs, and would last until the casings should be entirely worn out, even though such casings should travel a distance of 21,000 miles; that said Red Innershu would never fail in a new tire, and would give added strength to worn tires; that said Red Innershu was blow-out proof. It was further represented by said salesman to respondent that the foregoing representations could be made to respondent's customers truthfully and without harm to respondent's said reputation, and that said Innershus would be accompanied by certificates of guaranty. These certificates of guaranty contained the following language:

"Certificate of Guaranty.

"This is to certify this (that) this Red 'Innershu' is warranted to be perfect in material and workmanship, is guaranteed absolutely blow-out proof. Will prevent 90 per cent. of all punctures and will double tire mileage when installed in new tires according to our printed directions on the back hereof.

"Should this Red 'Innershu' fail to give you these results we hereby agree to furnish you with a new one free of charge upon receipt of the old 'Innershu' prepaid to us with this certificate of guaranty."

Respondent gave his order for eight dozen of said Red Innershus, aggregating the total price of $511.20. The order slip signed by the respondent contained a printed statement as follows:

"No agreements or conditions, verbal or otherwise, other than herewith mentioned, will be recognized."

The order slip did not contain any memorandum, nor mention of any representation or guaranty. Thereafter the goods were received by respondent, but sales of some of the Innershus, together with further examination, proved them to be defective; blow-outs occurring immediately upon their being used. Respondent attempted to dispose of the Innershus upon the market, but failed, and respondent returned the whole consignment, with the exception of those which had been sold by him and not replaced. Appellant refused to accept the returned Innershus, and brought action for the full purchase price, except the price of one of the returned Innershus for which respondent was given credit.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the written contract of guaranty contained in the certificate, as hereinbefore quoted, was the sole and exclusive remedy of the purchaser, and that all evidence which contradicts it or shows a different or other guaranty is not admissible. Accordingly, appellant insists that respondent's only remedy was to return any defective Innershus, with the demand that appellant furnish new ones therefor. It is elementary that the terms of a written contract cannot be modified or added to by evidence extrinsic of the writing. If this rule were held applicable to the instant case, not even the certificate upon which plaintiff relies would be admissible in evidence, for the reason that the certificate is no part of the written order or contract signed by the respondent. A party who permits a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence, without objection, waives all question of admissibility. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 267, § 84. In the application of the rule requiring one to object to the introduction of evidence, it has been held that a failure to object that parol evidence to vary the terms of a written instrument was admitted waives the objection, and the question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Tebbs v. Weatherwax, 23 Cal. 58. In McComish v. Kaufman, 43 Cal. App. 507, 510, 185 P. 476, 477, it is said:

"Parties who permit a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence, without objection, waive all question of inadmissibility. This is true even of the statute of frauds and as to witnesses 'incompetent to testify.'" Walberg v. Underwood, 39 Cal. App. 748, 180 P. 55."

[3-6] So in the present case plaintiff waived his objection to the admissibility of parol evidence tending to vary a written instrument and will not be permitted to raise the question for the first time on appeal. Where the written order does not contain a detailed description of the goods bargained for in the first instance, it is proper to show that the defendant was induced to enter into the agreement by the representations contained in placards and literature shown by plaintiff through its agent. Ventura Mfg., etc., Co. v. Warfield, 37 Cal. App. 147, 163, 174 P. 382; Luitweiler v. Ukiah, etc., Co., 16 Cal. App. 198, 210, 116 P. 707, 712. The cases of Inner Shoe Co. v. Treadway (C. C. A.) 286 F. 838, Inner Shoe Co. v. Williamson (Tex. Civ. App.) 240 S. W. 330, and Scott v. Vulcan Iron Works, 31 Okl. 334, 122 P. 186, are to be distinguished from the instant case in this respect: In each of those cases objection was made to the introduction of parol evidence to vary the terms of a written instrument and it was held that such testimony was inadmissible and that the buyer was bound by the remedy provided in the written order. This remedy was held exclusive. Here no objection was made to the introduction of such parol evidence. Other cases cited by appellant are to the effect that the remedy provided in the written contract is exclusive of any other remedy. Whether a privilege granted by a contract of sale of returning the goods on a breach of warranty bars the purchaser from other relief for the breach depends entirely on the terms of the contract, which may make the privilege exclusive and in lieu of all other remedies, or granted as additional to the other remedies to which the purchaser is entitled by law. Since a different construction would deprive the purchaser of undisputed legal rights, the courts will hold the privilege given him of returning the goods to be an alternative remedy, unless a contrary intention clearly appears from the contract. In Nave v. Powell, 52 Ind. App. 496, 96 N. E. 395, it is said:

"Contracts, therefore, which contain a provision for the return of the property and a rescission of the contract, or for the substitution of other property for that which fails to comply with the warranty, are not treated as exclusive in the remedy provided, unless such intention is clearly expressed by the language and terms of the warranty."

[7-9] Where the right to return is not in terms, or necessarily by construction, exclusive, the purchaser can elect between that relief and a claim for damages; the right of returning the goods being merely a cumulative remedy. Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1160, note, and cases cited. In the case at bar the guaranty contained in the certificate is absolute and complete in itself, closing with a full stop. The provision for the return of the goods is contained in a separate paragraph and does not in terms make it obligatory upon the purchaser to return the goods. It only says that, should the Innershu fail to give the results stated in the previous paragraph, the seller agrees to furnish a new Innershu free of charge upon receipt of the old, prepaid, with the certificate of guaranty. It is only by construction that any obligation can be put upon the purchaser to return the goods. It would have been easy, by the change of a few words, to have placed the obligation upon the purchaser in express terms, as is now sought to be put upon him by construction. Under these circumstances it would seem proper to apply the rule that is sometimes applied, that when there is doubt about the proper construction, to construe the contract most strongly against the person furnishing the printed blank containing the provision in question. Eyers v. Had-dem (C. C.) 70 F. 648. Considering all the facts in this case, we do not think the remedy provided in the certificate of guaranty is exclusive.

[10] Under the circumstances in the case at bar, there was an implied warranty by the manufacturer that the goods were free from any latent defect not disclosed to the buyer arising from the process of manufacture and that the merchandise was sound and merchantable, as well as an expressed warranty. The expressed warranty here is not inconsistent with the warranty implied in sections 1769 and 1771 of the Civil Code. In North Alaska, etc., Co. v. Hobbs, Wall & Co., 159 Cal. 380, 113 P. 870, 120 P. 27, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, it was held that an implied and an expressed warranty could both exist, where the warranty so implied is not only not inconsistent with the expressed warranty, but is entirely in harmony therewith.

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, Acting P. J.; YORK, J.

ARMSTRONG v. LASSEN LUMBER & BOX CO. (Civ. 5795.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California. June 11, 1927.

Rehearing Granted July 11, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1041(4)—Error in permitting amendment after judgment to conform to proof held harmless under evidence.

In action for damages arising out of a sale by defendant to plaintiff of a used steam boiler which was found to be of no value after resale by plaintiff, error, if any, in permitting amendment to plaintiff's second amended complaint after judgment, so as to set forth facts concerning plaintiff's installation of another boiler for person to whom sale was made in conformity with evidence admitted, held harmless under evidence.

2. Sales $\S$ 261(4)—Description of used steam boiler in bill of sale constituted warranty that boiler was in good condition and capable of being used with safety.

Description in bill of sale of steam boiler, describing property as "one butt-strap boiler, 60 inches in diameter by 16 feet long, for 140 pounds' working pressure, with breeching, stock, half arch front, and safety valve," held to constitute warranty that boiler sold was in good condition and capable of being used with safety under steam pressure of 140 pounds.

3. Fraud $\S$ 13(1)—Seller's representing used boiler as in good condition, if with intent to induce purchase, is actual fraud justifying damages.

Seller's statement, representing used steam boiler to be in good condition, if made with intent to induce buyer to enter into contract of purchase, would be an actual fraud, and would justify recovery of damages therefor.

4. Sales $\S$ 442(6,7)—Seller of defective used steam boiler cannot complain of cost of boiler installed by buyer at less cost.

Where buyer of used steam boiler for purpose of resale found after delivery that boiler was of no value and installed another boiler at a cost less than that of boiler having specifications agreed to in contract for sale, seller is in no position to complain of cost of such boiler.

5. Sales $\S$ 442(6,7)—Seller of defective used steam boiler is liable for cost of buyer's attempt to repair boiler.

Where used steam boiler, purchased for purpose of resale, was defective and of no value, seller is liable for damages arising from buyer's attempt to repair boiler, after being notified of defects therein.

6. Sales $\S$ 442(10)—Interest held not recoverable by buyer of defective used steam boiler from date of payment (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3287).

Where buyer of used steam boiler, for purpose of resale, made payment therefor and subsequently discovered boiler was of no value, interest was not recoverable on sum paid therefor in subsequent action against seller for damages arising out of transaction, since, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3287, interest may be recovered only on damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by L. D. Armstrong, doing business under the name and style of the L. D. Armstrong Company, against the Lassen Lumber & Box Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order made after trial and entry of judgment allowing plaintiff to amend its second amended complaint, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Cushing & Cushing and Walter Slack, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Horace M. Street, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. Defendant appeals from a judgment against it for $2,113.29 and interest on $800 of this amount from March 24, 1922, and from an order allowing plaintiff to amend its second amended complaint, made after trial of the action and entry of judgment.

The action arises out of a sale of a used 80 horse power return tubular boiler and certain fittings thereof, claimed to have been made to plaintiff by defendant on March 24, 1922. The material facts in the case are: During the times involved in the action and prior thereto, plaintiff was engaged in the business of buying and selling steam boilers at San Francisco, Cal., and defendant was operating a sawmill and box factory at Susanville, Cal. At the beginning of 1922 plaintiff ascertained that the Leal & Sons Lumber Company, who were conducting a sawmill business at Brownsville, Cal., desired to purchase an 80 horse power return tubular boiler, good for 140 pounds per square inch pressure and in good condition, and requested an employee, one S. W. Smith, to find and secure such boiler. Smith at this time, having a memorandum in his office showing that defendant had some boilers for sale, visited Mr. R. D. Baker, president of defendant, and told him he was seeking an 80 horse power return tubular boiler good for 140 pounds' pressure; that he wanted the boiler for resale purposes; that he would pay cash; and that his purchaser would buy on time. Baker showed Smith a list that had on it two boilers for sale described on the list thus: "2-60"x16" boilers, 140-pound pressure, including breeching, stack, front, water column, each $900." Baker told Smith other parties had an option for these boilers, and that, if this was not exercised, he would be glad to negotiate with Smith. After the option expired, further verbal negotiations were had between Smith and Baker, resulting in an offer from Baker to sell one of the boilers for $800 cash. In these conversations no mention was made by Smith that the boiler was being purchased for either the L. D. Armstrong Company or the Leal & Sons Lumber Company. This fact was first brought to defendant's notice in a letter left at defendant's office of March 22, 1922, addressed to defendant, which stated:

"Pursuant to your offer for the sale of one boiler 60"x16', good for 140 lbs. working pressure, and including breeching, stack, front, grates, and fittings, all in good order, f. o. b. cars Susanville, Cal., I have this day delivered at your office in the Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal., a check for the agreed price of eight hundred ($800.00) dollars, signed by L. D. Armstrong Co. together with a bill of sale to be signed by your company in favor of the said L. D. Armstrong Co.

"To avoid any further delay I wish you would make immediate shipment of the above as follows, viz.:

"From—L. D. Armstrong Co.

"To—Leal and Sons Lumber Co., Oroville, Cal.

"Via Southern Pacific Co.—as carload shipment. Please mail the B/L to me as soon as possible and oblige.

"Very truly yours, S. W. Smith."

The descriptive part of the bill of sale referred to in this letter is as follows:

"One butt-strap boiler 60" in diameter by 16' long for 140 pounds' working pressure, complete with breechings, stack, front, grates, and full complement of fittings.

"Boiler now located at our plant at Susanville, California. Above consideration includes delivery of boiler on cars in good condition at Susanville."

Inclosed with this letter was plaintiff's check, made payable to defendant's order in the sum of $800. To this defendant replied with a letter addressed to S. W. Smith stating:

"We have your letter 22d, and, as arranged with you this morning, we have telegraphed our people at Susanville to make shipment of the boiler and parts quick as possible, shipping same as from L. D. Armstrong Co. to Leal & Sons Lumber Co., Oroville, Cal., via Southern Pacific as a carload shipment, and on receipt of the bill of lading will forward same to you without delay.

"As explained and arranged, this boiler includes breeching, stack, half arch front, water column, and safety valve, but no grate bars or other fitting, and we have issued a bill of sale accordingly to L. D. Armstrong Co., and we wish to acknowledge receipt also of their check for $800 in payment of same f. o. b. cars Susanville."

Inclosed with the same was a bill of sale reading as follows:

"For value received, we hereby sell, assign, and transfer to the L. D. Armstrong Co. the following described personal property viz.:

"One butt-strap boiler 60" in diameter by 16' long for 140 pounds' working pressure with breeching, stack, half arch front, and safety valve.

"This equipment is now located at our plant at Susanville, California. Above consideration includes delivery on car in good condition at Susanville.

"In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hand this 24th day of March, A. D. 1922.

"[Corporate Seal.]

"Lassen Lumber & Box Co.,

"R. D. Baker, President.

Defendant then loaded the boiler on a freight car at Susanville and caused the same to be shipped to Leal & Sons Lumber Company consigned to Oroville, Cal. There being no railroad from Oroville to Brownsville, Leal & Sons Lumber Company had the same diverted from Oroville to Honcut, and from there it was hauled to their plant at Brownsville with trucks, a distance of some 20 miles. There the Leal & Sons Lumber Company examined the boiler for the first time, and, finding a number of defects, notified plaintiff of the same and demanded another boiler from plaintiff. Plaintiff sent a boiler maker and helper, a boiler inspector of one of the companies that insure boilers, and one of the members of the State Industrial Accident Commission to inspect the boiler. The boiler workers were attempting to repair the boiler when the inspectors came and stopped work because of the defects found; there being what is termed a bag in the boiler, a lamination in one of its plates, some burnt-off rivets, and injured left-hand sheet. It is not claimed that the defect styled a "lamination" was known to the defendant prior to the sale of the boiler, but it is urged that the other defects, the bag in its bottom, twelve burnt-off rivets at its rear seam, and supporting lugs driven into its left-hand sheet, were known to defendant prior to its making the sale, and justified the refusal of the Leal & Sons Lumber Company to accept the boiler shipped it by defendant. Plaintiff expended $180.11 in attempting to repair the boiler sold by defendant. On discovering that further efforts in that line would be futile, it searched available markets for a suitable return tubular boiler to deliver under its contract, but without success. It then induced Leal & Sons Lumber Company to accept a boiler of different type, styled a water tube boiler. This necessitated the erection of the boiler by plaintiff; such work requiring experienced hands, which is not necessary for installing a return tubular boiler. The cost of the water tube boiler and its erection was $1,933.18. The cheapest secondhand return tubular boiler plaintiff could discover with which to supply the Leal & Sons Lumber Company, after it declined that shipped them by defendant, was at a price of $2,100. The evidence shows that a new return tubular boiler of the class sold by defendant would have cost, at San Francisco, in April, 1922, from $2,300 to $2,400. The price which Leal & Sons Lumber Company agreed to pay plaintiff for the boiler procured from defendant was $1,575. The trial court found that the boiler furnished by defendant was of no value, fixed the damages at $2,113.29, being $1,933.18 costs of the water tube boiler and its erection and $180.11 for plaintiff's expense in endeavoring to repair defendant's boiler at Brownsville. The judgment also awarded plaintiff interest at 7 per cent. per annum on $800 from March 24, 1922, and costs, and ordered and adjudged that upon payment of the judgment defendant might retake his boiler.

During the trial, plaintiff asked leave to amend his second amended complaint to conform to the evidence, and permission to so amend was granted, but through neglect and inadvertence the formal amendment was not engrossed and made part of the record in the case until after this appeal was taken. This was done under an order of the trial court on motion of plaintiff and after a hearing thereon, and defendant has appealed from this order, which appeal has been heard with the appeal from the judgment.

The amendment allowed to plaintiff's second amended complaint and filed after the judgment was appealed from sets forth the facts concerning the installation of the used water tube boiler for the Leal & Sons Lumber Company in place of the defendant's return tubular boiler, the reasons for this action, the costs of doing the same, and is in conformity with the evidence admitted at the trial.

Appellant does not question the right of amending pleadings to conform to the proofs in proper cases but contends that the only time this can be done is prior to judgment. The precise point presented by this case does not appear to have been heretofore passed upon by the appellate courts of this state. A liberal allowance of amendments by trial courts, in order that pleadings should conform to the proofs, has been generally sustained on appeals from such orders. In Koch v. Wilcoxon, 30 Cal. App. 517, 153 P. 1048, it is said: "An amendment to conform to the proof may always be made, provided the cause of action is not thereby changed." Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 P. 44, Henry v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 135, 124 P. 837, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 39, and Wardrobe v. Miller, 53 Cal. App. 370, 200 P. 77, are to the same effect. The trial court in this case has done on motion an act similar to that which the Supreme Court directed the trial court to do in the case of Alameda County v. Crocker, 125 Cal. 101, 57 P. 766, where the court below was ordered to amend the complaint as of a date prior to the judgment, by inserting the true names of defendants sued under fictitious names. The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Norton v. Larney, 266 U. S. 511, 45 S. Ct. 145, 69 L. Ed. 413, is an interesting one regarding allowing of necessary amendments in trial courts, where it is said:

"Where the amendment must necessarily be allowed by the trial court, it would be mere ceremony to reverse the decree and remit the purely formal making of the amendment to the lower court. We shall therefore consider the bill as amended to conform to the facts of record."

[1] Under all the circumstances, if any error was committed by the trial court in allowing the filing of the amendment in question after appeal, so as to make the pleadings conform to the proof, it must be held an error that has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice after an examination of the entire case and the evidence.

The second amended complaint, on which the action was tried, is in two counts; the first being based on deceit, and the second on breach of warranty. The trial court found that plaintiff bought the defendant's boiler in reliance on defendant's representation that the boiler was in good condition and good for 140 pounds' pressure; that plaintiff entered into his contract with Leal & Sons Lumber Company in reliance on defendant's representations; that on the arrival of the boiler at Brownsville plaintiff in good faith made an effort to repair the boiler with competent workmen; that the boiler was not in good condition; that defendant knew this when it sold the boiler to plaintiff; and that the boiler was of no value either when placed on the cars at Susanville or at any time thereafter. These findings have ample support in the evidence introduced, and the only substantial question to determine is whether or not the trial court has correctly determined the amount of damage recoverable by plaintiff. At the inception of the transaction, defendant was informed that the boiler was being purchased for purposes of resale and that the boiler required was one of 80 horse power in good condition and good for 140 pounds' working pressure.

[2] The description in its bill of sale of March 24, 1922, describing the property sold as "one butt-strap boiler 60" in diameter by 16' long for 140 pounds' working pressure, with breeching, stock, half arch front, and safety valve," and stating that this equipment was located at defendant's plant at Susanville, and that the consideration received included delivery on car in good condition at Susanville, cannot be construed as other than a warranty on defendant's part that the boiler sold was in good condition and capable of being used with safety under a steam pressure of 140 pounds.

That the boiler was bagged and a number of its rivets burnt out when it was placed on the car at Susanville is shown by the evidence, and that because of these defects it was not at that time good for 140 pounds' pressure cannot be questioned. That the boiler was bagged and had a defective rear seam had been called to the attention of defendant in a report of the Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection Company on an inspection made on the 16th and 17th of April, 1920.

[3] Defendant, when it represented the boiler to be in good condition, made a positive assertion not warranted by its information of that which was not true, even though it may have believed it to be true. Such statement, if made by defendant with intent to induce plaintiff to enter into the contract of purchase, would be an actual fraud on plaintiff, and would justify a recovery of damages for such fraud. Subdivision 2, § 1572, Civ. Code.

[4, 5] Summarizing what has been said regarding the issues, it may be stated in general language that in its first count the respondent pleaded a cause of action based on fraudulent representations, and, affirming the contract, asked for damages. In its second count it pleaded a breach of warranty. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff on the allegations contained in both counts. The damages for a breach of a warranty of quality of personal property is stated in section 3313 of the Civil Code to be the excess, if any, of the value which the property would have had at the time to which the warranty referred, if it had been complied with, over its actual value at that time. Defendant's boiler was of no value either at Susanville or when it arrived at Brownsville. Plaintiff, in reliance on defendant's statements as to quality and its warranty of quality, had obligated itself to furnish Leal & Sons Lumber Company, with an 80 horse power tubular boiler, designed and built for 140 pounds' working pressure, and its inability to furnish this boiler made it liable for damages to Leal & Sons Lumber Company when it became apparent that defendant's boiler was valueless. A search of available markets disclosed that a return 80 horse power tubular boiler of 140 pounds' pressure capacity could not be secured for less than $2,100. In an endeavor to mitigate the damages consequent on the boiler being found defective, plaintiff attempted to repair it, expending $180.11 therefor. When plaintiff learned that, after all possible repairs were made, the state inspector would not allow it to be operated under 140 pounds' pressure, it induced Leal & Sons Lumber Company to accept a different type of boiler for the purchase and installation of which plaintiff expended the sum of $1,933.18. Defendant is not in a position to complain of the cost of the boiler which was installed, as it cost less than would have been the cost of a boiler having the specifications agreed to by the appellant. Neither should defendant be freed from liability for the cost of the attempt to repair the boiler sold by it. The amount of damages awarded by the judgment, $2,113.39, was not in excess of the amount to which the respondent was entitled.

[6] It cannot be held that defendant is liable for interest on the $800 paid it for the boiler sold plaintiff. Under section 3287 of the Civil Code every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day. The amount of plaintiff's damage here could only be made certain on a determination of the amount of the same from evidence introduced on the trial of an action therefor, and this is the only relief sought by plaintiff in this action. That interest is not recoverable in cases such as this until the damages are liquidated is clearly held in the case of Krasilnikoff v. Dundon, 8 Cal. App. 406, 97 P. 172.

The allowance in the judgment of interest on the sum of $800 from March 24, 1922, is stricken out. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed, each party to pay its costs on this appeal.

83 Cal. App. 745

In re STEVENS. (Civ. 4733.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. June 13, 1927.

1. Attorney and client $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—Specific designation of issues on reference, in proceedings for readmission to bar, limited powers of referees to make findings.

Where the court specifically designated the issues on which referees, in proceedings for readmission to the bar, were to make findings, the powers of the referees to make findings were limited thereby, and finding as to matters not specifically designated was no finding of fact.

2. Attorney and client $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—Where but one of three referees in proceedings for readmission to bar heard petitioner's testimony, court will disregard rule that he who hears and observes witness is best judge of weight of testimony.

Where only one of three referees, in proceedings for readmission to the bar, heard the petitioner's testimony, court will review record on its face untrammelled by the rule that he who hears a witness testify and observes his demeanor while doing so is the best judge of the effect to be accorded his testimony.

3. Attorney and client $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—Reference in proceeding for readmission to bar having been special with leave to except to findings, preponderance of evidence held controlling in reviewing findings.

Where the reference in proceedings for readmission to the bar after disbarment was special, with leave to except to the findings which should be made, the rule that on appeal a finding must be upheld, if there is substantial conflict in evidence, held inapplicable, and the preponderance of the evidence determinative of whether findings were supported by evidence.

4. Attorney and client $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—Petitioner held to possess moral qualifications for reinstatement after disbarment.

In proceedings for reinstatement to the bar after disbarment, evidence held to show that petitioner was not evasive in his testimony; that he was not unduly defensive in his attitude; that his denials did not reflect on his moral character; that he did not offensively criticize the courts or its officers, or challenge their integrity; that the impression left on his memory by the occurrences preceding disbarment was not censurable; that his forgetfulness of the occurrences was not censurable; and that petitioner possessed moral qualifications for reinstatement.

In the matter of the application of Walter H. Stevens for readmission to the bar after disbarment. Petitioner found possessed of moral qualifications and permitted to make proof of mental qualifications.

James D. Randles, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Oscar Lawler, of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Association.

WORKS, P. J. This matter, pursuant to procedure laid down by us in the opinion in Re Cate, 247 P. 231, was sent to referees, with directions to take evidence and to present findings of fact based thereon. The referees have completed their labors and have returned their findings, together with a record of the evidence submitted to them. The matter is now before us upon exceptions to some of the findings, and for a determination as to what step shall next be taken leading to a final disposition of the proceeding on the merits.

[1] The referees have stated the following as one of their findings:

"Petitioner's present state of mind respecting the facts which led up to his disbarment is one of evasiveness, self-defense, denial of and reluctance to admit material facts, a criticism of, and a challenge to the integrity of the courts of this state, and of its officers. It is also a fact that petitioner's lamentable experience has not made a lasting impression on his memory, and the record of his testimony shows much forgetfulness on his part of material facts in connection with which he was an active participant, and which led up to his disbarment."

In effect, the matter thus set forth is not a finding of fact, for it is without the terms of the reference. By the order of the court defining their powers and prescribing their duties the referees were directed to report the evidence taken by them, together with their "findings upon each and every one of these issues, except that a finding may be omitted upon the third if the finding upon the second is in the negative: (1) Whether or not the applicant is possessed of such moral qualifications as to entitle him to a reinstatement. (2) Whether or not there is such doubt as to the mental qualifications of the applicant that an examination is necessary to test them. (3) The character and extent of the examination to which the applicant should be subjected." In re Cate, supra. The specific designation of the issues upon which the referees were to find operated as a limitation upon their powers in that regard. Notwithstanding this conclusion, the matter above quoted from their report will be referred to hereafter as finding IV, as the referees so term it.

[2] Upon one of the issues submitted to them the referees found:

"V. Petitioner is not possessed of such moral qualifications as to entitle him to be reinstated as an attorney and counselor at law with the right to practice before any of the courts of the state of California."

This finding henceforth will be designated by the number thus assigned to it.

Exception is taken to finding V on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. In disposing of this contention, we shall consider the matters set out in finding IV, treating them as arguments or reasons intended by the referees to uphold finding V.

Such, doubtless, was the purpose of the referees in framing finding IV. That finding opens with a reference to the facts which led up to petitioner's disbarment. Those facts need not be stated here, as they are set forth fully in the opinion in Re Stevens, 59 Cal. App. 251, 210 P. 442. Petitioner was a witness before the referees, and he was cross-examined minutely concerning the delinquencies which had caused his downfall; the main purpose of the cross-examination being to ascertain the present attitude of petitioner toward those occurrences of the past. It is evident from finding IV that the referees concluded that the purpose was accomplished, and to the detriment of the petitioner. We have read carefully the testimony of petitioner with a view to a consideration of the conclusions set forth in finding IV for the purpose of passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support finding V. In solving the problem thus presented, we must take the record upon its face untrammelled by the rule that he who hears a witness testify and who observes his demeanor while doing so is the best judge as to the effect to be accorded his testimony. One only of the three referees, all of whom have signed the referees' report, heard petitioner's testimony. The majority of the referees, then, made the findings from the typewritten page. We therefore follow the law when we scan the findings from the same standpoint.

[3] Nor are we, in considering the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, concerned with the rule that on an appeal a finding must be upheld, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence directed to the issue found upon. The reference having been special, with leave to except to the findings made (in re Cate, supra), we are to ascertain where lies the preponderance of the evidence and to decide accordingly (Cappe v. Brizzolara, 19 Cal. 607; Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918).

[4] Let us first consider that part of finding IV which relates to petitioner's evasiveness, his inclination toward self-defense, and his denial of and reluctance to admit material facts bearing upon the cause of his disbarment, while he was a witness before the referee who heard his testimony. Petitioner was a very poor witness. It was difficult for him to answer questions directly. His answers were often unresponsive to questions, and the cross-examiner, because of petitioner's peculiar method of testifying, was compelled, often, to retrace ground that had already been gone over, in order to get proper responses. All this does not mean that petitioner was evasive or that he was reluctant to admit material facts. His testimony is consistent with the idea that his is the turn of mind which is frequently met with on the witness stand. A witness may be thoroughly honest without the ability clearly to tell his story in response to questions. He may be possessed of a fervent desire to unbosom himself, but may not know how to do it. As we read the record of petitioner's testimony, he appears to be one of these unfortunates.

As the outcome of this proceeding is of great moment to petitioner, as it and other proceedings like it concern vitally the public welfare, we find it necessary to quote somewhat fully from petitioner's testimony, in order properly to present on paper what we see in it.

In our opinion in a former proceeding in which petitioner sought to be readmitted to the bar (in re Stevens, supra), we said, after reciting the principal part of the facts which caused his disbarment:

"There is yet another chapter in the story of petitioner's misdeeds. Not content with his piratical raid upon the purse of the individual through whose fears he had procured the payment of the sum of $2,500, he reported to his clients that the sum paid to him was $1,000. The truth as to this matter was not ascertained by them until long afterward."

An inquiry into this matter was one of the prominent features of petitioner's cross-examination before the referee. The record shows:

"Q. Do you recall also in the course of these proceedings it developed that you had received $2,500? A. I believe that is what Mr. M. gave.

"Q. Don't you remember also that you turned over $1,000 of that money to the mother of the Levy woman? A. I think they were both there.

"Q. Well, you turned it over to both of them and you retained the balance of $1,500? A. There was a certain amount paid at one time.

"Q. And it developed, proofs developed, and it was a fact that you never did report to the girls that you had received the $2,500 until after that developed in the trial [of a man who was indicted by the grand jury because of alleged unnatural practices with the women referred to in our former opinion as the 'Jonguil girls,' which trial will be referred to hereafter as the B— trial]? A. No; I don't believe you will find that the records bear that out."

The cross-examiner then read to petitioner the matter above quoted from our former opinion, and the record proceeds:

"A. That was contradicted by the testimony in the court.

"Q. Well, I don't remember exactly as to the testimony of those persons themselves—you do remember that you were confronted yourself with the checks bearing your indorsement? A. Oh, yes; I deposited the money in the bank—everything was—everything was in check form.
* * *

"Q. Did it not occur to you in the course of your pursuits of these matters that it was a mere scheme on the part of these women to extort money from these men? A. No; that never entered my mind—it never entered my mind at all—I have the letters—special delivery letters that were sent to my office demanding that these actions be dismissed.

"Q. Who demanded that they be dismissed? A. Marie Levy—I have her mother's letter.

"Q. That was no doubt after the trial of the B— case when it developed, at least the testimony developed, that you had received $2,500 from Mr. M. and turned over $1,000 to the Levy woman? A. I don't think that had anything to do with it—they were friendly—I meet them now—the daughter is married and living in Fresno—if they thought I was a robber, they would not meet me and appear so friendly, and they have a dozen times.

"Q. After the B— trial—after the testimony you will recall that Mrs. Lacy and her daughter did testify that they had gotten only $1,000. A. They testified they did get something; yes.

"Q. And you remember at that time they created a good deal of excitement as far as they were concerned? A. I don't remember it did.

"Q. Don't you remember that you gave them your note for $500 of the money? A. What date was that?

"Q. This was anywhere in October. A. The trial was in September, 1913.

"Q. And after the trial was had you gave them your note for $500? A. It was not given them for that purpose.

"Q. What other reasons did you have? A. There was some—there is another—I want to explain the note now—it is an absolute surprise to me.

"Q. * * * You do recall as I stated that considerable excitement was created through the development or testimony of Mrs. Lacy and her daughter, Miss Levy, that they had received $1,000 from you—and the testimony that developed in the course of the trial by the production of the checks in the course of your testimony that you had received $2,500? Was it not a fact that the mother paid for the trial of these other cases that grew out of the first case—is that not the testimony? A. I accepted the general facts, I think.

"Q. I think she paid for the other cases brought here out of the first trial? A. I don't know whether she did or not—I believe the mother knew all the while what the money was—I believe she testified the mother received the money at one time and the girl at another.

"Q. Well, you have no present recollections why you gave her your note after the B— case was concluded? A. No; I do not think the excitement was at the trial in the federal court—was not that testified to in the federal court?

"Q. Yes; it was testified to there, too. A. You see I was not in the courtroom at the B— trial.

"Q. You remember it was something that attracted some newspaper attention—Mrs. Lacy and her daughter testified that they had received $1,000, suppose— A. Now, I tell you, * * * I did not take any money that was wrong.

"Q. I want to get the fact correctly stated in the record—you recall that Mrs. Lacy and her daughter testified that they had received from you on account of moneys collected from Mr. M.— A. I won't say that that was the amount they got, but the amount is in the evidence.

"Q. You gave them an amount very much less than $2,500? A. Yes; they got less than that—we got attorney's fees—I don't think that was attorney's fees; it was other work we had been doing for them.

"Q. Then after the case was over, you recall that Mrs. Lacy accosted you in the hall of the Hall of Records, if I remember correctly, and there charged that you had only told her you had received $1,000, and demanded that you make restitution in reference to the cases that had not been reported; and as a result of that you thereafter gave to her this note dated October 14, 1914? A. No; I don't—I don't remember giving her the note.

"Q. It is a fact, Mr. Stevens, that these matters in which you were involved were not sufficiently impressive— A. They were impressive—but I was—but if a person takes them with him, he gets off all right—a man is charged with fraud—those girls were turned absolutely against him—but in the other suit they were not—I was up in the air—I had never been on trial before and I had lived a straight, upright life—there is not a man in this city who has a straighter record than I have."

These extracts from the record appear to show the portions of the testimony of petitioner which will most nearly justify the part of finding IV which is now under scrutiny, and which will show, as well, the peculiar manner of petitioner as a witness, although there is much more in the record, at different points, to the latter purpose.

It is said in finding IV that the present state of mind of petitioner respecting the facts which led to his disbarment is one of "criticism of, and a challenge to, the integrity of the courts of this state, and of its officers." We shall state such portions of the testimony of petitioner—and there is no other evidence touching the subject—as seem to bear upon the conclusion thus expressed. At the opening of the cross-examination of petitioner he was asked if he questioned the statement of facts contained in our former opinion. He responded:

"I have never questioned the decision of any of the justices—I have not been in a frame of mind to question their decisions."

This last word probably was put in the plural for the reason that division 1 of this court also once denied an application for petitioner's readmission to the bar. In re Stevens, 63 Cal. App. 682, 219 P. 1014. During petitioner's cross-examination the following occurred:

"Q. You did, of course, learn through your knowledge of the trial of the B— case, and the notoriety which these cases received that these women were common prostitutes, did you not? A. I would not say for certain—it is hard thing to say—they were both married, I am glad to say; they are living the way they are—they are getting along very fine.

"Q. Well, now, after learning, notwithstanding your attention being called to the facts through the testimony or records of the B— case you still continued this litigation on the records and did not dismiss it—dismiss the suits until you received orders from them to do so some months afterwards? A. I told you * * * I have always believed that transcript of the grand jury in writing—the grand jury believed it, then why should not I? Their testimony was taken before the grand jury—those girls told me—what other reason had I to believe such things? In the first place, it was a very unfortunate circumstance that I should be singled out by a judge of the superior court for such a thing as that—and brought around as it was, it seemed something wrong."

The record of the cross-examination also shows this:

"Q. Now you realized, did you not, that upon its very face, this proceeding bore indications or at least would justify the inference upon the part of any one outside, at least, that it savored very much of blackmail? A. No, sir; that is the last thing I had in mind; if I had, I never would have touched it. I tell you the first thing that came up when that thing came up of blackmail, it hurt me very much for the simple reason just to think that a rich man could get away with anything, and then they would charge a person with going after him with blackmail. That is the way it hit me then. If you didn't have money, the case would have been tried, and nothing would be said, but, as long as a man has got money, it is blackmail."

The referees have said in finding IV that:

"Petitioner's lamentable experience has not made a lasting impression on his memory, and the record of his testimony shows much forgetfulness on his part of material facts in connection with which he was an active participant, and which led up to his disbarment."

It is true that petitioner had forgotten many of the specific facts which led to his disbarment, but we think that circumstance is neither strange nor reprehensible. Naturally, he might have forgotten many of the details of his experience because of the mere lapse of time. The lamentable occurrences of the past happened 13 years before his appearance at the hearings which the referees conducted, and he continually refers to that fact in his examination as a reason for his inability to answer some of the questions put to him. Then, too, it is quite likely that petitioner must have endeavored to lay aside a recollection of events which, if kept in mind, must have been a continual nightmare to him. The human thinking mechanism has the switches and controls where-with to throw off the recollection of those troubles with which, according to Job, we are all full. The human being who does not employ them is no philosopher and will be carried to an early grave because of his un-wisdom.

The record shows, beyond a doubt, that petitioner has kept in mind the main features of his unfortunate experience. His present state of mind, which, after all, is the thing to be ascertained here, may be exhibited by extracts from his testimony. On his direct examination he was asked: "Are you a member of any fraternities?" To this interrogation he made an answer which is characteristically unresponsive in part:

"Yes, of the Odd Fellows and Masons. I took one degree in the Masonic lodge when this matter came up, and I refused to take any more until my name was cleared—I was not requested by any one—I told them I did not care to go any further until I could clear my name."

On his cross-examination this occurred:

"Q. Do you now regard these suits [figuring in his disbarment proceedings] and the activities in connection therewith in the light of ordinary damage suits? A. No; if I was at the present time made guardian ad litem in a case as I was then—upon the ground that I did not want to handle that kind of case at all—nevertheless, they made me guardian—a man may take a young girl and treat her as he sees fit and it is dangerous for a young attorney to attempt by civil action to gain anything—the criminal courts are the only courts for that kind of work."

The cross-examination also shows this:

"Q. * * * Isn't it a fact that you know and realize that whenever a suit is brought by a woman of loose morals against a man of standing and character and of means, for any alleged improper relations, that the natural and ordinary inference is that the suit is one that savors of blackmail? A. Why, yes; I will say that to some extent it does, but it didn't enter my mind at that time for one instant.

"Q. Now, realizing that that was the natural inference— A. I wouldn't say that I knew it then; I will say I do now; yes."

This also appears in the cross-examination:

"Q. * * * Now at the present time does it not seem to you as a lawyer that to file suits on behalf of women who were of * * * loose character * * * against any man, and particularly against men of apparent means and standing, justified the application thereto of the term blackmail? A. Well, I didn't think that. It hurt me very much at that time to have it brought out that way, but I understood from different things that that was the cause it was brought out for; that people thought they were trying to get money by blackmail means. If I had thought that, then they would never have gotten to my office. If the girls had asked me to bring suit, I never would have brought it.

"Q. That is the best answer you can give to the question? A. You mean at the present time?

"Q. Yes. A. No; at the present time I wouldn't take one of those cases for any amount of money. If I was practicing law now, they wouldn't get that sort of stuff over with me. I wouldn't bring an action for any one on a charge of that kind until, by Jove, I was ready and willing and able to know that the facts were there and I could convict if there was ever a trial."

This, also, the cross-examination shows:

"Q. Well, what is your theory now? A. Well, I wouldn't take a case of this kind.

"Q. I didn't ask you that. What is your theory now, your legal theory as to how any such action as the actions like these could be maintained? A. I wouldn't attempt to maintain them. If I made an investigation and found out that they were loose women and that they were not chaste women prior to the time of this thing—I wouldn't bring it anyway—but if the investigation was brought in in that way, I absolutely would throw it down.”

Traversing the conclusions stated in finding IV, as a support for finding V, we think petitioner, in his testimony, was not evasive; that he was not unduly self-defensive in his attitude; that his denials, few of which we have found it necessary to set out above, were not such as to reflect upon his moral character; that he did not offensively criticize or challenge the integrity of the courts or of their officers; that the impression left upon his memory by the occurrences which preceded his disbarment is not of such a character as to reflect upon his morals; and that his forgetfulness of facts included in those occurrences is neither unnatural nor censurable.

We turn now to other evidence bearing upon the issue passed upon in finding V. Since his disbarment petitioner has been in the employ, continuously, of the Los Angeles Railway Company. He testified:

“I first went to work on the cars as a conductor, and then from the cars I was made inspector, promoted to inspector, and then from inspector I was promoted to supervisor, and from supervisor I went into the manager of transportation's office, was assisting him in some respects; and I have been there ever since.”

A part of petitioner's duties as an assistant to the manager of transportation was stated by petitioner thus:

“Mr. Anderson, the manager of transportation, would send lots of the boys, trainmen I would say, who would come to Mr. Anderson quite frequently and ask him for information concerning one thing or another, employment or road trouble, or maybe family trouble, not legally, nothing of a legal nature, and Mr. Anderson refers them to my office, and, if it was of a legal nature, I would tell them they would have to get some attorney, and, if not, the other work I could attend to in the company, employment work or anything of that sort.”

The extent to which petitioner is trusted by his superior officers, in the performance of the duties above mentioned, and others, is shown by testimony contained in the record. George Baker Anderson, the manager of transportation, testified:

“I am very familiar with his life; extremely familiar with his life during the hours of daylight, practically all the hours of daylight. I see him every day intimately. * * * Mr. Stevens is occupying a confidential position of some importance in my office, my department of the Los Angeles Railway. * * * He has charge of research work and investigations, and also looks after the requirements of many of the men in the employ of the company when they are in trouble and need advice, consultation, and consideration. * * * I receive every month from Mr. Stevens a report of the employees who have been in trouble of various kinds and have needed to have help of that nature. * * * They are conductors and motormen in my department. I have charge of the conductors and motormen and those who operate the system, operating the cars. Some of them are supervisors and some in some other departments, and they are all men of that type. * * * Sometimes a man would have his wages garnished. He would have a suit against him for rent maybe or trouble in relation to his household affairs or things of that kind, a variety of things of that kind. Sometimes these men would come to me and I would refer them to Mr. Stevens and it is generally understood in our department that Mr. Stevens was in a position where he could look things up and could tell them how to proceed, and frequently they would have to leave his office and go to some other legal authority. * * * His classification is that of an assistant to me and he has several classes of duties. One is to gather information of value to the community at large and to the railway in regard to transportation and means of transportation, property locations, manufacturers and industries, and the number of people employed, and the needs of the various manufacturers for transportation. Another duty is this work to * * * which I have just referred, giving advice and conferring with people who are in trouble. * * *

“Q. What time would you say that he spent in this matter that you have referred to, giving advice to employees? * * * A. I should just judge offhand without being able to state positively, I suppose that in the course of a month the suits would average—and I have in mind the last few reports that I have seen there—an average of 40 or 50 or 60 in the course of a month; sometimes 3 or 4 or 5 in a day.

“Q. Does he on those reports give you a brief statement? A. Yes, sir; the names of the people he has seen and the cause of it, the cause of their troubles—what the trouble is.

“Q. And then a report as to what he has done in connection with it? A. Not a full report. * * * I ceased to ask for that some time since, because I found out generally that everything had gone so well with him, and the employees were so satisfied with the treatment that they had had that I figured I would leave him alone when he fulfilled his duties just the same as the heads of other departments. * * *

“Q. Was this position which he occupies now considered in the line of a promotion from the services he was performing before? A. Oh, yes, indeed. I consider it a very important position, and I put him there because I learned to trust him, his discretion and his honesty in dealing with men. * * * As a matter of fact, * * * he is the only man I know of around the office that is in any way available that I would have on the job.”

Mr. Anderson also testified to the morality and good citizenship of petitioner, and other witnesses testified to the same effect and to his fidelity to duty. Testimony was also heard by the referee, showing the satisfactory conditions which exist in the home of petitioner, who is married and has a daughter of the age of 19 years. No evidence was offered for the purpose of showing that petitioner is deficient in morals.

We find that the great preponderance of the evidence is against finding V of the referees, and that the finding should not be adopted as the finding of the court.

Finding VI of the referees reads:

"If the applicant did possess the necessary moral qualifications to entitle him to be reinstated as an attorney and counselor at law, with the right to practice before all courts of the state of California, such doubt exists as to his mental qualifications that an examination will be necessary to test his mental qualifications. The extent and character of such examination should be the same to which other applicants for admission to practice law in the state of California, after examination, are subjected."

Without a discussion of the evidence, we think this finding is amply supported by it, and should be adopted as the finding of the court.

We find that petitioner is possessed of the moral qualifications necessary to entitle him to readmission to the bar and the finding of the referees to the contrary is set aside. The finding of the referees as to mental qualifications, and as to the necessity for an examination to test them, is adopted as the finding of the court, petitioner to submit himself for examination at the next session of the state board of bar examiners in Los Angeles, or at the session in that city early in 1928, as he may elect. The time for such examination may be further extended by the order of the court upon good cause shown therefor.

Ex parte SICHOFSKY. (Cr. 2982.)

Supreme Court of California. June 10, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1210—Statutes providing for consecutive sentences held to apply only to offenses cognizable under state law (Pen. Code, §§ 105, 669).

Pen. Code, §§ 105, 669, providing for consecutive sentences in case of escape and where person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced for either, held to apply only to offenses cognizable and punishable as crimes or misdemeanors under laws of California.

2. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 1216(1)—Term of imprisonment, imposed by state court on one convicted and sentenced in federal court, commenced only on actual delivery of defendant to, and incarceration in, state prison (Pen. Code, §§ 105, 489, 669, 670, 1168).

Where defendant, sentenced in federal court, was, on suspension of sentence and while subject to federal court's jurisdiction, convicted in state court without being delivered into custody of sheriff, sentences for violation of state and federal laws were not concurrent, under Pen. Code, §§ 105, 669, 670, and term of imprisonment under sentence of state court commenced to run only on actual delivery of defendant to, and incarceration in, state prison, after completing federal prison term, especially where length of sentence under state court judgment was fixed under indeterminate sentence law (sections 489, 1168).

3. Evidence $\Leftrightarrow$ 83(1)—State board of prison directors is presumed to regularly perform official duty in fixing indeterminate sentences (Pen. Code, § 1168; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15).

It must be presumed that state board of prison directors, in fixing sentence under indeterminate sentence law (Pen. Code, § 1168), regularly performs its official duty, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

Preston, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank.

Application by Albert Sichofsky for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Warden of the Folsom State Prison, to secure petitioner's release from custody on the ground of unlawful imprisonment. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

J. H. Sapiro and E. V. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applied for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was unlawfully imprisoned, confined, and restrained of his liberty by the warden of Folsom State Prison. The facts out of which such alleged illegal confinement and detention arose are the following:

In the early part of the year 1921 the petitioner was indicted by a federal grand jury in and for the Southern district of California upon the charge of having unlawfully entered the United States from Mexico without a passport, which offense was made a crime under the federal laws and regulations then in force. He pleaded guilty to such charge before the federal court having jurisdiction of said offense, and was, on March 22, 1921, by said court, sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment in the federal penitentiary at McNeil's Island, Wash. Shortly thereafter and while the petitioner was in the custody of the United States marshal under commitment upon such sentence, the district attorney of Los Angeles county, Cal., represented to the aforesaid federal court that said petitioner was under indictment issued out of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles upon charges of grand larceny and embezzlement, and requested his presence in said court for the purpose of proceedings upon said indictment. Thereupon the federal court made an order staying the execution of its said sentence for the period of 15 days, and directing that "the United States marshal take the above-named defendant to the hall of justice, to the courtroom thereof, in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, at such times as his presence in the proceedings there pending against him under said indictment in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, shall be required"; and further directing that the marshal "keep the said defendant in his custody for the purposes herein stated." The petitioner was thereupon taken to said superior court, where he was put upon trial before a jury under said indictment for the crimes set forth therein and was upon his said trial found guilty upon two separate counts of grand larceny, and was on or about April 21, 1921, sentenced by said court to be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for the term prescribed by law for each of said crimes. Upon said judgment and sentence a commitment was issued by said court to the sheriff of said county in due form.

The petitioner, however, was not delivered into the custody of said sheriff pursuant to said commitment, for the reason that his custody had remained with the United States marshal, who, after his aforesaid conviction and sentence in the state court, returned the petitioner to the federal court for the execution of the sentence therein imposed upon him, whereupon the petitioner made application for a writ of habeas corpus to said federal court, urging that he was entitled to release upon several grounds among which was his contention that the federal court and its officials had lost jurisdiction over the petitioner by virtue of its order permitting the petitioner, while in custody of the United States marshal, to be put upon trial in the state court for the crime of grand larceny. The federal court refused to sustain said contention, holding that it had at all of said times retained jurisdiction over the petitioner; and it thereupon discharged said writ and remanded the petitioner to the custody of the United States marshal to abide the judgment of the court for the remainder of his term in the federal penitentiary. The petitioner was thereupon taken to McNeil's Island, Wash., where he was confined under his said sentence imposed by said court, and from which prison he was discharged on August 9, 1923, having served his said term. Thereupon, and immediately upon his discharge, he was rearrested by the officials of the federal government upon the charge of being unlawfully within the United States and subject to deportation. While out upon bail upon this latter charge, the petitioner was taken into custody for the first time by the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, acting under the commitment which had been issued to him by the superior court, and was immediately thereafter taken and transferred to the state prison at San Quentin, Cal., where he was received by the warden of said prison on or about November 16, 1923. Shortly thereafter he was regularly removed to the state prison at Folsom, Cal., where he is still imprisoned and confined. Subsequent to the date of his confinement in said state prison, the state board of prison directors, having the authority so to do, fixed the period of his confinement in said prison under his convictions of grand larceny in said superior court at the terms of five and two years, respectively, said terms to run consecutively. The petitioner is still confined under said order of said board, and it is from such confinement that he seeks release by this writ. The petitioner did not assert in the superior court, nor does he contend here, that the superior court did not have jurisdiction to try, condemn, and sentence him for the crimes for which he was tried therein; nor does he here assert that his conviction and sentence therein were not in all respects regular. He did, however, upon his appeal to the appellate court from said judgment, contend that the superior court did not have jurisdiction of his person, for the reason that the United States marshal had at all times the custody of the defendant's person during his trial in said court. The appellate court ruled against this contention (People v. Sichofsky, 58 Cal. App. 257, 261, 208 P. 340); and this court denied a petition for rehearing based upon that ground. The petitioner bases his contention that he is entitled to his release upon his interpretation of the Penal Code of California relating to the limit of imprisonment for one who has been convicted of two or more separate crimes. He directs our attention, first, to the language of section 669 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows:

"When any person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either, the imprisonment to which he is sentenced upon the second or other subsequent conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment to which he shall be adjudged, or at the termination of the second or other subsequent term of imprisonment, as the case may be."

[1, 2] The petitioner does not contend that he comes within the terms of this section of the Penal Code, but his insistence is that said section, and also section 105 thereof, constitute a limitation upon the power of the courts of California to impose consecutive sentences otherwise than as therein provided, and argues that in all other cases than those referred to in said sections the sentences of persons convicted of two or more crimes must run concurrently, and he therefore urges that, during the time of his confinement in the federal prison for the crime which he committed against the federal laws, he was also serving that portion of his sentence under the state laws which would be embraced within the former term. There are several difficulties in the way of upholding this contention. The provisions of the Penal Code of the state of California must be held, except as otherwise expressly therein provided, to have reference and application to those offenses which are recognizable and punishable as crimes or misdemeanors against the peace and dignity of the state of California, and cannot be held to contemplate in the fixation or duration of their punishments acts or offenses which are not crimes under its laws, though these may be designated and punished as crimes under the laws of other jurisdictions. To hold otherwise would lead to certain absurd conclusions; such as that a criminal who had been tried and sentenced for some serious crime against some other jurisdiction, but who had escaped and come into the jurisdiction of California and while here had committed a crime against its laws, would be practically immune from punishment for such latter crime; for, if captured and committed to prison in the jurisdiction of his first offense he would be also serving sentence for his subsequent California crime, and in such event this state would be powerless to try, convict, or punish such an offender against its laws. An equally absurd situation would arise in a case where a criminal, who had been tried and convicted for an offense against our state laws, but who had escaped before his actual incarceration in our state prison and while thus a fugitive from justice had committed a crime against the laws of another jurisdiction and had been there arrested, indicted, convicted, and sentenced to prison in that jurisdiction, would be also serving time there for the crime for which he was convicted and sentenced here, but for which, by reason of his escape, his actual commitment in the state prison had been rendered for the time being impossible. In our opinion, therefore, sections 669 and 105 of the Penal Code and all other sections therein which have reference to concurrent and consecutive sentences have in contemplation only those crimes and their punishments which are cognizable under the laws of California.

This court has already decided that the consequences above referred to do not follow, in the case of In re Tanner, 178 Cal. 792, 175 P. 81, which presents practically an identical situation, and wherein it was held that during the time such a prisoner was serving in an Ohio state prison he was not being imprisoned in execution of a California judgment and could not be credited with any portion of such time. The petitioner refers to certain other cases decided by this court as seeming to uphold his contention in the foregoing regard. One of these is Ex parte Cohen, 198 Cal. 221, 244 P. 359. An examination of this case shows that the petitioner is not entitled to derive any comfort from it, since this court did not therein hold that section 669 of the Penal Code could be said to have application to cases where one judgment had been rendered by a state court and the other by a federal court, but, on the contrary, expressly refrained from deciding that question, holding that the writ sought in that case must be discharged for other reasons. Neither can the petitioner derive any comfort from the case of Ex parte McGuire, 135 Cal. 339, 67 P. 327, 87 Am. St. Rep. 105, since in that case both convictions were had in the California courts. In that case, however, this court did make certain rulings pertinent to another phase of this proceeding to come presently under discussion. It is true that in that case, and also in the case of Ex parte Casey, 160 Cal. 357, 116 P. 1104, and in certain other cases cited by the petitioner, this court has held that, in cases where both trials and convictions have occurred in our state courts, the sentences should run concurrently, except in the instances provided for under sections 669 and 105 of the Penal Code; but this principle has, as we have already shown, no application to cases of conviction of separate crimes under separate jurisdictions; nor do we find that the cases cited by the petitioner from other jurisdictions can have any applicability to the instant case for a like reason, with the single exception of the case of Ex parte Lawson, 98 Tex. Cr. R. 544, 266 S. W. 1101, upon which the petitioner confidently relies as dealing with an identical situation. The distinction between that case and the instant case consists in the fact that under the Texas criminal statutes the term of a convicted felon commenced from the time of his sentence (article 882, Tex. Code Civ. Proc.); while under section 670 of our Penal Code "the term of imprisonment fixed by the judgment in a criminal action commences to run only upon the actual delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment." The Texas statutes and cases are, however, in accord with those of California in one respect germane to the instant case, and that is in the view that the officers of each state, charged with the execution of criminal judgments, have no right or power to suspend by either their affirmative or negligent action the operation of commitments placed in their hands.

This brings us to a reconsideration of the case of Ex parte McGuire, supra, and of the language and action of this court therein. In that case the defendant had been convicted of a misdemeanor in the police court of San Francisco and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for a term of six months. After his term there had commenced, he was arraigned in the superior court upon a charge of burglary, to which he pleaded guilty, whereupon he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the state prison at Folsom for a term of years. He took no appeal from this latter judgment, and no stay of proceedings was ordered or requested. A commitment thereon was accordingly issued and delivered to the sheriff of said city and county of San Francisco, who, however, acting upon the theory that the term of the prisoner in the county jail must first be served, returned him thereto and detained him therein in his character as ex officio jailer of said city and county. The prisoner thereupon applied to this court for a writ of habeas corpus, seeking his release from such custody. Upon hearing, this court decided that the custody of the applicant under his county jail sentence was unlawful, for the reason that it was the duty of the sheriff, upon receiving the commitment from the superior court, to forthwith execute the same by taking and delivering the prisoner to the warden of the state prison, and, while in so holding, it also held that the two sentences ran concurrently. The court also expressly held that the term of the applicant's imprisonment in the state prison did not commence to run, under the terms of section 670 of the Penal Code, until the date of his actual delivery there.

It is impossible to distinguish between that case and the case at bar in so far as the application of the provisions of section 670 of the Penal Code is concerned, and, if there be any distinction, it must operate in favor of the even more exact and complete application of said section of the Penal Code to the facts of the instant case, for the very cogent reason that in the case at bar the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles had no power to execute the commitment which had been delivered to him by the clerk of the superior court until after the petitioner had fully served his term in the federal penitentiary and been released by the federal authorities upon a date just prior to his incarceration in the state prison at San Quentin. In the foregoing regard there exists a strong analogy between the situation of the sheriff in the instant case and the situation he would have been in had the petitioner herein escaped from custody after his conviction in the state court and prior to his incarceration in the state prison. It seems clear to us that in either event section 670 of the Penal Code should be given full application, and hence that in this case the term of imprisonment of the petitioner herein in the state prison of this state did not commence to run until November 16, 1923, the date of his actual delivery to and incarceration therein. In the case of In re Fritz, 179 Cal. 416, 177 P. 157, it was held that the fact that a convicted person had been subjected to confinement under a prior judgment which was void did not furnish a reason why the later imposition of a valid judgment, fixing a new term of imprisonment, should not as to its operation commence to run upon the actual delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment under the express terms of section 670 of the Penal Code.

[3] We are thus brought to another consideration which would seem to fully and finally dispose of the petitioner's contention that he is entitled to a discharge from the custody of the respondent warden. The petitioner, upon his conviction in the superior court, was sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law of California for the period prescribed by law. Section 489 of the Penal Code provides that—

"Grand larceny is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than ten years."

The so-called "indeterminate sentence law" (Penal Code, section 1168), provides that in such a case—

"the governing authority of the reformatory or prison in which such person may be confined, * * * shall determine after the expiration of the minimum term of imprisonment has expired, what length of time, if any, such person shall be confined."

And further provides that—

"Any convicted person undergoing sentence in either of the state prisons of this state, not sooner released under the provisions of this act, shall, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, be discharged from custody on serving the maximum punishment provided by law for the offense of which such person was convicted."

Upon the actual delivery of the petitioner herein to the state prison on November 16, 1923, and at a time thereafter when his minimum term had expired under the provisions of section 489 of the Penal Code, the board of prison directors who, under the said indeterminate sentence law, were charged with that duty, at a meeting of said board held on December 12, 1924, as the return to this writ shows, "determined the length of confinement that the said Albert Sichofsky should serve" at five years for the crime of grand larceny of which he had been convicted under the first count in his indictment in the superior court, and two years for the separate crime of grand larceny of which he had been convicted under the second count of said indictment, said terms "to run consecutively." It further appears from said return that, allowing the petitioner all possible credits for good conduct during such terms, he would be entitled to be discharged from custody on May 17, 1929.

If we were to assume, upon this proceeding, that the petitioner was correct in his interpretation of our Penal Code to the effect that his sentences at the hands of the federal court and of the state court should run concurrently, then it would follow necessarily that, if such be the law, the state board of prison directors in their aforesaid action upon the petitioner's case so considered it, since it would be their official duty so to do, and we must presume that such official duty was regularly performed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. It follows that we must assume that the board of prison directors, in fixing the length of time the petitioner "shall be confined" within the limit of the maximum period of ten years for which he was sentenced under each of his said convictions of grand larceny, took into account the fact, if it is assumed to be the fact, that his term of three years' service in the federal prison was to be credited as against the maximum term for which he had been sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law as construed in Ex parte Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958, and In re Fritz, 179 Cal. 415, 177 P. 157, and, after deducting the federal term from the maximum term under each of his said convictions, fixed the length of his actual confinement in the state prison at five and two years, respectively, "to run consecutively." Such would seem to be the only reasonable interpretation to be given to the language of the indeterminate sentence law, even upon the assumption that the petitioner's contention as to the concurrent operation of his imprisonment under the two jurisdictions is correct; and, whether or not this be so, it would seem to be the only reasonable interpretation of the indeterminate sentence law that it was intended to commit the entire subject of the length of a convicted prisoner's detention in the state prison to the discretion of the board of prison directors within his maximum term as prescribed by the Penal Code. This would seem to be an irresistible conclusion when the purposes for which the Indeterminate sentence law, as expounded by this court in the Lee Case, supra, are considered, and also when the further provisions of section 1168 of the Penal Code, which embodies that law, are taken into consideration, wherein it is provided that the said board is to be furnished by the judge and other officers of the court wherein the prisoner was convicted of a varied amount of information regarding his career, habits, occupation, and character upon the basis of which, as well as upon the observation of the prison officials during the passage of his minimum term, the board of prison directors are to determine how far the maximum term of his imprisonment is to be mitigated by their fixation of the actual length of his confinement. From any of the foregoing points of view, therefore, it would seem to follow necessarily that the petitioner here is not entitled to release upon his present application.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

PRESTON, J. I find myself unable to concur in so much of the opinion of Mr. Justice RICHARDS as denies to the petitioner credit upon the state term of imprisonment for the period of time spent by him in the federal penitentiary. The opinion seems to me to have for its foundation a misunderstanding of the relationship between the United States and the state of California with reference to the prisoner. The universal principle of law applicable is as follows:

"Where a state court and a court of the United States may each take jurisdiction, the tribunal which first gets it holds it to the exclusion of the other, until its duty is fully performed and the jurisdiction invoked is exhausted; and this rule applies alike in both civil and criminal cases. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. Ed. 470; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 584, 15 L. Ed. 1028; Troutman's Case, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 634; Ex parte Jenkins & Crosson, Fed. Cas. No. 7,259, 2 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 144. It is indeed a principle of universal jurisprudence that, where jurisdiction has attached to person or thing, it is—unless there is some provision to the contrary—exclusive in effect until it has wrought its function." Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 366, 370 (21 L. Ed. 287).

With this principle in mind, it must be held to be a fact that the United States government had complete control of the person of the defendant and was not forced to surrender said possession until after its own judgment against him had been satisfied. But it must not be overlooked that at the same time it was within the power of the government of the United States to surrender to the state of California, for the purpose of its criminal proceedings, the person of the defendant. This must be held to have been done when the federal court stayed the proceedings in its own court and ordered that the person of the defendant be taken to the state court for trial. The United States marshal, from the time jurisdiction of the state court attached, could be none other than an agent of the state of California.

In other words, when the state of California acquired jurisdiction to try, convict, and impose judgment upon the defendant, it had the authority to immediately cause the person of the prisoner to be subjected to the mandates of the judgment.

The question in its last analysis is this: Where the state court has jurisdiction of the person of a defendant and such defendant is tried, convicted, and sentenced in such court, will the judgment so pronounced begin operation at once, if the defendant does everything in his power to facilitate the expiation of said sentence without delay or dilatory tactics of any kind or character on his part?

It seems too clear for controversy that the judge of the state court acted with full knowledge of the status of the prisoner and with full knowledge that he was present in his court in the custody of the marshal, and, had the court desired that the operation of said judgment be suspended, it could and should have used appropriate words to that effect, but this was not done. The commitment issued was for forthwith delivery to the prison. In this connection it must be said that section 670 of the Penal Code, to the effect that sentence of a prisoner does not begin to run until the actual delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment, has reference only to cases where the prisoner by his voluntary conduct or consent has prevented the immediate expiation of his sentence, and said section 670 has no reference whatever to a case where a defendant himself has acted in co-operation with the authorities of the state to hasten the commencement of service of the sentence imposed.

In this case the sheriff never assumed to take possession, nor did the court order possession from the deputy marshal, nor did the court order the deputy marshal to deliver said prisoner to the place of imprisonment of the state, but, on the contrary, the United States government was permitted to retain or resume jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, all over the protest and against the will of the prisoner himself. Indeed, the prisoner, immediately upon his incarceration in the federal penal institution, sought by habeas corpus to have himself transferred to the proper place of imprisonment. Ex parte Sichofsky (D. C.) 273 F. 694. Failing in this, he conducted an appeal from the judgment in the state court and tendered the issue as to whether or not the state had in fact acquired jurisdiction of his person. It was accordingly held by the decision that such jurisdiction had been obtained. People v. Sichofsky, 58

Cal. App. 257, 208 P. 340. hearing in this court denied. Thus we say that this court has solemnly declared that the defendant was in the jurisdiction of the state court, and, having so declared, the conclusion is inescapable that the superior court had the power to immediately incarcerate the prisoner in the penal institution of the state. Indeed, the judge of the court purported to do this, but, by reason of the circumstances above detailed, this did not take place. Shall this prisoner be charged with dereliction concerning a matter over which he did not have and could not secure any control whatsoever?

"It is a familiar practice that, wherever the court imposing several sentences desires to have one begin on the expiration of another, that fact is expressly stated in the sentence; and whenever the court inadvertently fails to have the sentence recorded in that form, or from leniency intentionally admits to add such a provision, and the defendant is committed in pursuance of such sentences, he is either voluntarily released by the jailer, or discharged on habeas corpus at the expiration of the longest term named in either of the sentences. No presumption will be indulged in favor of sustaining the sentence as cumulative. Accordingly the rule is that, where the defendant is already in execution on a former sentence, and the second sentence does not state that the term is to begin at the expiration of the former, the second will run concurrently with the first, in the absence of a statute providing a different rule; but, when the different sentences are imposed by different courts, it seems that it is not necessary that the sentence should state that the second term is to begin at the expiration of the first." 8 R. C. L. § 242, p. 242.

It will be noted from the above excerpt that it is suggested that, if the sentences are from different courts instead of the same courts, it might not be necessary for the judgment to recite the fact that it is to begin to run at the expiration of the first term of service, but this portion of the text is supported by only one state—the state of Georgia. See Hightower v. Hollis, 121 Ga. 159, 48 S. E. 969; also Sullivan v. Clark, 156 Ga. 706, 119 S. E. 913. It is readily demonstrable that these cases are opposed to the great weight of authority upon this subject. Cases directly opposed to such holding are as follows: Zerbst v. Lyman (C. C. A.) 255 F. 609, 610 (5 A. L. R. 377) where the court said:

"It is argued that it was manifest that the California court intended that the punishment should begin after the expiration of the term imposed by the New York court. This nowhere appears. It is true that, if the original order of imprisonment in the state penitentiary at San Quentin had not been changed, the imprisonment could not have begun until the prisoner had been released from the Atlanta Penitentiary. But there is nothing to indicate that the court intended to do anything other than that which was done.

"It could well be assumed that the court intended, if it can be assumed that it had knowledge of the pendency of another sentence, that the ordinary effect should follow. Ordinarily, two or more sentences run concurrently, in the absence of specific provisions in the judgment to the contrary. United States v. Patterson (C. C.) 29 F. 775; In re Breton, 93 Me. 39, 44 A. 125, 74 Am. St. Rep. 335; 1 Bishop, Crim. Procedure, 1327, 1310. This rule seems to apply where the conviction is had in different courts. Ex parte Green, 86 Cal. 427, 25 P. 21; Ex parte Black, 162 N. C. 457, 78 S. E. 273; Ex parte Gafford, 25 Nev. 101, 57 P. 484, 83 Am. St. Rep. 568. The case cited by appellant of Hightower v. Hollis, 121 Ga. 160, 48 S. E. 969, if not distinguishable by reason of the nature of the punishment, is apparently in conflict with the weight of authority."

See note to the same case in 5 A. L. R. 380; also Dickerson v. Perkins, 182 Iowa, 871, 166 N. W. 293, 5 A. L. R. 374, where the case of Hightower v. Hollis, supra, is discussed, and it is said:

"The warden therefore acquired no authority under the mittimus which did not appear in the judgment. It is contended in argument by the state that the implication of concurrent terms is applicable only when the two or more sentences are imposed by the same court. In support of this argument the case of Hightower v. Hollis, 121 Ga. 159, 48 S. E. 969, is cited. The case is not wholly in point, and, if it were, it does not meet the provisions of our statute."

The court refused to follow the Hightower Case, and held that under the statute of the state of Iowa, which is no different from our own, it makes no difference whether the judgment was by the same court or not.

Indeed, the above decision is in line with our own Ex parte Green, 86 Cal. 427, 25 P. 21, where the same conclusion is announced. In this connection, see, also, the case of Ex parte Gafford, 25 Nev. 101, 57 P. 484, 83 Am. St. Rep. 568, where it is said:

"Where the defendant is already in execution on a former sentence, and the second sentence does not state that the term is to begin at the expiration of the former, the second will run concurrently with the first, in the absence of a statute providing a different rule. 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1075, note 4."

To this should also be added 16 C. J. 1372, § 3228, as follows:

"When not otherwise directed by statute, or by the sentence of the court, as a general rule the term of imprisonment for which defendant is sentenced begins with the first day of actual incarceration in the prison, unless actual imprisonment is prevented by some cause other than the fault or wrong of defendant. In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that the term of imprisonment shall date from the time sentence is pronounced, unless the convict by his own wrong has prevented it, while in others it begins to operate from the date of entry in the judgment."

The above quotation is also authority for the proposition that, where the defendant is without fault on his own part, the sentence begins to run during the period following the pronouncement of judgment, unless the judgment otherwise directs. Certainly, within a reasonable time, which in this case would not exceed a few days, it would be the duty of the court to deliver the defendant, who is consenting thereto, to the place for imprisonment. "In the absence of a statute to the contrary, if it is not stated in either of two or more sentences imposed at the same time that the imprisonment under any one of them shall take effect at the expiration of the others, the periods of time named will run concurrently, and the punishments will be executed simultaneously. The fact that the terms of imprisonment are to be successive must be clearly and expressly stated." 16 C. J. 1374, § 3237.

The case relied upon by petitioner of Ex parte Lawson, 98 Tex. Cr. R. 544, 266 S. W. 1101, is exactly in point and on all fours with the case before us; the only difference at all being that the statute of Texas makes the term of imprisonment start from the day of pronouncing the judgment, but that provision of the statute does not render the case inapplicable. The fact is conceded in the case at bar that the prisoner was doing everything he could to be properly incarcerated in the proper prison and was responsible on his own account for no delay whatsoever in the premises. Indeed, the state of California by its own statute is in reality one step ahead of the states from which the other cases were taken because of the provisions of section 669 of the Penal Code which specify the only case in which consecutive sentences may be imposed.

The only distinction between the additional line of authorities above relied upon and the case before us, is that in the cases above noted the other courts were courts of the same state whereas in the case at bar one was a United States court and the other a state court. But there can be no reason for a distinction or elimination of those authorities upon that ground, for in 8 R. C. L. § 243, p. 242, it is said:

"Jurisdiction to inflict cumulative punishment is dependent, not on the accident that the offender has been convicted twice or oftener before the same tribunal, but on the fact that distinct violations of the law have been committed by one individual whose malefactions merit separate and, therefore, cumulative penalties."

See Rigor v. State, 101 Md. 465, 61 A. 631, 4 Ann. Cas. 719. In other words, the basis of distinction is not that one court is different from another court, but that the character of the crimes is such that in some cases penalties should be made cumulative and in other cases they should not be so.

The conclusion may be summed up in a word. If this defendant is not to receive credit for the three years spent by him in the federal penitentiary, then it must be held to be within the discretion of a judge of the superior court of the state of California to impose a sentence upon a defendant and defer the taking effect of such sentence for the period of three, or any other given number of years. The very statement of this proposition shows forth its impossibility. I therefore conclude that so much of the opinion in the case at bar as denies to petitioner credit for the time spent by him in the federal penitentiary under protest is erroneous.

Ex parte TIPTON. (Cr. 1510.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California June 13, 1927.

1. Habeas corpus ☞53—Court will rule on defective application for habeas corpus presented by one without assistance of counsel.

Application in nature of application for writ of habeas corpus presented by one without assistance of counsel, though defective in form, will be ruled on by court.

2. Habeas corpus ☞57—Petition for habeas corpus must be verified by oath or affirmation taken by officer authorized to administer oaths (Pen. Code, § 1474).

Petition for writ of habeas corpus may be denied, if not verified by oath or affirmation of party making application, as required by Pen. Code, § 1474, and such oath must be certified by officer authorized to administer oaths.

3. Criminal law ☞1144(1/2)—Where conviction was reversed, with directions to set aside indictment, trial court is presumed to have set it aside in connection with resubmission of case to grand jury (Pen. Code, §§ 997, 998).

Where conviction was reversed, with directions to set aside indictment, and trial court ordered resubmission of case to grand jury, under Pen. Code, § 997, and that defendants be remanded to custody of sheriff, under section 998, appellate court will presume that trial court set aside indictment.

4. Habeas corpus ☞3—Defendant, remanded to sheriff's custody after reversal of conviction, cannot secure release by habeas corpus without first applying for admission to bail (Pen. Code, §§ 997, 998).

Where, after reversal of conviction, case was resubmitted to grand jury under Pen. Code, § 997, and defendant remanded to sheriff's custody under section 998, habeas corpus will not lie to secure release, in absence of application for admission to bail, since it will be assumed that on such application court would make appropriate order for admission to bail.

Application by John H. Tipton for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Kings County, to secure the release of petitioner from custody, awaiting action of the grand jury. Proceeding dismissed.

CONREY, P. J. [1] The petitioner, who is in jail in the custody of the sheriff of the county of Kings, appears to be without the assistance of counsel, and has sent to this court by mail an application in the nature of an application for a writ of habeas corpus. As might naturally be expected under such circumstances, the petition is very defective in form. Nevertheless, the court will rule upon the points which appear to be most essential, in order to dispose of the matter.

[2] It is provided by Penal Code, § 1474, that an application for a writ of habeas corpus must be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party making the application. Being ignorant of the fact that such oath or affirmation must be certified by an officer authorized to administer oaths, the petitioner has indorsed upon the petition, at the top of the last page thereof, the following:

"I hereby certify that this habeas corpus is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help me God. John H. Tipton."

We might dispose of the matter by denying the petition on the ground that it is not verified as required by law. If this were the only defect, we would cause the petition to be returned for verification; but, in order to further assist the petitioner, we will examine the petition further at this time.

[3, 4] It appears that, in an action entitled "The People v. Jennie L. Brown, John H. Tipton, and Fred Mills," the defendants were convicted of murder in the second degree. They appealed from the judgment. The matter came on for hearing before the Second District Court of Appeal, Division 2, and in that court, on the 7th day of February, 1927, the judgment was reversed, "with directions to the trial court to set aside the indictment." This was done because, as set forth in the opinion of the court, the grand jury violated some of the provisions of law governing the manner in which they are permitted to hold their sessions and receive evidence. People v. Brown et al. (Cal. App.) 253 P. 735.

The petitioner herein states that, after the remittitur had been sent down to the superior court of Kings county, he was arraigned before that court, and the superior court then ordered "that the case be resubmitted to the grand jury, and that the defendants be remanded into the custody of the sheriff." The petition does not show that the superior court, before making that order, first made an order setting aside the indictment. We shall assume, however, that in that respect the court adopted the appropriate procedure and did set aside the indictment, preliminary to and in connection with the order of resubmission of the case to the grand jury. The petition states that the grand jury, after an investigation, adjourned on May 12, 1927, subject to the call of the foreman.

Petitioner says that a motion made for his release has been denied by the court, and that a motion for his release on his own recognizance has been denied by the court. He does not allege that he has applied for admission to bail, or that the court has refused to admit him to bail, or to fix the amount of bail to be given by him. Therefore it should be assumed that, upon application therefor, the court would make an appropriate order for petitioner's admission to bail.

The Penal Code provides in substance that, when a motion to set aside an indictment has been granted, the court may direct that the case be resubmitted "to the same or another grand jury." Pen. Code, § 997. Section 998 of the Penal Code provides that, if the court directs the case to be resubmitted, "the defendant, if already in custody, must so remain, unless he is admitted to bail."

While we are of the opinion that, upon the facts stated in the petition, the petitioner is not entitled to his discharge, we prefer to dismiss the proceeding upon the ground that the petition is not verified, and to make the order without prejudice to the right of the applicant to file an appropriate and duly verified petition, if there be facts entitling him to the writ. It appears from the report and decision in the principal case that the petitioner was represented by counsel. The absence of similar assistance in this proceeding has resulted in the presentation of a long petition, filled with statements not appropriate to a habeas corpus petition.

The proceeding is dismissed.

RIFFEE v. GRAY TOP CAB CO. et al.
(Civ. 5827.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 21, 1927.

Appeal and error ⚡757(1)—Appellate court on appeal on typewritten transcript need not search through record to determine error (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953c).

Where appellant on appeal on a typewritten transcript, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, fails to follow procedure outlined in section 953c, it is not incumbent on appellate courts to search through typewritten record to determine whether there might be error.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Clarence W. Riffée against the Gray Top Cab Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Henry B. Lister, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries suffered in a collision with an automobile operated by an agent of the defendant Gray Top Cab Company. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,500. The defendants appealed on a typewritten transcript under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

Three grounds of appeal are noted in the appellants' brief—insufficiency of the evidence, errors in law, and "plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to the accident." The first and third grounds are supported by brief excerpts from the testimony favorable to the appellants' side of the case, but neither the evidence in conflict with this nor the findings of the trial court are printed as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. The respondent has not come to the aid of appellants in this respect, but has merely filed a brief in the nature of a motion to affirm because of appellants' failure to comply with the Code requirements.

The errors of law assigned have been presented in the same manner. It is argued that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, but the appellants have not printed the complaint or the demurrer. It is also claimed that there is a hopeless conflict in the findings of fact, but neither the findings nor the evidence upon which they were based has been printed, and we are unable to determine whether error exists.

The statute plainly demands that an appellant follow the procedure outlined, and, when this has not been done, it is not incumbent upon the appellate courts to search through the typewritten record in order to determine whether there might be some error. Pearson v. Parsons, 173 Cal. 336, 340, 159 P. 1173; Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 358, 233 P. 330; Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 229, 239 P. 1054; 2 Cal. Jur. 643, 652.

Judgment affirmed.

TRUITNER et ux. v. KNIGHT et al.
(Civ. 5665.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 8, 1927.

1. Negligence ⚡61(2)—Automobile driver, guilty of negligence proximately contributing to occupant's injury, is liable, regardless of negligence of another driver.

If an automobile driver was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the accident resulting in occupant's injury, he is liable, regardless of whether another automobile driver was also negligent.

2. Trial ⚡140(1)—Credibility of witnesses is for jury, where testimony is in substantial conflict.

It is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of witnesses, where there is substantial conflict in the testimony.

3. Trial ⚡143—Weight of testimony is for jury, where testimony is in substantial conflict.

It is the province of the jury to determine the weight, effect, and probative force of testimony, where there is substantial conflict in the testimony.

4. Appeal and error ⚡930(1)—Appellate court must accept evidence supporting verdict, unless inherently incredible, and reject conflicting evidence.

The appellate court must construe the evidence so as to support the verdict, if it can be done reasonably; that is to say, it must accept as true such evidence as tends to sustain the verdict, unless it is inherently incredible, and reject as untrue such evidence as conflicts therewith.

5. Negligence ⚡134(4)—Finding that driver of automobile carrying passenger injured in collision at intersection was negligent held sustained by evidence showing illegal speed (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113[b], subd. 2).

In action for personal injuries sustained by occupant of automobile in collision with another automobile at highway intersection, evidence showing that driver approached and attempted to cross the intersection at a speed in excess of that allowed by Motor Vehicle Act, §

113(b), subd. 2 (St. 1923, p. 553) held sufficient to sustain jury's finding that he was negligent.

6. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 136(18)—Negligent speed of automobile carrying passenger injured in collision at intersection held for jury, though speed was within statutory limit (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113[a], [b], subd. 2).

In action for personal injuries sustained by occupant of automobile in collision with another automobile at highway intersection, negligence of driver, whose view was obstructed, in failing to drive at a careful and prudent speed, not greater than reasonable and proper, having due regard for the traffic, surface, and width of the highway, and at such speed as not to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person, as required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. a (St. 1923, p. 553), held for jury, even though he was not exceeding the rate of speed permitted by section 113(b), subd. 2.

7. Highways $\hookrightarrow$ 177—Automobile driver having obstructed view at intersection may be negligent, though he does not exceed statutory speed limit (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113[a], [b], subd. 2).

If the driver of an automobile attempting to cross a highway intersection, when his view is obstructed, fails, under the circumstances, to drive at careful and prudent speed, not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard for the traffic, surface, and width of the highway, and at such speed as not to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person, as is required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 113 subd. a (St. 1923, p. 553), he is guilty of negligence, though he does not exceed the rate of speed permitted by section 113(b), subd. 2.

8. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 134(4)—Finding driver of automobile carrying passenger injured in collision at intersection was negligent held sustained by evidence showing failure to keep lookout (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113[a], [b], subd. 2).

In action for personal injuries sustained by occupant of automobile in collision with another automobile at highway intersection, evidence that the driver of one automobile failed to keep a lookout for passing automobiles at the intersection, as required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. a (St. 1923, p. 553), held to sustain jury's finding that he was guilty of negligence, even though he did not exceed speed permitted by section 113(b), subd. 2.

9. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 926(5)—Appellate court must assume jury was aided by blackboard diagrams and drawings used by witnesses and not part of record.

It must be assumed by the appellate court that the jury was aided in arriving at its conclusion that an automobile driver was negligent by blackboard diagrams and drawings which were used by witnesses in illustrating their testimony before the jury, and which could not be made a part of the record.

10. Highways $\hookrightarrow$ 175(1)—Right of way statute applies only to vehicle traveling at lawful speed (Motor Vehicle Act, § 131).

Motor Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), providing that a vehicle entering an intersection of public highways at a lawful speed shall have the right of way over a vehicle approaching from its left, unless the latter first enters the intersection, by its terms, applies only to a vehicle traveling at a lawful rate of speed.

11. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ —Reliance on care of another approaching intersection held not to relieve negligent automobile driver from liability for injuries to occupant.

An automobilist who himself is negligent as to occupant of automobile may not escape liability for collision at highway intersection on the ground that he relied on the presumption that the other automobilist who was approaching the intersection from his left would exercise due care in doing so.

12. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 143(2)—Relationship and motives in testifying were exclusively for jury in passing on credibility and veracity.

It was the exclusive province of the jury to consider the family relationship of the parties to the action and their motives in giving the testimony which they gave in passing on their credibility and veracity.

13. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 56(3)—Violation of statute does not impose liability, unless proximate cause of accident.

In order for the violation of a statutory regulation constituting negligence in itself to impose liability, such violation must be the proximate cause of the accident.

14. Negligence $\hookrightarrow$ 134(11)—Finding negligence of automobile driver concurring with negligence of another approaching intersection was proximate cause of occupant's injury held sustained.

In action for personal injuries sustained by occupant of automobile in collision with another automobile at highway intersection evidence held to sustain jury's finding that the negligence of an automobile driver in approaching and attempting to cross the intersection at an excessive rate of speed without looking either way for vehicles traveling along the intersecting highway, concurring with the negligence of the driver of the automobile approaching on the intersecting highway, was the proximate cause of the collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action for personal injuries brought by J. L. Truitner and wife against Charles M. Knight, Clifford Truitner, and another. From a judgment against the named defendants, defendant Clifford Truitner appeals. Affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, and Carling & Cummings, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. About 5:30 o'clock on the afternoon of September 20, 1925, two automobiles driven respectively by the defendants Clifford Truitner and Charles M. Knight collided at the intersection of Clovis and Adams avenues in the county of Fresno, resulting in personal injuries to three of the occupants of Truitner's automobile, one of whom was his mother, Alice Truitner, who later brought this action for damages, being joined therein by her husband. The drivers of said automobiles and H. K. Mahakian, the owner of the one Knight was driving, were made parties defendant, but as to Mahakian, who was not present at the time of the collision, the action was subsequently dismissed. The trial was had before a jury, and a verdict rendered against the remaining defendants Truitner and Knight in the sum of $4,000. From the judgment entered upon said verdict the defendant Truitner alone has appealed.

[1] The single ground urged for reversal is insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict against appellant; it being contended with reference thereto that, taken as a whole, the evidence proves that the collision resulted from the sole negligence of the defendant Knight, and on the other hand shows that appellant, while operating his car, exercised due care. The jury having found a concurrence of negligence on the part of both drivers, it will be necessary only, so far as the determination of this appeal is concerned, to ascertain whether the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the jury that appellant was guilty of such negligence as proximately contributed to the accident, for, if there is, he is liable, regardless of what the evidence may show as to the conduct of his codefendant, Knight.

[2, 3] Adams and Clovis avenues are about 60 feet wide, and intersect at right angles. In the center of each there is a strip of oiled road 10 or 12 feet in width. Knight, in approaching said intersection, was driving westward along the oiled portion of Adams avenue, accompanied by a man named Aharonian. Truitner was traveling toward said intersection in a southerly direction on Clovis avenue, the occupants of his automobile being a young lady friend, who sat beside him on the front seat, his mother, the plaintiff Alice Truitner, and his two sisters, Rose and Ethel Truitner, the three last named being seated on the rear seat. The land lying between the lines of the right angle defining the boundaries of the two avenues along which Truitner and Knight were traveling was planted to vineyard, the vines at the time being five or six feet high, and more or less obstructing the view from one avenue to the other, although in driving along one avenue and looking across the vines it was possible to see the top of an automobile traveling along the other. The testimony given by Knight and Aharonian was to the effect that, when they reached a point somewhere between 50 and 150 feet eastward of the intersection, at which time they were traveling between 20 and 25 miles an hour, they looked across the vineyard and saw the top of the Truitner automobile, which was then 150 or 200 feet north-erly of the intersection, traveling toward the intersection at a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour; that, as they neared the corner, they saw Truitner's automobile coming on toward the intersection with undiminished speed, and thereupon Knight sounded his horn, applied the brakes, and stopped his automobile at the intersection of the oiled portion of the avenues, but that Truitner, not observing their automobile until it was too late to avoid a collision by stopping, endeavored to pass in front of them, with the result that the side of Truitner's machine, close to the rear end, collided with the front end of the Knight machine, turning the latter machine around, and smashing the left rear end of Truitner's automobile. Truitner testified that as he neared the intersection he slowed down to a speed of between 15 and 20 miles an hour, but, being engaged in conversation with his young lady companion, did not look for approaching vehicles on Adams avenue, and that, when the front wheel of his automobile reached the oiled portion of the intersection, he observed for the first time the Knight machine, which was then some 20 or 25 feet distant, traveling, as he estimated, at a speed of 30 or 40 miles an hour; that thereupon, in order to get out of the way, he "put on the gas," but was unable to avoid being struck by the Knight machine. The impact hurled Truitner's sisters from the machine to the ground, a distance of some 5 or 10 feet, both sustaining injuries. Mrs. Truitner, appellant's mother, although not thrown from the machine, was severely injured, having suffered two fractures of the pelvis and severe contusions of the lumbar regions of the back, and also bruises about the body, confining her in bed for a period of about 8 weeks, and preventing her thereafter from operating a grocery store which she had previously conducted.

[4-7] Subdivision 2 of section 113 (b) of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517) provides in effect that it shall be unlawful for a driver of an automobile to drive the same at a speed exceeding "fifteen miles an hour in traversing an intersection of highways, when the driver's view is obstructed. A driver's view shall be deemed to be obstructed when at any time during the last one hundred feet of his approach to such intersection he does not have a clear and uninterrupted view of such intersection and of the traffic upon all of the highways entering such intersection for a distance of two hundred feet from such intersection." It is apparent from the evidence hereinabove set forth that a substantial conflict exists between the testimony of appellant and that of the occupants of the Knight car as to the rate of speed appellant approached and attempted to cross said intersection. Where such conflict exists it is for the jury to judge the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight, effect, and probative force to be given their testimony (Hanton v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 616, 174 P. 61), the duty of the reviewing court on appeal being to construe the evidence so as to support the verdict, if it may be done so reasonably; that is to say, to accept as true such evidence as tending to sustain the verdict, unless it be inherently incredible, and to reject as untrue those portions which conflict therewith (Nehrer v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 674, 242 P. 713). Applying the foregoing rules to the evidence before us, it is evident that the testimony given by the occupants of the Knight car is legally sufficient to support the conclusion reached by the jury that appellant was negligent, for it shows that appellant approached and attempted to cross said intersection at an undiminished rate of speed exceeding that allowed by the provisions of said Motor Vehicle Act hereinabove cited. Assuming, however, as appellant claims, that he was driving approximately within the speed limit when he attempted to cross said intersection, it was still a question of fact for the jury to determine whether under all of the circumstances present he was at that time driving his automobile, as is required by the provisions of section 113(a) of said Motor Vehicle Act, at a careful and prudent speed not greater than was reasonable and proper, having due regard for the traffic, surface, and width of the highway, and at such a speed as not to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person; for, if he was not, he was guilty of negligence, even though he was not exceeding the statutory limit of 15 miles an hour. Garns v. Halpern, 193 Cal. 193, 223 P. 545. Cook v. Miller, 175 Cal. 497, 166 P. 316.

[8] Regarding the provision of the Motor Vehicle Act just referred to, it was said in Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125:

"This is but a reiteration of the rule, in statutory form, which has always been in force without regard to a statutory promulgation to the effect that drivers or operators of vehicles, and more particularly motor vehicles, must be specially watchful in anticipation of the presence of others at places where other vehicles are constantly passing. * * *

And in Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066, in quoting from the case of Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal. App. 157, 201 P. 471, the court said:

"Accordingly the driver of an automobile 'has no right to assume that the road is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times he must be vigilant and must anticipate the presence of others. * * * The fact that he did not know that anyone was on the highway is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known that another vehicle or person was on the highway.'"

[9] The evidence here shows without contradiction that in approaching and attempting to cross said intersection appellant failed to look either way for approaching vehicles on Adams avenue, his attention being occupied at that time in conversing with the young lady seated beside him; and, consequently, he proceeded as far as the oiled portion of said intersection before he observed the presence of the Knight machine, which, according to the testimony of the occupants thereof, had already reached the intersection and stopped, but appellant, having failed to see it until it was too late to avoid a collision by stopping, attempted to pass in front of it, with the result already described. Therefore, even though appellant was within the law, so far as speed was concerned, his neglect to keep a lookout for passing automobiles at the intersection was sufficient of itself to justify the jury in concluding that he was guilty of negligence. Meyers v. Bradford, supra; Rush v. Lagomarsino, supra. Moreover, it must be assumed that, in addition to the foregoing evidence, the jury was aided in arriving at its conclusion that appellant was negligent by the blackboard diagrams and drawings which necessarily could not be made a part of the record on appeal, but which were used by the witnesses in illustrating their testimony before the jury. Emerick v. Johnson, 64 Cal. App. 460, 221 P. 675; Godeau v. Levy, 72 Cal. App. 13, 236 P. 354.

[10] Appellant contends that the evidence shows that the two automobiles were approximately the same distance from the intersection when the occupants of the Knight car saw appellant's car approaching the intersection "from the right," and that therefore under the provisions of section 131 of said Motor Vehicle Act appellant's car had the right of way. There seems to be a conflict of evidence upon this point; testimony having been given to the effect that Knight's car was first to enter the intersection. However that may be, it is evident that the provisions of said section 131 are not available to appellant, for the reason that the terms thereof limit the application of its provisions to a vehicle "traveling at a lawful rate of speed," and the evidence adduced here on the part of respondents shows, as already pointed out, that appellant approached and attempted to cross said intersection at an unlawful rate of speed.

[11] Further contention is made by appellant that he had a right reasonably to presume that any one approaching the intersection from his left would exercise due care in doing so; and that, inasmuch as the driver of Knight's car failed to do so, appellant is relieved from responsibility for the accident. It has been held, however, that reliance upon the presumption mentioned does not excuse one who himself is negligent (Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, 240 P. 53; Wiley v. Cole, 67 Cal. App. 762, 228 P. 350; McPherson v. Walling, 58 Cal. App. 563, 209 P. 209); and therefore, since appellant was found to be negligent, he is precluded from claiming the benefit of such presumption.

[12] Counsel for appellant in their brief comment upon the relationship to each other of the parties by whose testimony some of the facts supporting the verdict were established, and they question the motives of those witnesses in giving such testimony. All of these matters were exclusively within the province of the jury to consider in passing upon the credibility and veracity of the witnesses; and, the jury having accepted their testimony as true and acted upon it, and there being nothing upon the face of the testimony to show that it is inherently improbable, it is beyond the power of this court on appeal to interfere with the discretion exercised by the jury with respect thereto.

[13, 14] A number of cases have been cited by appellant holding in effect that a violation of a statutory regulation constituting negligence does not create a liability, unless such negligence is the proximate cause of the accident. The rule stated is elementary, and cannot be questioned, but the evidence hereinabove set forth fully and fairly supports the inference which the jury drew therefrom that the negligence of appellant in approaching, and attempting to cross, said intersection at an excessive rate of speed, without looking either way for vehicles traveling along the intersecting highway, concurring with the negligence of the defendant Knight, was the proximate cause of the collision. Berges v. Guthrie, 51 Cal. App. 547, 197 P. 356.

For the reasons hereinabove stated, the judgment is affirmed.

ROSE TRUITNER, by Her Guardian ad Litem, J. L. Truitner, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Charles M. KNIGHT and H. K. Mahakian, Defendants, and Clifford Truitner, Defendant and Appellant. (Civ. 5664.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 8, 1927.

Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Fresno County, C. E. Beaumont, Judge, in an action for damages for personal injuries. Affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, and Carling & Cummings, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. A judgment of affirmance has this day been rendered and filed by this court in the case of J. L. Truitner and Alice Truitner, Plaintiffs, v. Charles M. Knight, H. K. Mahakian, and Clifford Truitner, Defendants (No.

5665) 257 P. 447, which was an action for damages arising out of a collision between two automobiles driven respectively by the defendants Truitner and Knight; the collision having occurred at the intersection of two highways in Fresno county on September 20, 1925. The instant action is also one for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in the same accident; plaintiff at the time being one of the occupants of the defendant Truitner's car. This action was tried subsequently before a different jury, and a verdict rendered against the defendants Truitner and Knight for the sum of $1,000, judgment being entered accordingly. The defendant Truitner alone has appealed, and, as in the other appeal, contends as the single ground for reversal that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment against appellant.

The appeal comes before us on a separate transcript, but, the facts being substantially the same as those upon which the verdict and judgment in the other case are based, the parties have stipulated that the instant appeal be submitted for determination on the briefs filed in that case. Inasmuch as the judgment in that action has been affirmed, it follows that, upon the same grounds, the judgment in the present case must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

TRUITNER v. KNIGHT et al. (Civ. 5666.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 8, 1927.

Trial $\S$ 140(1)—Whether written statements showed testimony unworthy of belief held exclusively for jury, since going to credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony.

It was the exclusive province of the jury to pass on the contention that witnesses' written statements concerning an automobile accident claimed to contradict their testimony rendered their testimony unworthy of belief, since the contention went purely to the credibility of the witnesses, and to the weight, effect, and probative force to be given their testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action for personal injuries brought by Ethel Truitner against Charles M. Knight, Clifford Truitner, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff against the named defendants, defendant Clifford Truitner appeals. Affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, and Carling & Cummings, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The plaintiff, Ethel Truitner, brought this action to recover damages on account of personal injuries sustained by her while riding as a guest in an automobile owned and driven by her brother, the defendant Truitner, which automobile collided with one being driven by the defendant Knight at the intersection of Clovis and Adams avenues in the county of Fresno. The action was tried by the court sitting without a jury; the court finding that the collision was proximately caused by the concurrent negligence of the drivers of the two automobiles, Truitner and Knight; and judgment was rendered against them in the sum of $300, from which judgment the defendant Truitner alone has appealed. Insufficiency of evidence is the only point raised.

This was the second action for damages growing out of the same accident, the first being one entitled J. L. Truitner and Alice Truitner, Plaintiffs, v. Charles M. Knight, H. K. Mahakian, and Clifford Truitner, Defendants (No. 5665), which was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs therein and against the defendants Knight and Truitner, the action as to the defendant Mahakian having been dismissed. The defendant Truitner appealed, and the judgment therein has been this day affirmed (Truitner v. Knight & Truitner [No. 5665; Cal. App.] 257 P. 447). The evidence in that case upon all material issues was substantially the same as that upon which the findings and judgment in the instant action are founded, and, like the present case, the appeal was taken upon the sole ground of the insufficiency of the evidence. The essential facts relating to the accident are set forth in the decision rendered on that appeal, and, since the points raised in the instant case are discussed and decided in that decision, it will be unnecessary to discuss them again here.

The only additional point made in the present case relates to certain written statements concerning the accident, which were prepared shortly after it occurred by an agent of the insurance carrier for the appellant, Truitner, and signed respectively by respondent and appellant, by which counsel for appellant sought to impeach respondent and appellant as witnesses, and to prove a material contradiction in their testimony. No claim is made that the trial court erred in ruling upon the admissibility of any part of this evidence; it being contended merely that said written statements tend to show that the testimony given by said witnesses during the trial is unworthy of belief. This contention relates purely to the matter of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight, effect, and probative force which shall be given to their testimony, and, consequently, presents a question of fact which was exclusively within the province of the trial court to determine; and, it having accepted as true the testimony of said witnesses given during the trial, despite the contents of said written statements, its decision thereon cannot be disturbed on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

COLEMAN v. EDGAR et al. (Civ. 3280.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 10, 1927.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨80—Evidence held to support finding that land was sold for lump sum, not by acre.

In action for balance due on purchase price of land, evidence held to support court's finding that land was sold for lump sum, not by the acre.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Failure to find on issues of mutual mistake and vendor's representations as to boundary of land held not prejudicial error.

Where purchasers' attorney, after examining abstract of title, reported that land was overlapped by property described in certain deed, and such overlap was discussed by parties before executing sale contract, court's failure to find on issues of mutual mistake and vendor's representations as to boundary of land, in action for balance due on purchase price, was not prejudicial error.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Failure to make finding necessarily adverse to appellant, having burden of proof, is not prejudicial error.

Failure to find on issue, burden of sustaining which rested on appellant, is not prejudicial error, if finding must necessarily have been adverse to him.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨31, 37(1)—Representations and mistakes during negotiations for sale of land became immaterial, when parties learned facts before executing contract.

Representations and mistakes of fact, made in beginning of negotiations for sale of land, became immaterial, when parties learned true facts prior to execution of contract.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨317—Erroneous finding that price reduction was made because of overlap by another's land held unnecessary to support judgment for balance of purchase price.

Finding, in action for balance due on purchase price of land, that allowance or reduction of price was made because of overlap by property described in deed to another, whereas it was made because of shortage in acreage, held unnecessary to support judgment for plaintiff.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1058(2)—Exclusion of defendant's testimony as to matter already substantially testified to by him held not prejudicial error.

In action for balance due on purchase price of land, exclusion of defendant's testimony as to whether representations of plaintiff's agent as to acreage influenced him in signing contract held not prejudicial error, where he previously testified that he would not have signed contract to purchase less than represented acreage.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1056(1)—Exclusion of testimony that defendant was influenced to sign contract by representations as to fact already known to him held not prejudicial error.

In action for balance due on purchase price of land, exclusion of defendant's testimony as to whether representations of plaintiff's agent as to acreage influenced him in signing contract held not prejudicial error, where evidence conclusively showed that he must have known, when he signed contract, that land did not all lie south of river as represented by such agent.

8. Vendor and purchaser ⇨22—That boundaries of land, as stated in sale contract, did not close, held immaterial, in view of engineer's testimony that such discrepancy meant nothing.

That boundary lines of land, for balance due on price of which vendor sued, were not accurately set forth in contract, as shown by civil engineer's testimony that they did not close, held immaterial, in view of his further testimony that such discrepancy meant nothing because survey must be balanced to return to starting place.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by Emma V. Coleman against R. E. Edgar and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dennett & Zion, of Modesto, for appellants.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff was given judgment for the balance alleged to be due on a contract, by the terms of which she agreed to sell and the defendants agreed to buy a tract of land and some personal property for the sum of $44,850. This appeal is from the judgment. The land is described in the contract as follows:

"Beginning at the $\frac{1}{4}$ section corner between sections 17 and 20, township 2 south, range 10 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, running thence south 80° west 1.44 chains, thence north $13\frac{1}{4}^{\circ}$ west 23.70 chains; thence south $87\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 2.32 chains; thence north $12\frac{3}{4}^{\circ}$ west 56.60 chains to the Stanislaus river; thence north $65\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ east 1.02 chains; thence north 46° east 10.04 chains; thence south $13\frac{1}{4}^{\circ}$ east 87.11 chains; thence south $89\frac{3}{4}^{\circ}$ west 6.04 chains to the point of beginning, containing 74.50 acres of land."

Prior to the execution of the contract, the plaintiff furnished the defendants an abstract of title, which they submitted to their attorney for examination. His report to them contained the following:

"On March 1, 1917, Arthur E. Leitch executed a deed to Ada Isabelle Patterson, * * * the description of which overlaps on this property described in the abstract. This places a cloud upon the title to this property, but to what extent I am unable to ascertain from the abstract."

The description contained in the contract includes a part of the present channel of the Stanislaus river and about a half acre on the north side of the river; there being something over 4 acres in all lying north of the south bank of the river. The land described in the Leitch deed is bounded on the south by the middle of the river and overlaps that part of the plaintiff's land lying between the north boundary line thereof and the middle of the river. Plaintiff secured a quitclaim deed from Ada Isabelle Patterson for the overlapped part. The present controversy relates to the part of plaintiff's land which lies north of the south bank of the river. It is of little value, being mostly in the channel of the river and the small parcel north of the river being inaccessible from the south side. Defendants claim that they are entitled to a reduction in the purchase price of the land by reason of the worthless character of that lying in the river and that north thereof.

The answer alleges, in substance, that the plaintiff represented that all of her land lay south of the south bank of the river, and that both parties so believed and were mutually mistaken in that regard, and that it was the intention of the parties that the defendants "were to pay $590.60 per acre for said land." The court did not expressly find whether such alleged representations were made by the plaintiff or whether the parties were mutually mistaken as to the location of the land, but did find the following facts to be true:

"That the defendants offered to purchase the whole of the tract of land, * * * and the said contract price agreed was a lump sum, and the land was not sold by the acre. That said tract of land was sold as a whole, and prior to the execution of said contract it was discovered that there was an overlapping boundary line on the north end of said tract of land, * * * and at that time an allowance was made by reason thereof, and a full, final, and complete settlement as to the number of acres in said tract of land was had and determined prior to the execution of said contract."

[1] Defendant R. E. Edgar conducted the negotiations for the purchase of the land on behalf of the defendants. In the beginning of such negotiations all parties apparently believed that the tract of land in dispute lay entirely south of the river and that it contained 75 acres. The evidence of both parties shows, without conflict, that it was discovered, prior to the execution of the contract, that the land did not all lie south of the river and that the tract contained only $74\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The defendants then demanded a reduction of \$300 in the purchase price on account of the shortage in acreage, being at the rate of \$600 an acre. The plaintiff objected to any reduction, stating that she was selling the land as a whole and not by the acre. The parties finally compromised by reducing the price to \$44,850. Relative to what was said at that time, Edgar testified:

"She (plaintiff) said her price was $45,000, and we said it was $600 an acre; so we compromised. * * * We split the difference. * * * We figured it was $600 an acre; * * * and she says, 'No; it is $45,000.' * * *

"Q. In other words, you were claiming that you were paying $600 an acre for the land? A. Yes; paying $600.

"Q. And she was claiming that she was selling for $45,000? A. Yes."

The plaintiff testified that she did not tell any of the defendants that she "would sell the land in question at so much per acre," but that she told them she would sell it for "$45,000, with the farming implements." The foregoing testimony amply supports the finding that the contract price "was a lump sum, and the land was not sold by the acre."

[2-5] The report of the defendants' attorney, after his examination of the abstract of title, disclosed the fact that the property described in the Leitch deed overlapped the north end of the plaintiff's land. The south boundary of such property is described in the deed as the "center of Stanislaus river." It necessarily follows that the plaintiff's land must have extended northerly beyond such center line, because, otherwise, there could have been no overlapping. This overlap was known and discussed by the parties before the contract was executed, and they could not have believed, after such knowledge and discussion, that the plaintiff's land all lay south of the south bank of the river. The failure to find upon the issue of mutual mistake and the alleged representations of the plaintiff, therefore, is not prejudicial error. "It is not prejudicial error to fail to find upon an issue, the burden of sustaining which rests upon the appellant, if the finding thereon must necessarily have been adverse to him." 24 Cal. Jur. 944. Any representations made in the beginning of the negotiations and any mistake of fact then made by the parties became immaterial when, prior to the execution of the contract, they learned the true facts. The finding that an allowance or reduction of price was made by reason of the overlap is erroneous; that reduction having been made on account of the shortage in acreage. That finding, however, is unnecessary to support the judgment.

[6, 7] Appellants contend that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the following question put to Mr. Edgar:

"In signing the contract, did or did not the representations that Mr. Schell made and the abstract showing the acreage, showing it to be seventy-four and a fraction, influence you in signing the contract?"

Schell was the plaintiff's agent in the sale of the land. Edgar had previously testified that in the beginning of the negotiations Schell had shown him the land south of the river only and stated that the tract contained 74½ acres. Immediately prior to the question to which objection was sustained, Edgar had testified as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. Edgar, would you have signed this contract had you known that there was any land across the river? A. I certainly would not. * * * I wouldn't have signed it.

"Q. Would you have signed the contract and paid this purchase price for seventy-four and a fraction acres? A. No; I would not."

It appears, therefore, that the question referred to had already been substantially answered. Besides, as stated, the evidence conclusively shows that the witness must have known at the time he signed the contract, that the land did not all lie south of the river.

[8] It is suggested that the boundary lines of the land are not accurately set forth in the contract. A witness for the defendants, who is a civil engineer, testified that such boundary lines do not close, but he further testified:

"That discrepancy, as far as it is concerned, as far as I can see, with this acreage, doesn't mean anything one way or the other, because the survey must be balanced to come back to the place where it started."

No prejudicial error appears in the record, and the findings of the court are fully supported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF ELY v. HAMAKER et al. (Civ. 4593.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 8, 1927.

1. Banks and banking ⇨175(4)—Lapse of six weeks between drawee's repudiating draft and notice of dishonor to bank giving credit thereon held not negligence, as matter of law, chargeable to bank.

Six weeks' lapse between time from repudiation of draft by drawee on which bank had given credit and time when bank received notice of dishonor was not negligence, as matter of law, chargeable to bank suing on note given to replace credit extended on faith of draft.

2. Banks and banking ⇨175(3)—Evidence held to support finding that bank suing on note was not negligent in notifying of repudiation of draft on which it gave credit.

In action on note, evidence held to support finding that plaintiff bank, on receiving notice that draft with bill of lading attached, on which it had given conditional credit, had been repudiated, at once notified one of defendants, who directed plaintiff to continue to hold goods covered by bill of lading until such defendant ordered them sold, and was not guilty of negligence.

3. Banks and banking ⇨175(3)—Evidence held to show bank was collector and distributor under escrow agreement, and not owner of draft on which it gave conditional credit.

In action by bank on note, evidence held to show that bank was only collector and distributor of funds paid for goods under escrow agreement, and did not become owner of draft drawn to collect for such goods on which it gave conditional credit.

4. Bills and notes ⇨520—Evidence held to support finding that bank did not procure note by misrepresenting that one of defendants had overdrawn account.

In action on note in which defendants by cross-complaint set up that they were induced to sign it by fraudulent misrepresentation of plaintiff bank's manager that account of one of defendants was overdrawn, evidence held to support finding that such representation was not made, and to justify judgment for plaintiff.

5. Banks and banking ⇨171(6)—Forwarding bank is not responsible for correspondents' negligence in collecting drafts.

Forwarding bank is not responsible for negligence of its correspondents in collecting drafts.

6. Costs ⇨262—Showing of bad faith held not to justify penalty for taking frivolous appeal.

In action on note, although appellants' attorneys failed to file brief in reply to that presented by respondents showing of bad faith held not to justify penalty for taking frivolous appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge pro tem.

Action by the First National Bank of Ely against W. N. Hamaker and others on a note. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants W. N. Hamaker and George M. Rea appeal. Affirmed.

Paul Barksdale D'Orr, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover on a promissory note in the sum of $3,500. The defendant Shephard, being without the jurisdiction of the court, was not served. Judgment was in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants Hamaker and Rea, who are the appellants herein. It is the contention of the appellants: (a) That the note was without consideration; (b) that it was procured by fraudulent misrepresentations; (c) that the findings are not supported by the evidence; and (d) that the judgment is against the evidence and against the law.

The circumstances under which the controversy arose were substantially as follows: The defendants were operating a tungsten mine near Ely, in the state of Nevada, under a conditional sales contract under which the defendants were let into the immediate possession and operation of the property. The contract provided that the vendors should place in escrow with the plaintiff bank a good and sufficient deed conveying the property to the defendants; that all shipments of ore were to be made in the name of the bank, and of the funds derived therefrom a certain percentage was to be retained by the operators of the mine and the remainder to be delivered to the grantors under the conditional sales agreement. Three shipments had been made to Wile Electric Furnace Company, a Pittsburg firm, prior to the shipment involved in this litigation. Shephard, the resident manager, had sold the tungsten concentrates to the Pittsburg firm at prices agreed upon between them, 75 per cent. of which selling price was to be paid on presentation of drafts attached to bills of lading, the balance after the receipt of the concentrates. In accordance with the escrow agreement, a draft attached to a bill of lading was drawn in the name of the plaintiff bank for $4,450, being 75 per cent. of the agreed purchase price of the fourth shipment. This draft was forwarded by plaintiff through its regular banking correspondents to a Pittsburg bank for collection. At the time of forwarding the draft, the amount thereof was placed to the credit of Shephard's account in the following manner, according to the testimony of one Biggane, the manager of the Ely bank, who was the only witness upon the subject:

"The credit was made by preparing a deposit slip for that amount, which I produce, reading as follows: The First National Bank, deposit of A. R. Shephard, Ely, Nev., 4-24-1926. Advance on fourth shipment, $4,450—advanced on—I ask leave to withdraw that. 'Advance on fourth shipment, $4,450, to Wile Electric Furnace Company, Pittsburg, Pa., J. W. Biggane.' And at the foot of the deposit slip appear these words, printed, 'all checks and drafts of this and other banks credited subject to payment.'"

The market value of the tungsten products was declining and when presented to the drawee, payment was refused. The date of this refusal is fixed at about the 28th day of April, 1916, of which fact the plaintiff bank was not notified until the 16th day of June, when it received telegraphic advices to that effect. Shephard was immediately notified, and upon the return of the draft some days afterwards the Shephard account was charged with the amount of the draft. Under these circumstances, it is the contention of the appellants that the correspondent banks were negligent; that the plaintiff was responsible for their negligence, and that the plaintiff purchased the concentrates and the drafts; that the draft belonged to the plaintiff, and that it had no right to charge the amount to Shephard. Neither of these contentions may be sustained, either by the facts as found by the trial court, nor by the law applicable thereto.

[1] It is manifestly the theory of the appellant that the time elapsing from the repudiation of the draft by the drawee to the time when the plaintiff bank received notice of dishonor, a period of about six weeks, constituted negligence of which the court should have taken judicial notice, which negligence, as a matter of law, should be attributed to the plaintiff bank. If these acts or want of action constituted negligence, it was a matter of defense and it was incumbent upon the defendants to show that, under all the circumstances of the case, negligence might be fairly predicated thereon. This they did not do. There was not a word of evidence that the correspondent banks were negligent, nor is there any evidence as to what their conduct and acts with respect to this transaction actually were.

[2, 3] So far as the activity of the plaintiff bank is concerned the court specifically found:

"That upon receiving notice that the said draft had not been paid, the plaintiff at once notified said A. R. Shephard of said fact, and that the said concentrates were being held by the plaintiff subject to the order of said A. R. Shephard. That said Shephard directed that the said plaintiff continue to hold said concentrates, and plaintiff complied with said direction and held said concentrates until said Shephard-ordered them sold. That when said concentrates were finally disposed of by said Shephard, as aforesaid, the proceeds of the said sale were applied by A. R. Shephard upon a new and further indebtedness which defendants had incurred to the said plaintiff; that at the time the said note sued on was executed by the said defendants W. N. Hamaker and George M. Rea, the account of said A. R. Shephard was not overdrawn. * * *

This finding is supported by the evidence of Biggane, who was manager of the Ely bank during the time of the transactions involved in this litigation, and the only witness as to these matters. He said:

"When we got notice that the draft on Wile Electric Furnace Company had been dishonored, I immediately notified Mr. Shephard, by letter or verbally, if he happened to be in town, I don't recall which way, but I remember absolutely that I gave him immediate notice."

With reference to the claim that the plaintiff bank was the owner of the draft and of the concentrates, this same witness testified, in substance:

"We had a conversation with Mr. Shephard when the first shipment of concentrates was offered to us under the escrow agreement. That was approximately in the month of March or April, 1916. This was about four weeks or so before the shipment to Wile Electric Furnace Company. We told him we would accept the drafts for credit, subject to final payment and receipt of the money in our hands, and without responsibility on the part of this bank or any correspondent bank or any channels through which it might pass for miscarriage through the mails or loss or in any other way. He assented to that. The other three shipments were made in precisely the same way as the Wile Company shipment. They had already been made. The custom of banks in Ely and throughout the eastern part of the state of Nevada with reference to giving credit on drafts was to extent immediate credit, subject to final collection through the correspondent banks. If drafts, bills, or checks on banks in other cities were not paid, the custom was to charge them back to the customer."

It is apparent from this testimony, and there is nothing to dispute or discredit it, that the bank was a collector and distributor of the funds under the escrow agreement.

[4] There is some contention on the part of appellants that the Shephard account was overdrawn and so represented to them by the bank manager. There is no evidence to support this contention and the court specifically found such claim to be groundless, the finding in this regard being:

"That it is not true that on the 9th day of October, 1916, or at any time, J. W. Biggane represented to defendants W. N. Hamaker and George M. Rea, or either of them, that the account of A. R. Shephard was overdrawn, or make any representation to said defendants, or either of them, as to the account of their partner, A. R. Shephard, other than that there were checks drawn by A. R. Shephard on his account, aggregating approximately $2,500 in excess of the funds available in said account, and that said statements and representations by said J. W. Biggane were not false or fraudulent or for the purpose of deceiving the said defendants W. N. Hamaker and George M. Rea, or either of them, but were true."

[5] Neither of the appellants took the witness stand nor did the defendant Shephard, although it appears by statement of counsel his deposition was taken and presumably he was available as a witness, certainly so to the extent of his deposition that had already been taken. No testimony was offered on behalf of the defendants to support the allegations of their cross-complaint that they had been induced to sign the promissory note by reason of fraudulent misrepresentations of the manager of the bank, but, on the contrary, the court found, as appears in the finding last above set out, that such statements as were made by the manager were true. The above analysis of the evidence would indicate that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was proper, there being no showing of negligence of either the forwarding or correspondent banks. However, in this state the law does not make the forwarding bank responsible for the negligence of its correspondents.

In the case of Nicoletti v. Bank of Los Banos, 190 Cal. 637, 214 P. 51, 27 A. L. R. 1479, the court said:

"The principle controlling the duty of a bank receiving commercial paper collection at a distant point would seem to be equally applicable to an agreement to transmit money to such a point. We are not lacking in authority upon that question in California, although the decisions are not agreed upon that matter. In the case of Davis v. First Nat. Bank of Fresno, 118 Cal. 600 (50 P. 666), this court, in dealing with the question of the liability of a bank which had taken a draft for collection, held that its duty was complete when it sent the draft through ordinary banking channels to another bank for collection, and this was true even though the plaintiff did not know that such was the custom of the bank. In that regard the opinion states as follows: 'In making the collection the bank was acting as the agent of the plaintiff, and from the nature of the transaction was required to employ a subagent, and, as the agent of the plaintiff, was bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence, as well in the employ of its subagent as in the discharge of any other of the duties assumed by it. If in making the collection it followed the course usually taken by banks under similar circumstances it cannot be held to have been negligent. Dorchester Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 177; Indig v. National City Bank, 80 N. Y. 105.' The decision of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts thus cited by this court as authority for the decision (Dorchester Bank v. New England Bank [supra]), contains the following: 'The bills undoubtedly were intended to be transmitted to Washington for collection, and if the defendants employed suitable subagents for that purpose, in good faith, they are not liable for the neglect or default of the subagents.'"

The Chief Justice, in delivering the opinion in the case of Fabens v. Mercantile Bank, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 330, says:

"It is equally well settled, that when a note is deposited with a bank for collection, which is payable at another place, the whole duty of the bank so receiving the note in the first instance, is seasonably to transmit the same to a suitable bank or other agent at the place of payment. And as a part of the same doctrine, it is well settled, that if the acceptor of a bill or promisor of a note, has his residence in another place, it shall be presumed to have been intended and understood between the depositor for collection and the bank, that it was to be transmitted to the place of the residence of the promisor."

The rule announced in these decisions is supported by a decided weight of authority. Many cases are cited sustaining this doctrine. It must be conceded that there is a conflict of authority as to the liability of a bank which accepts commercial paper payable at a distant point for collection, the New York rule being that the bank contracts to collect the paper and that its correspondents are its agents, for whose negligence it is liable. However, courts adhering to the New York rule have always held that that rule may be modified or changed either by universal custom or by positive agreement. In Allen v. Merchants' Bank of the City of New York, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215-232 (34 Am. Dec. 289), the court, speaking through Justice Verplanck, said:

"The bank, if its officers think fit, and the dealer will consent, may vary that liability in either case. It may receive the paper only for transmission to its correspondents. That would form a new and different contract, and would limit the responsibility to good faith and due discretion in the choice of an agent."

In Exchange National Bank v. Third National Bank, 112 U. S. 276-281, 5 S. Ct. 141, 143 (28 L. Ed. 722), the court, in speaking of the rule announced by those courts which had accepted the New York doctrine, said:

"* * * The contrary doctrine, that a bank receiving a draft or bill of exchange in one state for collection in another state from a drawee residing there, is liable for neglect of duty occurring in its collection, whether arising from the default of its own officers or from that of its correspondent in the other state, or an agent employed by such correspondent, in the absence of any express or implied contract varying such liability, is established by decisions in New York. * * *" (Italics ours.)

In the present case, the only witness called by the defense testified without contradiction:

"The custom of banks in Ely and throughout the eastern part of the state of Nevada with reference to giving credit on drafts was to extend immediate credit, subject to final collection through the correspondent banks. If drafts, bills, or checks on banks in other cities were not paid, the custom was to charge them back to the customer. The original of the deposit slip, which has been put in evidence, stayed with the bank, but Mr. Shephard received a copy, in effect a duplicate original with the wording on it the same. All of our slips have this printed on them: 'All checks and drafts on this and other bank credited subject to payment.' That had been on all our deposit slips for years prior to this, * * * it was the universal custom of banks to accept all drafts upon foreign connections as cash items with provisions. I mean by my expression, 'with provisions,' if the bank feels that the depositors are responsible customers, in many cases they extend immediate credit with the privilege of charging back in the event of nonpayment through any cause. With people who are not responsible, of course, they do not do that."

In this state in the case of Davis v. First National Bank of Fresno, supra, the court said:

"The court should also have permitted the defendant to show by the witnesses, which it called for that purpose, the usage of banks in regard to the collection of paper presented by persons who were unknown to them, and that the defendant conformed to that usage. * * * "The fact that one deals with the bank without taking the trouble to inquire as to its system will raise the implication that he already knows and is satisfied with that system. It is clear that if a person hands over a note to a bank for collection, without any species of remark as to the course to be pursued, the bank is not bound to thrust upon him a statement of its intended course and to retain him until the whole theory has been expounded to him, when his conduct unmistakably shows that either he already knows it, or else he does not desire to know it. Either he knows and approves it, or he voluntarily trusts to the wisdom of the bank at his own deliberately assumed risk of its sufficiency. In such a case the bank not only has the right to assume, but it is even positively bound to assume that his desire is that the ordinary and established usage be pursued."

To the same effect is the case of San Francisco National Bank v. American National Bank of Los Angeles, 5 Cal. App. 412, 90 P. 558.

[6] In this case the attorneys for appellants have filed no brief in reply to that presented by the respondents. Certainly, this was not because of the fact that the respondent's brief failed in any respect to fully answer every point raised by the appellants in their opening brief. It is earnestly contended on the part of respondent that the appellants should be penalized for having taken a frivolous appeal. In this respect we do not feel that had faith can be attributed to the appellants, although there seems to be very little merit in the appeal, either from the standpoint of the facts of the case or the law applicable thereto. It is probably unfortunate that the respondent's very clear exposition of the law and facts of the case was not available to appellants before the appeal was initiated.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte GRIFFIN. (Cr. 1412.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 15, 1927.

False pretenses  (5)—Maker postdating check and telling payee he had no funds to meet it held not guilty of intent to defraud (Pen. Code, § 476a).

Maker postdating check and telling payee he had no funds to meet it, and instructing the payee not to present the check for payment until advised to do so, held not guilty of issuing check with intent to defraud within Pen. Code, § 476a.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by Russell L. Griffin to secure release from custody on an information charging violation of section 476a of the Penal Code. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Franklin P. Bull, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and Arthur W. Jonas, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Habeas corpus. The petition recites that Russell L. Griffin is imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the city of San Francisco, by reason of an information being filed against him under which he is charged with the commission of a felony in violating section 476a of the Penal Code relating to issuing bank checks with intent to defraud; that his confinement is illegal, in this, that before the filing of said information he had not been legally committed on the charge by the magistrate for the following reasons: That the undisputed evidence adduced by the people at the preliminary hearing shows: (1) That petitioner did not commit the offense or any offense charged in said information, but on the contrary, the facts show that no crime had been committed; (2) that no check was ever uttered or delivered by defendant; (3) that the check set out in the information was postdated, and the payee instructed that defendant had no funds in the bank to meet the check, and that the same was not to be presented for payment until defendant advised said payee to do so, and which instruction was never given; (4) that the check was never cashed, but was deposited by the payee, Mrs. Thomas Fleming, for collection with the Mercantile Bank, the officers of which told her at the time not to draw against the check, as it would take a few days to collect it; (5) that the proof fails to show any intent to defraud. The evidence taken at the preliminary hearing shows petitioner delivered to one Mrs. Thomas Fleming the following instrument in writing:

"The Bank of Palo Alto. No. 103.

"Palo Alto, Cal., January 28, 1927.

"Pay to the order of Mrs. Thomas Fleming $310.00, three hundred ten and 00/100 dollars.

"R. L. Griffithh."

It further shows from the testimony of Mrs. Fleming, the payee named in the check, that the same was postdated, and that petitioner had informed her that he did not have funds in the bank upon which the check was drawn to meet its payment, but for her to withhold it until such time as he advised her to present it, as he was expecting to receive funds from his father. Notwithstanding these instructions, Mrs. Fleming deposited the check for collection before receiving such advice, at which time she was informed by an officer of the bank not to check against it until the amount was collected by the bank. Contrary to these instructions, she drew upon her account for $125. The check given to her by petitioner being returned unpaid, there was insufficient funds in her account to cover the amount she had drawn. An officer of the bank then caused the arrest of petitioner. Mrs. Fleming settled with the bank on her overdraft. Except in this particular no money was ever paid on petitioner's check either to defendant or to any one else. Mrs. Fleming refused to swear to a complaint against petitioner, as she considered she alone was to blame for his predicament in having deposited the check before being advised to do so. Under these circumstances it is manifest that there is an entire lack of evidence or probable cause to connect petitioner with the offense charged, and it utterly fails to show any intent to defraud. Where the maker of a check, at the time of delivery thereof to the payee, makes known to the latter that he has no funds in the bank to meet the payment of the check, there is no deception; and the mere fact that the maker fails or is unable to keep his promise to have funds there on or before a given date does not constitute any evidence that at the time of the transaction the check was issued with intent to defraud. People v. Wilkins, 67 Cal. App. 758, 228 P. 367.

The application for the writ is not opposed by any representative of the people. The writ is granted, and petitioner is discharged from custody.

CLINE v. CARPENTER. (Civ. 4859.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 15, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇐50—Agreement to pay commission on sale to purchaser, introduced within six months from expiration of listing, means to purchaser introduced within listing period.

Agreement to pay broker commission, if owner should sell property to any one broker introduced within six months from date of expiration of thirty-day listing, held to mean that owner would pay commission on sale made within 6 months to purchaser introduced by broker within thirty-day listing period.

2. Brokers ⇐50—Unless failure to sell within time limited is caused by owner, broker, to recover commission, must produce purchaser within time limited.

Broker, to be entitled to his commission, must produce purchaser within time designated in his contract or within such extension of time as may be granted by his employer, unless failure to sell within time limited is due to negligence or fraud of owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; S. M. Reinhaus, Judge pro tem.

Action to recover commission on sale of real property by George Cline against A. D. Carpenter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Arthur E. Koepsel, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for the recovery of commission for the sale of real estate, and is founded upon the following instrument:

"George Cline and Arthur Shell, 117 North Spadra, Fullerton, California: I hereby authorize you, as my exclusive agent, for a period of 30 days from date hereof, to sell or exchange the following described property, to wit: 13 acres located at cor. Commonwealth & Nicholas streets. Price, $4,500, per acre. Mortgage, $2,500. Due, ——. Interest, 7%. Terms, about ½ or little less. If you succeed in negotiating the sale of the above described property within the time limit above stated, or should I sell said property to any one introduced to me by you within six months from date of expiration of this listing, I agree to pay you 5 per cent. on price accepted by me, for cash sale, or 2½ per cent., if exchanged, for services rendered.

"July 25, 1922.

"Phone ——.

"A. D. Carpenter, Owner.

"Address, ———."

The evidence is undisputed that plaintiff produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy defendant's property on September 2, 1922, after the expiration of 30 days from the date of the foregoing instrument, though the sale was not actually made to the purchaser, for the reason that defendant's wife refused to sign the deed. Subsequently the defendant sold the property to another purchaser without the consent of the plaintiff. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals therefrom.

[1, 2] But a single question is presented on this appeal, namely, whether the instrument sued upon was a thirty-day listing or was in fact a seven-month listing. In other words, does the instrument mean that plaintiff shall have a commission from defendant providing he produces a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy at any time within six months after the exclusive agency had expired, or does the instrument limit the payment of commission to plaintiff by defendant only to a case where defendant sells to a purchaser introduced by plaintiff within the thirty-day period? A similar question was considered in Elsea v. Fissler, 29 Cal. App. 187, 154 P. 1067, where an option to sell property contained the following words:

"If I sell to any one within ninety days after the expiration of this option to whom said property has been recommended by said agents or their assigns, I agree to pay them a commission of five (5) per cent. of the amount of said sale."

The court said (page 191 [154 P. 1069]):

"What, then, was evidently intended by the language of the agreement, 'If I sell to any one within ninety days after the expiration of this option to whom said property has been recommended by said agents,' etc., was that, if Fessler himself sold the property within the time so specified to any party to whom it had been recommended by the plaintiff and his associates during the life of the option agreement—that is, if the property had been so recommended while the plaintiff and his associates still had the authority to sell or negotiate the sale of the property under the provision expressly limiting their right so to do to the term of ninety days—then, in that case only, he would pay the brokers a commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount for which he might so sell the property."

In the case at bar, the words, "should I sell said property to any one introduced to me by you within six months from date of expiration of this listing," were evidently intended to cover a sale made by the defendant within the time so specified to any party to whom he had been introduced while the plaintiff still had the authority to negotiate a sale of the property under the provision expressly limiting his right to do so to the term of thirty days, and in that case only he would pay the broker a commission on the sale. The words "expiration of this listing" clearly refer to the expiration of the thirty-day period; yet, if respondent's contention were true, the listing would continue for a period of six months thereafter, and plaintiff, within the succeeding six months, would have a right of action for any sale made to a person introduced within seven months after the date of the contract, thus giving a right of action for a period of thirteen months from the date of the contract. Clearly, such was not the intention of the parties. In Wright & Kimbrough v. Dewees, 52 Cal. App. 42, at page 45, 197 P. 957, 958, the court said:

"The obvious purpose of the insertion in the above-quoted clause of the words: 'or after termination of this contract, if sold to a party to whose attention said property was brought through the agency of the said agent,' was to protect plaintiff for his efforts during the life of the contract resulting in a sale not consummated until after the termination of the contract."

In the present case the obvious purpose of the inserted clause hereinbefore quoted was to protect the broker for introducing a purchaser during the life of the thirty-day contract, where the deal was consummated within six months "from date of expiration of this listing." The rule expressed in the foregoing cases was again followed in Hobson v. Hunt, 59 Cal. App. 679, 211 P. 242. We therefore conclude that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the trial court that said listing was a general authorization to the plaintiff to sell or exchange said property and was in full force and effect at the time plaintiff procured a purchaser for said property. A broker, to be entitled to his commission, must produce a purchaser within the time designated in his contract, or within such extension of time as may have been granted by his employer, unless the failure to sell within the time limited is due to the negligence or fraud of the owner. Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 P. 867, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328; Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878; Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 P. 354; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 P. 642. In the present case the broker did not produce a purchaser within the time of thirty days designated in the contract; nor was there any extension of such time granted.

In view of the foregoing conclusions, the question whether defendant had a right to sell said property to any person he desired, notwithstanding said listing, becomes immaterial to the decision of this case.

The judgment is ordered reversed.

In action by an attorney at law for legal services in criminal prosecution, where issue as to whether defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a fee of $1,350 was denied by defendant, except as to $350 already paid, finding against defendant's denial held, under evidence, not a miscarriage of justice, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

McLucas, Justice pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Wally A. Kirk, as executrix of the estate of E. E. Kirk, deceased, against B. F. Culley. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lucien Gray, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. A. Schreider, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered for plaintiff E. E. Kirk, and Wally A. Kirk, as executrix of the estate of E. E. Kirk, deceased, has been substituted as plaintiff and respondent in the place and stead of E. E. Kirk in the above-entitled cause.

The complaint alleged that certain legal services were performed for defendant at defendant's special instance and request; that defendant accepted the services, and promised and agreed to pay to plaintiff therefor the sum of $1,350; that defendant paid $350 on account; and that there was a balance due and owing of $1,000. The answer of the defendant admits that plaintiff performed certain legal services at defendant's special instance and request, and that defendant accepted such services. But defendant's answer denies that he promised or agreed to pay plaintiff any sum in excess of $350 for services performed, and also denies that he paid $350 on account of a total sum of $1,350, but alleges that the $350 was paid to plaintiff and received by plaintiff in full satisfaction of the services of plaintiff. Plaintiff testified fully in regard to the employment, and there was evidence before the trial court to show that $1,000 was to be paid to plaintiff when he should be able to convince the district attorney of the innocence and integrity of the defendant and succeed in having him dismiss the case against defendant, and that $1,000 was agreed to be paid by defendant, and that he was to procure a certain cashier's check for that amount, and have it indorsed in blank and delivered in escrow for plaintiff, and that it was to be delivered from escrow to plaintiff on the date that the charge was dismissed against defendant herein. But the evidence further shows that the defendant failed to procure the cashier's check for $1,000, or in any amount, and that a short time after the contract was made the defendant was again indicted and charged with criminal intent to defraud and cheat, etc.; that thereafter the defendant came again to plaintiff, and he agreed to represent defendant for an additional preliminary fee, which he paid, and he made a second written memoranda, by which he agreed to defend defendant on both of said indictments for the same balance of $1,000 over and above such preliminary fee or retainer. The evidence further shows that on November 1, 1922, when by the agreement the defendant was to pay $1,000 into escrow for the benefit of plaintiff, defendant, instead of paying the money due on that day, substituted another attorney for plaintiff, without any notice to plaintiff, and defendant failed and refused to pay said money into escrow or at all. Plaintiff then brought this action. Plaintiff was the only witness, and defendant did not cross-examine, and the plaintiff rested upon his testimony. Defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground "that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant a judgment for plaintiff." His argument was that plaintiff's action was premature, because a certain answer which plaintiff had moved to strike before as immaterial showed that the dismissal of the indictment against defendant occurred long after the case at bar had begun. The motion for nonsuit was denied. Thereafter defendant introduced as a witness the attorney who had been substituted in his place on November 21, 1922. This witness testified, in substance, as to his efforts in having two indictments against defendant dismissed, and he testified that they were finally dismissed, after certain other defendants had made reparation. The trial court found for the plaintiff and gave him judgment with interest from November 1, 1922, the day on which defendant had agreed to pay the balance of $1,000 into the escrow, being the same day that defendant had refused to make such payment into escrow, and had substituted another attorney in place and instead of the plaintiff. The only issue made by the pleadings was whether or not the defendant had promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $1,350. It was denied by the defendant, except as to the $350 already paid, and the court, upon evidence introduced found against this denial. Upon an examination of the entire case, we cannot say that there has been any miscarriage of justice. Section 4½, art. 6, Const. In the case of Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 P.

867, cited by appellant, quoting from page 118 (24 P. 868) we note the possible reason for the court's very technical decision in that case:

"And where, as here, the demand is unconscionable (being for part of a brokerage of $7,600 for obtaining a loan of $4,000 for four months), we think that leave to amend should be refused. A party who seeks to enforce a liability like that must stand upon his legal rights."

Judgment affirmed.

I concur: HOUSER, J.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. I dissent.

The complaint states two causes of action. The first is indebitatus assumpsit, and alleges that plaintiff performed legal services for defendant at defendant's special instance and request; that defendant accepted said services, and promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff therefor the sum of $1,350; that defendant has paid on account of said sum of $1,350 the sum of $350. The second cause of action is in quantum meruit for the incidental services alleged in the first cause of action. No evidence was introduced nor recovery sought under the second count.

Plaintiff prepared a writing, signed by himself, which he testified was agreed to, though not signed by defendant; said contract being plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2, as corrected by stipulation filed in this court, and reading as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, September 12, 1922.

"Messrs. B. F. Culley and Ovid D. Bohlen, Black Building, Los Angeles, California—Gentlemen: (Re People v. B. F. Culley and Ovid B. Bohlen. Re Indictments Nos. 18311 and 18491.) In order to reduce our understanding regarding services and fees in the above-entitled matters, the substance of our agreement is hereby set down in writing.

"In consideration of my services as the attorney for each of you, my fees are $350 each, to include preparation for trial now set for November 1, 1922; these preliminary fees have been paid in full by each of you.

"For the trial of the above-mentioned cases my charges are to be $250 in each case, from each of you, payable either during or before the termination of each of said trials or of the one trial should the cases be consolidated.

"Should these actions be dismissed against you at any time before the commencement of the trial, during the trial, or prior to the termination of the trial, or in the event of a verdict of acquittal, then it is agreed that my fee is to be a total of $1,000 from each of you. This fee will eliminate all other fees excepting the ones already paid. It is understood and agreed that each of you will, on or before November 1, 1922, procure cashiers' checks, each payable to yourselves and indorsed in blank and deliver the same to William A. Schreider, attorney at law, in escrow with him, to be delivered to me unconditionally on the date said charges may be dismissed against each of you in any of the manners above set forth.

"E. E. Kirk [Signed].

"I fully understand and agree to all of the terms of the above contract.

"Dated September 12, 1922.

"B. F. Culley [Not signed].

"I fully understand and agree to all of the terms of the above contract.

"Dated September 12, 1922.

"Ovid D. Bohlen [Not signed]."

Plaintiff prepared the case and appeared for the trial at the date set, on November 1, 1922, at which time another attorney was substituted by the defendant. The trial was continued, and the case was dismissed some time after the filing of the complaint in the instant case on April 17, 1923. The court gave judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, with interest from November 1, 1922.

Appellant's first specification of error is that defendant's motion for nonsuit was improperly denied, for the reason that the action was prematurely brought, and for the further reason that there was a variance amounting to a failure of proof between the allegations of the complaint and the evidence. The rule is well settled that the cause of action must exist when the action is commenced. Landis v. Morrissey, 69 Cal. 83, 86, 87, 10 P. 258; Lewis v. Fox, 122 Cal. 244, 252, 54 P. 823; Morse v. Steele, 132 Cal. 456, 458, 64 P. 690.

In the case at bar, the contract was to pay $1,000 on the date of dismissal or acquittal, a check for said sum to be deposited in escrow on November 1, 1922. There had been neither dismissal nor acquittal on the day the complaint was filed. Appellant's point is well taken. In Cuneo v. Davis, 36 Cal. App. 351, 171 P. 1079, where a contract between attorney and client was under consideration, the agreement provided that, if the attorney defeated the pending action against the client or prevented a recovery, a certain fee should be paid. It was held that the action was not defeated until the judgment became final, and that an action brought for such services pending an appeal taken in the former action was prematurely brought. In the present case, the complaint declares a cause of action on the express contract, and alleges performance thereof. It is not a suit for damages for the breach of the contract on account of wrongful discharge. The cases cited by the respondent correctly state the measure of damages where the contract has been wrongfully breached by the defendant to be the full compensation provided in the contract. But here there is no opportunity for the application of such rule of damages. The complaint did not allege noncompliance and excuse therefor by reason of wrongful discharge, but instead the complaint expressly alleges the performance of the contract and fails to set out any excuse for nonperformance. Wrongful discharge was neither alleged nor proved, and that issue could not be tried under the pleadings. Only the fact of substitution of attorneys was shown in evidence, without any reason therefor being shown. The evidence did not show performance of the contract set forth in the complaint. If the plaintiff in a suit on a contract pleads performance, he must prove it. Proof or excuse for nonperformance would not enable him to recover on such a pleading, and, if the plaintiff did not perform the contract, but relies on the conduct of the defendant as an excuse, he must set forth the excuse in his complaint. Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 117, 24 P. 867; Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 133, 124 P. 834. Plaintiff must recover upon the cause of action alleged in his complaint, and not upon some other which may be developed by the proofs. Johnson v. Moss, 45 Cal. 515, 518; Mondran v. Goux, 51 Cal. 151, 152; Owen v. Meade, 104 Cal. 179, 182, 37 P. 923; Kredo v. Phelps, 145 Cal. 526, 528, 78 P. 1044. Plaintiff's testimony does not show that he made any objection when the substitution was ordered in open court upon the suggestion of another attorney. Silence implies consent, and consent would prevent any right of action.

Respondent relies upon the rule that the order denying a motion for a nonsuit will not be reviewed upon appeal upon any ground not precisely and specifically stated in the motion for nonsuit, or where no ground is sufficiently stated, and insists that variance between the pleadings and the proof was not provided at the trial as ground for a nonsuit. We have examined the entire record and the plaintiff's motion for argument and nonsuit, and conclude therefrom that the question of variance between the pleadings and the proof was substantially raised on the motion for nonsuit.

PEOPLE v. CROWFOOT. (Cr. 1396.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. June 21, 1927.

Embezzlement §11(1)—Evidence that purchaser exchanged garage for other property and failed to pay seller consideration called for did not warrant conviction for embezzlement.

Evidence, showing that defendant purchased garage and exchanged same for other property and failed to make payment for garage by delivering stock in corporation as agreed, held not to sustain conviction for embezzlement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon G. Gray, Judge.

Henry C. Crowfoot was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Reversed.

E. A. Douthitt and M. S. Hamilton, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., and Leonard J. Meltzer, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with embezzlement, on or about the 6th day of February, 1925, of certain personal property described as an automobile garage, together with the equipment therein, and a certain bill of sale thereof, which property it was alleged had been trusted to him as a bailee by one Fred Schaefer, the owner thereof. From the judgment following the conviction, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed on a typewritten record.

On this appeal the appellant presents but one ground which requires consideration—that the evidence wholly fails to sustain the verdict. Briefly, the facts are that the appellant, who was the owner of mining and lumber property situated in Butte county, this state, interested Schaefer in associating himself with him in the development of the property, with the ultimate object of organizing a corporation for that purpose. In February, 1925, the parties entered into a written agreement, whereby the appellant agreed to sell to Schaefer 8,000 shares of stock of the corporation which was to be formed for the purpose of developing the properties mentioned, and in consideration thereof Schaefer agreed to sell to the appellant his entire interest in the Park Garage located in the city of Alameda. On February 6, 1925, a bill of sale was executed and delivered by Schaefer to the appellant conveying to him the entire interest in this garage and the appellant immediately assumed possession thereof, employing Schaefer to act as his agent in its management. Thereafter, and with the full knowledge and consent of Schaefer, the appellant exchanged the garage to one Elliott for an interest in real property situated in the northern part of the state. In accordance with the agreement of the parties, the appellant proceeded with the incorporation of the mining company and procured the permission of the state commissioner of corporations to issue 500,000 shares of stock, same to be held in escrow, subject to the further orders of the commissioner. This incorporation was effected on March 17, 1925, and on July 13 following, pursuant to the application of the directors of the corporation, the commissioner issued his authorization for the issue of the stock, and, on July 27 following, the stock was accordingly issued and deposited in escrow with a depositary approved by the commissioner. On October 13, 1925, the president of the corporation addressed a letter to Schaefer, stating that the appellant had represented that certain commitments for the issue of stock had been made, and asking Schaefer to communicate with him, stating what commitments he had had with the appellant, and assuring Schaefer that it was the desire of the corporation to make immediate adjustments of these commitments. No reply was received from Schaefer to this letter, but some time thereafter, through the insistence of counsel employed by him, the corporation commissioner was directed to withhold permission for the transfer of any shares from the corporation for the adjustment of these demands. Thereafter demand was made upon the appellant by other counsel representing Schaefer that the appellant return the garage to Schaefer. The appellant readily agreed to comply with this demand, but when the offer was made to Schaefer he refused to accept the return of the garage and insisted that the appellant go through with his contract for the delivery of the stock. Counsel having prevented this delivery through a stop order from the corporation commissioner, these proceedings were commenced through the office of the district attorney, charging the appellant with embezzlement of the garage at the time of the original sale thereof in February, 1925.

At the time of the trial and upon this appeal the district attorney proceeded upon the theory that the parties had agreed that the appellant should take the garage, sell it, and with the proceeds thereof purchase for Mr. Schaefer 8,000 shares of the corporation stock. If this theory could have been supported by any evidence, a case might have been presented which would have put the appellant in the position of a trustee for Schaefer to hold the garage and the proceeds thereof and to apply the latter to the purchase of stock in the corporation. But there is not a particle of evidence in the record to support this theory. The evidence is without conflict that the transaction was an outright sale and transfer of Schaefer's entire interest in the garage and that the agreement to deliver shares of stock in the corporation was a personal agreement with the appellant, and not one executed by him as a promoter of the corporation. It is merely a case, then, where a sale was made and where the vendee had failed to make payment of the consideration called for. There is no evidence to show either a bailment or a trust between the parties.

Judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

NICHOLL v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 12277.)

Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1927.

1. Courts 55—That city and county paid probation officer's salary did not bring him within terms of retirement charter provision (Pen. Code, § 1203; Const. art. 11, §§ 5, 8½).

That city and county of San Francisco paid salary of county probation officer whose office is controlled by Pen. Code, § 1203, did not bring him within terms of charter provision relating to retirement, under Const. art. 11, § 8½, since duty to pay salary is controlled by section 5.

2. Courts 55—Where city and county had not exercised power to control office of probation officer by charter provision, general law controlled and retirement charter provision did not apply to him (Pen. Code, § 1203; Const. art. 11, § 8½).

Where city and county of San Francisco had not exercised power authorized by Const. art. 11, § 8½, to control office of county probation officer by proposing and having ratified by Legislature proper charter provision, Pen. Code, § 1203, controlling office, was not superseded and charter provision relating to retirement did not apply to such officer.

3. Counties 61—City and county cannot create county office, in absence of proper charter provision authorizing it to control office.

County office cannot be created by city and county of San Francisco, in absence of a proper charter provision authorizing it to control said office.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action for a declaratory judgment by William H. Nicholl against the City and County of San Francisco. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Hanley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll by the city and county of San Francisco from a declaratory judgment to the effect that William H. Nicholl, the respondent, as adult probation officer of the said city and county, is not subject to compulsory retirement from said office, under the terms of article 17, section 1, of the charter of said city and county, and ordinance No. 5561 (new series), enacted to carry said charter provision into effect.

The said charter provision, in so far as here involved, is as follows:

"The board of supervisors of the city and county are empowered under the conditions set forth herein, on the vote of fourteen members and the approval of the mayor, to establish a retirement system and to provide for death benefits for public employees other than policemen and firemen, who are now members of a pension system, and elective officers and officers appointed by the mayor."

There is no dispute that respondent is now and was at the time of commencement of this action over the age of 70 years, and that he is subject to retirement if the said charter provision applies to him. It is conceded by both appellant and respondent that the position held by respondent is a county office. Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 P. 302.

Appellant insists, however, that a proper interpretation of said charter provision would bring the office of respondent under its terms and subject him to its rules of retirement, notwithstanding the word "employee" is used therein to designate him. This is so, it is said, because of the rule of exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis—an exception proves a rule concerning things not excepted. This contention springs from the words of said above-quoted charter provision, "other than * * * elective officers and officers appointed by the mayor." For, says appellant, why except certain county officers if all others are not included?

[1] This argument is persuasive, but not conclusive, and the case of O'Connell v. Retirement Board of City of Boston et al., 254 Mass. 404, 150 N. E. 2, to the contrary, likewise is not conclusive. But this question need not be definitely solved, for upon different and broader grounds, it must be held that neither the charter provision nor its attendant city and county ordinance have any application to the particular office held by respondent. This is true because said office is under the control of the general law, to wit, section 1203 of the Penal Code. Such assertion is conceded by appellant, but it is insisted that inasmuch as the city and county pays the salary of said respondent he thereby, under section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, must be held to come within the terms of said charter provision. In this contention appellant is in error.

The city and county of San Francisco has never accepted, in so far as respondent is concerned, the benefits or powers conferred by said section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution. Admittedly the only connection the city and county of San Francisco has with respondent is that under the law it must pay his salary. But this duty exists independent of and is in no wise connected with said section 8½—it is controlled by section 5 of said article 11. This conclusion is made certain by holdings in various decisions of this court and the District Court of Appeal, some of which will now be considered. Section 7½ of article 11 was designed to furnish to counties the same measure of authority conferred upon cities or cities and counties by section 8½ thereof.

In Gibson v. Civil Service Comm., 27 Cal. App. 396, 150 P. 78, the provisions of said section 7½ and their bearing upon the position of probation officer were considered, and it was held that it is within the power of a county to adopt a charter provision, under the authority of said section 7½, which will supersede section 1203 of the Penal Code upon said subject. In that behalf the court said:

"* * * The full purpose and intent of the constitutional amendment [section 7½, article 11] is preserved and made effective by holding that the charter provisions governing the removal of all officers superseded the direction of the general statute, known as the juvenile law [Penal Code, § 1203]. * * *

In Anderson v. Lewis, 29 Cal. App. 24, 154 P. 287, considering the same position of probation officer, the District Court of Appeal reaffirmed the holding in the Gibson Case, but said:

"Our opinion is that, where the board of supervisors has failed or declined to exercise a right to legislate as to the manner of appointment of subordinate officers, the general laws of the state touching such matters should govern."

Noel v. Lewis, 35 Cal. App. 658, 170 P. 857, is only indirectly involved and throws no particular light upon the question at issue, but Jones v. De Shields, 187 Cal. 331, 336, 202 P. 137, is important. In that case the county of Tehama undertook to invest itself with the power conferred upon it by said section 7½ of article 11, but the charter contained no provision for the fixing and regulation by the board of supervisors of the manner of appointment and removal or compensation of deputy county clerks as authorized by said section. In this situation it was held that the general law as to such office had not been superseded by the charter provision, respecting which the court said:

"These provisions contemplate that there may be a case where a charter will fail to provide for matters which it properly should cover, and the intention is clear that in such a situation the general law, which in such a case has not been superseded by the charter, shall govern. See Cline v. Lewis, 175 Cal. 315, 316, 165 P. 915. Such a situation is presented here, and it follows that the general law on the subject of petitioner's appointment and compensation has not been superseded, but remains effective."

[2, 3] This case seems almost an exact parallel to the situation before us. Here it is admitted that the city and county has not availed itself of the power authorized to control the office in question by proposing and having ratified by the Legislature a proper charter provision. This being true, the general law has not been superseded. It follows from this statement that no provision of said section 8½, respecting compensation or any other matter, is in operation respecting respondent's office because of the failure of the city and county to procure authority thereunder. In so far as the duty of the city and county to pay the salary of respondent is concerned, as above stated, that duty is referable to section 5 of article 11, as will abundantly appear from the following citations: Jones v. De Shields, supra; Nicholl v. Koster, supra; Reed v. Hammond, 18 Cal. App. 442, 123 P. 346. It is also true that a county office may not be created in the absence of a proper charter provision authorizing the city and county of San Francisco to control said office. Logan v. Shields, 190 Cal. 661, 214 P. 45.

We agree with respondent that the disposition of every question essential to this appeal is found in Nicholl v. Koster, supra, and that said decision determines them in favor of respondent. That case was instituted by respondent himself and was decided in 1910, respondent apparently having administered the duties of this office in said city and county for many years.

Section 1203 of the Penal Code makes no mention of age limit, nor does it provide for compulsory retirement.

Judgment affirmed.

FOSTER v. FERNANDES et al. (Sac. 4015.)

Supreme Court of California. June 23, 1927.

Appeal and error §469—Undertaking on appeal to stay execution, not being jurisdictional, is not subject to attack that some defendants did not authorize appeal.

Undertaking on appeal to stay execution of judgment, not being jurisdictional, is not open to attack on ground that numerous defendants did not give authority to attorney of record to file for them notice of appeal, and never intended to and did not appeal from judgment entered.

In Bank.

Suit by M. Elma Foster against J. V. Fernandes and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Writ of supersedeas was granted by Supreme Court (252 P. 726) and plaintiff moves to vacate writ. Motion denied.

Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for appellants. Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an application to vacate a writ of supersedeas heretofore issued by this court in the above-entitled matter. The plaintiff secured judgment in an action to recover certain cattle or their value, from which judgment the defendants filed notice of appeal, and also filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $15,000. The respondent excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties, and after due examination the trial court found the sureties were qualified to act as such, but refused to permit them to justify upon the ground that they appeared one day too late. Thereupon, the appellants applied to this court for a writ of supersedeas, which was granted and an opinion filed in connection with said order on January 18, 1927. 252 P. 726.

Respondent now moves to vacate this writ, and the ground urged is that the undertaking upon appeal is unenforceable against the appellants because of the following facts: Affidavits are presented by respondent to the effect that certain of the numerous defendants did not give authority to the attorney of record to file for them a notice of appeal and never intended to and did not appeal from the judgment entered herein. The undertaking follows the notice of appeal with reference to parties named therein, and it is urged that some of the parties to the undertaking were not properly parties to the appeal, and, therefore, the undertaking is void and unenforceable, under the ruling in Zane v. De Onativia, 135 Cal. 440, 67 P. 685, and other authorities cited by respondent. Assuming that the record could be collaterally attacked in this manner by affidavits, nevertheless the case of an appeal bond of this character, which is not jurisdictional, has been differentiated from the case of Zane v. De Onativia, supra, and the other cases relied upon by respondent in a recent case decided by this court. El Dora Oil Co. v. Gibson et al. (Cal. Sup.) 256 P. 550. Under the authority of the case just cited the undertaking in the instant case is not open to the attack made upon it by respondent, and there is no ground for vacating the writ heretofore issued by this court herein pending the decision of the appeal from the judgment.

The motion to vacate the writ of supersedeas is denied.

ABEL v. RECLAMATION DIST. No. 2047.
(Sac. 3827.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1927.

1. Drains $\Leftarrow$ 70—Owner of lands surrounded by irrigation waters held required to pay drainage assessment, though not raising rice requiring irrigation.

One owning lands which were entirely surrounded by irrigation waters, brought by artificial means at cost to others in reclamation district, held required to pay drainage assessment, though his lands were used for raising alfalfa rather than rice, and winter rains were sufficient for all purposes excepting irrigating rice crops.

2. Drains $\Leftarrow$ 91—Supreme Court cannot interfere with findings of board of supervisors modifying drainage assessment unless assessment is unreasonable (Pol. Code, § 3456).

Supreme Court is not permitted to interfere with findings of board of supervisors in modifying drainage assessment under Pol. Code, § 3456, against one owning lands in reclamation district, unless assessment appears to be arbitrary and unreasonably made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Suit by George H. Abel against Reclamation District No. 2047 to enjoin the collection of a drainage assessment. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore W. Chester, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Thos. Rutledge, of Colusa, and George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken by the plaintiff from a judgment rendered against him that he take nothing by his action and that the defendant have judgment for its costs of suit. By the record before us it appears that the plaintiff was at all the times mentioned in the complaint and proceedings in this cause the owner of four separate parcels of real property aggregating 670.45 acres, situate in defendant reclamation district No. 2047, county of Colusa. Said district contains an area of about 235,000 acres. That by proceedings taken by the board of trustees of said reclamation district a comprehensive system of drainage was inaugurated for the purpose of conducting out of said district by means of a main canal and laterals large quantities of water brought therein from the Sacramento river by several irrigation systems existing within the district for the purpose of flooding extensive areas of land devoted to rice culture and for general irrigation purposes. Plaintiff's lands are not within any one of the several irrigation districts formed within the limits of defendant reclamation district, and said lands have never been devoted to rice growing, but have been quite continuously used in recent years for the production of alfalfa crops. The four parcels which are assessed are portions of appellant's entire acreage, through which the Glenn-Colusa irrigation district canal courses. Those portions lying west of said canal are without the limits of the district and are not included in the assessment. Those parcels lying on the east side of said canal and situate within said reclamation district fall within the levy made as well as do all other lands within said reclamation district for drainage purposes. The assessment commissioners appointed by the board of supervisors of said county of Colusa placed upon said four parcels of plaintiff's lands as their proportionate share of the entire cost of the improvements the aggregate sum of $4,755.67. Upon a hearing of the objections made by plaintiff as to the illegality and inequality of said assessment as compared with other lands, the board of supervisors modified the assessment as reported by the trustees of the district by reducing it to $1,853.15. Section 3456, Pol. Code. In all other respects the objections were overruled and the assessment was approved as modified. The principal reason for the modification was that plaintiff's lands were not planted to rice, and the drainage factor applied in estimating the benefits that would accrue to lands within the district by reason of the improvement should not be as large in cases where land was used for growing alfalfa as in those cases where it was used for or was adaptable to the use of rice culture.

The main objections urged by plaintiff in the court below, and insisted upon here, were that said assessments levied upon said four parcels of land were illegally made for the reason that none of said parcels or any portion thereof was or could possibly be benefited by the drainage project and would, in fact, suffer a positive detriment therefrom; that said assessments were not apportioned according to the benefits, if any, that would accrue to said separate parcels with respect to each other or to the lands generally situate within the district, and the cost of constructing said drainage improvement was disproportionate to and greatly in excess of any and all benefits that could accrue to said parcels or to all other lands situate within said reclamation district. The main canal is several miles distant from the lands of plaintiff, but lateral F cuts the southerly boundary line of plaintiff's lands and lateral F-1 is approximately but one mile south of the southerly boundary line of said lands, two miles from its central point, and three miles from its remotest portion. Lateral F-4 is a constructed or excavated canal 7 feet deep, 18 or 20 feet wide at the top, and from 2 to 5 feet wide at the bottom. It is 4½ miles easterly from plaintiff's lands. The flow of water or drainage from the lands of plaintiff is generally easterly with a trend north of east at the north line and south of east at the south line. Lateral F was dredged from the main canal westerly a distance of two miles. Thence it continues as a natural swale or ancient creek channel. Lateral F-1 is an arm or branch of lateral F. It appears that the drainage waters from plaintiff's lands find their way into the laterals and finally into the main canal. If the laterals should prove to be inadequate to drain the lands in a satisfactory manner, the construction of a ditch or slight enlargement of the laterals, which is tentatively a part of the plan, would be made to relieve the situation. There is, however, no showing of such immediate necessity, and it could not reasonably be expected that a definite provision would be made for a contingency that may not occur. St. Maurice, the engineer for the district, testified that such work, while not definitely provided for at the present time, is in the contemplation of the general plan, and will be done if the exigencies of the situation should require it, either as a drainage or irrigation expediency.

[1, 2] Plaintiff's most insistent objection to the improvement is that his lands will not be benefited either by drainage or irrigation works. It would seem that his lands are upon an elevation slightly above the general level of adjacent lands and have a natural, easy drainage. He produced witnesses who testified that grain crops had been grown upon his lands for many years without irrigation and in the latter years alfalfa has been successfully grown without irrigation. It is a fact, however, that the lands abutting on three sides of his lands have for several years been annually flooded during the summer seasons by his neighbors who are engaged in rice culture. On the west, or remaining side, said lands are bounded by the large central irrigation canal. Thus it is seen that his lands are entirely surrounded by irrigation waters brought to the borders of his lands by artificial means at a cost to others. Thus surrounded by water, it would not appear strange that his lands, even though at a slight elevation, should have produced alfalfa without the necessity of surface irrigation. That the lands of plaintiff were substantially benefited by percolating and subsurface waters can scarcely be doubted. The waters used for irrigating rice crops are held on the lands during the summer seasons and drained off in the fall of the year. The winter rains are sufficient for all other purposes. It would seem, in the light of the facts of the case, that plaintiff has suffered no apparent injustice by being required to pay an assessment which seems to be calculated upon a reasonable basis. But there are other alleged elements of benefit, which were considered by the triers of the facts in the order provided by the statute, and we are not permitted to interfere with the findings of those tribunals unless the assessments appear to be arbitrarily or unreasonably made. Much must be left to the sound judgment and discretion of the officers appointed by law to determine the question of benefit in reclamation and drainage matters and finally to the court which makes a judicial review of the proceedings.

The central points urged by appellants, such as the validity, scope, and effect of section 3455, Political Code as amended in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 604, § 1), as counsel for appellant points out, were involved in the case of Hershey et al. v. Reclamation District No. 108 (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 542, and Browning v. Reclamation District No. 108 (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 551, and are controlled by the cases above cited. Upon the grounds and for the reasons given in those cases, all questions not specifically noticed herein, being within the purview of the cases last cited, must be held to be concluded by those cases.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action on a promissory note by John Franklin Johnson, as Superintendent of Banks, in charge of the liquidation of Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Chino, a banking corporation in liquidation, against S. J. Ulrey. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry G. Bodkin, Harold L. Watt, both of Los Angeles, and M. O. Hert, of Colton, for appellant.

Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. On February 21, 1923, the appellant herein, S. J. Ulrey, executed and delivered to the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Chino, Cal., a promissory note for the sum of $5,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable six months after date. Thereafter, the note not having been paid at its maturity, the plaintiff as superintendent of banks of this state, and in charge and in control and in possession of the property and business of said bank in liquidation, instituted this action to recover the amount due on said promissory note. Appellant answered and admitted the execution of said note, but alleged that there was an entire want and absence of consideration for the execution thereof; that said note was delivered to Charles F. Carrere, C. J. Little, and the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Chino, and that nothing of value was received by appellant, except certain purported certificates of beneficial interests in the Dairy Loan Association to be converted into shares of the common stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company, a corporation; that said beneficial interests and said stock were worthless; and that Carrere, Little, and the bank knew that they were worthless at the time of the execution and delivery of said note to said bank, and that the worthless character of said beneficial interests and of said stock was unknown to appellant at the time he executed and delivered said note, and at all times prior thereto. Appellant further alleged as a defense to said note that he was induced to execute and deliver the same through the false and fraudulent representations made by the said Carrere and Little to appellant as to the financial condition of the Southwest Mortgage Company and as to the value of its stock, and also as to the financial standing and ability of the said Carrere and Little. Briefly stated, said representations which appellant alleges were made to him by said Carrere and Little, and which were alleged to be false and fraudulent, were that the Southwest Mortgage Company had been organized to take over the business of the Dairy Loan Association; that said Southwest Mortgage Company had earned an average profit of 2 per cent. per month during the period of its existence on its preferred stock, and that the earnings of said corporation were such that its common stock had an actual value of $50 per share; that, if appellant would purchase certain certificates of beneficial interests in the Dairy Loan Association, to be thereafter converted into shares of the common stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company, and execute and deliver to Carrere and Little and the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank a promissory note for $5,000 on account of the payment thereof, said Carrere and Little would resell said stock within six months from date so as to net appellant $75 per share, or, upon their failure to do so, said Carrere and Little would themselves purchase said shares at said figure at the end of said period of six months; and that Carrere and Little were men of large means, and well able to carry out said agreement with appellant. The answer further alleges that appellant relied upon said representations, and was induced thereby to execute and deliver the promissory note sued on herein, and that but for such reliance thereon he would not have executed nor delivered said note. Then follows in the answer the necessary and proper allegations that said representations were untrue, and were false and fraudulently made, for the purpose of inducing appellant to execute said promissory note, and, furthermore, that said Carrere and Little had no intention at the time of making said promises of performing the same. Finally, it is alleged in appellant's answer that Carrere and Little in making said false and fraudulent representations and promises were acting in collusion with one J. S. Brown, who was, during all of said times, the cashier and executive officer of said Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, and that said J. S. Brown, as cashier and executive officer, had full knowledge of the false and fraudulent character of said representations and promises, and with such knowledge, said Brown, on behalf of said bank, accepted said note from appellant, and in accepting said note was acting with the intent and purpose of assisting in the perpetration of the fraud upon appellant, and that by accepting said note, through its cashier and executive officer, said bank did so with full knowledge of the fraud perpetrated upon appellant as set forth in said answer.

Upon the issues made by said complaint and answer the action went to trial before the court with a jury. The evidence produced presented but slight, if any, conflict. In the main, it showed that Carrere and Little were stock salesmen. The appellant some time previous to meeting either of said men had become the owner of certain shares of capital stock of the Leach-Biltwell Motor Company. Appellant's brother, living in the northern part of the state, also was the owner of stock in this corporation. The latter had some business dealings with Carrere, and had given to him a letter of introduction to appellant, in which he recommended Carrere as an able salesman with whom he had considerable business of a satisfactory nature, and whom he considered, according to appellant's testimony, was "the best man to help us dispose of our Leach-Biltwell stock which we were desirous of turning over." Carrere presented this letter of introduction to appellant at the latter's ranch near Chino, Cal., about the middle of February, 1923, at which time the two men talked over a possible sale or exchange of the Leach-Biltwell stock owned by appellant and his brother. Carrere represented to appellant that it would require a considerable amount of capital to finance a campaign to sell the Leach-Biltwell stock owned by appellant and his brother; that he was forming a partnership with Little; and that he had an opportunity to secure some beneficial interests in the Dairy Loan Association or stock in the Southwest Mortgage Company at a very low figure; that if appellant would take 200 of these beneficial interests in the Dairy Loan Association, which in turn would be exchanged for 266 $\frac{2}{3}$ shares of the capital stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company, the same would be turned over to appellant for \$10,000 and 1,000 shares of his Leach-Biltwell stock. Carrere suggested appellant could go to his bank in Ontario and borrow the money upon his note. This appellant objected to doing, for the reason, as stated by him, that it would prejudice his credit at his own bank. It was finally agreed, after some days spent in consideration of the matter, that appellant would investigate the stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company, and, if he became satisfied with its value, he would endeavor to finance the project by negotiating a loan with the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank at Chino. Accordingly, appellant met Carrere and Little at Ontario the next day, and the latter then assured appellant that the common stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company was worth \$50 per share, and that they would resell any stock acquired by appellant in said company within six months from that date for \$75 per share, net to appellant. From Ontario the three men went to the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank at Chino, where they met J. S. Brown, the cashier of said bank. Appellant was introduced to Brown by Carrere or Little, as he had never met Brown before. He had never done any business with said bank prior thereto. After laying said matter before Brown, the latter agreed to make a loan of \$5,000 to appellant, but stated the bank was not in a position "to handle the ten." The appellant, as a witness, testified regarding this meeting, as follows:

"Q. Just tell what was said and done at that time between the four of you. A. One of the boys, I think Mr. Carrere, suggested to Mr. Brown that I was ready to go ahead and close up the deal on the condition that they would handle my paper at the bank there and hold it there. Q. Did he say the amount of the paper? A. Yes—no, I don't think the amount of the paper was mentioned at that time. I will get to that. He said I was ready to go ahead with the deal if they would handle my paper there at the bank and hold it there, and Mr. Brown in shaking hands suggested that he had never had the pleasure of my acquaintance, that he had heard of me, and, if they handled my paper, would I open an account with them, or could I see fit to give them a part of my business, and I said I was tied up with the First National at Ontario at that time, but, however, I presumed that later I could open an account with them and give them a part of my business. Mr. Brown said they would be glad to handle $5,000 of my paper, but they were not in a position at that time to handle the ten."

Either Carrere or Little suggested that they could get the other $5,000 in Los Angeles. Up to this time appellant had furnished no financial statement to the bank. He later furnished such a statement, which showed that his total assets were $255,425, with liabilities of $75,500. After some discussion relative to the probability of securing from Los Angeles a loan of $5,000, which, together with the $5,000 the Chino bank had agreed to furnish, would make up the necessary $10,000, the appellant asked to talk with Brown alone. Carrere and Little thereupon left the room, and appellant asked Brown what he knew of Carrere and Little and of the Southwest Mortgage Company. Brown replied that he knew nothing of Carrere or of the Southwest Mortgage Company, but Little had come to him highly recommended, and that he had had considerable business with him, and found him reliable. Appellant desired more information regarding the two men and the mortgage company, but stated to Brown that he did not feel competent to make the necessary investigation. Brown replied that he had had considerable experience along that line; that he had been in the banking business 15 years, and had handled a good many securities. At the request of appellant he agreed to assist appellant in determining the value of stock in the Southwest Mortgage Company and whether appellant would be justified in going into the deal. For this purpose they left for Los Angeles that afternoon. Before leaving, they stated the object of their trip to Los Angeles to Carrere and Little, and the latter suggested that they see a Mr. Johnson, trust officer in the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, and a Mr. Bennett, who was the president and manager of the Southwest Mortgage Company. On arriving in Los Angeles they went direct to Mr. Johnson, of the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, and Mr. Brown introduced himself as the cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Chino. He also introduced appellant. Appellant thereupon said:

"Mr. Johnson, what we want to know is concerning the standing of the Southwest Mortgage Company and its management."

To this statement Mr. Johnson replied, according to appellant's testimony:

"Mr. Bennett was a man of splendid character and standing; that he had done business over Southern California for a number of years; that he was one of those kind of men that always paid his bills before they were due, always discounted his paper first he said, then he said that he always paid his bills before they were due. He said, 'If he owes a bill to you the 2d, 3d, or 4th, he will be in the 1st,' and he only reorganized, as I understand it, the Imperial Dairy Loan to broaden its scope and give him a chance to increase its earnings; that they had been organized less than three months, had earned 1½ per cent. the first month, 2 per cent. the second month, and so far during the third month, about two-thirds of it—in February, 1923—they were earning on the same basis. * * * Mr. Johnson said that he considered that the company had a splendid outlook with Mr. Bennett as manager, and suggested that we should interview Mr. Bennett, and we told him—I think I told him probably; one of us spoke up and said we had intended to interview Mr. Bennett."

Appellant and Brown then went to Bennett's office, and, after Brown had introduced himself and appellant, the following took place, as shown by appellant's testimony:

"I said, 'Mr. Bennett, I want to know what you know about these men Carrere and C. J. Little, what the standing of your company is, and what it is doing and so on, or know concerning the Southwest Mortgage Company,' and Mr. Bennett told us the same, practically identically as Mr. Johnson concerning the reorganization of the Imperial Dairy Loan into the Southwest Mortgage Company so as to increase its scope. Its scope was not broad enough, and didn't give them powers enough to handle the variety of paper to enable the company to earn what it should. Therefore they were reorganizing—well they had reorganized it, but it was still in transition as I understood it into the Southwest Mortgage Company; that they had earned the first month 1¾ per cent. the second month 2, and were earning on the same basis at that time; and I think this was in answer to a question probably, that they had 1,350 shares of stock issued of the capital stock, $100 shares [$100 per share] making the capitalization $135,000; that their assets were at that time between 160,000 and 165,000. In answer to the question as to Carrere and Little, Mr. Bennett told us they were not fly by nights; they had offices in the Pacific Mutual Building; they had fine offices there; that Mr. Carrere had been there quite a time; that he was worth probably a couple hundred thousand dollars, and Mr. Little was worth probably $50,000; and that he considered them responsible and able to carry out any contracts they would enter into. I explained to him they had entered into a contract in writing to sell this stock, and he said he figured they were capable of any financial responsibility, and as to the Southwest Mortgage Company he said there was but little of this stock for sale. * * * Q. By the Court: Mr. Ulrey, did you ask Mr. Bennett how much stock was outstanding? A. I asked him concerning the stock, and he answered, as I said just now, that there were 1,350 shares of the capital stock outstanding, but as to common stock I did not ask him the amount, nor was it stated in my presence anything concerning the amount. I had in mind necessarily what my knowledge had been at those times, that there was probably share for share. Q. But you made no personal inquiry? A. I made no personal inquiry. Q. By Mr. Bodkin: Did you know at that time there had been 50,000 shares of common stock issued? A. I did not know that until I had received my certificate later. * * * The Court: The question is, Did you tell Mr. Bennett that—that you were contemplating the purchase of common stock, as I understand the question? Mr. Bodkin: That is the question, yes. A. Well, I would say it would be my recollection that we did because of the answer which I do know that he stated that there was very little of this stock for sale, and that he, Carrere, and Little owned it all, so he must have understood what stock. I cannot say we said 'common stock,' because I say to you, gentlemen of the jury and the court, what little experience I had had in stock I had noted that the common stocks I had any acquaintance with usually fluctuated with the preferred stock. The main experience I had was with the Leach-Biltwell Company stock, which usually fluctuated one with the other. What I was going to say Mr. Bennett said, there were—going back to that stock proposition— Q. By Mr. Bodkin: Well was anything said about what the par value of the common stock was? A. Yes, we spoke of that; Mr. Bennett spoke of that. He said the common stock was no par stock, but that the earnings of the company would make it a nice stock to handle, but he said it was no par stock. Q. Was anything said at that time as to whether or not the stock had a book value? A. The book value according to my recollection was never mentioned there. * * *

After this meeting at Mr. Bennett's office, appellant and Brown left for Ontario in the latter's automobile. Appellant's testimony as to what took place between him and Brown on the trip from Los Angeles to Ontario was as follows:

"Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Brown on the way home regarding the advisability of purchasing that stock? A. Yes. I said to Mr. Brown—I asked Mr. Brown what his impression was, what he thought of the stock and of the proposition, and he said it looked good to him. Q. At that time did you tell him whether you were going to purchase the stock or not? A. Yes; I told him that it looked good to me, and I thought I would go ahead with the deal."

The next morning appellant, after calling up Carrere and Little on the telephone, met them at Ontario, and the three then went to Chino and to the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, where they met Mr. Brown. The note sued on herein was prepared and signed by appellant, and the latter wrote out an agreement, which was signed by Carrere and Little, whereby they agreed to resell the stock within six months, and to turn the money into the bank. Two certificates, each for 100 beneficial interests in the Dairy Loan Association, were left with the bank for the purpose of exchanging them for common stock in the Southwest Mortgage Company. This was later done, and said stock was held by the bank as security for appellant's note. As a part of the same transaction the bank issued to Carrere and Little two certificates of deposit, each for $2,500, payable six months after date. At this meeting Mr. Brown asked appellant for a financial statement, and one was prepared and signed by appellant, and contained the matters already referred to. At the same time appellant signed another note for $5,000, and delivered the same to Carrere and Little, which was subsequently transferred by them to a corporation in Los Angeles city. After the transaction was closed, the appellant made frequent demands upon Carrere and Little to sell the stock as agreed, but they neither sold it nor any part of it, nor would they purchase it from appellant. Prior to their maturity the two certificates of deposit issued by the bank to Carrere and Little had been transferred by them to third parties, and the same were proven as legal claims against the bank, which in the meantime had suspended business, and was in course of liquidation under the direction of the plaintiff, the superintendent of banks.

There is ample evidence in the record to sustain the allegations of the answer that the common stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company at the date when appellant acquired it was of little, if any, value. Mr. Bennett stated that he told appellant and Brown on the occasion of their visit to his office that the common stock had no value, but appellant and Brown both testified that they did not hear Bennett make any such statement. The evidence as to the financial ability of Carrere and Little at the time of their negotiations with appellant is not entirely satisfactory. It does appear, however, that they subsequently became involved in financial difficulties to such a degree that those who had had business dealings with them were compelled to resort to litigation, and that the proceedings against them were not confined on all occasions to civil side of the courts.

[1] One of the grounds upon which the trial court directed the jury to return its verdict in favor of respondent was that there was no substantial evidence tending to prove that Brown, the cashier and executive officer of the bank, was a party to the fraud practiced upon appellant by Carrere and Little, nor that he had any knowledge of said fraud at or prior to the time appellant executed said promissory note. If the evidence was such as to justify the action of the trial court in directing a verdict in respondent's favor upon this ground, the judgment must stand, irrespective of the merits of any other ground upon which the court may have based its action. Appellant concedes that "there was no direct evidence of the culpability of the cashier of the bank acting on behalf of the bank," but contends that "the circumstances shown were sufficient to have justified the jury in drawing the conclusion that the cashier was in fact a party to the scheme to rob the appellant."

[2] One of the circumstances which appellant contends as showing that Brown was a party to the fraud was that Brown, an experienced financier, having volunteered to assist appellant in investigating the value of the stock of the Southwest Mortgage Company, failed during such investigation to ascertain the assets and liabilities of the company or the amount of the preferred and common stock issued by it, and that, had he ascertained these facts, they would have shown that the common stock of the company was worthless. The failure of Brown to ask for a financial statement of the company showing its assets and liabilities, or to ascertain the amount of preferred and common stock issued by the company, would not necessarily show that he was a party to the scheme to defraud the appellant. It may not have occurred to him, as it appears it did not occur to the appellant, to ascertain these facts. It is true Brown was a banker of experience, and appellant was a farmer who claimed to be unfamiliar with such matters, but appellant's financial statement made to the bank shows that he was possessed of property valued at over $250,000, among which were stocks and bonds owned by him in the following companies: "F. M. Loan, Discount, Dusenbergs Motors, Imperial Cotton Mills, Leach-Biltwell Motor Company." These stocks and bonds were valued by appellant in his statement at the sum of $37,600. To have acquired these stocks and bonds, and thereafter to have managed the business necessarily connected with their ownership, appellant must have gained some familiarity with corporations and their manner of doing business. It is hardly probable that with the experience thus gained he had not himself learned of the importance of a financial statement in the affairs of a corporation or of the advisability of ascertaining the amount and character of its capital stock issued before investing therein. It may be conceded that there was a difference in the degree of knowledge possessed by these two men in this regard, but in our opinion the difference was not so great that an omission on the part of one would be naturally expected but on the part of the other could be considered as an inference of fraud.

[3-5] Another circumstance which appellant claims indicated that Brown must have had a personal interest in the scheme with Carrere and Little was the fact that he had agreed to make the loan to appellant before receiving from him any statement showing the character, amount, or value of appellant's property. While Brown had never met appellant before he was introduced to him by Carrere, he testified that he had heard of him, although there was evidence that he had stated in a deposition taken in another action that he had never heard of appellant before he was introduced to him by Carrere. The evidence showed that appellant resided upon his farm at Chino, consisting of 265 acres of land, and valued at over $100,000. We may take judicial notice of the fact that Chino is a farming district of limited area, and only sparsely settled. It would have been unusual for a man in Brown's position in a community of the size of Chino not to have known something regarding a man of appellant's means and standing in that community. As a rule, bank officials make it a part of their duty to inform themselves regarding the people of their community, and especially as to the extent and value of their property interest. It is not strange, therefore, much less a circumstance from which fraud could be inferred, that Brown, as cashier of the bank, was led to promise appellant a reasonable loan without first exacting of him a detailed statement of his property. Neither was the circumstance that Brown volunteered to go with appellant to Los Angeles and help him investigate the offer of Carrere and Little and spent the greater part of a day in making such investigation, without compensation or remuneration, indicative of any fraudulent interest of Brown in the scheme of Carrere and Little. When the subject of the loan was first broached to Brown by appellant, the former based his assent thereto, upon appellant transferring his business to the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank at Chino, and, on ascertaining that appellant was tied up with the Bank of Ontario, he exacted a promise from appellant that he would at least divide his account between the two banks. It is apparent that Brown was looking after business for his bank, and, if a trip to Los Angeles would secure appellant's patronage, it would not be an unreasonable service for him to gratuitously render in order to gain appellant's good will.

While the evidence as recited herein is not all the evidence contained in the record, yet it comprises the main features thereof, and has been stated as strongly in favor of appellant as the record warrants. We have, however, carefully read all the evidence to which our attention has been directed by appellant and the greater part of the entire transcript, and we are of the opinion that the evidence taken as a whole was not sufficient to justify a jury in drawing an inference that Brown conspired with Carrere and Little to defraud appellant, or that he had any knowledge of their unlawful scheme to defraud appellant of his property.

[6] Appellant assigns as error certain rulings made by the trial court in excluding evidence offered on his behalf. It appears that prior to the Ulrey transaction, in which, as we have already seen, the bank issued two certificates of deposit, each for $2,500, Brown, as cashier of the bank, had had other dealings with Little and one C. F. Wood, in which the bank has discounted two promissory notes for $400 and $800, respectively, and in payment thereof had issued certificates of deposit to Wood and Little. Thereupon appellant asked Brown the following question: "How many hundreds or thousands of dollars have you issued to Mr. Wood and Mr. Little prior to February 1, 1923?" To this question the respondent objected, and his objection was sustained by the court, and appellant assigns as error the action of the court in sustaining this objection. Appellant contends that the above question was proper, and by it and other like questions he proposed to show that the bank, "acting through its officers, had issued certificates of deposit in payment of promissory notes received by the bank out of all proportion to the capitalization of the bank and not in conformity with good banking practices." Proof of such fact, appellant argues, would be a circumstance tending to show that the bank, through its officers, was in the conspiracy to defraud appellant. We confess our inability to see the force of appellant's argument. Conceding that the bank had pursued a method of doing business which was unsound, this fact would be no evidence whatever of any intention on the part of the officials to practice a fraud upon appellant or upon other persons occupying positions with reference to the bank similar to that occupied by appellant. This contention, therefore, is without merit.

[7] While the witness Brown was on the stand, he testified that he had heard of the appellant before he was introduced to him by Carrere. This testimony has already been referred to. For the purpose of impeaching him, appellant asked leave to open a deposition of Brown taken in another action pending before said trial court, and which had not yet been tried. The attorneys for appellant represented the defendant in said action, and expressly consented to the opening of said deposition. The attorneys for the plaintiff in said action, however, were not present, and their consent was not, and could not be, obtained. Under these circumstances the trial court refused to permit the deposition to be opened. No authority is cited by appellant holding that this action of the trial court was erroneous, and, in the absence of any such authority, we would hesitate to rule that the trial court did not pursue the proper course. We are satisfied, however, that the appellant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the trial court to permit this deposition to be opened, for the reason that a copy of the deposition was in the possession of the appellant, and he was permitted to call Mr. Watt, one of his attorneys, who testified that he was present at the taking of said deposition, and heard Brown make the statement contained in the copy of the deposition to the effect that he had never met appellant before that day. Appellant was therefore permitted to impeach Brown by the testimony of a creditable witness, and, if any error was committed in refusing permission to open the deposition, appellant was not prejudiced thereby.

As we have already indicated, the evidence fails to show that Brown, the cashier of the bank, had any knowledge of the unlawful scheme of Carrere and Little. The bank, therefore, took appellant's note freed of any notice or knowledge of said fraud, and, having given a valuable consideration therefor, is entitled to enforce the payment thereof against appellant. The court's action, therefore, in directing the jury to return a verdict in respondent's favor, was proper and valid, and the judgment based thereon should be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ALLIED ARCHITECTS' ASS'N
OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 9482.)

Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1927.

1. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 14(2)—A corporation may practice architecture, and cannot be ousted from exercise of privilege (Civ. Code, §§ 286, 653b-653d).

A corporation may be formed under Civ. Code, §§ 286, 653b-653d, to practice architecture, and cannot be ousted from the exercise of that privilege.

2. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 396—Corporation, formed to practice architecture, does not lose right to further practice as a penalty for violating regulatory statute (Civ. Code, § 286; St. 1901, p. 641, as amended by St. 1903, p. 522).

Where a corporation is authorized under Civ. Code, § 286, to practice architecture, loss of right of further practice may not be inflicted on it as a penalty for violation of St. 1901, p. 641, amended by St. 1903, p. 522, requiring that its members or employees be certified architects.

3. Corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 22—Law requiring corporation to file certified copies of articles of incorporation with county clerk held not to affect previously organized corporations; "shall" (Civ. Code, §§ 296, 299, as amended by St. 1921, p. 125).

Civ. Code, §§ 296, 299, as amended July 29, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 125), requiring a corporation to file with the county clerk of the county where its principal place of business is located a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, held not retrospective, and did not affect corporations fully organized before July 29, 1921; "shall" as used therein, while mandatory in meaning, usually referring to the future.

4. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 263, 267(2)—No law shall be given retroactive effect to divest individuals of rights vested previous to its passage, or to affect pending litigation, unless contrary intent is manifest.

No statute or constitutional provision shall be so construed as to give it a retroactive effect to divest individuals of rights vested previous to its passage or to affect pending litigation, unless such intent is expressly declared or necessarily implied in language of the provisions.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People against the Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a temporary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

Howard Robertson and Meserve, Mumper, Hughes & Robertson, all of Los Angeles (Timon E. Owens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. In this proceeding in quo warranto, in which the plaintiff seeks a judgment that the defendant be excluded from the practice of architecture in the state of California, and from the exercise of any and all corporate rights, privileges, and franchises therein, and also asks for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding further with the performance of certain contracts which it has made with the county of Los Angeles for the performance of architectural services, the trial court denied the temporary injunction and sustained the demurrer of the defendant without leave to amend. From the judgment of dismissal thereupon entered, the plaintiff has appealed, urging several grounds for a reversal of the action of the lower court. The two decisive questions, however, are whether or not the defendant corporation is entitled to practice architecture in this state, and whether or not it has complied with the provision of the Civil Code relating to the filing of its articles of incorporation in the office of the county clerk. All the contentions of the appellant revolve about these two points.

The act regulating the practice of architecture in this state (Stats. 1901, p. 641, amended Stats. 1903, p. 522) establishes a state board of architecture, and empowers the board to examine persons who desire to follow the profession of an architect, and to issue to them licenses for that purpose, and makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine, for any person to practice architecture without such a certificate. It is provided, however, that nothing in the act shall prevent any person from furnishing plans or other data for buildings for other persons, provided the one furnishing such plans and data shall fully inform the other that he is not a certificated architect. In addition to the facts appearing from the complaint, to which the trial court necessarily confined its decision in ruling on the demurrer, other undisputed facts were established in opposition to the motion of plaintiff for a temporary restraining order. The defendant, Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles, is a corporation. Each of its thirty-three original incorporators was a duly certified architect, licensed and entitled to practice the profession of architecture within the state of California. While, according to its by-laws, "any architect who, because of his ability and qualifications, has advanced the art and profession of architecture and thereby is fitted to render professional services for the public welfare, is eligible as a member of [the] association," at no time since the incorporation of the defendant has any one been elected a member except and only he was a duly licensed architect under the laws of the state of California, and entitled to practice the profession of architecture in this state. All the present members of the association are certificated architects. It further appeared, so far as the connection of the defendant with the work agreed to be performed for the county of Los Angeles was concerned, that such work—

"in so far as the same already has been done, was done and performed by a licensed architect, duly licensed to practice the profession of architecture under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and all architectural work required or called for by said contracts to be done in the future will be done and performed for defendant and through it for said county by such a duly licensed architect; that the county of Los Angeles * * * will receive, in the doing of all architectural work called for by or done or to be done under said contracts, the services of trained, experienced, and duly licensed architects, and none others."

When the cause was in the court below, Hon. Hartley Shaw handed down a written opinion which so ably and conclusively determines the principal questions here involved that we adopt it as the opinion of this court:

[1] "The complaint alleges that the defendant was organized as a co-operative association under the provisions of sections 653b, 653c, and 653d of the Civil Code; that the purposes for which it was formed were, in general, the practice of architecture in connection with the erection of public buildings and the rendition of architectural services for its members, with other incidental powers; that neither its articles of incorporation nor its by-laws require that its members, officers, or employees be certificated architects under the statute hereinafter referred to; and that defendant has been and now is engaged in the practice of architecture, and in particular that it has made several contracts to perform architectural services for the county of Los Angeles, all of which have been completed but one. The uncompleted contract is for architectural services in connection with an acute hospital building for the county of Los Angeles, and it is against the further performance of this contract that a temporary injunction is sought.

"Plaintiff relies upon People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, 189 Cal. 531, 209 P. 363, and other cases holding that a corporation cannot practice law, and that, if it undertakes to do so, quo warranto will lie against it. In view of certain other decisions of the Supreme Court, I have come to the conclusion that the principles on which the cases relating to the practice of law were decided do not apply to the instant case. Those principles, as stated in the case just cited, are: First, that individuals may not generally and as a matter of right associate themselves together for the practice of law, special licenses being required in all cases for the practice of law, and hence the provisions of section 286 of the Civil Code, that corporations may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves, confers no right to form a corporation for the practice of law; and, second, that the essential element underlying the relation of attorney and client is that of trust and confidence of the highest degree, growing out of the employment and entering into the performance of every duty which the attorney owes the client in the course of his employment, and that the intervention of a corporation between the client whom it secures and the attorney whom it employs, even though the latter be duly licensed, prevents this relation of trust and confidence from arising.

"Taking up the second proposition first, it must be noted that the relation of attorney and client is, as the court says, a relation of trust and confidence of the highest degree. An attorney may be, and often is, intrusted with his client's most intimate and vital secrets and details of his financial and business affairs, so that a violation by the attorney of his trust will in many cases result in financial ruin and perhaps shame and disgrace for the client. Such a relation is sui generis. If a corporation could enter into this relation it might be, as the court points out, that those in control of its affairs would be without character, learning, or standing, and the standards of the profession would thereby be degraded, to the great injury of the state. * * *

"The law in this state regulating the practice of architecture, after providing for the issuance of certificates entitling architects to practice, declares that it shall be unlawful for any person to practice architecture without a certificate, but adds to this a proviso that 'nothing in this act shall prevent any person from making plans for his own buildings, nor furnishing plans or other data for buildings for other persons, provided the person so furnishing such plans or data shall fully inform the person for whom such plans or data are furnished, that he, the person furnishing such plans, is not a certificated architect.' St. 1901, p. 644, § 5. In Ex parte McManus, 151 Cal. 331, 90 P. 702, the Supreme Court held that this statute is valid against the objection that it discriminates between uncertificated architects. The court said: 'There is no class discrimination as to uncertificated architects, but, on the contrary, the act operates uniformly upon all that class. Any one of the class of uncertificated architects can practice his profession under the terms of the act—that is, prepare plans and other data for buildings—without rendering himself amenable to punishment, by informing his client or patron that he is not a certificated architect. * * * Neither do we perceive how under the act any special privileges or immunities are granted to any of the class of uncertificated architects, which are not possessed by, or extended to, all. That entire class are accorded the privilege and right to practice architecture, provided they inform their patrons that they do not hold certificates, and they are granted immunity from punishment provided they do so.'

"Thus the act, as construed in this case, does not prevent a natural person from practicing architecture without a certificate, but merely requires him, if he has no certificate, to inform his patrons of that fact; or, to follow the language of the court in the case of People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, individuals may generally and as a matter of right associate themselves together for the practice of architecture, such right not being limited to those who have certificates; and hence the first proposition on which People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation was decided is not applicable here, and the defendant was lawfully formed to engage in the practice of architecture.

"In Binford v. Boyd, 178 Cal. 458, 174 P. 56, this statute again came before the Supreme Court in an action to recover the amount due to a corporation for plans and specifications prepared by it for the construction of a building for the defendants. These plans were prepared by the corporation in pursuance of a contract between it and the defendants to that effect, and were made by a duly certificated architect who was employed by the corporation for that purpose. The defense was that the contract was void as in contravention of the statute regulating the practice of architecture. The court held the contract lawful, however, saying: 'Prior to this statute there was no restriction upon the right of any person to contract for or to furnish plans and specifications for another, or to follow the profession of architecture. All persons were at liberty to form corporations for any lawful purpose, and such corporations, when formed, had full capacity and power to make all contracts necessary or convenient for the carrying out of their lawful powers. * * *

The terms of the act show clearly that it was directed only to individuals as distinguished from corporations. It requires an examination of the person who applies for license, and its language shows that a license can be given only to human beings and not to artificial creations such as corporations. As a corporation could not obtain a license to engage in the profession of architecture, and as it must act wholly by human agency, it could engage in that art or business only by employing individuals who would carry on that business as its officers, agents, or employees. The act is effective upon corporations only to this extent, that, if it undertakes to do business of that character, either the persons whom it engages therein must be certificated architects under this statute, or, when contracting for plans and specifications for the erection of buildings for other persons, such persons must be informed that the plans and specifications will be prepared by some one who is not a certificated architect. The act does not prohibit a corporation from contracting to furnish to another person plans and specifications which are to be prepared by a third person who is a certificated architect. Nor is there anything in the object of the act, or the evils to be removed thereby, which would raise the necessary implication that it was intended to prevent such practice.'

"This decision fully covers the present case, and holds that a corporation may practice architecture. Defendant was therefore lawfully formed for that purpose, and cannot be ousted from the exercise of that privilege.

[2] "The complaint in this case alleges that defendant's articles of incorporation and by-laws do not require its members or employees to be certificated architects, but does not charge that they are not in fact certificated, or that, if any of them are not certificated, defendant has failed to inform the county of Los Angeles of that fact; and hence, for all that appears in the complaint, the defendant may be practicing in an entirely lawful manner. Whether it is so doing or not, the fact remains that the practice of architecture was lawfully open to it, and that it was lawfully formed for that purpose. Should it in fact violate the law by engaging uncertificated persons to perform the architectural services for which it has contracted without informing its patrons of that fact, it will be subject to penal prosecution for violation of the statute and its contracts with its patrons will be void, but I know of no law by which the loss of the right to further practice architecture may be inflicted upon it as a penalty for such violation of the statute.

[3] "Plaintiff's complaint also alleges that defendant's articles of incorporation were filed in the office of the county clerk of Los Angeles county and in the office of the secretary of state on July 1, 1921, but that defendant has never filed in the office of the county clerk of Los Angeles county, where its principal place of business is located, a copy of its articles of incorporation certified by the secretary of state, as required by section 296 of the Civil Code, and that therefore it is not authorized to transact any business. I do not think the provision of section 296, to which reference is thus made, is applicable to the defendant. In 1921, the statutory mode of organizing corporations was remodeled and substantially changed in several respects. Prior to that time, the original articles of incorporation were in all cases filed with the county clerk of the county in which the principal place of business was located, and a certified copy thereof was filed with the secretary of state, upon which, if the name did not conflict with that of other corporations, he issued a certificate of incorporation, and the organization of the corporation was then complete (Civ. Code, § 296); but the corporation was required to file in every county where it owned property, except that where its original articles were filed, a certified copy of the copy of its articles filed with the secretary of state (Civ. Code, § 299). In 1921, this plan was changed so as to require the original articles of incorporation to be filed with the secretary of state and a certified copy thereof to be filed with the county clerk of the county where the principal place of business is located, and in every county where the corporation transacts business; and to carry out this change the Legislature amended sections 296, 299, and other sections. These amendments took effect July 29, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 125), while the defendant's incorporation was completed under the then existing law on July 1, 1921. The amendment of section 296 contains the following provision:

"Upon filing the articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state * * * the secretary of state must issue to the corporation, over the great seal of the state, a certificate that the original articles containing the required statement of facts have been filed in his office, and thereupon the persons signing the articles and their associates and successors shall be a body politic and corporate; * * * provided, however, that no corporation shall be authorized to transact any business until it shall have filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which its principal business is to be transacted a copy of its articles of incorporation."

"Plaintiff claims that this proviso, which was first inserted in the section by this amendment, applies to corporations organized before the amendment took effect, and hence to the defendant. In support of this claim, plaintiff contends that the Legislature has full power to make such a change of law applicable to existing corporations. This may be conceded, but the question here is whether, under a proper construction of the law, it has done so. * * *

[4] "The construction of the amendment which plaintiff proposes would give it a retroactive effect. Plaintiff disputes this proposition, but I see no escape from it, for corporations, including defendant, which were fully organized before July 29, 1921, were entitled to do business from the date of organization until July 29, 1921, and on the latter date, if the plaintiff's construction be followed, this existing right was terminated by the amendment. In other words, a corporation which had been fully organized under the law in force at the time, lost its corporate existence, or at least its corporate powers, by the effect of a subsequent law. Such a statute is within this definition of a retrospective law in 5 Cal. Jur. 747: 'A retrospective law is one which operates upon matters which occurred, or rights and obligations which existed, before the time of enactment.' The established rule regarding such statutes is that 'no statute or constitutional provision shall be so construed as to give it a retroactive effect, to divest individuals of rights vested previous to its passage, or to affect pending litigation, unless such intent is expressly declared or necessarily implied in the language of the provision to be construed.' 5 Cal. Jur. 750. I find no such intent expressed in the amendment of section 296. Its language indicates rather that it was dealing with corporations whose organization should be thereafter begun. Such corporations would not file their original articles in the county where the principal place of business was located, and to assure persons there doing business with them some local means of ascertaining their corporate existence and powers, the Legislature added the proviso requiring a copy of the articles to be filed in the office of the county clerk of the county where the principal place of business is located. No such provision was needed as to corporations previously organized; their original articles already being on file in that office. The word 'shall,' found in this proviso, while mandatory in meaning, usually refers to the future, and the expression 'shall be authorized' is directed to such authority as may be conferred in the future. It does not cover the case of the defendant, which had already received its authority when the amendment took effect."

For the foregoing reasons the judgment of the lower court and the intermediate order entered therein, denying the plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction, are, and each is, affirmed.

2. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 123(7)—Title of amended Street Opening Act held sufficient to permit authorizing municipalities to contribute to improvement, even if title to original act was insufficient (Street Opening Act, as amended by St. 1913, p. 429, St. 1921, p. 565, and St. 1925, p. 238; Const. art. 4, § 24).

Title of St. 1925, p. 238, specifically referring to contribution by the municipality, amending Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376), as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 429) and 1921 (St. 1921, p. 565), held sufficient to permit the act to authorize municipalities to contribute toward the cost of improvement, even if title to original act was insufficient, since purpose of Const. art. 4, § 24, is to prevent entrapment of Legislature and public by misleading titles.

3. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 109—Chief purpose of constitutional requirement as to title of statutes is to prevent entrapment (Const. art. 4, § 24).

The chief purpose of Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject which shall be expressed in the title, is mainly to prevent entrapment of Legislature and the public by misleading titles.

4. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 109—Title of amending act is sufficient independently of original title, if it expresses subject of legislation (Const. art. 4, § 24).

Title of an amending act is sufficient independently of the original title, if it expresses the subject dealt with in the body thereof and is germane to the subject-matter of the legislation, under Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject to be expressed in the title.

5. Constitutional law $\Leftrightarrow$ 208(14)—Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 72, 93(1)—Proceeding under Street Opening Act held not discriminatory, where municipality decided to contribute definite sum (Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, art. 4, § 25, subd. 7; Street Opening Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1).

Proceeding under Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1, authorizing the municipality to contribute the whole, a percentage, or any sum toward the expense of improvements mentioned in section 1, held not discriminatory within Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, prohibiting class legislation and requiring uniformity in operation, and Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 7, prohibiting special laws authorizing opening of streets on ground not owned by state, where the municipality decided to contribute a definite sum.

6. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 64(4)—Provision of Street Opening Act for adding frontage for determining sufficiency of protests, when city's contribution is by percentage of cost, held severable (Const. art. 1, § 21; Street Opening Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1).

Provision of Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1, authorizing the municipality to contribute toward expense of improvements mentioned in section 1, providing for added percentage of frontage for determining the sufficiency of protests when the city's contribution is expressed in terms of percentage, is severable, so that even if violative of Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting class legislation, other methods of determining city's contribution are not thereby rendered discriminatory.

7. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 72—Street Opening Act subjecting property owner to assessment for benefits is not violative of uniformity requirements of Constitution, though eminent domain statutes require severance damages to be offset by benefits (Street Opening Act, § 10, as amended by St. 1925, p. 242, § 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 1248).

Method for assessing compensation and damages provided by Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 10, as amended by St. 1925, p. 242, § 4, whereby property owner is subjected to assessment for benefits, is not violative of uniformity requirements of Constitution, though Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, relating to eminent domain, requires severance damages to be offset by benefits received from the improvement, since theoretically both methods comprehend same factor.

8. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 68—Street Opening Act covers field of legislation to which general code sections are not made adaptable (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended).

Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended) covers a field of legislation to which the general code sections are not made adaptable and is a law general as to all coming within its provisions.

9. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 266—Magnitude and public benefit of improvement do not deprive city of authority to proceed under Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended).

Fact that an improvement is of great magnitude and also of certain public benefit held not to deprive the city of authority to proceed under Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended), authorizing establishment of an assessment district, in absence of abuse of discretion.

10. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 450(2)—Power to determine primarily confines of assessment district is one of legislative discretion (Street Opening Act [St. 1903, p. 376, as amended]).

The power to determine primarily the confines of an assessment district under Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended) is one of legislative discretion.

11. Municipal corporations ⚡887—Street Opening Act provision requiring council to transfer cost to special improvement fund held not in conflict with Los Angeles Charter (Street Opening Act, § 30, as amended by St. 1925, p. 244, § 6).

Provision of Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 30, as amended by St. 1925, p. 244, § 6, requiring city council to transfer city's proportionate cost of improvement to Tenth street improvement fund, held not in conflict with Los Angeles City Charter, §§ 380, 381, requiring credits to be made in funds required by law and prohibiting transfer between funds except in certain cases.

12. Municipal corporations ⚡450(4)—Description of assessment district in ordinance of intention held proper, though in greater detail than required by statute (Street Opening Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1).

Description of assessment district in ordinance of intention purporting to contain legal description of boundaries held proper, notwithstanding it was in greater detail than required by Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1, providing for description in general terms.

13. Municipal corporations ⚡450(4)—Purpose of act amending Street Opening Act was to make less than technical legal description of assessment district sufficient (Street Opening Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, § 2).

Purpose of St. 1921, p. 566, § 2, amending Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended), providing that ordinance of intention should describe assessment district in general terms referring to a map, was to make something less than a technical legal description sufficient.

14. Municipal corporations ⚡450(2)—Street Opening Act held applicable to improvement of continuous street, though termini were widely separated (Street Opening Act [St. 1903, p. 376, as amended]).

Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376, as amended) held applicable to opening, widening, and extending one continuous street, though termini widely separated, against contention act does not contemplate inclusion in one proceeding of improvements in widely separated parts of the city.

15. Municipal corporations ⚡293(1)—Language of statute in ordinance of intention held sufficient without specifying fund from which city's expense should be paid (Street Opening Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1).

Language of Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 376) § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 238, § 1, held sufficient in ordinance of intention without specifying fund from which the city's proportion of expense should be paid.

Application by Anna Frank for writ of mandate to be directed to H. J. Maguire and others, as the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles, to compel them to post and publish notices of the passage of an ordinance of intention to do certain street work. Writ granted.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Robert J. Stahl, Deputy City Atty., and Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

C. B. Penn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an application by an interested property owner for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents as members of and constituting the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles to post and publish, as required by law, notices of the passage of an ordinance of intention to open, widen, straighten, lay out, and extend certain streets in the city of Los Angeles. The proceeding is designated as the Tenth street project and is taken under the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376) as amended. The matter is submitted on a general demurrer to the petition.

As disclosed by the petition and as thus admitted by the respondents, the proceeding under attack is prosecuted for the purpose of acquiring certain property for street purposes, which property, in connection with existing public streets connecting therewith, will constitute a continuous public street from the easterly boundary of the city of Los Angeles at Indiana street and Mines avenue to Country Club Drive at Lucerne Boulevard. The extent of the improvement and of the assessment district is shown upon a map approved by the city council on January 5, 1927, and filed in the office of the city engineer. An examination of the petition and of the map discloses that this proceeding is practically the same as that attempted to be accomplished in a former proceeding which was declared by this court to be fatally defective in O. T. Johnson Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, 198 Cal. 308, 245 P. 164.

On the 6th day of January, 1927, the council adopted an ordinance of intention, a copy of which is attached to the petition. This ordinance was duly approved by the mayor on the following day and was published as required by law. On January 26, 1927, the respondents adopted a resolution wherein they formally refused to post and publish the notices of the passage of the ordinance of intention on the ground that said ordinance and the statute under which the same was adopted are invalid, and that there is therefore no duty enjoined upon them by law to post and publish the "Notice of Public Work" as provided by the act, and that to proceed therewith would be an illegal expenditure of public money.

The demurrer presents eight separate objections to the proceeding. They will be considered in the order raised by the respondents and discussed in the briefs.

[1-4] 1. In section 6 of the ordinance of intention it is provided that the sum of $1,500,000 shall be paid out of the city treasury toward the expense of said improvement. It is first contended that the title of the Street Opening Act of 1903 is insufficient to permit the act to authorize municipalities to contribute toward the cost of the improvement. The same point was raised, discussed, and insisted upon, but ruled adversely to the contention, in O. T. Johnson Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, supra. It is insisted that the determination of the question of the sufficiency of the title of the act was not necessary to that decision for the reason that before the ruling on the point in that case it had been decided therein that the city had not complied with the jurisdictional requirements of the statute. Conceding that the ruling on the point was not necessary to the result in that case, nevertheless it was involved therein, and we are satisfied with the declaration therein made. When considered with reference to the rules governing the construction of titles (23 Cal. Jur. 650), it may not rightly be said that the title to the original act would constrict the body of the act to proceedings for improvements to be paid for wholly by special assessment. There is an additional reason why the present proceedings are not subject to attack on this ground. The former proceedings were instituted under the act as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 429) and in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 565). The present proceedings were commenced after the effective date of amendments to the act adopted by the Legislature in 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 238). The title of the amending act specifically refers to "the contribution by the municipality to the expense of the improvement" provided for in the body of the amending act. It is insisted that the title to the original act should have been amended in order that the legislation be effective and that reference to the new matter in the title of the amending act was insufficient. The purpose of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution with respect to the title of acts was mainly "to prevent legislators and the public from being entrapped by misleading titles to bills whereby legislation relating to one subject might be obtained under the title of another." Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 228, 24 P. 383; Matter of Maginnis, 162 Cal. 200, 121 P. 723. During the session of 1925 the particular bill before the Legislature and the public was the amending bill and not the original bill. The amending bill clearly referred to the subject of contribution by the municipality. If the title of the amending act express the subject dealt with in the body thereof and is germane to the subject-matter of the legislation, it is sufficient independently of the original title. Miller & Lux v. Drainage District, 182 Cal.

252, 187 P. 1041. That the amending act here in question does sufficiently refer to the subject of contribution by the municipality provided for in the body of the act is beyond question.

[5] 2. It is next contended that the method provided by statute for determining the sufficiency of protests is illegally discriminatory. Section 1 of the act provides for a class of public work and improvements which may be brought about under the act. The improvements under the present proceedings fall within such class. Section 2 of the act as amended in 1925 empowers the municipality to contribute toward the expense of the improvement mentioned in section 1 in the following language:

"Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of, or any sum toward the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality, in which case the sum or percentage to be paid shall be stated in said ordinance of intention."

The city is thus authorized to contribute (a) the whole, (b) a percentage of, or (c) any sum toward the expense of such improvements. Section 4 of the act as amended in 1925 provides:

"For the purpose of passing upon and determining the sufficiency of such protests in cases where by a resolution of intention it is declared that the city shall pay a percentage of the expense of the improvement, the city shall be deemed to be the owner of frontage within the assessment district bearing the same proportion to the whole frontage therein as the proportion of the expense which it is to pay, and the actual frontage of property within such district shall be increased by the addition of such amount as is necessary to produce said result, and the amount of frontage as so increased shall be the total frontage to be used in determining whether a protest is signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on streets or parts of streets within said assessment district."

[6] Respondents take the position that where the city contributes toward the expense of an improvement a property owner should have the same privileges and burdens respecting the right of protest whether the city's contribution be expressed in terms of percentage or in a specified sum; that to add a fictitious or constructive frontage for determining the sufficiency of protests when the city's contribution is expressed in terms of percentage, and to fail to add a like or any frontage when the contribution is a specified sum, amounts to a discrimination prohibited by sections 11 and 21 of article 1 of the Constitution and is special legislation prohibited by subdivision 7 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution. There are two answers to this contention: First, it is only when the city in terms decides to contribute a percentage of the cost of the improvement that the so-called fictitious frontage may be added. It is not pointed out by respondents, nor do we perceive, how, by any equitable or practicable method, the frontage may be increased by percentage when the city decides to contribute a definite sum. The one method is entirely inapplicable to the other, and the property owners in both cases are not similarly situated. The statute bears no evidence whatsoever of arbitrary discrimination as between the property owners in the two cases, and there appears to be a reasonable basis for the classification. The constitutional requirement of uniformity is therefore satisfied. Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 194 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 784, 48 L. Ed. 1142; Johnson v. Gunn, 148 Cal. 745, 84 P. 665; 5 Cal. Jur. 823, 831. Secondly, if it be assumed that the added percentage of frontage in the one case imposes more of a burden on the property owners who desire to obtain a requisite frontage protest than is imposed on the property owners in the other case, and if it be further assumed that the property owners in both cases are similarly situated, it would not follow that the entire provision with reference to contribution by the municipality must be stricken down. There is and can be under the statute no added percentage of frontage in the present proceeding, and the property owners in the assessment district created therein will not therefore be subjected to the alleged additional burden. If the provision of the statute requiring an added percentage of frontage be declared in a proper case to grant a special privilege, it is clear that such provision is severable. In such case said provision might be stricken as contrary to section 21 of article 1 of the Constitution without disturbing the right of the municipality to make the contribution in terms of percentage without an added frontage. Bacon Service Corporation v. Huss, 199 Cal. 21, 248 P. 235. We are not to be understood as deciding or intimating that the provision of the statute requiring the added frontage is invalid, but are simply meeting counsels' argument that the entire provision with reference to contribution must fall if the requirement of added frontage be invalid.

[7, 8] 3. It is next contended that the method provided by section 10 of the act of 1903 for assessing compensation and damages is contrary to the uniformity requirements of the Constitution. Said section 10 provides that the severance damages awarded to the several defendants in the condemnation suit authorized by the act "must be fixed irrespective of any benefit from such improvement." Title 7 of part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the rules to be followed in a proceeding under the general eminent domain law. Section 1248, which is embraced within that title, requires severance damages to be offset by benefits received from the improvement. It is insisted by counsel for respondents that there is no difference between the condemnation of property under the act of 1903 and the condemnation of property under the general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure upon which to base a discrimination entitling a property owner to more severance damages in one proceeding than in the other. While there may be no difference between the results ultimately accomplished in the two proceedings, i. e., the acquisition of private property for public street purposes, there is a vast difference between the methods employed to bring about that result. In both cases just compensation to the owner for the taking or damaging of his property for public use is contemplated. In both cases the owner is subjected to a charge for benefits accruing to his remaining property. Under the general law this benefit is deducted from his damages in computing the award. Under the act of 1903 no deduction for benefits is made in making the award, but the property owner is subsequently and in the same proceeding subjected to such a deduction by way of assessment for benefits. The fact that the deduction in the one case may not be exactly the same in amount as the assessment in the other is of no consequence. Theoretically, they are intended to comprehend the same factor. The same general result to the property owner is thus sought to be accomplished, although it is impossible to say that in each case the exact result in dollars and cents is effectuated. So far as the city itself and the taxpayers generally are concerned, the proceedings are vastly different. Under the general law the cost of the improvement is usually borne by the taxpayers at large either from the general funds of the city or from funds derived from the sale of bonds. In the special assessment proceeding the cost falls upon the property owners in the assessment district. In the former case the right of eminent domain is exercised. In the latter both the right of eminent domain and the right of taxation are exercised. If in any proceeding under the act of 1903 the condemnation defendant be subjected to a deduction from severance damages of the amount of benefits and be later required to pay an assessment for the identical benefits, a double payment or a species of double taxation would inevitably result. The foregoing are considerations which lead to the conclusion that the act of 1903 covers a field of legislation to which the general code sections are not made adaptable, and is a law general as to all coming within its provisions. Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 P. 915, 45 P. 1057. The act therefore involves no unlawful discrimination as contended for by the respondents.

[9, 10] 4. The proceedings under review admittedly contemplate an improvement of great magnitude. The termini of the proposed improvement are many miles distant and the project is doubtless a matter of much public concern. From these facts the respondents conclude and insist that the improvement is not of a local nature and hence a local district cannot legally be created to meet any part of the expenses thereof. This objection to the proceedings is grounded upon the fact that in section 1 of the ordinance of intention it is declared "that the public interest and convenience require, and that it is hereby found and determined that the public interest and necessity require, and that it is the intention of the council of the city of Los Angeles to order the following improvement to be made." We find no merit in the contention. Section 1 of the act of 1903 provides that "Whenever the public interest or convenience may require the city council of any municipality shall have full power and authority to order the laying out, * * * [of any one or more] of any public streets," etc. Section 2 of the act authorizes the city council to establish a district "to be benefited by said improvement, and to be assessed to pay the expenses thereof, and to be known as the assessment district." Admittedly the proceedings are taken under the act of 1903 and the assessment district is described in the ordinance of intention. The fact that the city is proceeding under said act is evidence that the improvement is local in its nature, beneficial to the property in the assessment district, and there is nothing in the record to justify a conclusion to the contrary. The power to determine primarily the confines of the assessment district is one of legislative discretion. Cohen v. City of Alameda, 183 Cal. 519, 191 P. 1110; Rockridge Place Co. v. City Council, 178 Cal. 58, 172 P. 1110; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 691, 76 P. 661; 25 R. C. L. 97, 98; 29 C. J. 743. The fact that the improvement is of great magnitude and also of certain public benefit does not deprive the city of the authority to proceed under the act of 1903. If it were otherwise, it is conceivable that all similar proposed improvements might be subjected to attack on this ground and the act practically nullified. Unless an abuse of discretion is manifest, and none here appears, the proceedings cannot be disturbed on this ground.

[11] 5. It is next contended that the provision of section 30 of the act of 1903, in so far as it requires the city council to transfer the city's proportionate cost of the improvement to the Tenth street improvement fund, is in conflict with the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Section 30 of the act provides:

"The street superintendent shall, from time to time, pay over to the city treasurer all moneys collected by him on account of any assessment made under the provisions of this act. The city treasurer shall, on receipt thereof, place the same in a special fund, designating such fund by the name of the improvement for which the assessment was made. The city council shall on or before the time when said assessments become delinquent, cause to be transferred from the general or other appropriate fund of the city to said special fund the percentage of, or the sum toward the total expense of such improvement to be paid by the city as and when so provided in the ordinance of intention."

Section 380 of the city charter provides:

"All money paid into the city treasury shall be credited to and kept in separate funds in accordance with the provisions of this charter, the law, or ordinance."

The said section then establishes certain specifically named funds of which the city has ownership or control either in its governmental or proprietary capacity and then specifies "trust funds and other funds as may be required by law or ordinance" as funds to be accounted for on the books of the city treasurer. Section 381 of the charter then provides:

"It shall not be lawful to transfer money from one fund to another, or to use the same in the payment of demands on another fund, except in the case of the unappropriated balance fund and the reserve fund or except as in this charter specifically provided."

It is the contention of the respondents that the charter contains no provision for the transfer of money from any city fund to the fund of a special assessment district. The argument seems to be that since the assessment district fund is a fund "required by law" to be established during the course of the proceedings, and as the charter contains no specific provision for the transfer of money from a city fund to such an assessment district fund to defray a portion of the cost of the improvement, therefore the city is without power to make any contribution whatsoever. It is conceded by the respondents that the city had the option to proceed under the act of 1903 and that when it elected to proceed thereunder it was bound by the terms of the act. When it so elected the city became the mandatory through which the purposes of the act were to be accomplished. The city itself will have no interest in the special fund thus created other than to see that it is properly collected and paid out as provided for in the statute. The provisions of the charter and of the act must be read together. When so read and considered, it cannot be said it was the intention of the charter to prohibit the transfer of the city's contribution from a city fund to the special assessment fund. Undoubtedly it would have been competent for the act of 1903 to have provided that the custody of the special assessment fund be in the county treasury or in a savings bank subject to disbursement on the order of the board of public works. In such event the payment from the city fund to the said special fund for the purpose of contribution could in no wise be affected by the charter provision. Furthermore, section 380 of the charter provides that funds "required by law" be kept in the city treasury in accordance with law. It is manifest that when the city is authorized to make a contribution toward such an improvement, the funds in the city treasury from which the contribution may be made are held subject to the terms of the statute specifying how the contribution may be made in order to accomplish the purpose. We find no inconsistency between the charter and the general law in the respects thus contended for by respondents.

[12, 13] 6. Section 2 of the act of 1903, as amended (Stats. 1925, p. 239), provides that the ordinance of intention "shall in general terms, describe the district to be benefited by said improvement and to be assessed to pay the expense thereof, * * * and refer to a plat or map, approved by the city council, which shall indicate by a boundary line the extent of the territory to be included in said assessment district, which plat or map shall be on file in the office of the city engineer * * * and shall govern for all details as to * * * the extent of the said assessment district." This map or plat was so approved and filed in the present proceedings. It is contended by respondents that the description of the assessment district in the ordinance of intention was not a description "in general terms," but was in much detail and so technical as to render it unintelligible. The ordinance of intention contains what purports to be a legal description of the boundaries of the assessment district. The act as originally adopted required that the ordinance of intention should specify the boundaries of the district to be benefited. This requirement was deemed to impose the duty on the city of describing by correct and legal description the boundaries of the assessment district, and proceedings were declared invalid because the boundaries of the assessment district had not been so described. Walker v. City of Los Angeles, 23 Cal. App. 634, 139 P. 89. The rigid requirements of the statute remained in force until 1921, when it was provided by amendment (section 2) that the ordinance of intention "shall in general terms, describe the district to be benefited" with the further requirement that the ordinance should refer to a map or plat approved by the city council and filed in the office of the city engineer, which map or plat should "govern for all details as to the extent of the said assessment district" (Stats. 1921, p. 566). The rigidity of the former requirement was thus relaxed, and the undoubted purpose of the new provision was to make something less than a technical legal description sufficient, aided by a reference to the map or plat on file. It is obviously impossible to lay down a general rule as to what in all cases should constitute a "description in general terms." Something short of a full legal description is authorized by the statute. If a general description be sufficient, a full description would also seem to be sufficient. Undoubtedly the description of the assessment district in the present proceedings could with propriety have been made much shorter and more general, but we find no sufficient reason for declaring the proceedings invalid because the description is longer and more in detail than it properly might have been.

[14] 7. The ordinance of intention shows that certain streets in the extreme easterly portion of the city are to be widened and that certain property is to be taken for street purposes in the extreme westerly section of the city. It is contended by the respondents that the act of 1903 does not contemplate the inclusion in one proceeding of street improvements in widely separated sections of the city. The case of Southwick v. Santa Barbara, 158 Cal. 14, 109 P. 610, is relied upon. It appeared in that case that the improvement in hand consisted of grading, curbing, guttering, and paving certain streets in two separate and distinct sections of the city that were not contiguous and were widely separated; that the said two sections had no community of interest; that the real property of either one of said sections would not receive any benefit from street improvements had in the other section; and that the work to be done in the one section was different from the work to be done in the other. It was held that the inclusion of these two widely separated sections of the city in one assessment district, all of the property of which was to be assessed to pay the cost of all of the improvements, was not authorized by the local Improvement Act of 1901 (St. 1901, p. 34). But the improvement contemplated by the present proceedings is not of the character described in that case. In the present case the improvement will be the opening, widening, and extending of one continuous public street. It will constitute the establishment of a broad thoroughfare from its eastern to its western terminus. From an examination of the record it cannot be said as a matter of law that all property in the assessment district is not benefited by the entire improvement.

[15] 8. It is next contended that the act of 1903 as now in force, when read in connection with the charter of the city, requires that the fund from which the city's proportion of the expense is to be paid must be designated in the ordinance of intention. Prior to the amendment of 1925, section 2 of the act, so far as material here, read as follows:

"Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality from such fund as the council may designate, in which case it shall be so stated in said ordinance of intention." St. 1921, p. 566.

By the amendment of 1925 that portion of the section was made to read as follows:

"Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of, or any sum toward the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality, in which case the sum or percentage to be paid shall be stated in said ordinance of intention." St. 1925, p. 239.

It will be noted that the clause "from such fund as the council may designate" was omitted from the section as amended. Section 6 of the ordinance of intention provides:

"It is further ordered and declared by said city council of the city of Los Angeles that the sum of $1,500,000.00 be paid toward the expense of said improvement, in section 1 of this ordinance described, out of the treasury of said city."

Under the statute prior to its amendment the name of the fund from which the contribution was to be paid was required to be stated. O. T. Johnson Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, supra. The undoubted purpose of the amendment was to avoid the requirement that the fund be so designated. When the time comes for the city to order the payment of the contribution, it must be assumed that such payment will be made from a fund from which it will be lawful to make the payment. The language of said section 6 is deemed sufficient for the purposes of the ordinance of intention.

A peremptory writ is ordered to be issued commanding the respondents to post and publish the notices of the passage of said ordinance of intention in the manner and form required by law.

CENTRAL SAV. BANK OF OAKLAND v. LAKE et al. (S. F. 11359.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 21, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨452—Notice of appeal, filed in Supreme Court within 10 days from nonappealable order of trial court resetting cause for trial, held not to deprive trial court of jurisdiction.

Notice of appeal from order, filed in Supreme Court within 10 days from order of trial court resetting cause for trial after remittitur from Supreme Court, held not to deprive superior court of power to proceed further pending appeal, where order disclosed on its face that it was not appealable and the Supreme Court before the second trial refused an application to stay the trial court.

2. Appeal and error ⇨106—Order resetting case for trial after remittitur from Supreme Court held not appealable; "appealable order."

Order resetting ejectment case for trial after remittitur from Supreme Court held not an "appealable order."

3. Appeal and error ⇨1180(1)—Unqualified reversal places parties in trial court in same position as before trial, except opinion on appeal must be followed.

An unqualified reversal remands a cause for a new trial and places the parties in the trial court in the same position as if the cause had never been tried, with the exception that the opinion of the court on appeal must be followed so far as applicable.

4. Judges ⇨43—That judge is stockholder in title insurance company, not party to suit or insurer of property involved, held not to disqualify him.

Fact that a trial judge is a stockholder in a title insurance company, which is not a party to the suit and not shown to have insured specific property in controversy, held not to disqualify him on ground that, if in present proceeding a trust deed should be adjudged void, similar deeds on property insured by the company would be void.

5. Judges ⇨45—That judge's son was stockholder in bank affiliated with plaintiff bank did not disqualify judge (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 2).

In suit involving trust deed, the fact that judge's son was stockholder in bank affiliated with bank which was plaintiff in ejectment suit, without showing son was an officer, agent, or attorney of either corporation, did not disqualify judge, within Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 2.

6. Removal of causes ⇨43—Suit held not removable on ground that by judgment of reversal resident defendants were eliminated, where judgment was not final (U. S. Comp. St. § 1010).

Ejectment suit was not removable, under Federal Judicial Code, § 28 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1010), on ground that by a judgment of reversal all defendants except a nonresident had been eliminated, since the judgment was not final.

7. Removal of causes ⇨18—Suit held not removable on ground of denial of civil rights where trust deed in suit was executed when relevant state law was in force (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; U. S. Comp. St. § 1013).

Ejectment suit was not removable, under Federal Judicial Code, § 31 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013) and under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, on ground that state law, barring right to enforce sale of mortgaged property when debt is barred although right of sale was not extinguished as to debt secured by trust deed, denied civil rights since law of state was in force at the time deed was executed.

8. Removal of causes ☞18—Constitution and statute may be invoked only against state legislation, constitutional or statutory (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; U. S. Comp. St. § 1013).

Const. U. S. Amend. 14, and Federal Judicial Code, § 31 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013), may be invoked to secure removal of cause on ground of denial of civil rights only as against state legislation, constitutional or statutory.

9. Removal of causes ☞95—Trial court may determine whether removal has been effected where petition for removal presents issues of law only (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013).

Where issues of law only are presented by a petition for removal, under Federal Judicial Code, § 31 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013), on ground of denial of civil rights, the trial court is at liberty to determine for itself whether removal has been effected.

10. Removal of causes ☞95—Filing petition for removal of cause not removable does not necessarily work transfer (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013).

The mere filing of a petition for removal of a cause which is not removable, under Federal Judicial Code, § 31 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013), does not necessarily work a transfer, but the action must be one that may be removed, and petition must state present facts showing a right in petitioner to demand removal.

11. Mortgages ☞360—Sale by one of joint trustees under trust deed held valid where deed provided that one might act (Civ. Code, § 2268).

Sale under trust deed held valid, though only one of joint trustees was present, where deed specifically provided that the trustees or either of them might act, under Civ. Code, § 2268, providing that cotrustees must act together unless deed provides otherwise.

12. Mortgages ☞360—Trustees' sale under trust deed after declaration of default and proper notice held valid.

Trustees' sale under trust deed with assistance of auctioneer after declaration of default and proper notice held valid.

13. Mortgages ☞364—Payment at sale to holder of indebtedness under trust deed need not be made in gold coin, as required by notice of sale.

Where property at sale under a trust deed is sold to the holder of the indebtedness, it is not necessary that payment should be made in gold coin, as required by notice of sale, since consideration for the property is satisfaction of the debt.

14. Frauds, statute of ☞139(5)—Statute does not apply to sale of property under trust deed to holder of indebtedness in satisfaction of debt (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973).

Validity of sale of property under trust deed to holder of indebtedness in satisfaction of the debt is not affected by fact that no cash was paid at the time of sale and no written contract executed, since contract becomes by the sale an executed contract to which the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973) is not applicable.

15. Mortgages ☞342—Substitution of new trustee, pursuant to authority in trust deed to replace one who died prior to sale held proper.

Substitution of new trustee to replace one who died prior to the sale, pursuant to authority in the trust deed, whereby directors of beneficiary bank passed a resolution naming the successor and caused the resolution to be recorded in the office of the county recorder, held proper.

16. Mortgages ☞374—Trustees' deed at sale under trust deed passed fee and all incidents thereto, including right of possession.

Trustees' deed pursuant to sale under trust deed passed not only the fee but all incidents thereto, including the right of possession, free from all claims on the part of the trustors.

17. Costs ☞254(4)—Item in appellants' bill of costs for printing portions of record as supplement to brief was properly disallowed (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953e, 1027).

Item in bill of costs for printing portions of record as supplement to opening brief of appellants, who prevailed in first and were unsuccessful in second appeal, filed after remittitur on former appeal, was properly disallowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 953e, requiring appellants to print portions of the record to which they desired to call attention, and, where appellants included in their cost bill an item for cost of printing briefs, allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1027.

18. Mortgages ☞374—In ejectment by purchaser at sale under trust deed, defendants claiming under conveyances subsequent to deed were in no better position than trustors.

In ejectment to obtain possession by purchaser at valid sale under a trust deed, the claims of defendants, predicated on conveyances subsequent to the trust deed, held in no better position than those of original trustors.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action in ejectment by the Central Savings Bank of Oakland against Fannie D. Lake and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Anson Hilton, of San Francisco, and Fred W. Lake, of Oakland, for appellants.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The plaintiff asserts title and the right of possession to the property in question, consisting of a house and lot in the city of Oakland, under a deed issued by trustees pursuant to a sale under a deed of trust. In 1914 the plaintiff bank loaned to the defendants Fannie C. Lake and Fred W. Lake the sum of $3,500, for which said defendants, on June 16, 1914, executed a promissory note and as security therefor executed a deed of trust covering said property. The plaintiff bank was named as beneficiary in the deed of trust, and J. F. Carlston and Arthur L. Harris were named as trustees. Prior to the sale Arthur L. Harris died, and the plaintiff, pursuant to the provisions of the trust deed, substituted J. F. Carlston and H. C. Sagehorn as such trustees. For failure of payment of the principal and interest default was declared and the property was sold. Thereafter the said trustees made, executed and delivered their deed to the plaintiff in due form. The defendants refused to surrender possession, and on July 12, 1919, this action was commenced. By their answers in that behalf the defendants denied the plaintiff's title and right of possession. Trial was had and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. From this judgment an appeal was taken and the judgment was reversed on the ground that the recitals in the trustee's deed were not sufficient in themselves to prove the substitution of the trustees, and that there was no other evidence of the fact. Central Savings Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 62 Cal. App. 588, 217 P. 563. The remittitur was filed in the superior court on August 21, 1923. Thereupon, on motion of plaintiff, the court, on September 14, 1923, reset said cause for trial on November 19, 1923. On the date last mentioned the cause came on for trial. Findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment in ejectment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants were signed and filed on May 22, 1924. It is from this judgment that the present appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] Several jurisdictional questions are presented. On the 24th day of September, 1923, or within 10 days from the date the court made its order resetting the cause for trial, the defendants filed a notice of appeal in this court from said order. It is contended that this notice of appeal had the effect of depriving the trial court of the power to proceed further in the cause pending the purported appeal. Under all of the circumstances here shown, we think that such was not the case. The order from which the appeal was attempted to be taken was not an appealable order (see Sherman v. Standard Mines Co., 166 Cal. 524, 137 P. 249) and the notice of appeal on its face disclosed that such was the fact. Furthermore, on November 3, 1923, the defendants filed in this court an application to have the hand of the trial court stayed during the pendency of said appeal on the ground that the filing of said notice of appeal had ousted said court of the power to proceed with the trial. The application was denied on November 13, 1923. The said application and denial thus took place before the second trial of the cause on November 19, 1923, and must, therefore, be deemed a proceeding in which it was determined as against the present objection that the trial court retained jurisdiction to retry the cause. Following said proceeding this court, on August 12, 1924, cleared its records of the matter by dismissing said appeal on motion of the plaintiff on the ground that the said order was nonappealable.

[3] Notwithstanding the foregoing, the defendants insist that as the District Court of Appeal on the former appeal made its order in the following form: "The judgment is reversed," and did not in specific words remand the cause for a new trial, the trial court could do nothing after the filing of the remittitur but enter a judgment in favor of the defendants on the theory now advanced by defendants that said judgment of reversal was a final judgment amounting to res judicata as between the parties for the reason that the court on appeal did not specifically order a new trial to be had. There is no merit in the contention, it has long been the law of this state that an unqualified reversal remands the cause for a new trial (Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, 54, 40 P. 21, 386) and places the parties in the trial court in the same position as if the cause had never been tried, with the exception that the opinion of the court on appeal must be followed so far as applicable (Sharp v. Miller, 66 Cal. 98, 4 P. 1065; Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 170 P. 846). The court on the former appeal decided that on the record then presented a necessary link in plaintiff's chain of title was missing and the judgment was reversed for that reason. On the second trial the additional and necessary proof on this point was supplied.

[4] At the opening of the second trial the defendants moved the court for a change of venue. The motion was based on an affidavit made by one of the defendants charging the trial judge with bias and prejudice and with a disqualifying interest, under section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A counter affidavit was filed, and the motion was denied. The alleged disqualification on the ground of bias and prejudice is not now and could not, in the light of the record before us, be seriously pressed. Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 66, 109 P. 884. On the question of the alleged disqualification on the ground of interest it is shown that the trial judge was a stockholder and director in a title insurance company engaged in the business of issuing and theretofore having issued policies insuring the title to many parcels of land after the sale thereof under similar trust deeds. Said title insurance company was and is not a party to this action, nor was it shown that the said company had issued a policy of title insurance on the property in controversy. Notwithstanding these facts, the defendants contend that, if in the present proceeding it be declared that the said trust deed and the sale thereunder be unauthorized and void under the laws of this state, then such other trust deeds covering property, the title to which has been insured by said title company, would also be void and the said judge would suffer a loss in proportion to his stock interest by reason of the policies of title insurance heretofore issued on such other properties. The contention is entirely unavailing. The interest so alleged is so indirect, incidental, remote, and contingent as not to bear the slightest resemblance to the direct, measurable, and pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of the action required to be shown in order to disqualify the judge. 14 Cal. Jur. 809-814.

[5] It is next contended that the trial judge was disqualified, under subdivision 2 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by reason of the fact that his son is a stockholder in the Central National Bank, which is alleged to be an interlocking concern with the Central Savings Bank, the plaintiff in this action. It will be first noted that the Central National Bank is not a party to this action, but assuming that the alleged affiliation of the Central Savings Bank with the Central National Bank be of such a nature that the stockholders of the latter, for all practicable purposes, own and control the Central Savings Bank, it was not shown that the judge's son was or is an officer of either banking corporation, nor was it shown that said son was or is "an attorney, counsel, or agent" of either corporation as required by the statute in order to show a disqualification. The proof of disqualification is thus entirely lacking. See Favorite v. Superior Court of Riverside County, 181 Cal. 261, 184 P. 15, 8 A. L. R. 290.

[6] On November 10, 1923, the defendant E. D. Lake filed in the trial court an application demanding the removal of said cause to the federal court, under section 28 of the Federal Judicial Code (U. S. Comp. St. § 1010), on the ground that he was a citizen of the state of Nevada, that the cause had been reduced by the elimination of all the other defendants to a single cause between the plaintiff and himself, and that there thus remained a severable controversy between himself and the plaintiff for the reason, as claimed, that the judgment of reversal on the former appeal constituted a final judgment against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendants, including himself. Since the judgment of reversal, at the time the petition for removal was filed, did not amount to a final judgment between the parties under the law of this state, the grounds for the removal were insufficient.

[7] On the same day, to wit, November 10, 1923, the defendant E. D. Lake also filed a petition for removal to the federal court, under section 31 of the Federal Judicial Code (U. S. Comp. St. § 1013). That section provides that, when any civil suit is commenced in any state court against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of the citizens of the United States, said cause may be removed to the federal court. Said defendant alleged the right of protection under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and relief thereunder by reason of the fact that in this state the right to enforce the sale of real property mortgaged to secure a debt is barred when the debt is barred and the purchaser after the bar takes the property free of any incumbrance on account of the debt (Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707, 137 P. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209; Muhs v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society, 166 Cal. 760, 138 P. 352), while, on the other hand, the right of sale is not extinguished by the statute of limitations when the debt is secured by trust deed (Travelli v. Bowman, 150 Cal. 587, 89 P. 347; Sacramento Bank v. Murphy, 158 Cal. 390, 115 P. 232). By reason of this court's construction of the different effect of the statute of limitations as applied to these contractual obligations and the rights incidental thereto, it is claimed that said defendant is thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and that his petition for a removal was effectual to transfer the cause out of the trial court and oust it of jurisdiction to retry the same. At the time the trust deed here involved was executed the law of this state with reference to the effect of the statute of limitations upon the question of the enforcement of said contract was in force. Such law therefore became a part of the contract entered into between the parties to the trust deed. In said application for removal it was thus sought to invoke the Fourteenth Amendment for relief as against the effect of the voluntary contractual obligation thus assumed.

[8, 9] Protection was not sought as against any state legislation, either constitutional or statutory, and it is only as against such state action that the Fourteenth Amendment and section 31 of the Federal Judicial Code may be invoked. Corrigan v. Buckley, 271 U. S. 323, 46 S. Ct. 521, 70 L. Ed. 969; Kentucky v. Powers, 201 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 L. Ed. 633, 5 Ann. Cas. 692; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, 181 Cal. 680, 186 P. 596, 9 A. L. R. 115. The present case was therefore not properly removable to the federal court on the grounds stated in this second application. A third removal petition was filed by the defendants Fannie D. Lake, Fred W. Lake, and A. F. Lake on grounds alleged also to be within said section 31 of the Federal Judicial Code. In their application these defendants likewise asserted that the judgment of the District Court of Appeal on the former appeal was a final judgment, and they sought the protection of the Constitution and laws of the United States under said alleged final judgment. As said judgment of reversal was not in law a final judgment, this application on its face failed to state sufficient grounds for removal. The trial court declined to make an order of removal on any of the grounds stated in said applications. Issues of law only were thereby presented. In such case the said court was at liberty to determine for itself whether or not on the face of the record a removal had been effected. Burlington, etc., Ry. Co. v. Dunn, 122 U. S. 513, 7 S. Ct. 1262, 30 L. Ed. 1159. It was correctly decided that such removal had not taken place.

[10] The mere filing of a petition for removal of a cause which is not removable does not necessarily work a transfer. To accomplish this result the action must be one that may be removed and the petition must present facts showing a right in the petitioner to demand the removal. Southern Pacific Co. v. Waite (D. C.) 279 F. 171, and cases therein cited. Not only did the trial court correctly determine questions of law presented on the face of the petition, but the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, the very federal court which the defendants claim to have acquired jurisdiction by reason of said petitions, held, prior to the judgment from which the present appeal is taken, that no cause for removal was shown and granted a motion of the plaintiff remanding the said cause to the superior court, thus clearing its docket of the matters.

[11, 12] The validity of the sale under the trust deed is challenged by the defendants. They contend that the power of sale was joint and that since trustee Sagehorn was the only trustee present at the sale the same was void. There is no merit in the point. The trust deed in terms provided that "in conducting the sale, they, [the trustees] or either of them may act." This was sufficient under section 2268 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"Where there are several cotrustees, all must unite in any act to bind the trust property, unless the declaration of trust otherwise provides."

The trust deed contains the usual provisions for sale by the trustees in case of default. Default was declared and the trustees gave notice of sale. The notice has been examined. It was found by the trial court to be sufficient and we are of the same opinion. An auctioneer assisted in conducting the sale. There can be no valid objection to the course thus pursued under the terms of the trust deed itself and under the law of this state. The trust deed provided that in conducting the sale the trustees or either of them "may act, either in person or through the agency of an auctioneer." This procedure has been approved. Kennedy v. Dunn, 58 Cal. 339.

[13, 14] The notice of sale declared the intention of the trustees to sell "at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, gold coin of the United States." The auctioneer properly acted as a crier and the property was sold to the creditor bank. No cash was paid at the time and no written contract of sale was at that time executed. From these facts it is contended that the sale was void. It is well settled that, when the property is sold to the holder of the indebtedness, it is not necessary that the payment should be made in gold coin. The consideration for the property is the satisfaction of the debt (Portola Realty Co. v. Carlston, 32 Cal. App. 282, 162 P. 899; Davies v. Ramsdell, 40 Cal. App. 424, 181 P. 94), and thereupon the contract becomes an executed contract to which the statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973) is not applicable (12 Cal. Jur. 926, and cases cited; 27 Corp. Jur. 321).

[15, 16] The defendants attack the substitution of trustee Sagehorn. The trust deed expressly covenanted that the bank might by a resolution of its board of directors from time to time appoint and substitute other trustee or trustees to execute the trust thereby created, and that upon such appointment, either with or without a conveyance to said substituted trustee or trustees by the grantees named therein or the survivor of them or their successors or assigns, such new trustee or trustees should be vested with all the title, interest, powers, duties, and trusts in the premises vested in or conferred upon the original trustees. It was also provided that a copy of such resolution, duly certified by the officers of the bank and recorded, should be conclusive proof of substitution. Such a resolution was duly passed and certified and was on the 4th day of January, 1918, recorded in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county. This resolution was the muniment of title held on the former appeal to be the necessary proof of substitution, and it was received in evidence on the second trial. Upon examination it is found to be sufficient in all respects. Nor do we find any merit in the contention of the defendants that the trustees' deed transferred to the purchaser the naked fee only and not the right of possession. Upon the execution of the trust and the conveyance of title to the purchaser, the purchaser not only obtained the fee but all incidents thereto, including the right of possession, free from all claims on the part of the trustors. Bryant v. Hobert, 44 Cal. App. 315, 186 P. 379, and cases therein referred to.

By citation of numerous authorities and by much argument the defendants seek to have it declared that trust deeds are or should be held to be invalid under the laws of this state. Reference to cases decided by this court recognizing the validity and sufficiency of such trust deeds are too numerous to require citation.

[17] Finally, we are asked to review the action of the trial court in striking out an item of $104.60 included in the defendants' bill of costs filed after the going down of the remittitur on the former appeal. This item was for printing portions of the record as a supplement appended to the appellants' opening brief. Assuming that this matter is properly before us on this appeal, it is clear that the item was properly disallowed. The portion of the record thus printed was required, if the appellants deemed it necessary, by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure wherein the appellants are required to "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." This supplement is deemed to have been a part of the briefs of the appellants on said appeal, and, as they included in their cost bill an item of $100 on account of the cost of printing their briefs and as such item was allowed under the provisions of section 1027 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendants have no just cause for complaint. Other points discussed in the briefs do not require notice.

[18] After what has been said it is deemed appropriate to note that the defendants Fannie D. Lake and Fred W. Lake received the loan of $3,500 from plaintiff and the same has never been repaid, notwithstanding repeated offers on the part of the plaintiff to accept the payment thereof with the interest and costs in full satisfaction of the debt. The equitable position of the plaintiff is thus plainly apparent. The claims of the other defendants are predicated upon conveyances subsequent to the execution of the trust deed and such claims are in no better position than those of the original trustors.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF PASADENA v. PORTER et al.
(L. A. 8962.)

Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1927.

I. Eminent domain ⚡157—Lump sum award to reimburse tenant in accordance with lease for taking property for widening street held proper (Street Opening Act, 1903, as amended).

In condemnation proceeding, under the Street Opening Act 1903, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), damages for taking of property were properly proportioned to owner and tenant in accordance with rent to be paid and property to be taken by computing a certain sum which reimbursed tenant for amount of rent he was compelled to pay under terms of lease.

2. Eminent domain ⚡82—Interest of tenant for years is "property" authorizing damages on taking property for widening street (Civ. Code, § 761; Street Opening Act 1903, as amended).

Interest of tenant under lease for term of years is "property," subject to ownership, in view of Civ. Code, § 761, so as to authorize damages for condemnation, under the Street Opening Act 1903, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

3. Landlord and tenant ⚡100, 191—Taking of entire demised property releases tenant from liability for rent; but taking of portion does not terminate lease or absolve liability to pay full rent.

Taking of entire demised property by condemnation proceeding operates to release tenant from liability for subsequently accruing rent; but a taking of a portion only does not terminate the lease or absolve lessee of his covenant to pay full rent.

4. Eminent domain ⚡172—Court in condemnation proceeding for widening street cannot determine to what extent covenant to pay rent is affected (Street Opening Act 1903, as amended).

Court sitting in proceeding for condemnation of private property, under the Street Opening Act 1903, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), has no power to reform or revise a lease on property affected, or to determine to what extent the covenant to pay rent is affected, if at all.

5. Eminent domain ⚡124—Awarding tenant for taking portion of building for period between appointment of referees and final decree held not unconstitutional (Street Opening Act 1903, § 10, as amended; Const. art. I, § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 1249).

Amount awarded tenant as damages for taking of portion of building, under the Street Opening Act 1903, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198), for period between date of appointment of referees and date of final decree, or date when tenant would lose possession, in accordance with section 10 of the act as amended, held not in violation of Const. art. I, § 14, prohibiting taking property without just compensation, since it is necessary for purpose of assessing compensation and damages that right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at a fixed date, as is done by Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, fixing value of property taken as of date of issuance of summons.

Curtis and Richards, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Condemnation proceeding by the City of Pasadena against Anna G. Porter and others. From the judgment, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Howard and Roscoe R. Hess, City Atty., both of Pasadena, and Frederick G.

Stoebr, of Pasadena, and Leonard A. Diether, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff and respondent.

Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willis I. Morrison, Arthur W. Eckman, and Wm. B. Himrod, all of Los Angeles, Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam and J. D. Rinehart, all of Pasadena, F. E. Peterson, F. McD. Spencer, and Howard Robertson, all of Los Angeles, and Hahn & Hahn, Cruickshank, Brooke & Evans, and Simpson & Simpson, all of Pasadena, for defendants and respondents Degelman and others.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Chandler, Wright & Ward, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae.

WASTE, C. J. The city of Pasadena instituted proceedings under the Street Opening Act of 1903, as amended, to open, widen, and extend Garfield avenue from Colorado street southerly to Green street. The defendant Anna G. Porter owns one of the parcels of land affected by the proceedings, and the respondent Gekco Company is the owner of a lease for years, executed by her, of a store building located on the land, and having a frontage of 35 feet on Colorado street. The portion of the land sought to be taken includes 8.3 feet of the frontage of the store premises. Referees appointed by the trial court on January 23, 1925, subsequently made an award for the taking of this property in the total sum of $36,063, made up of the following items: Value of land, $29,050; value of improvements destroyed, $2,000; cost of restoring residue of the building, $5,013. The $5,013 allowed as restoration damages was divided, $3,000 to the owner and $2,013 to the lessee. The sum of $16,682.68 was allocated to the owner of the fee, and the sum of $19,380.32 to the holder of the leasehold estate. The owner excepted to the report of the referees, but her objections were overruled. The report was confirmed, and an interlocutory decree duly entered in accordance with the findings. The owner of the fee thereupon appealed to this court from that portion of the interlocutory judgment confirming the report of the referees, in so far as it related to her land.

The lease of the store premises held by the respondent Gekco Company was made June 19, 1923, to extend for a period of 10 years from August, 1924, at a monthly rental of $700; that amount being the equivalent of $20 per front foot per month. During the pendency of the proceedings in the court below the appellant, orally and, finally, in writing, offered to reduce the rent to be paid by the Gekco Company under the terms of the lease from $700 to $534 per month, such reduction of rent to commence from the date of the entry of the final decree in condemnation, and to be in lieu of any allowance to the Gekco Company of a lump sum estimated as the equivalent of the rental of the 8.3 feet of storeroom about to be taken from the tenant. The proposed reduction of rent was in the proportion that the amount of frontage and floor space to be taken bore to the total amount of frontage and floor space occupied. The referees took the position that, as a legal proposition, they were without authority to modify the lease between the owner and her tenant by reducing the rent fixed by its terms; that, therefore, throughout the remaining 114 months of the lease yet to run, the tenant would have to continue to pay the full rental fixed by its terms. By computation the referees found a sum which, if placed in the hands of the lessee and by it invested at 6 per cent. per annum, compounded semiannually, and drawn on at the rate of $166 per month for the remainder of the term, would exactly reimburse the Gekco Company for the $166 per month it had to pay appellant; and, upon payment of the last month's rent, the entire sum, principal and interest, to be exhausted. This present equivalent of future installments was found to be $14,839.88. The referees next found as a fact that the market value of the 8.3 feet frontage, over and above the $20 per front foot per month the lessee would have to pay, until the termination of the lease, and of which excess value the lessee would be deprived, was $2,527.44. These last two sums, together with the lessee's restoration damage of $2,013, made the respondent Gekco Company's award $19,380.32. The finding and conclusion of the referees was reflected in and confirmed by the interlocutory decree awarding a lump sum to the tenant for damages. It is from this portion of the judgment that the owner has appealed. She does not object to the restoration damage, amounting to $2,013, paid to the lessee, and apparently does not assail the $2,527.44 excess value. Her objection goes to the item of $14,839.88, both as to amount and as to the right to award any sum whatever to the tenant for rent to be paid for the property to be taken where the owner has offered to make a proper and fair reduction in rent on account of the taking of a portion of the demised premises.

Appellant's contention is that the Street Opening Act, under which these proceedings were taken, makes no special provision relative to the respective rights of landlord and tenant in property condemned. She admits that general damages suffered by the tenant in such cases, the cost of repairing the remaining portions of the demised premises in order to make the same usable, and increased or bonus value of the lease over the rent to be paid, may properly be paid in lump to the tenant, but contends that, instead of awarding a tenant a lump sum as the present equivalent of rents to be paid by the tenant in the future for property to be taken, and without requiring from the tenant any security that it will pay such future rents, the proper and more equitable adjustment of damages would be arrived at by reducing the rental to be paid in the future. The question thus presented has never been considered by this court.

[1] In support of her contention appellant enumerates certain advantages in favor of a reduction of rent over awarding a tenant a lump sum as equivalent of rents, but we deem it unnecessary to consider them, for the question to be considered is one of law. Appellant argues that the authorities from other jurisdictions are conflicting, and contends that the rule that rents shall be reduced pro rata finds support in decisions from New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Missouri, and Mississippi. We find no substantial conflict of authority, and the decisions on which appellant relies do not support her contentions. In In re Seventh Avenue and Varick Street in City of New York, 196 App. Div. 451, 188 N. Y. S. 197, 201, the decision was based upon earlier decisions, which, in turn, rested upon a statute expressly providing for a pro rata abatement of rents in cases of termination of leasehold interests where a part only of the property was taken. Gillespie v. Thomas, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 464; Gillespie v. Mayor, etc., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 643. Subsequent decisions from other jurisdictions, and text-writers, supporting the New York rule, fail to note that it rests on the terms of the statute. Others make no distinction between the taking of the entire premises and the taking of only a part. Dyer v. Wightman, 66 Pa. 425, 427, which seems to be relied on to a considerable extent by text-writers as supporting the contention now advanced by appellant, was not a condemnation suit. It was an action in equity for rent under a sublease. Biddle v. Hussman, 23 Mo. 597, 600, was also an action to recover rent. Board of Levee Commissioners v. Johnson, 66 Miss. 248, 6 So. 199, related to a controversy between a landlord and a tenant following condemnation proceedings, where the whole of the premises was taken, thereby dissolving the relation. Baltimore v. Latrobe, 101 Md. 621, 61 A. 203, 4 Ann. Cas. 1005, appears to state an exception to the general rule, but cites with approval Gluck v. Baltimore, 81 Md. 315, 32 A. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 515, the leading case in that state on the subject of apportionment of rents, where a part only of the demised premises is taken. In that case the court directly held that the rent should not be apportioned, but that the tenant was entitled to the present worth of the rent payable in futuro, and that the covenant to pay rent under the lease was not affected or diminished by virtue of the partial taking. Read in the light of the facts, Baltimore v. Latrobe, supra, does not depart from the rule laid down in the earlier cases in that state.

[2, 3] We are satisfied that the trial court followed the proper rule and procedure in this case. The Street Opening Act of 1903, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 3309, Act 8198), after providing for the appointment of referees to assess the damages for property taken, provides (section 10):

That they shall "find separately: First. The value of each parcel of property sought to be condemned, and all improvements thereon pertaining to the realty, and of each separate estate or interest therein. * * *

The interest of the respondent Gekco Company under the lease from the appellant, is an estate for years, and therefore is property, subject to ownership. Civ. Code, § 761; San Pedro, etc., v. City of Los Angeles, etc., 180 Cal. 18, 20, 179 P. 393; 15 Cal. Jur. 600, par. 3. As the owner of such estate it is guaranteed just compensation before its title can be divested under the power of eminent domain. It holds its term as any other interest in land is held, subject to the exercise of that power. It holds its title subject to this right the same as the landlord holds her title. Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 543, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212. The reciprocal rights of the landlord and tenant, in case the demised property, or a part of it, is taken by condemnation in eminent domain, are as well established. According to the majority of the decisions, the taking of the entire demised property by condemnation proceedings operates to release a tenant from liability for subsequently accruing rent, but a taking of a portion only does not terminate the lease or absolve the lessee of his covenant to pay the full rent. 36 Cor. Jur. 319, par. 1122; 10 R. C. L. 136, § 120. In Corrigan v. Chicago, supra, the court said (page 544 [33 N. E. 747]):

"When a portion only of the land is taken, and a portion remains, which is susceptible of occupation under the lease, we have held, following what we regard as the weight of authority, that the covenants of the lease are not abrogated, and that the tenant is bound by his covenant to pay full rent according to its terms. Stubbings v. Village of Evanston, 136 Ill. 37 [26 N. E. 577, 11 L. R. A. 839, 29 Am. St. Rep. 300]. And that in such case the lessee would not be entitled to apportionment or an abatement of the rent for the part of the land taken, but was bound to pay rent for the whole of the premises demised. * * * If the covenant to pay rent is not affected by the proceedings and judgment of condemnation, it is clear that the lessor would be entitled as compensation only to the present value of his reversion, which he holds subject to the term created by the lease; and the lessee continuing personally liable, but losing his estate, and right to its enjoyment, would be entitled to receive not merely the value of the term, but also a sum of money equivalent to the present value of the sum of the rents payable in futuro; that is, he should receive the value of his term, subject to the rent, and such further sum as would be considered a present equivalent for the rent thereafter to be paid, and the lessor would receive correspondingly less."

Only recently the same court said:

"It is well settled in this state that the taking of a part of leased premises by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, leaving a part susceptible of occupation under the lease, does not release the tenant from the payment of any part of the rent, but he is bound to the landlord for the payment of the rent reserved for the full term, without apportionment or abatement for the part taken. [Citing cases.] This view is in accordance with the weight of authority elsewhere. Parks v. Boston, 15 Pick. [Mass.] 198; Patterson v. Boston, 20 Id. [Pick. (Mass.)] 159; Dobbins v. Brown, 12 Pa. 75; Workman v. Miffin, 30 Id. [Pa.] 362; Gluck v. Baltimore, 81 Md. 315 [32 A. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 515]; Foote v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio, 408 [38 Am. Dec. 737]; Olson Land Co. v. Alki Park Co., 63 Wash. 521 [115 P. 1083, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 365]." Yellow Cab Co. v. Stafford-Smith Co., 320 Ill. 294, 296, 150 N. E. 670, 671 (43 A. L. R. 1173).

From the note to this case in 43 A. L. R. 1173, 1177, it appears that the rule is the same in Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Oregon, and Washington. In Olson Land Co. v. Alki Park Co., 63 Wash. 521, 115 P. 1083, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 365, cited by the Illinois court, supra, the court rejects the rule contended for by the appellant, and aptly criticises the decisions appearing to support it. Certain of the text-writers, Lewis, Taylor, and Tiffany, express a preference for a rule allowing a proportional reduction of the rent in cases such as this, but we conclude, upon the decided weight of authority, that the lower court followed the proper course in awarding damages for the taking of the separate estates and interests of the appellant and the respondent Gekco Company.

[4] Aside from the foregoing considerations, another insurmountable objection appears to prevent the application, in this action, of the rule contended for by the appellant. A proceeding for the condemnation of private property under the Street Opening Act is a special statutory proceeding. The court sitting therein has no equitable jurisdiction, and accordingly, has no power to reform or revise the lease in question, nor to determine to what extent the covenant to pay rent shall be affected, if at all. The tenant cannot compel the landlord to accept a lessened rent. Olson Land Co. v. Alki Park Co., supra. Neither can the landlord force a readjustment of the rent. It was said in Stubbings v. Village of Evanston, 136 Ill. 37, 43, 26 N. E. 577, 578 (11 L. R. A. 839, 29 Am. St. Rep. 300):

"* * * If a case should arise where, upon the payment of the value of the leasehold interest to the tenant, the remedy of the landlord to collect his rent might be impaired or defeated on account of the insolvency of the tenant, or other cause, a court of equity might interpose to prevent the payment of the damages recovered into the hands of the tenant, and appropriate the fund, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to the payment of the rents due or to become due from the tenant to the landlord during such time as the lease might, by its terms, continue to run."

We express no opinion as to the question whether or not such a proceeding would lie in an independent action between appellant and respondent, but see no room for its invocation in the present situation of the parties. In this proceeding the landlord and the tenant are confined to their remedies against the condemning municipality.

It has been argued here that, if the respondent be allowed to recover for the full value of the leasehold interest, there will be handed over to the tenant a portion of the damages which is the equivalent of the rent to be paid, and appellant may lose her rent by the insolvency of the respondent, or otherwise. The same contention was advanced in Gluck v. Baltimore, supra, and the court said:

"It has, however, been contended that, if the tenant should be allowed to recover for the full value of the leasehold interest, and the landlord should be required to rely upon the personal obligation of the tenant for the payment of rent, a rule of this character would or might in many instances result in great loss to the landlord. At best this is a mere suggestion of a possible hardship. * * * Obviously a principle, if sound, ought to be applied wherever it logically leads, without reference to ulterior results. That it may, in consequence, operate in some instances with apparent or even with real harshness and severity does not indicate that it is inherently erroneous. Its consequences in special cases can never impeach its accuracy."

[5] The Street Opening Act, supra (section 10), provides that in cases in which referees have been appointed for the purpose of assessing the compensation and damages under such proceedings, the right to such damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the order appointing the referees. The referees and the court in this case, following the statute, accepted January 23, 1925, as the date from which damages should be computed. The appellant contends that damages awarded the tenant should date only from the time of the actual loss of possession by the tenant. The amount awarded the tenant, she therefore contends, is excessive, because it includes an allowance for account of rent for a period between the date of the appointment of the referees and the date of the final decree, or the date when the tenant will lose possession, during all of which period the Gekco Company has had, and will retain, the possession, use, and enjoyment of the entire premises. Such a proceeding, she asserts, amounts to a violation of article 1, § 14, of the state Constitution, which provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner. There is no merit in the contention. It is necessary, for the purpose of assessing compensation and damages in eminent domain proceedings, that the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at a fixed date. Under the general law relative to eminent domain, the value of property taken is assessed as of the date of the issuance of the summons. Code Civ. Proc. § 1249. It is settled by the decisions that this rule, the equivalent of which is found in many states, involves no violation of constitutional right. California Southern R. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Marin W. & P. Co., 178 Cal. 308, 314, 173 P. 469, and cases cited. On analysis, it will be found that the distinction between the provision of the Code section and that of the Street Opening Act, supra, is formal, rather than substantial, as it was held to be between the Code section and the provisions of the Public Utilities Act considered in the cases just cited. Furthermore, during all of the period here complained of, the appellant has received, and we assume will receive, the full rent reserved in the lease—all she would receive if no condemnation had occurred. We have considered the many contentions of the parties and of amici curiae on the question of the amount of damages, and are not prepared to question the finding of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

CURTIS, J. I dissent.

There is, undoubtedly, very respectable authority from other jurisdictions to support the conclusions reached in the majority opinion. It is admitted, however, that the question involved in this controversy has never been expressly passed upon by the courts of this state. The rule, as enunciated in the opinion, is to my mind both unreasonable and inequitable.

On the other hand, there is ample authority to support the contention of appellant that the rent to be paid by the tenant should be reduced pro rata and that the value of the land taken should be paid to the landlord. In Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 718, we find the following:

"Undoubtedly, the conclusion which is practically the most satisfactory and which can be applied with the least injury to the parties is that the taking operates to extinguish the obligation to pay rent, in whole or in part, as the case may be. Under the opposite rule there is handed over to the tenant a portion of the damages which is the equivalent of the rent to be paid, and the landlord may lose his rent by the insolvency of the tenant or otherwise, or be put to a suit in equity to have the fund impounded for his benefit."

Taylor on Landlord and Tenant (8th Ed.) § 386, states the law in practically the same language as that used by Lewis on Eminent Domain. 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, pp. 1184-1186, also agrees with both Lewis and Taylor, and states the rule as follows:

"It appears to the present writer that, when the ownership of either a part or the whole of the leased premises, the 'fee' as it is usually called, is taken under the power of eminent domain, the liability for rent should be proportionally reduced or extinguished for the simple reason that the leasehold interest in the land taken has come to an end by reason of its merger in the reversion."

It appears to me that it is more important that we lay down a just and equitable rule in this state to be followed in condemnation proceedings of this character than to adopt one which is neither fair nor equitable, even though this latter rule is supported by authorities both numerous and weighty from other jurisdictions.

It is conceded that, when the whole of the leased premises is taken by the condemnation proceeding, the lease is terminated, and such taking operates to release both the tenant and the landlord from the terms of their lease. I can see no good reason why there should be a different rule applied to a case where only a portion of the premises is taken. If the condemnation proceeding can wipe out a lease in its entirety, is there any good or legitimate reason for saying that it cannot modify it to the extent of the property taken? I am unable to see why any distinction is made in these two classes of cases.

MINES v. DEL VALLE et al. (L. A. 8197.)

Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1927.

Rehearing Denied June 30, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ☞999—Taxpayer's complaint to compel municipal officers to repay funds illegally expended held not required to show plaintiff to be resident of city (Code Civ. Proc. § 526a).

Complaint by taxpayer against municipal officers to compel repayment of funds claimed to have been illegally expended held not defective under Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, for failing to show that plaintiff is a resident of city.

2. Municipal corporations ☞1000(5)—Answer to taxpayer's suit to compel municipal officers to repay money illegally expended denying unlawful payments, did not raise issue of fact.

In action by taxpayer to compel repayment by municipal officers of money claimed to have been illegally expended in advertising to secure favorable vote for bond issue to extend municipal electric plant, answer denying that officers unlawfully approved, allowed or ordered payments objected to did not raise issue of fact requiring submission of case to jury.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡1000(5)—Answer to taxpayer's suit to compel repayment of money illegally expended, denying expenditure materially increased taxation, did not raise issue of fact.

In action by taxpayer to compel repayment by municipal officers of money claimed to have been illegally expended in advertising to secure favorable vote for bond issue to extend municipal electric plant, answer, denying that officers' acts materially increased burden of taxation on property in city, did not raise issue of fact, requiring submission of case to jury, since illegal expenditure would inevitably increase burden of taxation.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡860—Illegal expenditure by municipal officers increases tax burden, though expenditure represented receipts from public utility.

In taxpayer's action to compel repayment by municipal officers of money claimed to have been illegally expended, fact that funds unlawfully withdrawn from public treasury were not raised by direct taxation, but represented receipts from a public utility operated by the city, would not prevent illegal expenditure from increasing burden of taxation on property.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡995(1)—Illegal expenditure of public funds may be enjoined or recovered, though taxpayer cannot show special damage.

Taxpayer may stay illegal expenditure of public funds or recover same on behalf of city, though he cannot show that he thereby sustained some special damage.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡272—Power conferred on public service commissioners to "extend" electric plant referred to management and not to raising of money for extending business (City Charter of Los Angeles, §§ 192 [g], 192[h]).

City Charter of Los Angeles, §§ 192(g), 192(h), empowering board of public service commissioners to extend electric power plants of city, and to expend funds in power fund to extend plant, refers to physical management of plant, and does not include power to raise money directly or indirectly for operating plant or extending its business.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extend—Extension.]

7. Municipal corporations ⚡921(3)—Funds from bonds issued by council for extension of municipal electric plant come under jurisdiction of public service commission only after receipt (Municipal Bond Act).

Under Municipal Bond Act (St. 1901, p. 27 [Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5178]), authorizing city council to determine necessity and procedure for issuance of bonds to extend municipal electric plant, funds derived come under jurisdiction of board of public service commissioners only after they are received and placed in fund for plant.

8. Municipal corporations ⚡861—Public service commissioners held unauthorized to expend public money to secure favorable vote for bond issue to extend municipal electric plant (City Charter Los Angeles, §§ 192[g], 192[h]).

Under City Charter of Los Angeles, §§ 192(g), 192(h), empowering board of public service commissioners to expend funds for purpose of extending municipal electric plant, board is not authorized to expend public money on publicity for purpose of inducing electors of city to vote in favor of bond issue designed to enable city to increase its electric system.

9. Municipal corporations ⚡57—Proprietary powers of city are more liberally construed than governmental powers.

Powers of city of a proprietary character are given more liberal construction than those which are strictly governmental in character.

10. Municipal corporations ⚡59—Municipality cannot, under proprietary powers, do any act deemed necessary by officers for proper conduct of its business.

Municipality, in exercising its proprietary powers, does not have authority to do any act which its officers may think necessary for proper conduct or maintenance of business in which it is engaged.

11. Municipal corporations ⚡861—Public service commissioners could not use municipal electric plant funds to secure favorable vote on bond issue, unless expressly authorized.

Use of public funds by board of public service commissioners, derived from municipal electric plant to induce favorable vote on bond issue to extend plant, would be unfair to electors opposing bond issue, and cannot be sustained, unless power to so use funds is given board in unmistakable language.

12. Municipal corporations ⚡861—Public service commissioners could not use municipal electric plant funds to secure favorable vote on bond issue, because necessary to correct misinformation.

Use of public funds by board of public service commissioners, derived from operation of municipal electric plant to secure favorable vote for bond issue to extend plant, held not justified because necessary to correct misinformation disseminated among voters by private power companies.

13. Municipal corporations ⚡861—Court could not invest Public Service Commission with authority to expend public funds to secure favorable vote on bond issue (Charter of City of Los Angeles, §§ 192[g], 192[h]).

Where board of public service commissioners were not expressly authorized by charter of city of Los Angeles to expend funds derived from municipal electric plant for publicity to secure favorable vote on bond issue to extend plant, and such power could not be implied from §§ 192(g), 192(h), authorizing board to expend money for extension of plant, neither board nor court could invest board with authority to so expend public funds, no matter how desirable or necessary it was.

14. Municipal corporations ⇨170—Municipal officers held liable for repayment of public funds illegally expended, though acting honestly under belief expenditures were authorized.

In action by taxpayer to compel repayment by municipal officers of money illegally expended in publicity to secure favorable vote for bond issue to extend municipal light plant, officers were liable for repayment, though expenditure was made honestly and under belief that it was within authority of board of public service commissioners.

Appeal from Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by W. W. Mines against R. F. Del Valle and others, Officers of the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; Shenk and Langdon, JJ., dissenting.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews and James G. Leovy, all of Los Angeles, James H. Howard, City Atty., of Pasadena, John J. O'Toole, City Atty., of San Francisco, and William Guthrie, City Atty., of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Chas. L. Childers, of Los Angeles, and A. C. Finney, of Brawley, for Imperial Irrigation District, amici curiæ in support of appeal.

Carroll Allen and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This action was instituted by plaintiff, a taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles, against certain officers of said city to compel the repayment by said officers into the treasury of said city of certain sums of money which plaintiff alleges were illegally paid out by said officers. The defendants are the members of the board of public service commissioners, the controller of the public service department, the auditor, and treasurer, respectively, of the city of Los Angeles. The complaint sets forth that on the 14th day of May, 1923, the city council of said city of Los Angeles, by the passage of the resolution provided by law, called an election, at which there was submitted to the electors of said city the proposition of incurring a bonded indebtedness in the amount of $35,000,000 for the purpose of the acquisition, construction, and completion by said city of certain municipal improvements, to wit, works for supplying the said city and its inhabitants with electric energy for the purpose of light, heat, and power, including the construction and acquisition of works for the development of electric energy and of substations, transmission lines, distributing lines, conduits, and other works for transmitting said electric energy, and the acquisition of land, water rights, rights of way, machinery, apparatus, and other works and property necessary therefor. It is further alleged in said complaint that, after the passage of the resolution submitting said proposition to a vote of the electors of said city, there was filed with the said board of public service commissioners certain claims against said city of Los Angeles for labor performed, materials furnished, and services rendered said municipality and said department of public service, which claims were audited and approved by said board of public service commissioners, and by the said controller of said public service department, and thereafter audited and approved by the auditor of said city, after which they were paid by the treasurer of said city out of the public funds of said city then in said city treasury. The complaint and the amendment thereto subsequently filed (we will hereafter refer to both pleadings as the complaint) set forth that twenty-two of such claims were presented to said board, and by said board, said controller and said auditor, audited and approved, and thereafter paid by said treasurer from the funds of said municipality; that the aggregate amount of these claims was the sum of $12,415.15. These several claims are separately set forth in twenty-two separate counts, and in the main were for printing cards, banners, automobile windshield stickers, automobile banners, labels, circulars, hand bills, dodgers, and postal cards; for distributing and circulating the same; for constructing a float; and for advertising in certain newspapers in said city; that all of the labor performed, the materials furnished, and the services rendered, which were the basis of said claims, were performed, furnished, and rendered to the said department of public service between the date of the resolution of said council calling said election and the date of said election, and that said department of public service purchased said cards, banners, and other materials, and used the same, and paid for the circulation thereof, and caused said advertising to be inserted in said newspapers for the purpose, and with the intent, of influencing the electors of said municipality to vote in favor of said bond issue. A further allegation of said complaint sets forth that plaintiff had notified said department and the said treasurer of said city after the auditing of each of said claims, and prior to its payment, that the same was an illegal charge against said city, and, in the event it was paid by said treasurer, plaintiff would institute proceedings in court to compel the repayment thereof; furthermore, that, after the payment of said several claims as aforesaid, plaintiff filed with the city council of said city a written request and demand that said city institute proceedings against said defendants to recover from them, and to require them to pay into the city treasury, the sums of money paid out upon said claims, but that said city council had denied said request and demand, and refused to institute any action to recover said sums of money or any of them or any part thereof. The complaint also contains an allegation that plaintiff is the owner of property situated in said city, and that by reason of the acts of defendants in paying out said sums of money the burden of taxation will be materially increased upon his land and property within said city and upon the lands and property of other taxpayers in said municipality.

The defendants jointly answered said complaint, and denied that they had unlawfully approved, allowed, or ordered paid any claim against said city, or had unlawfully paid out of the treasury of said city any funds of said city upon any claim mentioned in said complaint. They also denied that, by reason of any action on their part as alleged in said complaint, the burden of taxation had been, or would be, materially or otherwise increased on the lands or property of plaintiff located in said city or upon any of the lands or property of the taxpayers therein. As a special defense defendants set up in their answer that the city of Los Angeles was then, and for more than five years prior thereto had been, the owner of, through the department of public service, of which the board of public service commissioners had charge and control, and during said time, through said department, had been and was then engaged in the business of operating, a system consisting of works and plants located inside and outside of said city for the generation of hydroelectric energy, lines for the transmission of such energy to and into said city, and lines and conduits and other structures and appliances for the delivery and distribution thereof to said city for the lighting of municipal public buildings, streets, and other public places in said city and to its inhabitants for the purpose of heat, light, and power; that, owing to the rapid and continued growth of said city, the plants and works had become, and were then, insufficient to meet the demand of its customers, and by reason thereof said city had been, and was then, compelled to purchase large and increasing amounts of electric energy at prices at least twice as great as the cost of the same would be if produced at plants built and operated by it; that the proposed bond issue of $35,000,000 was for the purpose of providing funds with which to purchase and acquire property and construct works for the generation of additional electric energy and for the extension of the municipal distributing system of said city in order to supply the needs of said city and of its inhabitants for additional electric energy; that the territorial extent of said city exceeded 350 square miles, its population had increased from 576,673, the number determined by the federal census in 1920, to approximately 900,000 at the time of said election, and there were within said city 851 election precincts and 272,848 registered voters entitled to vote at said election; that the proposition to create said bonded indebtedness and to issue said bonds was sharply contested, "some of the newspapers and some civic organizations of said city favored and some opposed the voting of said bonds, literature opposing said bonds was distributed or conspicuously posted throughout said city, speakers and workers acting in behalf of electric power companies operating in said city opposed the voting of said bonds, and large quantities of public printed matter containing misleading, deceptive, and untruthful reports against said bonds were circulated in the form of circulars, newspaper articles, and advertisements among the voters of said city"; that, by reason of the foregoing conditions, "it was necessary for the said board of public service commissioners, in order as far as practicable that the voters of said city might be informed of the pendency of said power bond proposition and correctly understand the objects and purposes of said proposed bonds and the benefits and advantages to accrue from authorizing the same to said city and its inhabitants, and in order to stimulate their interest in such proposition, and cause them to go to the polls and vote thereon, to" incur the indebtedness represented by said claims, and which were paid by the authorization of said board of public service commissioners from the funds belonging to said city. After the filing of the answer, the plaintiff moved the court for judgment upon the pleadings, which motion was granted by the trial court, and judgment was accordingly rendered against the defendants for the aggregate amount of said claims in favor of said city of Los Angeles and in favor of plaintiff for his costs. From this judgment the defendants have appealed.

[1] At the outset appellants contend that the judgment against them cannot stand, for the reason that the complaint, while alleging that respondent is a taxpayer, fails to show that he is a resident of the city of Los Angeles, and that an action of this character can only be maintained by a citizen and resident of the municipality in whose behalf the same is prosecuted. Appellants cite section 526a of the Code of Civil Procedure in support of this contention. This court has expressly ruled to the contrary. Osburn v. Stone, 170 Cal. 480, 482, 150 P. 367. See, also, Crowe v. Boyle, 184 Cal. 117, 152, 193 P. 111.

[2-5] The next ground advanced by appellants for a reversal of the judgment is that, as the answer contains denials putting in issue material allegations of the complaint, it was error on the part of the trial court to grant respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings. The only denials in appellants' answer are: (1) They deny that they unlawfully approved, allowed, or ordered paid or unlawfully paid any of the claims mentioned in the complaint; and (2) they deny that, by reason of any of the acts of appellants set forth in said complaint, the burden of taxation has been materially increased upon the property of respondent or upon any property in said city. As to the first of these denials we do not understand that appellants claim that it raises any issue of fact which requires or permits the introduction of evidence to sustain or disprove it. The other of the two denials of the answer likewise raises no issue of fact. If money belonging to the city is illegally paid out by its officers, the inevitable result would be a detriment to the taxpayers of said city, with a corresponding increase, either directly or indirectly, of the burden of taxation upon the property owners therein. The fact that the funds unlawfully withdrawn from the public treasury were not raised by direct taxation, but represented receipts from a public utility operated by the city, would not change this result. This is particularly so in the present instance by virtue of the provisions of the charter of said city relative to funds received as revenues of said city from the operation of its electric power plant. Besides, we think it doubtful whether the allegation of the complaint to which this denial was directed was necessary in an action of this character. Must a taxpayer, when he sees the money of the city being unlawfully applied and paid out for unlawful purposes, sit idly by, and is he without right either to stay the illegal expenditures or recover the same on behalf of the city after they are made, simply because he cannot show that he thereby sustained some special damage? This court has repeatedly held that he is not so helpless (Crowe v. Boyle, 184 Cal. 117, 193 P. 111, and citations found on page 152 thereof). The denials of the answer, therefore, raise no issue of fact, and the judgment upon the pleadings must be affirmed, unless the special defense set up in the answer constitutes a legal defense to respondent's action. This brings us to the real question presented on this appeal, that is, the legality of the expenditures incurred by the board of public service commissioners in carrying on a campaign in favor of the proposed bond issue.

This question is fairly and comprehensively stated by appellants as follows:

"The main, practical question, on the present controversy, is, whether the power revenue funds of the city may lawfully be expended upon publicity, in the form of newspaper ads, circulars, posters, banners and the like, addressed to the people of the city for the purpose of bringing about the approval of a popular bond issue designed to enable the city to enlarge its electric system and extend its electric power business."

The city of Los Angeles at the time this controversy arose, and for some time prior thereto, was governed by a charter regularly adopted by the electors of said city and approved by the Legislature. Section 192 (g) of said charter provided in part that:

"The board of public service commissioners shall have power:

"To manage and control * * * all electric plants, works, systems and equipments, and all electric power belonging to the city.

"To construct, operate, maintain and extend * * * electric plants, works, systems and equipments, and other means for supplying the city and its inhabitants with electricity for light, power, heat and other purposes. * * *

Section 192 (h) of said charter empowers the board:

"To control and order the expenditure of all moneys received from the sale or use of electric power, or otherwise in connection with the operation and management of the electric power works and systems of said city; provided, that all such moneys shall be deposited in the treasury of the city, to the credit of a fund to be known as the 'Power Revenue Fund.' * * *

By the same section it is provided that:

"* * * none of the money in said power revenue fund, or coming under the control of said board in connection with the operation of electric power plants, works or systems of the city, shall be appropriated or used for any purpose or purposes other than the following, to wit: * * * For the necessary expense of conducting, operating and maintaining and extending the business of said department pertaining to electric power, of the electric power works, plants, systems and equipments and of making all current and ordinary extensions, betterments and repairs."

A further provision of the charter, subdivision 50 of section 2, it is claimed by appellants, has some bearing upon the solution of the question in controversy. This provision reads as follows:

"The city of Los Angeles shall have and it is hereby given and it hereby reserves unto itself, and the people of the city hereby reserve unto it, and the people of the state of California hereby grant unto it, and said city may hereafter exercise each and every of the powers which a municipal corporation might or could exercise under the constitution of the state of California. * * *

Under these provisions of the charter the appellants contend that the board of public service commissioners, in the management and operation of the city's electrical utilities, and in the expenditures of the revenues derived therefrom, is invested with as full and complete powers as are enjoyed by a board of directors of a private corporation operating a public utility.

[6, 7] The specific language relied upon by appellants in support of this claim and in justification of said expenditure by said board of public service commissioners is that found in section 192 (g) of the charter whereby said board is given the power to manage and control all electric plants and works belonging to the city, and "to construct, operate, maintain, and extend * * * electric plants, works, systems and equipments, * * *" and by section 192 (h) of the charter whereby said board is empowered to expend and use money in the power revenue fund for the purpose of "conducting, operating, and maintaining and extending the business of said department pertaining to electric power," and particularly upon the words "extend electric plants, works," etc., and "extending the business of said department." It is argued by appellants that, as the charter expressly gives to said board the authority to extend the electrical plants and works under its charge, it is thereby given implied power to do all acts and things necessary to execute the power expressly given. The right to extend said system being expressly given, appellants contend that one of the necessary steps in the extension of said system is providing the funds with which to make said extension, and, as it is admitted the funds necessary for this purpose could only be raised by means of a bond issue, that said board was authorized to expend a reasonable amount of said funds to insure the success of said bond issue. The vice of this argument is in assuming that the raising of the necessary funds is any part of the power to extend said electrical system. We may all concede that the system cannot be extended without funds with which to carry on such extension. But the raising of the money to extend said system is one thing and the extension of it is an entirely different and distinct power. The provisions of the charter giving to the board of public service commissioners power to extend the electrical plants and works of said city and to expend the funds in the power fund for the purpose of extending said public utility in our opinion refer simply to the physical management of the same, and cannot be enlarged to include another and distinct power, that of raising money either directly or indirectly for the purpose of conducting and operating said utility, or for the purpose of extending the business thereof. The Municipal Bond Act (Stats. 1901, p. 27; Deering's General Laws of 1923, p. 1964), under which said election was held, gives the right and authority to determine the public interest and necessity which may demand or require an issue of bonds for the purpose of extending said public utility system, not to said board of public service commissioners, but to the city council of said city, and the entire proceeding for the issuance of bonds under said statute is committed to the control and direction of the said city council.

After the funds are received and placed in said fund, they then come under the jurisdiction of said board of public service commissioners, and are subject to the disposal of said board for the purpose designated in the charter.

Our attention has been directed to the recent case of In re East Bay, etc., Water Bonds of 1925, decided by this court and reported in 196 Cal. 725, 239 P. 38, in which there is to be found language to the effect that the ordinary newspaper notice is ineffective in notifying the electors of a city of an approaching bond election. Conceding this to be true, we do not understand that appellants are before this court simply contending that the expense incurred and paid out by them was for giving notice to the voters of said city of the approaching election. It is alleged in the complaint, and not denied by appellants, that said funds were used for the purpose and with the intent of influencing the voters of said city to vote in favor of said bond issue. In addition to the pleadings, appellants in their brief state that the practical question presented by this controversy is whether the power funds of the city may be lawfully expended for the purpose of bringing about the approval of a bond issue. We apprehend that, if the only payments made by appellants in connection with said bond campaign had been those which were incurred in giving what might be termed public notice of said election in addition to that provided by statute, this proceeding would not be before us, although we seriously question whether said board would have the power to expend the funds in the power fund for such purpose. But, be that as it may, the pleadings in this proceeding, as well as the admission of counsel for appellants, indicate without question that the appellants caused said funds to be paid from the public treasury for the purpose of inducing the electors of said city to vote in favor of said bond issue. Under this situation what was said by this court in Re East Bay, etc., Water Bonds of 1925, supra, can have no application to any issue in the present controversy.

As we have already observed, the sole reliance of appellants, in so far as the charter is concerned, is upon the words "extend" and "extending," used in said sections 192 (g) and 192 (h). The word "extension" in an action almost precisely the same as that in which the words "extend" and "extending" are used in said sections of the charter of Los Angeles has been the subject of judicial consideration by this court. By the charter of the city and county of San Francisco (section 16, art. 12), the board of supervisors are authorized to make appropriations from receipts of any public utility operated by said city for the purpose of "extensions and improvements." Said city was operating a municipal railway system. Under this provision of the charter the board of supervisors passed an ordinance whereby it sought to appropriate a sum of money from the receipts of said municipal railway for the purpose of investigating the condition and availability of a privately owned railway system operated in said city, with a view of purchasing the whole or a part of said private system. A taxpayer of the city brought an action to enjoin the expenditure of the money so appropriated. The trial court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and, on appeal, said judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. A petition to hear said cause in the Supreme Court was denied, and in denying the same this court said:

"Without regard to any other question discussed in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, we are satisfied that the charter of San Francisco, as now written, does not authorize the payment of money from the funds of the municipal railway system for the purpose of investigating the condition and availability of a part or the whole of another street railway with a view to its purchase. The purposes for which expenditures from such fund can be made are carefully specified in section 16, article XII, of the charter, which, we think, excludes any such expenditure as here proposed. Such an investigation may not fairly be held to constitute an 'extension or improvement' of the municipal system." Mobley v. Board of Public Works, 44 Cal. App. 167, 173, 174, 186 P. 412, 415.

[8] If the power to expend the public funds of the city for the purpose of extending a public utility operated by said city cannot be used by the board in charge of said public utility for the purpose of investigating a privately owned utility with a view of purchasing the latter, surely the power could not be claimed for said board to expend such public money in an endeavor to induce the electors of said city to vote in favor of a bond issue, the proceeds of which were to be used to extend the public utility system under its charge. The last case referred to presents a situation so similar to that involved in the present controversy that we regard it as practically conclusive of the question involved in the present proceeding.

[9, 10] Aside from any provision of the city charter or of the statute authorizing the bond issue, appellants contend, as the city is operating, not in its governmental, but in its proprietary, character, a municipal system, whereby it supplies to its inhabitants electricity for light, power, heat, and other purposes, that it has all the powers of a private corporation engaged in like business. This assertion is supported by a formidable array of authorities from the various courts of this country, including our own, as well as extracts from leading text-writers upon the subject. But in all this array of authority appellants have not presented a single adjudicated case or a line from any text-writer which goes to the extent to which appellants are asking this court to go in holding legal the expenditures made by them from the public funds of said city. That the powers of a city of a proprietary character are given a more liberal construction than those which are strictly governmental in character is settled beyond controversy by the decisions of our courts, and this rule is approved by our best text-writers. But, conceding this to be true, it does not follow that a municipality in exercising its powers in its proprietary capacity has the authority to do any act or thing which its officers may think necessary for the proper conduct or maintenance of the business in which it is engaged. Among the cases cited by appellants in support of their last contention is the case of Miller v. City of Los Angeles, 185 Cal. 440, 197 P. 342. In that case this court held that the city of Los Angeles, under the provisions of its charter giving it power to acquire by purchase or otherwise any and all property necessary or convenient to furnish the city and its inhabitants with light, heat, and power, had the authority to enter into a lease with a private corporation to furnish to said city electric energy to be used by it in supplying the needs of its consumers. It was contended by the appellant in said action that this charter provision gave to the city the power to acquire by purchase or otherwise the necessary works and plant for the production of electric energy, but not authority to purchase or acquire the manufactured article. This court ruled against said contention, and upheld the lease entered into by the city. Another case relied upon by appellants is the case of Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294, 153 N. W. 827, L. R. A. 1916A, 908, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 100. The city of South Haven was empowered to operate an electric plant for supplying its inhabitants with electricity. In connection therewith it sought to carry on the business of selling and installing electrical fixtures. A taxpayer of said city brought an action to enjoin it from engaging in the business of selling and installing electric fixtures. The Supreme Court of Michigan held that "furnishing to customers taking electricity the necessary devices or equipment to produce heat, power, or light from the (electrical) current is naturally incidental to and an implied power connected with the business of operating an electric light plant." These two cases probably go as far as any of the authorities cited by appellants in supporting their contention that a liberal construction should be given to statutes or charter provisions conferring powers upon municipalities engaged in what might be termed business ventures as distinguished from their governmental functions. It would be an unreasonable and unwarranted extension of the principle enunciated in these and similar cases, because in the instances considered therein the several municipalities were found to be acting within the scope of their authority, to hold that a city or one of its governmental boards, authorized to maintain, conduct, and extend a public utility, could use the funds with which

It is intrusted for the purpose of conducting said public utility, for an entirely different and distinct purpose—that of carrying on a campaign for the purpose of influencing the voters of said city in favor of a bond issue.

[11-13] The pleadings herein, as well as the result of the election, show that the sentiment existing among the electors of said city as to the advisability of issuing said bonds was divided. While the proposition to issue bonds received a majority of the votes cast at the election, it did not receive a two-thirds favorable vote as required by the statute in order that the bonds might be issued. It must be conceded that the electors of said city opposing said bond issue had an equal right to and interest in the funds in said power fund as those who favored said bonds. To use said public funds to advocate the adoption of a proposition which was opposed by a large number of said electors would be manifestly unfair and unjust to the rights of said last-named electors, and the action of the board of public service commissioners in so doing cannot be sustained, unless the power to do so is given to said board in clear and unmistakable language. As already stated, we find nothing either in the charter of the city or in any statutory enactment or otherwise which confers such authority upon said board of public service commissioners. Appellants allege that the power companies, operating competing utilities in said city, formed a large part of the opposition to said bond issue, and that these power companies employed workers and speakers to oppose said bonds; furthermore, that large quantities of printed matter containing misleading, deceptive, and untruthful reports against said bond issue were disseminated among the voters of said city. Appellants therefore seek to justify the expenditures complained of herein by asserting that the same were necessary in view of and for the purpose of correcting the misinformation disseminated among the voters of said city. The possibility that these conditions might arise might well have been considered by the framers of the charter when defining and limiting the powers of the board of public service commissioners of said city, and provisions might have been made therein to meet such conditions. But, whether considered or not, it is apparent to us that the framers of said charter have made no such provision. Therefore these matters can have no controlling effect upon the court when endeavoring to construe the terms of said charter. It is sufficient to show that the authority claimed by the board of public service commissioners to make such expenditures was not given to them by any express provisions of the charter, nor can it be implied from any of the terms thereof. This being so, neither said board nor this court nor any other court can invest said board with the authority denied it by the charter, no matter how desirable or necessary it may be made to appear that said board should be invested with such authority.

[14] Finally, appellants contend that, as the money was paid out honestly and in the belief that it was within the authority of the board of public service commissioners to use the funds of the city in payment of said expenditures, no recovery can be had against appellants. In support of this contention they cite the case of Osburn v. Stone, supra, and direct attention to the following language of this court used therein:

"It is proper in closing this discussion to say that the trial court will recognize the discretion which in many matters is and of necessity must be vested in public officials, and will recognize, moreover, that for an honest, even though mistaken, exercise of discretionary powers, no public officer is responsible."

There can be no question of the good faith and honest intention of the appellants. There is not the faintest suggestion that any of them acted in this matter with any other motive than a desire to faithfully and honestly execute the duties of their respective offices, and to preserve and protect the public trust committed to them by the people of said city. While this court approved the rule set forth in the above quotation from the case of Osburn v. Stone, supra, yet in the same decision is to be found the following language:

"The converse of the argument is that the powers of municipal officers are well defined. Their modes of procedure in all matters of expenditure are pointed out with particularity. They are given by law a legal adviser, and, if not, are fully empowered to employ one. There is no occasion whatsoever for their taking any step without such advice. There is no reason for their ever making any illegal expenditure of the public's moneys. To countenance the making by these officials of an illegal expenditure in one case, is to open wide the door for like expenditures in every case."

In that case, which was an action brought by a taxpayer against the mayor and common council to recover from them money illegally paid out of the public treasury, it was held that nine out of the ten counts of the complaint stated good causes of action against said defendants for the recovery of money so illegally paid out by them. What was meant—in fact, what was said—by the above quoted language from Osburn v. Stone, was that public officials are vested with certain discretion in the execution of their duties, and that they cannot be held responsible for an honest, even though it be a mistaken, exercise of their discretionary powers. Nothing can be found in that decision, or, for that matter, in any other of which we have any knowledge, which would justify the attempted exercise by an official of any power or authority not expressly or impliedly given to him, no matter how honest may be his intention or how upright his motives.

In a very recent case decided by us during the present month (Mahoney v. City and County of San Francisco et al., S. F. No. 11177, 257 P. 49), we held that, under the complaint therein, the auditor and treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco were liable for the repayment of moneys approved and paid out by them upon a contract entered into by the board of supervisors of said municipality, and which was beyond the powers of said board to make. There was no question of the good faith and honesty of intention of said officers in auditing and paying out said money, but, as the contract under which it was expended was not within the powers of the board, its payment was illegal and said officers were held liable for its repayment.

The case of Osburn v. Stone, supra, in so far as the legal principles therein decided, bears a striking similarity to the present action. The sum and substance of that decision is that public funds illegally or unlawfully paid out by a public official can, upon a suit by a taxpayer, be recovered, and the officer or officers responsible for said illegal or unlawful payment compelled to repay the same into the treasury of said city. Such in all its essential features is the present proceeding as presented by the complaint and answer thereto. The complaint under the authority of Osburn v. Stone, supra, states a good cause of action against appellants, and the answer thereto by appellants fails to state any legal defense to said cause of action. It was not error, therefore, for the trial court to grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings, and the judgment entered in accordance with the order granting said motion is valid and binding upon the appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

83 Cal. App. 666

CADWALLADER v. MARTIN et al.
(Civ. 5791.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 8, 1927.

1. Pleading $\Leftrightarrow$ 129(2)—Failure to deny allegations of verified complaint in action to foreclose mortgage held admission thereof.

In action to foreclose mortgage where allegations of verified complaint regarding execution of note and mortgage were expressly admitted, all other allegations were admitted by defendants' failure to deny them.

2. Judgment $\Leftrightarrow$ 198—Findings held to support judgment foreclosing mortgage.

In action to foreclose mortgage where verified complaint was regular in form and sufficient in all respects and all its allegations were admitted either expressly or by failure to deny its allegations, and allegations of substantive fraud in cross-complaint were found against defendants, findings for plaintiff which omitted no issue tendered by pleadings supported judgment of foreclosure.

3. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 1008(1)—In suit to foreclose mortgage, finding of lack of plaintiff's fraud in sale of vineyard held to prevent claim on appeal of constructive fraud in preventing examination.

In suit to foreclose mortgage where cross-complaint alleged false representations in sale of vineyard for which mortgage was given, in view of trial court's specific finding that plaintiff stated that he had overwatered certain spots, which was true, and that condition of vines in spots was due partly to overwatering, defense of plaintiff's constructive fraud in misleading defendants by such statement from examining vines, which were afflicted with phylloxera, is not available on appeal.

4. Trial $\Leftrightarrow$ 47(2)—Excluding question as to how long vineyard would be productive in absence of certain disease held not to prevent proving damage in view of failure to renew offer of testimony.

In suit to foreclose mortgage in which defendants set up fraud in representation in sale of vineyard, for which mortgage was given, and contended that vines were infected with phylloxera, sustaining objection to question to witness as to how long vineyard would be productive if it had not been so infected was not error, in view of court's offer to admit such evidence if it later became material and fact that counsel did not renew offer of testimony.

5. Trial $\Leftrightarrow$ 36—On issue arising on verified answer to cross-complaint where plaintiff had tendered no testimony, excluding evidence for defendants as to how vineyard had been cared for by them held not error.

In action to foreclose mortgage in which defendants in cross-complaint set up fraudulent representations in sale of vineyard for which mortgage was given, where issue on certain subject-matter arose by affirmative allegation in plaintiff's verified answer to cross-complaint and plaintiff had tendered no testimony, sustaining objection to question to witness by defendants' counsel as to how vineyard had been cared for by defendants was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by John H. Cadwallader against Arthur W. Martin and another to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. Grant Hayden, of Fresno, for appellants.

Ernest Klette, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff and his wife were the owners of a vineyard in Fresno county; they exchanged it for lands owned by the defendants, which they took in part payment, and for the balance they took a note and mortgage which was payable in installments; some of the installments being due and payable and not having been paid, the plaintiff commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage. The defendants appeared and answered, and also filed a cross-complaint. The cross-complaint was answered, and thereafter a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed.

[1] Before proceeding further it will simplify the matter to state the condition of the pleadings. The plaintiff's complaint appears to be regular in all respects and to be entirely sufficient as a complaint to foreclose a mortgage. The defendants have not contended to the contrary. By their answer the defendants expressly admitted the allegations regarding the execution of the note and mortgage. By failing to deny they admitted all of the other allegations. In their answer they pleaded affirmatively an entire failure of consideration. They also pleaded false representations made by the plaintiff which induced them to enter into the exchange. In their cross-complaint they repeated the allegations regarding false representations and pleaded in detail a cause of action for rescission based on said alleged false representations. In his answer to the cross-complaint the plaintiff made certain admissions, but denied the alleged false representations and specifically denied every allegation in the cross-complaint which constituted a factor of the alleged cause of action as for false representations. The pleadings of both parties were verified. When the action was called for trial, the plaintiff rested and thereupon the defendants took up the burden of proof. The findings were drawn without regard to the admissions made by the pleadings. In other respects, with meticulous care, the findings are in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants on all allegations touching the charge of fraud.

On this appeal the defendants contend (1) that the decision is not supported by the findings; (2) that the general findings in support of the decisions are not supported by the specific findings; (3) that the findings are not supported by the facts; and (4) that the court committed error in rejecting certain of defendants' evidence and in the admission of certain of plaintiff's evidence.

[2] Taking up these points in the order stated, it is patent that as the plaintiff's complaint was regular in form and sufficient in all respects, and as the allegations therein were admitted, the decision is to that extent supported by the findings. Turning to that part of the decision which is pertinent to the charge set forth in the cross-complaint, the allegations of substantive fraud were found against the defendants and no issue tendered by the pleadings was omitted from the findings. It is clear, therefore, that the judgment is supported by the findings.

[3] The second point made by the defendants is that the general findings in support of the decision are not supported by the specific findings. The argument is to the effect that when the defendants made their initial examination of the property they noticed some spots in the vineyard where the vines did not appear to be thrifty. They called that matter to the attention of the plaintiff. The plaintiff stated to them that he had overwatered those spots. The defendants now claim that at said time and place the vines in those spots were infected with phylloxera, that the plaintiff knew it, that the vines were not suffering from being overwatered, that the plaintiff knew it and misrepresented the fact to their damage, etc. The vice in this position is that the contention of the defendants was fully presented to the trial court, and that the trial court found against them on each and every element that would go to constitute fraud. Addressing ourselves to the specific findings, it may be said that the trial court found the plaintiff represented he had overwatered certain spots; that in truth and in fact he had done so; and that the condition of the vines in those spots was due partly to overwatering. It is not contended that the parties at the time the exchange was being negotiated mentioned or discussed phylloxera. In the face of these facts the defendants now contend that the plaintiff committed constructive fraud in saying that he had overwatered—that the remark tended to divert the defendants from making the examination which they would have otherwise made. The record does not support the contention.

The third point made by the defendants, although it is stated in their brief, is not argued and no portion of the record is called to our attention as showing that any finding made by the trial court is not supported by the facts.

[4] The fourth point presented by the defendants involves rulings made by the trial court receiving or excluding evidence. The defendants contend that the trial court prevented them from offering evidence as to their damage and later made a finding to the effect that they had not been damaged. "The measure of damages for a fraud inducing the plaintiff to purchase property is the difference between the actual value of what he received and the value which it would have had if the fraudulent representations had been true." Perry v. Ayers, 159 Cal. 414, 418, 419, 114 P. 46, 48. The defendants have printed in their brief 23 pages of material copied from the transcript. An examination of all of it discloses that no question or answer was addressed to the subject of damage. It also discloses only two rulings against the defendants. They asked their witness Mr. Schmidt:

"Q. Assuming that there was no phylloxera in that vineyard, and the vines had never been infected with phylloxera and that the vines are 25 years old, how long would that vineyard be a good productive vineyard?"

The plaintiff objected, and the trial court sustained the objection and remarked that if the proof thereafter became material counsel could later go into it. Thereafter counsel did not renew his offer.

[5] To the same witness the defendants propounded the question:

"What would you say, from your general observation there, as to how this vineyard had been taken care of (by the defendants)?"

An objection was interposed by the plaintiff and the objection was sustained. The ruling was clearly correct. The issue on the subject-matter arose by reason of an affirmative allegation in the plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint of the defendants. The plaintiff had tendered no testimony. The trial court so held, and counsel for the defendants admitted the soundness of the ruling by remarking, "It would be out of the order of proof, possibly. Take the witness, then."

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

IRILARRY v. BYERS, Sheriff, et al.★
(Civ. 4416.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 17, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 15, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1927.

1. Attachment $\S$ 164—Service of writ on defendant is sufficient to maintain attachment of heavy and unmanageable articles (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 542, subd. 5).

There is no necessity for actual handling of heavy and unmanageable articles to levy or maintain attachment, but mere service of writ on defendant as in case of attachment of real estate is sufficient, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 542, subd. 5.

2. Attachment $\S$ 184—One attaching contractor's machinery held not to have released attachment by refusal to continue paying keeper, where he deemed keeper unnecessary because of bulk of attached property.

Plaintiff who attached machinery of contractor constructing dam held not to have released attachment by refusal to continue paying keeper, where he deemed keeper unnecessary as to attached property because of its bulk, weight, and situation.

3. Attachment $\S$ 164—Attached property is presumably attached and held together, where under control of one keeper.

Where machinery, tools, implements, and paraphernalia of contractor constructing dam were attached, and all of such property was under control of one keeper, it was presumably attached and held together.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action in replevin by John T. Irilarry against James C. Byers, as Sheriff of the County of San Diego, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, and P. A. Bergerot and A. P. Dessouslavy, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Eugene Daney, of San Francisco, and G. F. McCulloch, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. From the admitted facts in this case it appears that on and prior to May 3, 1918, the respondent James C. Byers was sheriff of San Diego county, and that one James Kennedy was a contractor engaged in the construction of the then uncompleted Otay dam across a certain gorge, in said county; that Kennedy was in possession of, and owned an interest in, a large quantity of machinery, tools, implements, and paraphernalia, including one Marion steam shovel, model 36, which were used in such construction work. On May 3, 1918, a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of Los Angeles county in an action pending therein entitled P. R. Williams v. Kennedy and another, which writ was delivered to the respondent sheriff on May 4, 1918, and was levied upon all of the above-mentioned property on May 6, 1918. On the date last mentioned, but following the levy of the Williams attachment, the same officer levied upon said property a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, which latter writ was not received by the sheriff until the date of levy. The suit last mentioned was entitled Prosper Wolf v. James Kennedy. It was stipulated by the parties that as between these two the Williams attachment rightfully received priority when levied.

On or about June 26, 1918, Prosper Wolf assigned, transferred, and set over unto the appellant herein the cause of action upon which this suit was founded, and Irilarry instituted this action against the respondent sheriff for the sum of $1,859.91, alleged that at all times since November 16, 1918, his attachment was a first lien upon the steam shovel, and that ever since the last-named date, to October 14, 1919, he had paid the entire expense of keeping and caring for said shovel, when and as such payment was demanded of him, in said action of Wolf v. Kennedy, and that on and prior to October 14, 1919, such expense was repaid in full by him to on or about November 9, 1919; that at all times from November 16, 1918, to October 14, 1919, the sheriff retained the custody of said shovel for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff in said action of Wolf v. Kennedy. The respondents denied by their answer the foregoing allegations, and alleged that the levy of Irilarry's writ of attachment from May 6, 1918, to the 14th day of October, 1919, and the levy of the writ of execution from January 9, 1919, to October 14, 1919, was at all times subject to the prior lien, attachment, and execution of Williams.

At the trial appellant relied entirely upon the testimony of Byers and a deputy sheriff and correspondence between the sheriff and counsel for appellant, from which it appears that appellant's counsel denied any knowledge of the fact that the keeper's fees had been wholly assumed by Williams until the release of the property other than the steam shovel from the Williams writ.

From the 6th day of May, 1918, to the date of the sale under execution, a keeper was continuously in charge of the property, except such as was released upon third party claims. On November 13, 1918, the sheriff notified counsel for appellant in writing as follows:

"Referring again to the matter of keeper at the Otay dam, will say that the plaintiff, Williams, is in arrears for keeper's fees in the suit of Williams v. Ball and Kennedy, and I have notified him that unless fees were deposited immediately I would feel it my duty to dispense with the keeper on next Saturday. If you desire me to maintain the keeper please send me a deposit of $150."

To this counsel replied by a letter dated November 19, 1918, in part:

"I understand, of course, that Williams not having kept up the payment of keeper's fees, the levy in Wolf v. Kennedy has now become a first lien on every part of the attached property."

Byers swore that he levied both attachments upon all of Kennedy's property; that the steam shovel was exceedingly large and cumbersome; that it was so situated that it could not well have been moved until completion of the dam; that "it was on the east side of the uncompleted dam, across the gorge," and "the only way it could finally be moved was to bring it out across the top of the dam"; that he did not deem it necessary that a keeper should be continued in charge of it, but that, if the parties desired that all of the property be kept in custody, he required a deposit; that he was instructed to and did release all except the shovel from the Williams attachment, but that this apparatus was never released therefrom; and that counsel for appellant paid all keeper's fees following such partial release, and thereafter claimed priority of their levy as to all of the property, including the shovel. At the trial counsel for appellant stated their contention, which is here urged upon appeal, as follows:

"We are making no claim that the Williams attachment was not prior originally. It may be so stipulated. * * * There is no question but what Mr. Williams could abandon or release his attachment. Now he perhaps would be the only one in responsibility who could do that. The sheriff himself might cause the lien of that attachment to be lost by his improper action, or by his action whether proper or improper. In either event, if the lien was abandoned or released by Williams, or the lien of Williams' attachment was lost by reason of the sheriff's action, then the Irilarry attachment came in as the first attaching lien upon the steam shovel. * * * We contend that the correspondence shows that, by reason of the failure of Mr. Williams to pay any additional fee, the sheriff notified Irilarry that the property would be released unless on a certain date he (Irilarry) put up the fees. It is our contention that the only way in which the sheriff could keep the custody of this attached property was by having a keeper in charge; that is, taking it into his actual custody."

[1-3] As appears from the notice to appellant's counsel, the sheriff did not state that he would release the property from attachment, but that he would "dispense with the keeper," unless a deposit were immediately made. There is no necessity for an actual handling of heavy and unmanageable articles to levy or maintain an attachment. Dreibach v. Braden, 40 Cal. App. 407, 181 P. 262. The mere service of a writ upon the defendant, as in the case of attachment of real estate, is sufficient. Rudolph v. Saunders, 111 Cal. 233, 43 P. 619. It is not requisite to the attachment of personal property not capable of manual delivery that it be taken into custody by the sheriff, nor that, having been taken by him, his possession be retained. Code Civ. Proc., § 542, subd. 5. It is obvious that, as the evidence shows this steam shovel to have been situated, it was not then capable of manual delivery.

Appellant cites no authority holding contrary to this view. O'Connor v. Blake, 29 Cal. 313, merely held that the sheriff having custody of attached property, under one levy, need not make a second seizure under subsequently issued writs in order to establish valid liens thereunder. In Smart v. Sosey, 49 Cal. App. 232, 193 P. 167, the personal property was of a readily movable character. Also, in Braden v. Cline, 51 Cal. App. 424, 196 P. 913, it is not contended that the chattels were not readily movable and capable of manual delivery. Another case upon which appellant attempts to rely is Cudahy v. Rhinehart, 133 N. Y. 248, 30 N. E. 1004, wherein it was shown that the property which the sheriff was instructed to attach was not found; that subsequent attaching creditors levied upon other property, and that, when asked to furnish an indemnity bond if the plaintiffs desired a lien upon the property last mentioned, they refused to do so, but they did furnish a bond with amended instructions supplementing the previous understanding that the bond was not to be treated as having any relation to the property previously seized under the several attachments, and that it was given for a specific and different purpose. It is not here contended that the Williams undertaking was ever in question. The property was first seized and a keeper placed in charge under his writ, and, having released his attachment as to all property other than the dredger, and deeming a keeper unnecessary as to that, because of its bulk, weight, and situation, his refusal to continue paying the keeper cannot be said to have constituted a release of his attachment upon that which remained. Since all of the property was under the control of one keeper, it was presumably attached and held together.

Hence, since Williams' lien of attachment was first received by the levying officer, all property other than the steam shovel having been released therefrom, and it having been held and sold under such lien for more than the amount of Williams' judgment interest, and costs, the balance was properly payable upon the Wolf judgment. Since, as we have seen, the Williams attachment was not released, the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

MILLS v. RICHARDS. (Civ. 3259.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence are binding on appeal.

Appellate court is bound by findings of trial court on substantially conflicting evidence.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨172(4)—Sublessee conducting hotel, ousted for unreasonable length of time for making repairs partly unnecessary, held entitled to damages for eviction.

Where sublessee conducting hotel was notified by lessee and lessor that building was unsafe for human habitation and immediately vacated for repairs which could have been made within two or three weeks, he was entitled to damages for eviction, where building was not repaired or unnecessary repairs made and possession withheld for ten weeks, which was an unreasonable time and resulted in destruction of plaintiff's business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by J. K. Mills against A. A. Richards to recover damages for eviction. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cook & Nichols, of Turlock, for appellant.
A. J. Carlson, of Modesto, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant is the lessee of a three-story brick building in the town of Turlock; the owner and lessor thereof being D. H. Arakelian. At the times mentioned herein, the ground floor was occupied by stores and a theater, the ceiling of the theater being higher than those of the other rooms. The second and third stories above the stores, containing two apartments and nineteen other rooms, were used as a hotel which was known as the Broadway Hotel. The defendant sublet the hotel, fully furnished, for a term of five years from the 1st day of July, 1920. The sublessee deposited $1,000 with the defendant as security for the payment of installments of rent as they became due. Through various assignments, the plaintiff acquired the rights of the sublessee, including the latter's interest in the deposit of $1,000, and went into possession of the hotel in January, 1923. On May 2, 1923, the plaintiff was informed by defendant and Arakelian that the building was unsafe for human habitation, and he and his guests immediately vacated the premises. On the following day he served the defendant with written notice of such removal and demanded payment of the amount of the deposit, less the sum of $320 due for rent at the time of removal. Upon defendant's refusal to make such payment this action was commenced. In addition to denials of allegations of the complaint, the defendant filed a cross-complaint for rent alleged to be due for the months of April, May, June, and July, 1923. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $680, the amount demanded by him, and the defendant has appealed. In appellant's opening brief it is said:

"The question involved on this appeal is whether or not the plaintiff * * * was evicted from certain premises known as the Broadway Hotel."

[1] In determining this question, it will be sufficient to state the evidence which supports the findings and judgment, this court being bound by the findings of the trial court upon substantially conflicting evidence.

[2] The plaintiff testified that about the first of May, 1923, Arakelian informed him and other tenants "that the building was unsafe, and it would be necessary to make repairs, and, if we stayed in there, we were staying * * * at our own risk"; that "immediately after that we received that notice from the city engineer * * * that the building was in an unsafe condition"; that he immediately moved out; that on May 9th he delivered the keys of the building to the defendant and stated that he "would not be responsible for it any longer"; that the defendant said, "All right"; that "he took the keys all right, and * * * he said I could leave the keys * * * and he would take care of them"; that the unsafe condition of the building "was the talk of the street generally" after May 2d. Mrs. Mills testified that "there were articles in the paper after we went out, concerning the condition of the building"; that "we had permanent guests in the house when the building was condemned, and we had to refund their money"; and that "it would require a large effort * * * to build up the patronage of the hotel again there as to permanent guests or either as to transient guests." Defendant's agent for the collection of rents testified that, in the presence of the defendant, he notified the tenants, including the plaintiff, "that I thought the building was in a dangerous condition and they might remain there or they might move out, and, if they stayed in there, they stayed at their own risk." The testimony of this witness stands uncontradicted. The city engineer testified that he told the plaintiff "to get out of there and get out of there quick, for I thought the building was liable to collapse"; that he inspected the building about May 1, 1923, and "I found that the roof was held up by six trusses, each approximately a 62-foot span, 6½-foot rise; the members of these trusses were built up of 7/8-inch boards; the lower chord of one truss had parted to the extent of 4 inches; the upper chord had sunk possibly 6 or 8 inches, and the ceiling attached to the lower chord had sunk several inches. The walls settled; the 12-inch brick wall had been kicked out of place by the expansion of the lower member of the truss;" that he later made a more thorough examination and "found that, while only one truss had broken, they were all built in a very defective manner * * * and were liable to go at any time"; that, if the roof collapsed, "this would undoubtedly bring down the walls on the whole building"; that the repairs of the building were completed "about the 1st of August, possibly a little before that"; that "the work dragged on a great deal longer than there was any occasion for it to have done"; that the hotel could have been occupied safely after the middle of July; that at that time "the hallways were full of dirt, lime, and plaster and all that sort of thing, but there was no reason why that could not have been cleaned out and the hotel building used." Several other competent witnesses gave testimony to the same effect. One of them testified that he found the roof in a "very poor condition. * * * One truss was broken and the next truss was sagging and part of the ceiling was going down, and

I didn't inspect it much more because I was afraid. I pulled out of there as fast as I could." The contractor who repaired the building testified that the repairs were completed July 26, but that the building was safe for occupancy about two weeks earlier. A witness for defendant, who prepared the plans for repairing the building, testified that he was engaged in preparing such plans before the broken truss was discovered; that "the design of the trusses of the building was not safe and not proper, and Mr. Arakelian had been told or had noticed himself that, I think immediately after the building. Had some trouble with it. I wasn't connected with that. * * * It was a very poor job."

It clearly appears from the uncontradicted evidence that, by reason of faulty construction, the building never was safe or fit for the occupation of human beings, and that the defendant's notice to the plaintiff to vacate the building or to remain at his own risk, as well as the similar notice given by Arakelian, was not for the purpose of enabling the owner to make ordinary repairs of dilapidations occurring subsequent to the execution of the lease or the sublease, but for the purpose of reconstructing the roof trusses, owing to original defects therein which rendered the building unsafe. The effect of the re-entry for that purpose was to oust plaintiff entirely from possession of the property leased to him for a period of at least ten weeks, which the testimony shows and the court found "was an unreasonable time," and it resulted in the destruction of the plaintiff's business. In McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 69, 48 P. 984, 986, the plaintiff was conducting a lodging house in a part of a building leased from defendants. The defendants "conducted certain alterations and improvements on the second floor by tearing out partitions and walls, putting in new partitions, plastering, removing the front doors, etc., whereby plaintiff was damaged, and her quiet enjoyment of the premises as a tenant was interfered with." The court said:

"The principal covenant on the part of a landlord, which, if not expressed, is implied, is that his tenant shall have the quiet enjoyment and possession of the premises during the continuance of the term. 'This covenant, whether expressed or implied, means that the tenant shall not be evicted or disturbed by the lessor or by persons deriving title from him, or by virtue of a title paramount to his.' * * * 1 Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 305."

"The general rule, * * * relating to a constructive eviction, is that any disturbance of the tenant's possession by the landlord, whereby the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy in whole or in substantial part for the purposes for which they were leased, amounts to a constructive eviction, if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession." Veysey v. Moriyama, 184 Cal. 802, 805, 195 P. 662, 663 (20 A. L. R. 1363); Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 587, 593, 56 P. 422, 69 Am. St. Rep.

84; Coen v. City of Los Angeles, 70 Cal. App. 752, 765, 234 P. 426; Kelley v. Long, 18 Cal. App. 159, 163, 122 P. 832; Agoure v. Lewis, 15 Cal. App. 71, 76, 113 P. 882.

Appellant says: "The lack of safety might have been cured within two or three weeks. and no doubt was." The evidence shows that the building was not fit for occupancy prior to the middle of July. If, however, the building could have been made or was made safe for occupation within two or three weeks after plaintiff vacated the premises, then it was the duty of the defendant immediately to restore to the plaintiff the quiet possession thereof, without further delay for unnecessary repairs. Dwyer v. Carroll, 86 Cal. 298, 304, 24 P. 1015.

The judgment is affirmed.

Trial ⇨143—Nonsuit should not be granted if evidence tends to sustain plaintiff's action or in case conflicting evidence tends to sustain case.

Where there is any evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's action, a nonsuit should be denied without passing on sufficiency of such evidence; and where there is conflict in evidence, some of which tends to sustain plaintiff's case, a motion for nonsuit should not be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by D. T. Blodgett against Frank C. Elliott. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

D. T. Blodgett, in pro. per.

A. D. Mitchell and Pollock & Mitchell, all of Ontario, Cal., for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This action is brought to recover commissions for procuring a purchaser of a stock of merchandise, tools, and implements, and for procuring a lessee for buildings and grounds. At the close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case. The motion was granted, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Without reviewing the evidence in detail, we find upon examination of the record that there is some evidence tending to prove plaintiff's employment by defendant, and that the sale was consummated through the efforts of plaintiff, especially in view of the fact that defendant sold and leased the property to plaintiff's customer soon after the plaintiff had called the attention of the customer to the property. There was also some evidence that the purchaser had received information concerning the property from sources other than plaintiff. In view of the conflict in the evidence, we think the case should more properly have been decided after defendant had put in his proof, rather than on a motion for nonsuit. If there is any evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's action, a nonsuit should be denied without passing upon the sufficiency of such evidence, and where there is a conflict in the evidence, some of which tends to sustain plaintiff's case, a motion for nonsuit should not be granted. Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 158 Cal. 596, 112 P. 53. One of the grounds on which the trial court granted the motion for nonsuit was that the plaintiff was not the real party in interest. We find no evidence in the record sufficiently conclusive to justify a nonsuit on that ground. In our opinion the trial court erred in granting the motion for nonsuit.

It is ordered that plaintiff be granted leave to file his amendment to the complaint. The judgment is ordered reversed.

PEOPLE v. STONE et al. (Cr. 1479.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 20, 1927.

1. Conspiracy ⇨23—In prosecution for conspiracy to falsify election returns, specific intent to violate law or injure another need not be proved (Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 1, and § 51).

In prosecution for conspiracy to falsify election returns brought under Pen. Code, § 51, instruction that state need not prove specific intent as affecting result of election, or injuring any one, or of committing any crime, held proper in view of section 7, subd. 1.

2. Conspiracy ⇨47—Evidence held to support conviction for conspiracy to falsify election returns (Pen. Code, § 51).

Evidence held sufficient to justify conviction for conspiracy to falsify election returns under Pen. Code, § 51, where defendant, who was judge of election, saw 98 of 137 votes cast and 30 ballots were erroneously reported, especially in view of his testimony that he saw some of such ballots and did not correct erroneous announcements of results by inspector.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

William B. Stone and another were convicted of conspiracy to falsify election returns, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter C. Davison, of Riverside, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendants were charged with conspiring, as members of an election board, "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously * * * to add to the votes cast in favor of" a proposition balloted upon at the election during which the board sat, and "to subtract from the votes cast against" the proposition, in the official returns of the election. The crime which it was alleged defendants conspired to commit is denounced by section 51 of the Penal Code. Defendant Emerich pleaded guilty, and defendant Stone was convicted after a plea of not guilty. The latter appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in giving to the jury an instruction which read, in part:

"In this case there is no specific intent involved, and it is not necessary for the state to prove that an act was done with the intent of affecting the result of the election or of injuring anyone, or of committing any crime. The charge against the defendants makes no mention of any particular intent. The use of the word 'willfully' implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act referred to, but it does not require any intention to violate the law or to injure another or to acquire any advantage."

[1] It is provided by section 51 of the Penal Code that "every person who willfully adds to, or subtracts from, the votes actually cast at an election, in any official or unofficial returns" is punishable in a certain manner. The assailed instruction was properly given, as it was practically in the language of subdivision 1 of section 7 of the Penal Code. See People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 P. 45; People v. Dillon, 199 Cal. 1, 248 P. 230. Appellant relies on People v. Eagan, 116 Cal. 287, 48 P. 120, but that case is not in point.

Appellant insists that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict returned against him. In the precinct in which sat the election board of which appellant was a member, 107 ballots were cast in favor of the proposition voted upon and 30 against it. The board returned that 137 votes were cast in favor of it, with no adverse votes. The board was composed of two clerks, besides defendant Emerich, who was an inspector, and appellant, who was a judge of election. Throughout the count the tally lists were handled by the clerks, and they each testified at the trial that they correctly tallied the votes as they were called to them. Emerich "called off" the ballots until only 20 to 30 remained, when appellant relieved him and "called off" those that were left. Neither Emerich nor appellant called any votes in opposition to the proposition to which we have referred. While Emerich was announcing the result of the ballots "called off" by him, appellant was "stringing" them one by one as Emerich handed them to him after they had been tallied. Appellant testified that he had served on election boards before serving on the one whose operations are now in question, that he knew that it was his duty to examine the counted ballots as Emerich passed them to him in order to see that no mistakes were made, and that he did examine at least two-thirds of those which Emerich handed to him, before "stringing" them. He testified further:

"Q. Did any of those ballots that you looked at have 'No' votes registered? A. I think they did, the best I remember.

"Q. Did some of them have 'Yes' votes registered? A. Yes, sir."

[2] We think the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict. Appellant "called off" at least 20 ballots. Of the remaining 117 he examined at least two-thirds, or 78. He saw, then, all told, what was on 98 of the 137 votes cast. It is inconceivable that he did not inspect any of the 30 ballots which registered "No" votes. In truth, he testified that he saw some such ballots. From the fact that appellant did not correct the erroneous announcements of the results of votes by Emerich, the jury was justified in concluding that there was an illicit concord—a conspiracy—between them. On this point, also, appellant relies on People v. Eagan, supra. The facts appearing here are quite different from those shown in that case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

In suit to impress a constructive trust on a lease, complaint alleging that plaintiff and defendants had agreed that defendants should secure and take in their own names a lease on a storeroom for the joint use and benefit of plaintiff and defendants, that plaintiff should have and enjoy the use and possession of a half thereof, and that plaintiff placed special confidence in certain individual defendant, and that assignment of lease to corporate defendant was without consideration held insufficient to state a cause of action, there being no allegation that plaintiff had performed or was willing to perform, or that fixtures of special design and architecture had been ordered or installed with knowledge of defendants.

4. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 149—Complaint in action for damages for breach of oral contract to take lease for joint use of plaintiff and defendants held to show part performance, taking contract out of statute.

In action for damages for breach of contract, complaint alleging that plaintiff and defendants had agreed that defendants should take in their own names a lease on a certain storeroom for the joint use and benefit of plaintiff and defendants, and that plaintiff should enjoy the use of a particular half thereof, and that plaintiff, with defendants' knowledge, took possession and equipped his half with special fixtures and stock of merchandise, that defendants ejected plaintiff, though he had fully performed on his part and was always ready, able, and willing to perform, held to sufficiently show part performance, taking agreement (concededly oral) out of statute of fraud, and hence sufficient to state a cause of action.

5. Joint adventures $\S$ 5(2)—Complaint in action for breach of agreement to secure lease for joint use held to show joint venture, and sufficient without averment of agreement to pay half of rental.

Complaint in action for damages for breach of agreement between plaintiff and defendants to secure a lease for their joint use and benefit held to sufficiently show a joint venture, and hence not insufficient for want of allegation that plaintiff had agreed to pay his part of rental.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Two consolidated actions by A. A. Holstrom against Andrew Mullen and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Leo V. Youngworth and Harry J. McClean, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dockweiler & Dockweiler & Finch, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. Two actions were commenced by the plaintiff against the defendants, one seeking the recovery of damages for breach of contract and numbered in the superior court records 105266, and the second, designated by No. 105267, seeking to have a 10-year lease to a storeroom held by the defendants impressed with a trust in favor of the plaintiff. The complaint for damages alleges, in addition to the fact of damage in a definite amount, that on or about August 10, 1921, plaintiff and defendants agreed that defendants should secure and take in their own names a lease on a storeroom in the Pacific Mutual building for the joint use and benefit of plaintiff and defendants; that plaintiff should have and enjoy the use and possession of the west half thereof; that during the months of September and October the plaintiff took possession of the west half and equipped it with special fixtures and a stock of merchandise, all of which was well known to the defendants; that about November 10, 1921, the defendants ejected plaintiff, although he had fully performed on his part and has always been ready, able, and willing to perform. The second complaint alleges practically the same matters except that it fails to allege performance or willingness to perform, and does not allege that the installation of fixtures of special design and architecture and the stock of goods ordered and placed in one-half of the store were ordered and installed with the knowledge of the defendants. It does allege in more detail that the agreement was made with the defendant Andrew Mullen to secure the lease, the special confidence placed in Mullen by reason of a long acquaintance with him, and the assignment of the lease to the defendant Deane, a corporation, without consideration; that in all of the things done by Andrew Mullen he was acting not only for himself, but also as the representative of the defendants Mullen and Bluett and the Mullen Estate Company.

Upon stipulation of the parties, the two causes were consolidated for trial, and upon the trial objection was made to the introduction of any testimony on the ground that neither of the complaints stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Appellant's counsel stipulated that the agreement between plaintiff and defendants was not in writing, but oral, and, upon that stipulation being made, the objections were sustained and judgment was entered that plaintiff take nothing in either of the actions and that defendants should recover their costs. This appeal is from that judgment, and we must examine both the complaints to determine if they, or either of them, is sufficient against a general demurrer.

[1-3] It is apparent that the second complaint, the complaint to impress a trust upon the lease, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the reason that it alleges no facts to bring it within the doctrine of constructive trusts. Such trusts are the creatures of equity, formed for the purpose of preventing the perpetration of fraud. Teich v. San Jose Bank of Savings, 8 Cal. App. 397, 97 P. 167; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; section 2224 Civ. Code. The absence of allegations that the fixtures of special design and architecture and the stock of goods were ordered and installed with the knowledge of the defendants renders the complaint fatally defective in this particular. A failure to allege performance or willingness to perform is also fatal in an equitable action. The allegations are therefore insufficient to bring the plaintiff within the protecting arm of equity.

[4] When we examine the other complaint we find the allegations just mentioned to have been supplied, and the question becomes one of whether the acts alleged to have been done were a sufficient part performance to take it out of the statute of frauds. Perhaps the question would be properly phrased if we said it was whether the plaintiff had suffered such a change of position that it would be inequitable for the defendants to be permitted to claim the protection of the statute. Strictly speaking, the things which plaintiff alleges were done, at least with the silent acquiescence of defendants were not done in the performance of the lease, but were done in preparation therefor. The rule is succinctly set forth in Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782-795, 106 P. 88, 94 (134 Am. St. Rep. 154), as follows:

"The right of courts of equity to hold a person estopped to assert the statute of frauds, where such assertion would amount to practicing a fraud, cannot be disputed. It is based upon the principle 'thoroughly established in equity, and applying in every transaction where the statute is invoked, that the statute of frauds, having been enacted for the purpose of preventing fraud, shall not be made the instrument of shielding, protecting, or aiding the party who relies upon it in the perpetration of a fraud or in the consummation of a fraudulent scheme.' 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 921. It was said in Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 35 [3 Am. Rep. 418]: 'The fraud most commonly treated as taking an agreement out of the statute of frauds is that which consists in setting up the statute against its enforcement, after the other party has been induced to make expenditures, or a change of situation in regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, or upon the supposition that it was to be carried into execution, and the assumption of rights thereby to be acquired; so that the refusal to complete the execution of the agreement is not merely a denial of rights which it was intended to confer, but the infliction of an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss. In such case, the party is held, by force of his acts or silent acquiescence, which have misled the other to his harm, to be estopped from setting up the statute of frauds.' This statement has been accepted as setting forth a plain and satisfactory ground for equitable jurisdiction, together with a clear indication of the proper limitation of its exercise. See 5 Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 457a. In the section last cited, Mr. Browne says: 'A plaintiff * * * must be able to show clearly * * * not only the terms of the contract, but also such acts and conduct of the defendant as the court would hold to amount to a representation that he proposed to stand by his agreement and not avail himself of the statute to escape its performance; and also that the plaintiff, in reliance on this representation, has proceeded, either in performance or pursuance of his contract, to so far alter his position as to incur an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss, in case the defendant is permitted after all to rely upon the statutory defense. After proof of this, the court may well be justified in using its undoubted power, in cases of equitable estoppel, to refuse to listen to a defendant seeking to deny the truth of his own representations previously made.'"

The whole question is whether or not the rule thus announced is applicable to this situation. Unquestionably the allegations of the complaint show that by reason of defendants' acquiescence in the installation of special fixtures and stocking the store with goods ordered for that purpose, plaintiff would be seriously damaged if not permitted to proceed with the venture. The time for defendants to have spoken was when knowledge was first had. It would be unjust not to permit the plaintiff to litigate a claim founded upon his reliance upon the acts of the defendants. We are of the opinion that the rule is applicable to the present situation.

[5] It may be asserted that plaintiff has nowhere alleged an agreement on his part to pay one-half of the rental—but as against a general demurrer we think the allegation that plaintiff and defendants agreed to secure the lease for their joint use and benefit, and that plaintiff was to use the west half, necessarily implies that they were joint venturers in the undertaking, and each to pay one-half thereof.

The judgment is affirmed as to action No. 105267, and reversed as to action No. 105266.

GRISO v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al. ★
(Civ. 5858.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 21, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 20, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1927.

1. Mandamus ☞ 4(2)—After sustaining demurrer to petition for review of order revoking medical license and judgment of dismissal, former licensee was not entitled to mandamus to compel court to take jurisdiction (Medical Practice Act, § 14, as amended by St. 1925, p. 281; Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 1).

After order of superior court sustaining demurrer to petition for writ of review of order of board of medical examiners, revoking license under Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p.

722) § 14, as amended by St. 1925, p. 281, and judgment of dismissal, former licensee had an adequate remedy by appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 1, and was not entitled to mandamus to compel court to take jurisdiction which in fact it had already done.

2. Mandamus —4(1)—Court's exercise of jurisdiction, if erroneous, is reviewable, not by mandamus, but by appeal.

Where a court has exercised its jurisdiction either correctly or erroneously, the result of such exercise cannot be reviewed by mandamus, but only by appeal.

Application by Davis Grisso for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for Alameda County, T. W. Harris, Presiding Judge, to compel such court to take jurisdiction of and determine application of petitioner for review of an order of the Board of Medical Examiners revoking certificate. Writ denied.

Soren X. Christensen and J. C. Wood, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. B. Bianchi, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus. The petitioner, as shown by the allegations of his petition, was engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Alameda county under a license issued to him on February 23, 1921, by the board of medical examiners of the state of California, and duly registered by petitioner, as required by the state Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722), in the office of the county clerk of said county. In July, 1922, charges of unprofessional conduct were preferred against petitioner, and on October 18, 1923, said board of medical examiners heard the same and determined that petitioner was guilty thereof; whereupon an order was made revoking his license. The board of medical examiners conducted the hearing and its order of revocation was made and entered in the city of Sacramento. Subsequently, the secretary of said board certified the order of revocation to the county clerk of Alameda county, who caused a written entry thereof to be made across the face of the registration record.

Thereafter, and on February 17, 1926, petitioner filed an application in the superior court in and for the county of Alameda for a writ of review, seeking to have reviewed the proceedings upon which the order of revocation was founded, and to have the latter annulled. The board of medical examiners appeared in the proceeding and contested the issuance of said writ by filing a demurrer to the petition. Thereafter, the allegations of the petition in the instant proceeding show, "said superior court * * * sustained said demurrer and declined and refused to take jurisdiction of said cause and declined and refused to review the decision of said medical board. * * *" Petitioner then applied for and obtained from the Supreme Court an alternative writ of mandate directing said superior court and the Honorable T. W. Harris, judge thereof, to assume jurisdiction of said proceeding or to show cause, if any there was, for their refusal so to do; and thereupon said proceeding was transferred to this court for hearing and determination.

[1] The main legal contention urged by petitioner relates to the question of the unconstitutionality of that portion of section 14 of the state Medical Practice Act, as amended in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 281), which purports to restrict a licensee whose license has been suspended or revoked, in the exercise of his remedy for a review of the proceedings resulting in such suspension or revocation, to "the county, or the city and county in which such suspension or revocation has been made by the board of medical examiners." Whether or not the order of the superior court sustaining the demurrer to the petition for the writ of review was made with leave to amend does not appear from the record before us; but it is immaterial whether it was or was not, for if it was so made, and petitioner declined to amend, the proceeding necessarily would have terminated the same as if the order were made without leave to amend, in a judgment of dismissal; and therefore, in either event, petitioner was afforded a complete and effective remedy by appeal from such judgment (subdivision 1, § 963, Code Civ. Proc.) to correct any error which may have been committed by the court in sustaining the demurrer. That being so, petitioner is not entitled to invoke a proceeding in mandamus to serve the purpose of an appeal. Montgomery v. Neilon, 41 Cal. App. 184, 182 P. 456; Oliver v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 358, 227 P. 647; Petaluma Municipal Water District v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 183, 228 P. 24.

[2] Moreover, the action of the trial court in ruling upon the demurrer shows that it did not refuse to entertain jurisdiction of the certiorari proceeding, but, on the contrary, proves that it did assume jurisdiction thereof and, after having done so, acted judicially upon the matter before it. Therefore, since it exercised its jurisdictional powers, either correctly or erroneously, the result of such exercise cannot be reviewed in mandamus, but only by way of appeal. Petaluma Municipal Water District v. Superior Court, supra.

Aside from the facts alleged in the petition herein, however, it appears that prior to the application for the writ of review in Alameda county petitioner commenced a similar proceeding against the board of medical examiners in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco; and that there, as here, said medical board demurred to the petition upon general and special grounds. The demurrer was sustained, and upon entry of judgment of dismissal petitioner appealed. The trial court's ruling on demurrer was sustained (Grisso v. Board of Medical Examiners [Cal. App.] 242 P. 912), the court on appeal holding in effect that section 14 of the state Medical Practice Act made provision for the revocation by the board of medical examiners of licenses to practice, set forth the causes for revocation, and established the procedure to be followed in bringing charges to trial and for the determination thereof; that it appeared from the allegations of the petition for the writ of review therein that petitioner was a licensee of said board over whom it had jurisdiction, and that he had been regularly and legally brought before said board for trial; furthermore, that it appeared from said petition that evidence was adduced at said trial supporting the charges preferred against petitioner; and that therefore the court to which the application for the writ of review was made "need go no further," that its powers in certiorari were limited and did not permit interference with the exercise of the judgment of the medical board where it affirmatively appeared that the board had complied with the jurisdictional requirements of the statute, citing Jordan v. Alderson, 48 Cal. App. 547, 192 P. 170.

In the instant proceeding neither the contents of the petition for the writ of review filed in Alameda county, the demurrer thereto, nor the order sustaining the demurrer, were made part of the record; consequently, we are unable to say whether or not the petition filed in Alameda county was any different in its allegations of material facts from the one filed in the city and county of San Francisco, and if it was not, the demurrer in the Alameda county proceeding, like the one in the San Francisco proceeding, was rightly sustained upon the grounds stated by the District Court of Appeal in its judgment of affirmance. Therefore, even assuming that under any possible theory an erroneous ruling on demurrer may be corrected by the courts of appellate jurisdiction through the medium of a mandamus proceeding, and that irrespective of the provisions of section 14 of the state Medical Practice Act petitioner herein had the right to institute his proceeding for a review of the action of the medical board in Alameda county, it is clear that the writ of mandate herein applied for will not lie because there is no record before us upon which the determination can be based that the ruling of the superior court in Alameda county in sustaining the demurrer was erroneous.

For the foregoing reasons it is our opinion that the writ prayed for should be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

PEOPLE v. MUNOS et al. (Cr. 967.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 15, 1927.

1. Criminal law ☞564(7)—Evidence held to show that intent to detain and conceal child was formed in county from which she was taken and venue laid (Pen. Code, § 21).

In prosecution for taking and enticing away a 15 year old girl with intent to detain and conceal her, evidence held sufficiently to show intention to detain and conceal her was formed in county from which she was taken and venue laid, in view of Pen. Code, § 21, providing intention is manifested by circumstances connected with offense, and sound mind and discretion of accused.

2. Criminal law ☞112(1)—As regards venue, crime of enticing child with intent to detain and conceal her was complete at time of taking.

As regards venue, crime of taking and enticing away 15 year old girl with intent to detain and conceal her was complete, when defendants enticed and took her away with such intent from her father, and their subsequent acts were important only as tending to establish such intent.

3. Parent and child ☞18—That girl voluntarily accompanied defendants, charged with taking and enticing her away, is immaterial.

In prosecution for taking and enticing away 15 year old girl with intent to detain and conceal her, the fact that girl accompanied defendants voluntarily is immaterial.

4. Parent and child ☞18—Error in refusing instruction requiring acquittal for taking and enticing girl in case of reasonable doubt of intention to both conceal and detain did not result in miscarriage of justice.

In prosecution for taking and enticing away 15 year old girl with intent to detain and conceal her, error in refusal of instruction to acquit in case of reasonable doubt as to intention to both conceal and detain held not to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, in view of other instructions requiring finding of taking with intent to detain and conceal, and particularly in view of conclusive evidence thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Amador County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Luis Munos and another were convicted for taking and enticing away a 15 year old girl with intent to detain and conceal her from her father having lawful charge of the child, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Raymond T. Coughlin, of Sacramento, and A. L. Pierovich, of Jackson, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants were convicted of the crime of taking and enticing away a girl 15 years of age with intent to detain and conceal the child from her father, who had the lawful charge of the child. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

The girl testified that on August 29, 1926, the defendants took her and a Chinese girl out riding in Navarro's automobile; that on that day Navarro asked her to go with the defendants and the Chinese girl to Los Angeles, and "that they might go to Calexico"; that on the next day the defendants "begged me and coaxed me to go, so I went"; that they left Sutter Creek about 10:30 a. m. and traveled in a roundabout way in order to avoid the officers, who were watching the main roads; that they reached Placerville about 6:30 p. m. of that day, where Munos and the Chinese girl "went to the courthouse to get married, but it was already closed, so she couldn't"; that they then drove to Sacramento and thence to Stockton and from there to an automobile camp near Fresno, arriving at the camp about daylight, August 31; that they there slept in the automobile until about 5 p. m., when they drove to Bakersfield and thence to an automobile camp near San Fernando, arriving there in the nighttime; that they left this camp the following evening and drove all night and all the next day, reaching El Centro about 9 p. m.; that they stayed in a hotel there that night, Navarro and the girl occupying the same bed; that they drove to Calexico the next day, at which place they remained for several days, Navarro and the girl occupying a room together; and that the sheriff of Amador county took them all back to that county about the middle of September. The Chinese girl, who was 17 years of age, told a similar story and testified that she and Munos did not succeed in getting married, but that they slept together on the trip.

Navarro testified that he did not ask the prosecuting witness to go away with him; that it was his intention merely to take Munos and the Chinese girl "to Placerville to get married, and coming back here"; that, while he was in El Centro and Calexico with the girls and Munos, he did not, "at any time during the course of that trip, sleep with" the prosecuting witness. Munos gave similar testimony.

[1-3] Appellants contend that the evidence does not show that they formed the intent to detain and conceal the prosecuting witness while they were in Amador county. The contention is wholly without merit. "The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused." Pen. Code, § 21. The request that the girl accompany the defendants to Los Angeles and Calexico, made the day before the departure, is strong evidence that the intent to commit the crime was formed before leaving Amador county. Besides, the acts and conduct of the defendants subsequent to their departure from that county are amply sufficient to show what their intention was in the beginning. The crime was complete the moment the defendants enticed and took the child away with intent to detain and conceal her from her father, and their subsequent acts are important only as tending to establish such intent. It is wholly immaterial whether the defendants intended the place of detention and concealment to be in Amador county or elsewhere. The fact that the girl accompanied the defendants voluntarily is immaterial. People v. Torres, 48 Cal. App. 606, 192 P. 175.

[4] The court refused to give certain instructions requested by the defendants to the effect that, if the jurors entertained a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendants intended "to both conceal and detain" the child, they must return a verdict of not guilty. Under the decision in People v. Black, 147 Cal. 426, 81 P. 1099, the instruction should have been given. The court instructed the jury that the defendants were charged with taking and enticing away the child "with intent to detain and conceal such child" from her father; that "child stealing is defined as follows: Every person who maliciously, forcibly, or fraudulently takes or entices away any minor child with intent to detain and conceal such child from its parent, guardian, or other person having the lawful charge of such child, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison"; that "if, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence in the case, you are satisfied beyond and to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt that at the time and place mentioned in the information the defendants did commit the crime of child stealing, then your verdict should be guilty as charged in the information; but if, after such due and careful consideration of all the evidence in the case, you are not satisfied in every particular, you cannot convict them of the charge alleged in the information." By these instructions the jurors were told that to justify a verdict of guilty they must find that the defendants took the child with intent "to detain and conceal" her. While it may be said that the court should have given the proposed instructions in the interest of certainty, it is highly improbable that any juror was misled by the omission to give them. In any view of the case the evidence of the defendants' guilt is so conclusive that it cannot be said that the refusal to give the instructions has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The defendants did "detain and conceal" the child and it would require great credulity to believe that they did not intend to do so from the beginning.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ADAMS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.★
(Civ. 4647.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 16, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 30(4)—Railroad conductor's act in associating himself with illicit bar and permitting use of his houseboat for prostitution held to warrant dismissal.

Alleged action of railroad conductor in associating himself with illicit bar, where liquor was sold in violation of company's rules, and in permitting houseboat which he owned to be conducted for purpose of prostitution, held such as to warrant railroad in dismissing him for conduct unbecoming conductor.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 43—Railroad employee held not entitled to have question of dismissal for infraction of rules submitted to jury.

Railroad employee is not entitled to have jury decide whether of not infraction of rules established by railroad warranted dismissal, where reason was from standpoint of employer, acting in good faith, wholly true.

3. Master and servant $\S$ 32—Conductor could not recover against railroad for maintaining record showing discharge for unbecoming conduct, if record was true.

If former railroad conductor was in fact guilty of conduct unbecoming a conductor he could not recover against railroad for maintaining record showing such circumstance as reason for his discharge.

4. Master and servant $\S$ 32—Railroad employee admitting ground for dismissal was not entitled to investigation.

In action by former railroad employee for damages resulting from record of discharge, open and fair investigation of complaint against employee, required by rule of railroad company, was not necessary under Civ. Code, § 3532, where employee admitted commission of acts complained of.

5. Judgment $\S$ 631—Satisfaction of judgment for former conductor in libel suit against person complaining to railroad held bar to recovery against railroad for record showing alleged false reason for discharge.

In action by former railroad employee against railroad for damages for railroad's record of discharge showing discharge was for conduct unbecoming conductor, satisfaction of judgment in libel suit brought by conductor against person making complaint of his conduct to railroad held bar, where prior action adjudicated right of conductor to all damages sustained by reason of inability to secure employment as conductor arising out of statement made on his discharge.

6. Judgment $\S$ 584—Bar from satisfaction of judgment arises from fact of compensation, not from particular form of action.

Bar arising from satisfaction of judgment proceeds not from any particular form in which action is brought, but arises from fact that party complaining has been compensated for his injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by James M. Adams against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

E. S. Bell, of Oakland, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of respondent upon the verdict of the jury awarding respondent $5,000 damages in an action in tort growing out of the alleged maintenance by appellants of a record showing an alleged false reason for the discharge of respondent from his position as conductor on a train of appellant corporation. The case is one of first impression in this state; other jurisdictions have adjudicated actions of a somewhat similar although not identical nature.

The facts about which there is no controversy are that respondent, James M. Adams, entered the employ of appellant Southern Pacific Company in 1891, as a brakeman, and through promotion became a conductor, continuing to work without interruption in those capacities until December 31, 1910, at which time he was discharged. It is the custom among railroads throughout the country to issue on demand of an employee leaving the service a statement showing the reason therefor. This statement is variously referred to in the record as a clearance, clearance card, service card, and service letter. The clearance card merely shows the date of entering the service of the employer, the capacities in which service was rendered, the date of leaving the employment, and the reason for the severance of relations between the employer and employee. A typical clearance is such as was used in this case, the part of the clearance objected to and forming the basis of the action reading, "Dismissed for conduct unbecoming a conductor." It is likewise a custom among the railroads in employing men with past railroad experience to require the presentation of a "clearance" from the last employer. For some time prior to December 31, 1910, the respondent had been passenger conductor on the branch line running generally between Vallejo and Suisun. On that date he was relieved from duty, and in July of the following year at his own request was furnished with a clearance card which gave the reason of his discharge, "Dismissed for conduct unbecoming a conductor."

The complaint alleges that this entry in the clearance card regarding the reason for the dismissal is false and that a clearance of this character has prevented respondent from gaining railroad employment since the date of his dismissal and will continue to act as a bar so long as the record is maintained by the appellant railroad.

It appears from the record that on December 1, 1910, one W. H. Cameron, of Napa, wrote to Charles S. Fee, then general passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Company, complaining of the conduct of respondent in the course of his work on November 27, 1910. It was charged by Cameron that on that day respondent Adams was disorderly and intoxicated while on duty. Suit was instituted by Adams against Cameron, and Adams recovered judgment against Cameron for $5,000 as damages for libel, the damage suffered being that he lost his position with the Southern Pacific Company and was permanently deprived from obtaining railroad employment. This judgment was settled in full by the Southern Pacific Company, the case being Adams v. Cameron, 27 Cal. App. 625, 150 P. 1005, 151 P. 286.

The issue most stressed at the trial was the truth or falsity of the charge contained in the letter from Cameron to the general agent of the company that appellant was on November 27, 1910, disorderly and intoxicated while on duty.

Appellants urge as ground for reversal: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment in the following particulars: First, the evidence wholly fails to show that the entry on the records of the Southern Pacific or the clearance card itself prevented Adams from obtaining other railroad employment; second, that the entry on the records and on the clearance card is true and justifiable; third, that the judgment is in excess of any damages the plaintiff could possibly have sustained. (2) That the clearance card and record were privileged communications, made in good faith and not actionable. (3) That the satisfaction of judgment in the case of Adams v. Cameron included all damages which the plaintiff seeks in this action and is a bar to recovery. (4) The action is barred by the statute of limitations. (5) Errors of law consisting of numerous errors of court in rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. (6) Errors of the court in its instructions to the jury.

The evidence is without dispute—in fact, it was admitted by respondent when testifying as a witness that he operated two business enterprises outside of his employment, one of which at least was in violation of the company rules, one a stage line at Cement and the other a loan office in Oakland, where he loaned money to railroad employees at 5 per cent. interest per month; that he owned an ark or houseboat which was conducted as a house of prostitution and which he leased to a certain individual, and while he claims he did not know at the time of leasing the purpose for which it was to be used, he learned not long after that it was used for the purpose of prostitution; that he was treasurer and one of the organizers of an improvement club at Vallejo, which was nothing more than an illicit bar conducted for the sale of liquor contrary to law and which was closed by the chief of police of Vallejo for violation of the liquor laws, and that he frequented this club where liquor was sold in violation of the rules of the company. It is also a fact that the officers of appellant corporation knew of the ownership by respondent of the houseboat, of his connection with the Vallejo club and his frequenting this club where liquor was sold in violation of the company rules at the time the clearance card was issued.

[1] The railroad is not bound to retain in its service as a conductor a man who brought disrepute upon himself or his employer by association with an illicit bar and who visited such bar where liquor was sold in violation of its rules; it is not bound to retain an employee who owned and let an ark or houseboat which he had knowledge was being used for the purpose of prostitution nor a man who engaged in foreign business operations in violation of its rules.

The reason assigned for discharging respondent from his position is "dismissed for conduct unbecoming a conductor." If conducting an illicit bar which the chief of police found necessary to close and letting an ark or houseboat which he had knowledge was being conducted as a house of prostitution and receiving as rent money earned from such prostitution is not conduct unbecoming a conductor, it would be difficult to know what constitutes such unbecoming conduct. It would seem that such conduct is unbecoming in any self-respecting man of any walk of life or engaged in any occupation. If the fact be true that the party discharged had conducted himself in a manner unbecoming the position he occupied, he is no worse off if his discharge clearance is founded upon an offense of which he is not guilty, if in fact he be guilty of an offense equally flagrant known to his employer at the time and coming under the same general designation. Even if it be held that respondent was not guilty of the charge of disorderly conduct and being intoxicated while on duty, there is no question but that he was guilty of the other offenses mentioned, for he himself in this action so testified, and it further appears that the other offenses were known to appellants at the time of his discharge.

[2] The question arose as to who is to be the judge of what constitutes ground for dismissal—what constitutes conduct unbecoming a conductor. The court permitted the jury to decide this question. The court in instructing the jury with reference to respondent Adams' connection with the social and improvement club during his employment with the company charged, "and if you further believe that his connection with said club constituted conduct unbecoming a conductor, then your verdict must be for the defendants." And the court also in instructing the jury with reference to respondent Adams' ownership of the houseboat, which was used for the purpose of prostitution, concluded such instruction, "and if you further believe that such ownership of such houseboat, coupled with a knowledge by the plaintiff as to the purpose for which said boat was being used, constituted conduct unbecoming a conductor, then your verdict must be for the defendants." In other words, the jury was permitted to determine what acts in its judgment would constitute conduct unbecoming a conductor.

An employee is not entitled to have a jury decide whether or not his infraction of the rules established by his employer warrants dismissal. Where the reason was, from the standpoint of the railway company acting in good faith, wholly true, a judgment against such company should not stand. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Hixon, 104 Tex. 267, 137 S. W. 343; St. Louis S. F. Ry. Co. v. Inman (Tex. Civ. App.) 137 S. W. 1153; St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Griffin, 106 Tex. 477, 171 S. W. 703, L. R. A. 1917B, 1108.

[3] In the instant case the undisputed testimony shows that respondent Adams was guilty of offenses which the company was amply justified in determining were such as would justify his discharge because of "conduct unbecoming a conductor," and that the true ground for his discharge operating upon the minds of the officials who discharged him was in fact that assigned on the clearance card. This being the case, a jury was not entitled to substitute its opinion in the place of the opinion of the employer. If respondent Adams was guilty of conduct unbecoming a conductor and his discharge was justified, it naturally follows that a recovery may not be had.

[4] Respondent urges that a reversal of the judgment will render the rule of the railroad company, under which it cannot discharge an employee except upon an open and fair investigation, a nullity. Answering this contention it is sufficient to say that the law does not require idle acts. Civ. Code, § 3532. As respondent admitted to the officers of the company before his discharge that he had committed the acts enumerated, an open investigation was not required, as it would be idle to investigate charges, the truth of which is admitted by the person charged.

[5] Appellants contend that the satisfaction of judgment in the case of Adams v. Cameron includes all damages which Adams as plaintiff seeks in this action, and is a bar to recovery here. An examination of the complaint in Adams v. Cameron, which was introduced in evidence in this case, shows that he attributes his discharge to the Cameron letter dated December 1, 1910. Paragraph VI of the complaint details the damage alleged to have been sustained. Included in this damage is the loss of wages and his permanent inability to again obtain employment as a railroad conductor, setting forth that he has no trade or occupation other than railroad brakeman and conductor and that by reason of his discharge on the ground of conduct unbecoming a conductor it will be impossible for him to secure employment with said railroad company or with any other railroad company; that the various railroads which operate in California have and maintain a system of exchange references through which each railroad company is apprised of the reason or cause of an employee's discharge; that no other railroad company will employ a man discharged for conduct unbecoming a conductor and that no railroad company will employ a new man either as a brakeman or conductor who has passed the age of 45 years; that he was then 47 years of age, and that this rule would therefore act as a permanent bar to new employment, "and that by reason of the premises and the said acts and words of defendant, this plaintiff has been permanently deprived of the income and earnings which would otherwise accrue to him from his employment as a railroad conductor in said state of California, to his damage," etc.

Paragraph XX of the complaint here sets forth that by reason of the issuance of the alleged false clearance, "plaintiff at all times since July 18, 1915, has been and will be, and will continue to be unable to obtain employment with the defendant corporation, or with any other railroad company operating its lines in the state of California, * * * and now is deprived thereby of the right and opportunity to pursue and follow his said calling."

In the Cameron Case respondent sought and received damages because of his inability to obtain work as a conductor in California by reason of the alleged false clearance, and here he seeks damages against appellants for the identical injury for which he was compensated in the former action. The judgment in the Cameron Case was satisfied. With the satisfaction of this judgment Adams was fully compensated for all damages sustained by him by reason of his inability to secure employment as a conductor arising out of the statement in his clearance. It is elementary that there can be but one satisfaction for any given wrong. If the Cameron letter was false and the railroad acted upon this false letter in such a manner as to do injury to Adams, there was a choice open to him to sue one or all of the persons causing such injury. Adams elected to sue Cameron and obtained a judgment, which judgment was paid. In the present action he seeks to recover for a portion of the same injury from appellants. He is not entitled to be paid twice; there can be but one satisfaction.

Respondent urges that the action against Cameron was an action for libel committed by him in writing and publishing the letter known in this case as the "Cameron letter"; that appellants were not parties to that action and were not bound by it in any way and that therefore this action is not barred by the satisfaction of judgment in the Cameron case, and cites us to a number of authorities, both in this state and from other jurisdictions. We agree with the rule announced in these cases, but the facts are not similar to those presented here. The California cases cited are De La Guerra v. Newhall, 55 Cal. 21; Owens v. McNally, 124 Cal. 29, 56 P. 615, and Curtin v. Salmon River Co., 141 Cal. 308, 74 P. 851, 99 Am. St. Rep. 75. In the De La Guerra Case the court held that a judgment for defendants in an action for the trespassing of defendants' cattle on the plaintiff's land was not a bar to a subsequent action for a similar trespass occurring prior to those alleged in the former action. In the Owens Case the court held that a former adjudication against the enforcement of a contract by the uncle to will property to the niece is not a bar to the enforcement of an executed gift of land made to her by her uncle in his lifetime, and in the Curtin Case the court held that a judgment in a former suit to foreclose an invalid mortgage, which failed because the security was held to be void, is not a bar to a subsequent action on the note, in which the note is shown to have been ratified by the conduct of the corporation. In these cases the subsequent actions were not predicated on the same acts complained of in the former actions and did not demand damages for the identical injury as here, and the damage demanded had not been adjudicated and fully satisfied.

[6] The authorities in this state and in other jurisdictions, as far as they have been brought to our attention, seem to be uniform to the effect that the bar arises not from any particular form in which the action is brought, but arises from the fact that the party complainant has been compensated for his injury.

The first decision in this state upon this question is Tompkins v. Clay Street R. Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 P. 1165, in which the court uses this language:

"Every party contributing to the injuries of plaintiff was liable to the full extent of the damages by her sustained. Her injuries gave her but a single cause of action. If she had brought a separate action against the Sutter street company, and recovered a judgment therein, and such judgment had been satisfied, she could not subsequently have maintained another action for the same injuries against the Clay street company, inasmuch as the conclusive presumption would be that she had already received full compensation for all damages by her sustained. Damages resulting from the same wrongful transaction are ordinarily inseparable; she could not recover part from one and part from the other defendant. * * * It is to be observed, when the bar accrues in favor of some of the wrongdoers, by reason of what has been received from or done in respect to one or more of the others, that the bar arises not from any particular form that the proceeding assumes, but from the fact that the injured party has actually received satisfaction, or what in law is deemed the equivalent." (Italics ours.)

In Butler v. Ashworth, 110 Cal. 614, 43 P. 4, 386, the defense was set up that a judgment obtained prior to the action had been entered against the city and county of San Francisco. The first action against the city alleged damage from the overflow of sewage caused by a choked condition of the sewer. The second action was against Ashworth as superintendent of streets for damage due to the breaking of the sewer. In that case the court says:

"But the plaintiff in support of her appeal claims that this wholesome rule has no application to this case, for the reason, as she contends, that the cause of action stated in her suit against the city and that stated against these defendants are not the same, and that the defendants in the two actions are in no sense joint tort-feasors. That the act relied upon as producing the injury in the action against the city was the delay in making repairs to the sewer, * * * while these defendants are charged with an act of commission, the making of repairs in such a negligent manner as to directly conduce to the injury complained of. * * * It is nevertheless perfectly apparent that plaintiff's contention is more specious than sound, and that there exists in fact no real difference between the causes of action stated in the two actions. Formal differences there may be, but in matters of substance there are none. In both actions the inducing, proximate cause of the damage and injury alleged is the invasion of her premises by the overflowing sewage, caused by the broken and choked condition of the sewer. That is the essential fact alleged alike in both counts of her action against the city, and in the complaint in this case. That is the fact constituting the gist of the action in both cases, and, as we have seen, it was one and the same overflow—in other words, the same fact which produced the alleged damage in both cases. * * * This was the fault of the city and the defendants, her officers, alike. Whether it was caused by their joint or several acts is immaterial. It would be subordinating substance to mere form to say that these two actions do not under the circumstances rest upon one and the same cause. This being so, and it appearing that plaintiff had been once compensated for the injury suffered, the court below was right in denying her a second award of damages for the same act."

In Union Associated Press Co. v. Press Publishing Co., 24 Misc. Rep. 610, 54 N. Y. S. 183, in an action for libel founded upon the publication by defendant in its newspaper of an article charging plaintiffs with the execution of a fraudulent scheme whereby the news was intercepted during its transmission by means of wire-tapping, the court uses this language:

"Here the allegations of the defense disclose the fact that the plaintiff actually recovered damages in an action brought against the party then charged with being responsible for the publication, in this defendant's newspaper, of the libel in suit. Damages were recovered not merely for the act of the Associated Press in communicating the matter to this defendant, independently of the publication, but for the injury done by the publication itself, which was alleged to have been instigated by the Associated Press. This being the situation, there appears to be no escape from the conclusion that the plaintiffs, when prosecuting their actions against the latter corporation, elected to proceed, for the particular libel, against the party who was responsible, jointly with the present defendant, for the perpetration of the wrong, and, accordingly, that the satisfaction of the judgment then recovered operated to release this defendant, as a joint tort-feasor, from further liability."

It would serve no useful purpose to discuss the remaining assignments of error, as it follows from what has been said that the judgment must be reversed, and since the justification of the discharge upon facts herein enumerated, concerning which there is no dispute, is a question of law, and further as the satisfaction of judgment in the action of James M. Adams v. W. H. Cameron is a bar to the action, the cause is remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendants.

PEOPLE v. MELSON. (Cr. 974.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 15, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 15, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 11, 1927.

1. Criminal law §511(6)—Circumstantial evidence as to possession and sale of property stolen in prosecution for larceny tended to connect defendant with larceny and was sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for larceny of copper wire, evidence of finding of part of wire in vicinity of defendant's residence, similarity of auto and shoe tracks found at scene of larceny with defendant's automobile tires and shoes, and sale by defendant of wire similar to wire stolen, tended to connect defendant with larceny, and was sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice under Pen. Code, § 1111.

2. Criminal law §511(2)—Corroborating testimony held required only to connect defendant with larceny, not to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for larceny, corroborating testimony need not have been sufficient to sustain conviction, but need only have been sufficient to connect defendant with commission of crime charged.

3. Larceny §64(1)—Unexplained possession of stolen property shortly after larceny tends to connect possessor with larceny.

Unexplained possession of stolen property shortly after larceny is a circumstance tending to connect party in whose possession it is found with larceny.

4. Larceny §64(6)—Defendant's explanation of possession of stolen property that it was left by unknown man named "John" held properly considered as no explanation.

In prosecution for larceny of copper wire, defendant's statement that wire was left by an unknown man named "John" held properly considered by jury as no explanation of possession of stolen property; improbable explanation being no explanation at all.

5. Criminal law §829(1)—Requested instructions, substance of which was given in different form, held properly refused.

Requested instruction on presumption of innocence and burden of proof held properly refused, where court gave substance of requested instructions in different form.

6. Larceny §40(2)—Failure to prove that person described in indictment owned concern from which property was stolen held not prejudicial to defendant, where offense was otherwise alleged and proved with sufficient certainty (Pen. Code, § 956).

In prosecution for larceny of copper wire, allegations and proof conclusively showing that property did not belong to defendant, that it was stolen and taken from possession of certain concern, was sufficient to enable defendant to effectively plead prosecution in bar of any other action seeking conviction, and omission to prove that witness named in indictment owned concern from which property was taken did not affect substantial rights of defendant, in view of Pen. Code, § 956, providing that erroneous allegation of person injured shall not be material if offense is otherwise sufficiently described.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Arthur Melson was convicted of petit larceny after two prior convictions of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George Stahlman, Jr., of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of petit larceny, after having suffered two prior convictions for grand larceny. The information, among other things, alleges that on or about the 22d day of November, 1926, in the county of San Joaquin, the defendant did "willfully and unlawfully steal, take and carry away a quantity of copper wire of the value of $195 in gold coin of the government of the United States, and the said property was then and there the personal property of William H. Ford, doing business under the firm name and style of River Rock & Gravel Company."

Upon this appeal, it is urged that the conviction of the defendant was had upon the testimony of an accomplice insufficiently corroborated; that there was no sufficient proof of ownership of the property alleged to have been stolen; that the court erred in its instructions to the jury; and that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury.

The record shows that some time previous to the commission of the alleged offense, the defendant was living with his wife in a house situated on a small tract of land a short distance from the town of Tracy, in the county of San Joaquin, and that for a short period of time preceding the alleged offense one Glenn Duvalle, a boy of about the age of 19 years and a brother of the defendant's wife, had been stopping at the defendant's home; that on the 22d day of November, 1926, the defendant, accompanied by the said Glenn Duvalle, drove a Ford automobile from his place of residence to the premises used and occupied by the River Rock & Gravel Company, which premises were situate about 7 miles southwest of Tracy, and likewise in said county of San Joaquin, and took from the said premises about 60 feet of copper wire belonging to said company, described as 3 conductor electric cable. This cable was protected by what is called a steel armor. The cable and the armor were brought to the place of the defendant's residence the same night, the next morning the steel armor was removed from the electric cable and thrown over and found in an adjoining field near where the defendant resided. The insulation was then burned from the cable wire. After the insulation was burned off the defendant, accompanied by Duvalle, brought the cable wire in a sack to a junk dealer in Stockton, and there sold the same, together with sundry other articles of junk. The witness Duvalle testified that the sack contained the same wire that had been stolen the previous evening, the change being in taking off the armor and burning the insulation.

Upon the trial of the case a witness, E. E. Williams, who testified that he was the superintendent of the River Rock & Gravel Company, described the wire in question and produced in court a short piece of wire from which the 60 feet of cable had been taken. In describing the wire, this witness spoke of it as 7 strand of 19 wires each. The witness Horowitz, connected with the junk company to which the copper wire was sold, described the wire as three strand wire. Upon this difference in the description of the wire it is strongly urged that the testimony does not show the sale and purchase of the stolen cable. The testimony, however, goes further than this. Shortly after missing the cable herein referred to, a piece of wire taken from the same strand and the one which was exhibited in court, was taken by an officer to the junk dealer and there compared with the stolen cable, and the witness, Horowitz, above referred to, testified that the wire purchased from him was the same kind of cable exhibited to him as a part of the cable from which the 60 feet of wire were alleged to have been stolen. The stolen wire was not exhibited in court, having been disposed of by the junk dealer prior to the trial. The testimony shows that the junk dealer paid the defendant the sum of $9.70, no part of which was received by the witness Duvalle. There is also testimony in the record of an examination of the footprints where the Ford car was stopped by the defendant near the premises of the River Rock & Gravel Company, from which the copper wire was taken; that these footprints were made by shoes similar to shoes seen upon the defendant's feet shortly after the said 22d day of November, 1926. An examination was also made of the tracks of the automobile. It appears that the tracks where the automobile turned showed that the front tires were considerably worn. An examination of the Ford automobile owned by the defendant exhibited such a condition of the front tires thereon.

The testimony also shows that the armor herein referred to, used to protect the cable, was found in an adjoining field near the premises occupied by the defendant. The testimony of the defendant is to the effect that the armor was seen by him lying in the field referred to as early as August in 1926, and that he also saw wire lying in the field near the same place in August; that he took wire to Davidson's junk shop and sold it; that he obtained possession of the wire sold to Davidson in the following manner:

"Q. This wire you sold to Davidson's junk-shop, where did you get it? A. I got some of it over at the city dump, and there was Ed. Vergin and a fellow called John had the name of—well, I can't remember the name, but anyhow they was junking together, and they had some kind of a split-up, and when John went to take a load of junk he had down to Stockton here to somebody, I don't know where he sold it; there was a sack in this car that belonged to them, and this John said he was going to throw that stuff out of the car belonging to Ed. Vergin, so he threw it by the side of the fence, and it lay there for quite awhile. * * *

"Q. And the other wire, where did it come from? A. The other wire was wire John threw out of his car, said it belonged to Ed. Vergin. Afterwards, I heard this other fellow wouldn't come back any more; I says, 'I think I will sell that stuff he throwed out there;' take all this I could take to this junk company in Stockton; my wife went out there and helped me put it in the car; she was there when I put it in the car, also Glenn Duvalle; then we came to Stockton."

The defendant also testified that on the evening of the 22d of November he loaned his Ford automobile to the witness Duvalle; that the witness Duvalle left his house saying that he was going to town; that he came home about half past 10 that same evening; that the next morning the witness Duvalle told the defendant he had got some copper wire, whereupon the defendant told the witness to get it away from there.

[1] Relying upon section 1111 of the Penal Code it is urged that there is not sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the witness Duvalle, in that there is no testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. A resumé of the testimony which we have given appears to us a complete answer to this contention. While it might not be sufficient to convict, the finding of the armor in the vicinity of the defendant's residence, the similarity of the automobile and shoe tracks found at the scene of the larceny with the shoes worn by the defendant, and the tires with which the defendant's automobile was equipped, the sale of the wire by the defendant, identified as we have shown, as the same kind of wire taken from the premises of the River Rock & Gravel Company, all tend to connect the defendant with the larceny charged. The explanation given by the defendant on the witness stand really enforces the corroborative testimony instead of being a statement of exculpatory facts. The question of the sufficiency of corroborative testimony has so recently been before this court that we need really only refer to the cases. In the case of People v. Viets et al., 250 P. 588, this court in considering the necessity of corroborative testimony, speaking through Mr. Justice Hart, used the following language:

"The corroborating evidence, however, need not, in degree, be such as to establish guilt, 'for, in that event, the testimony of the accomplice would not be needed.' People v. Ames, 39 Cal. 403, 404; People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44. All that is required in such a case is that there be produced some testimony other than that of the accomplice which tends, in some slight degree at least, to implicate the defendant in the commission of the crime for which he is on trial. People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 348, 351, 15 P. 5; People v. Wagner, 36 Cal. App. 41, 171 P. 699."

[2-4] And, in People v. Bargala (Cal. App.) 253 P. 938, the same question was again presented. The Bargala Case is somewhat identical with the one we are now considering. In both cases stolen wire was involved. In the Bargala Case the defendant's claim was that he simply used his auto-truck to go and get the wire for a man by the name of Yarnell; that he hauled the wire to the city of Sacramento, where it was sold for the sum of $92, out of which he was paid the sum of $25. The money was collected by the defendant when the wire was sold to a junk dealer in the city of Sacramento, and, according to the defendant's testimony, $25 retained by him. After the sale of the wire it appears that the two, the defendant and the man Yarnell, went to the city of Stockton and stopped at the same rooming house and remained there a short time. This, together with the testimony of employees of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, from whom the wire cable had been stolen, identifying the wire purchased by the junk dealer from the defendant and his associate Yarnell, was held sufficient to uphold the judgment of conviction. In the case at bar, we are not called upon to hold that the corroborating testimony referred to is sufficient to sustain a conviction. All that is necessary in this case is to find that there is sufficient testimony in the record which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged. We do not need to cite authorities to the effect that unexplained possession of stolen property shortly after the larceny is a circumstance tending to connect the party in whose possession it is found with the larceny. We may also add that an improbable explanation stands on the same footing with no explanation. The jury, we think, had a right to consider that the statement of the defendant that the wire was left by an unknown man named "John" was, in fact, no explanation.

[5] To sustain his contention that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by the defendant, our attention is called to the following instruction asked for by the defendant and refused by the court:

"The legal presumption of innocence is a matter of evidence in his favor to the benefit of which a defendant in a criminal case is always entitled, and unless the jury are entirely satisfied that the defendant's guilt has been proved beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, they must find a verdict of not guilty."

Without questioning the correctness of this proposed instruction, an examination of the record discloses that the real meat of the refused instruction is involved in the charge given to the jury by the court. The court, in its charge, instructed the jury:

"The defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal."

And, also, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that no presumption of the defendant's guilt should be indulged in by the jury from the fact that an information has been returned against him, or from the fact of his arrest, or that he is placed on his trial; on the contrary, every presumption except such as may arise from the evidence in the case, is in favor of the innocence of the defendant and the jury should be governed by that presumption of innocence during their entire deliberations, unless it be overcome by evidence that will fully satisfy the jury of the defendant's guilt, and if the jury are not entirely satisfied from the evidence of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, the jury should acquit the defendant."

From these instructions it appears that the defendant has suffered no prejudice by reason of the court refusing to reiterate in a different form the substance of instructions already given.

The objection that the prosecuting attorney, in his argument to the jury, was guilty of prejudicial misconduct has been examined and is so completely without merit as to require no further mention in this opinion.

The final objection to be considered is that there was no sufficient ownership proven of the property alleged to have been stolen to support the verdict in this case. The information, as we have said, charged the stealing of certain copper wire, the personal property of William H. Ford, doing business under the firm name and style of River Rock & Gravel Company. The record shows that E. E. Williams testified that he was the superintendent of the River Rock & Gravel Company; that on the 22d day of November, 1926, the company missed some of its property, which consisted of an electric cable about 60 feet long. The effect of this is to show that the company owned the property or that it belonged to the company. The authorities are uniform that under the common law this failure in the proof as to the ownership of William H. Ford would be fatal. To cover such technical defects in the testimony as to ownership of stolen property, the variance in the testimony from the allegation as to ownership of stolen property, the Legislature of this state adopted section 956 of the Penal Code, which reads:

"When an offense involves the commission of, or an attempt to commit, a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, is not material."

Following this section and the interpretation placed thereon, we find in 14 Cal. Jur. 101, the text-writer summarizing the law as follows:

"Ownership may or may not be an essential matter of description according to the offense charged and the circumstances of its commission. The general rule is that ownership must be proved as alleged because it identifies the offense. This is the rule at common law. But under section 956 of the Penal Code, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured is not material, if the offense is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify it. This section applies to burglary, larceny, etc. The name of the owner of property affected is not a material part of a crime. It is only required to identify the transaction, so that the defendant, by a proper plea, may protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense. And if the property in question is otherwise sufficiently described, and there is no proof that there is other property answering the description, an averment of ownership is surplusage and need not be proved as alleged. So if a crime is identified with sufficient certainty to protect the defendant against another prosecution, the variance is not fatal where ownership of property in a particular person is alleged, and the proof is that other persons are also interested with the person named, or where ownership in several is alleged, and the evidence shows ownership in but one. * * * Likewise, there is no material variance where it is alleged that the property belongs to John Doe, whose real name is unknown, and the proof shows that it belongs to a woman, or where ownership in a man is alleged, and it is proved that the property belongs to his wife. * * * If, however, the only description of property is by the averment of ownership, the averment is a material part of the offense charged, and must be proved as alleged."

In support of his contention that the ownership in this case, as alleged, is an essential element to be proven, the appellant calls our attention to the case of People v. Webber, 138 Cal. 145, 70 P. 1089. In that case it is held that where the defendant was charged with burglary in entering a railroad car, the ownership must be proved, and when the proof shows ownership by a different railroad company from that alleged, the variance was fatal. The testimony in that case showed the burglarizing of one of the cars of a certain railroad train. The car was named in the information. The charge was that the defendant entered a certain railroad car and train, to wit, a railroad car and train owned by the Southern Pacific Company, with felonious intent, etc. The evidence was to the effect that the defendant entered a car marked "O. S. L.," the property of the Oregon Short Line Railway Company, numbered 14087, and that this company was distinct from the Southern Pacific Company. It was held in that case, citing other authorities to the same effect, that an allegation of entering a car belonging to one company cannot be sustained by proof of entering the car of a different and distinct company. The court also took the occasion to point out that a railroad train is made up of a number of distinct cars and that the identity and ownership of the car entered was an essential ingredient of the offense to be alleged and proved, in order that a conviction on such a charge would be a complete bar to a further prosecution.

In the case of People v. Hughes, 41 Cal. 234, it is said, "An allegation of the ownership of the stolen property is essential in an indictment for larceny, unless the offense is otherwise sufficiently described," and the court also held, "if the variance between an allegation in an indictment and the proof be immaterial, it should be disregarded." The opinion of the court is to the effect that ownership of the property was an essential element in that case, and cites other cases to the effect that where ownership is a part of the necessary description of the property, it must be proven. That case turns upon the view of the court that, as stated, the allegation of ownership was a necessary part of the description of the offense.

The case of People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 497, 29 P. 950, turns upon the question of a variance between the complaint filed in the justice court and the information upon which the defendant was tried and for that reason is not material here.

In the case of People v. Reed, 70 Cal. 529, 11 P. 676, upon an information charging the obtaining of money by false pretenses on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the person defrauded, it was held that evidence showing the execution of a note executed by the person defrauded and another was insufficient, as the proofs established a separate and distinct offense from that charged.

In the case of People v. Davis, 97 Cal. 194, 31 P. 1109, the defendant was convicted of grand larceny upon a charge of taking the property belonging to one John Doe. The person from whom the property was taken did not appear as a witness. The testimony showed that the property was taken from the person of a woman by the appellant, while she was standing in a crowded street car. This was held sufficient to show ownership and to sustain a conviction.

In the case of People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 P. 312, in considering evidence relating to ownership and possession sufficient to sustain a conviction of grand larceny, the court used this language:

"The lawful possession of the money by Hart was the possession of Wells Fargo & Co., and likewise the actual lawful possession of it by the driver of the stage was the possession of the company. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, in larceny or robbery, possession of the stolen property is sufficient evidence of ownership. The criminal law of this state is not favorably disposed in allowing criminals to escape upon technicalities of this character; and, as supporting the principle here declared, we cite People v. Nelson, 56 Cal. 77; People v. Davis, 97 Cal. 194 [31 P. 1109]."

In that case, the judgment was reversed upon other grounds, but the comments of the court here quoted seem to us quite applicable.

In the case of People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 105, 75 P. 676, the Supreme Court of this state had occasion to take up and consider at length practically all of the previous cases having to do with the question which we are now considering, and, also, of the intent and purpose of section 956 of the Penal Code. A number of cases are cited to the effect that the name of the owner of stolen property is not a material part of the offense charged. "It is only required to identify the transaction, so that the defendant, by proper plea, may protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense." And further, quoting with approval from State v. Nelson, 11 Nev. 339: "The only thing essential in either case (larceny or robbery) seems to be an averment which shall show conclusively that the property does not belong to defendant. And courts have shown a disposition to allow any sort of interest in or right to the custody of the property to be sufficient proof of ownership * * * because the protection of innocence can never by any possibility require any strictness of proof on this point." In the Nunley Case the information charged the ownership of a horse stolen as the property of J. Suey Lung. The testimony showed that Lung was what was called a "boss man"; that the horse was one of a number belonging to a company of Chinese called Fook Wah, composed of a number of people. This variance was held to be immaterial.

In the case of People v. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183 P. 865, the information charged the defendant with the larceny of 252 sacks of potatoes, the personal property of three Japanese. The appellant claimed that there was no evidence that the three Japanese owned the potatoes. N. Namekawa, one of the three Japanese named in the information as the owner of the potatoes, testified that he and two others were partners; that he was engaged in farming on a ranch near Anaheim; that his two partners were farming with him; that they were raising sweet potatoes; that he carried on all the negotiations for the sale of the potatoes, and spoke of them as "my potatoes."

The court, in considering the question of variance, stated:

"Moreover, the variance * * * was not fatal. It would have been fatal at common law; but in this state it is provided by statute—section 956 of the Penal Code—that 'when an offense involves the commission of * * * a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured * * * is not material.' In larceny the name of the owner of the stolen property is not a material part of the offense charged. It is only required to identify the transaction, so that the defendant, by proper plea, may protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense. The essential thing is an averment which shall show conclusively that the property does not belong to the defendant."

In the case at bar there is no question but that both the allegations and the proof show conclusively that the property did not belong to the defendant; that certain property was stolen; that it was taken from the possession of a certain concern alleged to be owned by one William H. Ford.

[6] The testimony shows that it was taken from the possession of the concern doing business under the name of River Rock & Gravel Company, the name under which it is alleged William H. Ford was doing business. There appears to be no question as to the identity of the place from which the property was stolen, the place where the River Rock & Gravel Company was doing business. The testimony of the witness Williams is to the effect that at the time of the larceny he was the superintendent of the company, that as such superintendent he missed cable wire alleged to have been stolen by the defendant, taken from the premises of the River Rock & Gravel Company, the location of the premises being stated in the testimony. The testimony of the witness Duvalle, who accompanied the defendant in the larcenous expedition, definitely locates the place of the theft and the articles taken. The only variance or failure in the testimony is the fact that no witness testified William H. Ford owns the River Rock & Gravel Company and does business in that name. It is evident that this bit of testimony would add nothing to nor take from the defendant's guilt. It is merely descriptive of the ownership of the property and does not affect a single substantial right of the defendant, if there is sufficient in the case to constitute a bar against another prosecution for the same offense. Taking the allegations of the complaint and the testimony of Williams, the superintendent of the River Rock & Gravel Company, it is evident that the record shows sufficient to enable the defendant to effectively plead this prosecution in bar of any other action seeking his conviction.

Under this state of facts, the language of the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Nelson, 56 Cal. 82, in considering a case where sufficient proof was not made of ownership, said:

"We are at a loss to discover in what manner the rights of the defendants in this case could have been affected by the alleged error in the charge of the court. The evidence was clear and convincing, and left no doubt upon the question of the defendants' guilt of the crime of grand larceny. But were the instructions of the court obnoxious to the objection presented by the learned counsel for the appellants? It is said that they 'misled the jury, and wholly ignored the question of the ownership of the property taken. The money might have belonged to the defendants.' There was no question on the trial as to the ownership of the money. It was not pretended that it belonged to the defendants, or to any other person than Ah Chung. The money was in the possession of Ah Chung, and was taken from his person by the defendants. Therefore, it was presumptively his property, and that was sufficient proof of ownership."

The testimony in this case shows conclusively that the property in question was stolen from premises operated under the name of River Rock & Gravel Company; the premises operated under said name were also definitely located. There is no pretense in the testimony of their being other than the one place where such operations were being carried on.

In view of these facts and in view of section 956, Penal Code, we do not very well see how the defendant has been prejudiced by the omission of testimony which could have gone only to a possible further description of the property and not added any element affecting the defendant's guilt. We may add, however, that these technical omissions should be more scrupulously guarded against by prosecuting officers.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PRIOR et al. v. ANDREWS et al. ★
(Civ. 5846.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 15, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 14, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 11, 1927.

1. Trusts $\S$ 43(3)—Evidence held to establish that devise to daughter was in trust for son.

Evidence held to show that devise of double portion of testator's property to particular daughter was on at least an implied promise that she would take and hold one-half of the devised property in trust for the use of a particular brother.

2. Trusts $\S$ 35(3)—Equity will enforce trust on devisee or legatee procuring legacy on promise to hold property for particular use.

A court of equity must impose and enforce a trust on a devisee or legatee who has procured a legacy to be given on a promise, express or implied, that the property devised would be taken and held for some particular purpose or use.

3. Trusts $\S$ 373—It is province of trial court to determine whether evidence is sufficiently clear, satisfactory, and convincing to establish secret trusts.

While evidence in actions to enforce secret trusts should be clear, satisfactory, and convincing, the duty of determining whether it sat-issues such requirements is the province of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Action in partition by James K. Prior, Jr., and others against Matilda Andrews and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, first named defendant and one of the others appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Durbrow and Corbet & Selby, all of San Francisco, and Eugene S. Selvage, of Eureka, for appellants.

Vogelsang & Brown and Bert Schlesinger, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. This action was commenced by the filing of a complaint in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco on May 22, 1924, the action being numbered in that court 146986, the relief sought being a partition of seventeen parcels of land situated in the counties of San Mateo, Santa Clara, Alameda, and the city and county of San Francisco, Cal. Plaintiffs James K. Prior, Jr., Toney Prior, and Josephine Metzner and defendants Matilda Andrews and Leland S. Prior are surviving children of James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior; defendants Pearl Gladys Barnett and Fred E. Delger are surviving children of one Margaret Delger, a deceased daughter of James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior; and defendant Lester F. Prior is a surviving son of a deceased son of James K. Prior, Sr., and Mary Prior.

James K. Prior, Sr., former record owner of these properties, died testate on March 22, 1905. By his will, executed February 19, 1903, he devised one-half of the community property of which he died possessed to his wife Mary Prior, bequeathed $5,000 to Mary Prior in trust for Lester Francis Prior, a grandson; bequeathed $200 and his watch and chain to his son Toney Prior, and devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate, consisting of one-half of the community property, and $200,000, which he declared to be his separate property, to his other children in the following proportions: One-sixth to James K. Prior, Jr., one-sixth to Leland S. Prior, one-sixth to Josephine Metzner, one-sixth to Margaret E. Delger, and two-sixths to Matilda Andrews. This will was probated, and the estate was finally distributed on March 30, 1906. By the decree of distribution there was distributed to his wife, Mary Prior, the homestead (which is parcel 1 of the properties described in the complaint herein), certain specified personal property, and one-half of the $200,000 claimed to be his separate estate. The devisees and legatees agreed out of court to the distribution to be made, and it is recited in the decree:

"Since said will was admitted to probate Matilda Andrews, Josephine Metzner, Margaret Delger, James K. Prior, Jr., and Leland S. Prior have consented and agreed with Mary Prior and Lester Francis Prior that the net residue should be distributed on the following basis: One-half thereof to Mary Prior; one-fourteenth each to James K. Prior, Jr., Josephine Metzner, Margaret Delger, Leland S. Prior; two-fourteenths to Matilda Andrews; one-fourteenth to Mary Prior as trustee for the benefit of Lester Francis Prior."

There was distributed to Toney Prior $200 and a gold watch and chain. Mary Prior died testate on October 14, 1922, leaving as part of her estate all of parcel No. 1 of the lands described in the complaint, and an undivided one-half interest in each and all of the other sixteen parcels of land. Her will was admitted to probate on November 20, 1922, and letters testamentary thereon were issued to James K. Prior, Jr., and Toney Prior, who were such executors when this action was begun.

On May 22, 1924, a decree of partial distribution was made in the estate of Mary Prior, distributing all her interest in the seventeen parcels of land as follows: One-seventh of parcel 1 and one-fourteenth of parcels 2 to 17, inclusive, to James K. Prior, Jr., a similar proportion to Toney Prior, Josephine Metzner, Matilda Andrews, Leland S. Prior, and Lester F. Prior, a one twenty-first of parcel 1, and one forty-second of parcels 2 to 17, inclusive, to Pearl Gladys Barnett, and a similar proportion to Fred E. Delger and to N. L. Barnard, as executrix of the will of Edward F. Delger, who was the father of Pearl Gladys Barnett and Fred E. Delger, they being the devisees of their father of his interest in these properties.

In the complaint it is alleged that the plaintiff Toney Prior has an estate of inheritance to the extent of an undivided one-seventh part in all of the properties, and that the defendant Matilda Andrews holds upon trust for his sole benefit the legal title to an undivided one-fourteenth part of parcels 2 to 17 of the properties, that is to say, one-half of the one-seventh interest of said Toney Prior in and to said parcels 2 to 17, inclusive; that the legal title to such undivided one-fourteenth part in these parcels of land came to her, was accepted by her, and stands in her name as a portion of a direct devise to her under the last will of James K. Prior, Sr., deceased, who was the father of said Toney Prior and Matilda Andrews, in trust for said Toney Prior, under an understanding and agreement with her father had before his death that she would hold the legal title to said properties in trust for her brother said Toney Prior; and that on the demand of said Toney Prior she would convey to him the legal title of the properties, so devised to her in trust. The complaint alleges the distribution of this one-fourteenth interest claimed to be held in trust to Matilda Andrews made in the matter of the estate of James K. Prior, Sr., on August 3, 1906, and that Matilda Andrews has never parted with such legal title. It is also alleged that Toney Prior, during the month of April, 1924, demanded from Matilda Andrews a transfer of the legal title to this one-fourteenth interest in parcels 2 to 17 of the properties involved to him, and that she refused to make such transfer. The demand for a transfer of the title and the failure to make the same are not denied. The defendant Matilda Andrews denied that she holds any of said properties in trust for the plaintiff Toney Prior, and asks that she be adjudged the owner in fee of an undivided three-fourteenths interest in the properties involved. She also asks that the action be dismissed, alleging as a ground for dismissal a claim that the complaint in this action was filed before the decree of partial distribution in the estate of Mary Prior, deceased, was signed by the court and filed with the clerk thereof or entered in the minutes of said court.

By its findings the trial court found in favor of the plaintiffs on all the material allegations of the complaint, and that this action was commenced and the complaint therein filed with the clerk after the decree of partial distribution in the estate of Mary Prior, deceased, was signed by the court, and after said decree was filed with the clerk of said court. The trial court also found that the partial decree of distribution in the Mary Prior estate was, on June 13, 1924, entered at length in the minute book of said court; that James K. Prior, Jr., and Toney Prior, in their representative capacities as executors of the last will of Mary Prior, were not, when the action was commenced, nor when the complaint was filed, in possession of any of the lands as such executors; that there are no liens or incumbrances on said lands of record or at all, and that no person or persons other than the plaintiffs and defendants in the action are interested in the properties as owners or otherwise. Partition and sale of the properties was ordered and directed and commissioners appointed to make such partition and sale. From this judgment and decree the defendants Matilda Andrews and Leland S. Prior have taken this appeal.

The claim of appellants that this action was prematurely instituted has been decided to be without merit by the decision of this court rendered in action No. 5792, wherein Matilda Andrews was appellant and Josephine Metzner et al. were respondents ([Cal. App.] 257 P. 203), and, for the reasons given in the opinion of this court rendered in that case, the action of the trial court in finding that this action was not prematurely instituted and in denying appellants' request for a dismissal thereof is approved and affirmed.

[1] This leaves for determination by this court the question of whether or not appellant holds in trust for the respondent Toney Prior the legal title to a one-half of one-seventh of the properties distributed to her by the decree of distribution made and entered in the estate of James K. Prior, Sr., deceased, on March 30, 1906, which she has been found to so hold in trust by the trial court by its judgment and decree in this action.

Respondents claim that the constructive trust which the trial court has found to exist in favor of Toney Prior arises out of a secret understanding had between James K. Prior, Sr., and appellant Matilda Andrews prior to the death of James K. Prior, Sr., that said Matilda Andrews would hold in trust for the benefit of her brother Toney one-half of the properties bequeathed and devised to her in the last will of said James K. Prior, Sr., and that she would, on demand of Toney Prior, made at any time after the death of James K. Prior, Sr., transfer the legal title to such properties to Toney Prior. In this regard Toney Prior testifies that, prior to his father's death, his father told him that he would like to leave his share of the properties tied up with one of his sisters; that he (Toney) said this would be satisfactory; that he suggested that it go to Mrs. Andrews; that he afterwards discussed the matter with Mrs. Andrews; and that she said she would hold it for him; that this conversation with his father was about two weeks before his father's will was drawn; that his father told him to telephone Mr. Whittemore, an attorney at law, to come up and to tell him that his father wanted to prepare his will; and that his father told him, after he saw Mr. Whittemore, and after he had seen his sister, Mrs. Andrews, that he had left his (Toney's) portion with Mrs. Andrews; that his father also told him that he had approached Mrs. Metzner, a sister of Mrs. Andrews, on the subject, and that she stated she would willingly act, but that she thought he (Toney) was more favorably inclined towards Mrs. Andrews, and that he told his father he was so inclined; that his father in their conversations told him that half of what he left to Mrs. Andrews was his (Toney's); that, after his father's death and the probate of his will, his sister paid him various sums of money, dividends from stocks of corporations, proceeds of sales of properties and rentals from properties, and that she took receipts for all such payments made to him, and that these payments were always one-half of the moneys that came to the hands of Mrs. Andrews from the properties of his father distributed to her; and that this practice continued for some 18 years after his father's death. A large number of the receipts given to Mrs. Andrews were introduced in evidence, and are set out in full in the transcript filed in this court. Mrs. Andrews admitted having paid her brother Toney one-half of the dividends received from corporate stock of the James K. Prior estate properties and also one-half of the proceeds of sales of certain properties, and that Toney had paid her in 1923 some $348.42 income tax for 1922. She also testified that she paid Toney one-half of $9,971.42, moneys distributed to her from her father's estate. She also testified that Toney paid her one-half of $4,000 of a fund for building a structure on one of the properties that was distributed to her of her father's. Mrs. Andrews claims that all these payments were gifts to her brother, made because of her respect and loyalty and love for him.

There is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to what transpired at the opening of the will of James K. Prior, Sr., a short time after his death; all the members of the family being present. Some of those who were present claim that Mr. Whittemore told Mrs. Andrews that one of the two portions bequeathed to her in the will belonged to Toney, and that she acquiesced in the statement, while Mrs. Andrews and Mr. Whittemore deny that any such statement was made or assented to.

As a witness in her own behalf, Mrs. Andrews gave the following evidence of a conversation with her father concerning his will:

"Mr. Durbrow: Q. Mrs. Andrews, did you ever have any conversations with your father with reference to his making his will? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When did you have a conversation with him relating to that matter? A. In, I think it was, 1902.

"Q. Do you know the month, Mrs. Andrews? A. No; I couldn't say just the month.

"Q. Was it before or after he made his will? A. Well, this was before he made his will, I think.

"Q. Where was this conversation held, Mrs. Andrews? A. On Twenty-Fifth street, near San Jose avenue.

"Q. Who was present? A. Just my father and myself.

"Q. What was that conversation? State it as nearly as you can. A. Well, I had been down town shopping, and I went to make the Valencia street car, and got off at Twenty-Fifth and Valencia streets, and I was walking up Twenty-Fifth street intending to go over and see my mother and father, as my father hadn't been very well for some time. And, as I neared San Jose avenue, my father turned the corner and came toward me. And I greeted him. He said, 'Well, hello, old woman, I am awfully glad to see you.' My father either called me 'old woman' or 'grandmother.' Rarely called me by my given name. He said, 'I have a little matter I would like to talk over with you.' He says, 'You know Toney has been a great disappointment to me. He has gotten into trouble. He has brought disgrace on the family. And it is undermining my health. I feel very miserable. He has married a woman that sued him for $20,000 damages, claiming that he was the father of her child.' And all this had a tendency to upset my father. And he said, 'I have given you two portions of my estate for you to do with as you think best, and to dispose of as you think best, and for you not to mention this to anybody.'

"Q. Was that the extent of the conversation? A. That was the extent of the conversation, yes, sir.

"Q. At that time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you have any further conversations with your father? A. Not in regard to his will; no, sir.

"Q. Now, was that conversation had before or after he made his will? A. Well, it was after he had made his will, because he said that he had left me two portions.

"Q. Now, did you ever discuss that subject with your father again? A. No, sir; never."

That the relations between Mrs. Andrews and her brother Toney were not amicable or harmonious at the time of the trial, because of disagreements arising between them on account of property matters involved in their mother's estate, is plainly apparent from the record, but there is nothing therein tending to show that the relations between this brother and sister were not of a most kindly and affectionate character when their father made his will, and for many years thereafter.

There is sufficient evidence to sustain the judgment and decree of the trial court determining that one-half of the properties devised to Mrs. Andrews by her father was devised to her in trust for her brother Toney Prior. Her payment of one-half of the money legacy of $9,971.42 from her father's estate to her brother, of one-half of all dividends received on corporate stock which came to her, of one-half of rentals and sale proceeds of real properties, her taking of receipts therefor, of repaying to him $5.43 "for rebate McEnerney decree in Richmond properties," of accepting $2,000 paid by a check on his personal account for a building fund for one of the properties, her collection from him of one-half of federal income tax on incomes from the properties, and the many other payments made to him, are not consistent with her claims that these payments, made during a period of 18 years, were voluntary gifts on her part. Her conversation with her father relative to his will and to her brother Toney's affairs, her dealings with her brother in relation to the properties and the income therefrom, cannot be regarded as other than proving that the devise given her by her father's will was given on an implied promise at the least that she would take and hold one-half of the devised properties in trust for the use of her brother.

[2] There is no question but what a court of equity must impose and enforce a trust upon a devisee or legatee who has procured a legacy to be given by a promise express or implied that the property devised would be taken or held for some particular purpose or use. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 P. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; O'Donnell v. Murphy, 17 Cal. App. 625, 120 P. 1076; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 P. 506; Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 323, 324, 45 N. E.

The reasons for this rule are clearly stated in Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 323, 324, 45 N. E. 687, 37 L. R. A. 305 where it is said:

"If the testator is induced either to make a will or not to change one after it is made, by a promise, express or implied, on the part of a legatee that he will devote his legacy to a certain lawful purpose, a secret trust is created, and equity will compel him to apply property thus obtained in accordance with his promise. * * * The trust springs from the intention of the testator and the promise of the legatee. * * * The rule is founded on the principle that the legacy would not have been given, * * * unless the promise had been made, and, hence, the person promising is bound in equity to keep it, as to violate it would be fraud. While a promise is essential it need not be expressly made, for active co-operation or silent acquiescence may have the same effect as an express promise. If a legatee knows what the testator expects of him, and having an opportunity to speak, says nothing, it may be equivalent to a promise, provided the testator acts upon it. * * * The trust does not act directly upon the will by modifying the gift, for the law requires wills to be wholly in writing, but it acts upon the gift itself as it reaches the possession of the legatee, or as soon as he is entitled to receive it. The theory is that the will has full effect by passing an absolute legacy to the legatee, and that then equity, in order to defeat fraud, raises a trust in favor of those intended to be benefited by the testator, and compels the legatee, as a trustee ex maleficio, to turn over the gift to them. The law, not the will, fastens the trust upon the fund by requiring the legatee to act in accordance with the instructions of the testator and his own promise. Neither the statute of frauds nor the statute of wills applies, because the will takes effect as written and proved, but to promote justice and prevent wrong, the courts compel the legatee to dispose of his gift in accordance with equity and good conscience."

[3] The evidence in this case, taken as a whole, supports and establishes the trust claimed. In some respects it is conflicting and contradictory. While in actions seeking the enforcing of secret trusts the evidence should be clear, satisfactory, and convincing the duty of determining whether it satisfies these requirements is the province of the trial court, and if there is sufficient evidence to sustain its findings, the judgment will be held to be conclusive. The trial court is in a position to best judge of the weight and value of the evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses.

In Harris v. Harris, 136 Cal. 379, 69 P. 23, it is said:

"The rule is well settled that one who would claim the ownership of property of which the legal title stands of record in another, or that the same is held by such person in trust for the one so claiming, must establish such claim by evidence that is clear, satisfactory and convincing. * * * Whether the evidence in any particular case is of this character must be determined by the trial court, and its determination thereon will be accepted by this court as conclusive."

To the same effect are the decisions in Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 P. 797; Bollinger v. Bollinger, 154 Cal. 695, 99 P. 196; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 P. 186; McRae v. McRae, 67 Cal. App. 480, 227 P. 933; Stahl v. Stahl, 214 Ill. 131, 73 N. E. 319, 68 L. R. A. 617, 105 Am. St. Rep. 101, 2 Ann. Cas. 774.

The decree and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

A chattel mortgage conveys no title and gives the mortgagee no property interest, but creates only a lien for the payment of the indebtedness; the parties bearing the relation of debtor and creditor, under Civ. Code, § 2888.

4. Counties ⇨204(1)—That county supervisor was father of claimant and interested in seeing his business grow did not disqualify him to allow claim; "interest" (Pol. Code, §§ 920, 4322).

A member of a county board of supervisors held not to have an interest disqualifying him to allow a claim against the county by reason of the fact that he was the father of the claimant and interested in seeing him succeed and his business grow and improve, under Pol. Code, §§ 920 and 4322, providing that no member of the board must be interested in any purchase of property for the county or in a contract made on behalf of the county.

5. Counties ⇨204(1)—County supervisor, who had chattel mortgage on property and good will of printing business, held not disqualified to allow claim of owner for printing and materials; "interest" (Pol. Code, §§ 920, 4322).

Where a father sold his printing and supply business to his son and took back a chattel mortgage which created only a lien under Civ. Code, § 2888, and apparently did not create a lien upon certain printing materials under section 2955, and thereafter the various county officers had the son do printing, job work, and publishing under Pol. Code, § 4048, held that the father did not have an "interest" which disqualified him to allow the claim of the son, under sections 920 and 4322, providing no county supervisor may be interested in property purchased for county or in any contract on behalf of county, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 144; benefit being merely consequential and collateral, and there being no proof that the sale was not actually made, that the father was to receive any of the proceeds of the claim, or that such proceeds would go into a fund from which the debt was to be paid or that the son was insolvent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action for a writ of mandamus to compel the drawing of a warrant for the payment of claims brought by H. G. Moody, transacting business under the name and style of the Searchlight, against H. H. Shuffleton, Jr., County Auditor of Shasta County. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, for appellant. Chenoweth & Leininger, of Redding, for respondent.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the defendant, as auditor of the county of Shasta, to draw his warrant in favor of plaintiff in the amount of certain claims previously approved by the board of supervisors of that county.

The facts leading up to this proceeding and necessary to its understanding may be briefly stated. H. L. Moody, the father of the plaintiff, had been for many years prior to July 17, 1925, the owner and publisher of a newspaper known as "the Searchlight," published in Redding, Shasta county. In connection with the publication of this newspaper he conducted a printing and jobbing business, and owned and operated a general printing plant.

On that day H. L. Moody sold "the Searchlight," together with the entire job printing business and plant to his son H. G. Moody, for a consideration stated to have been $20,000.

H. G. Moody made no cash payment on account of this consideration, but gave in evidence of it certain promissory notes successively falling due. As security for the payment of these notes, H. G. Moody executed a chattel mortgage to H. L. Moody, by which he mortgaged all of the property conveyed to him, including the good will of the business, together with other newspaper property which need not here be described.

Prior to this sale, and on the 19th day of September, 1923, H. L. Moody became a member of the board of supervisors of Shasta county, and was and remained a duly elected and qualified member of such board up to the time of the trial of this proceeding, and was such a member at the time the work was done and the supplies furnished which are the subject of this action.

H. G. Moody conducted the business which he purchased from H. L. Moody under the name and style of "the Searchlight." After his said purchase, and between the 12th day of August, 1925, and the 16th day of October, 1925, the plaintiff under the name of "the Searchlight" did printing, job work, and publishing for various county officers of the county of Shasta, ordered by them under the provisions of section 4048 of the Political Code.

Claims for such work and supplies, duly approved by the several county officers ordering them, were thereafter presented to the board of supervisors by H. G. Moody, doing business under the name and style of "the Searchlight," and these claims were allowed on the 3d day of November by the board of which H. L. Moody was then a member.

These claims so allowed were transmitted to the defendant, auditor of Shasta county, with the request that he draw the usual warrant thereon, in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant was advised by the district attorney of Shasta county that the claims and their allowance were invalid, and that the same constituted no obligation against the county of Shasta because of the interest of H. L. Moody in such allowance, and thereupon and for that reason, on the 12th day of December, defendant refused, and has since continued to refuse, to draw his warrant therefor.

This action to compel him to issue such warrant thereupon followed. At the trial, judgment went for the plaintiff, and it is upon an appeal from that judgment that this matter now comes before this court.

[1] The principle of law invoked in this case is the very familiar one that no public official acting in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity can act in a matter in which he is interested. "The plain principle of justice that no one can be a judge in his own cause pervades every branch of the law, and is as ancient as the law itself." Paley on Summary Convictions (7th Ed.) p. 43. A modern statement of this rule is admirably made in Allinson v. General Council, etc., 1 Q. B. 750, where Lord Esher, M. R., at page 758, says:

"In the administration of justice whether by a recognized legal court, or by persons who, altogether not a legal public court, are acting in a similar capacity, public policy requires that, in order that there should be no doubt about the purity of the administration, any person who is to take part in it, should not be in such a position that he might be suspected of being biased."

In speaking of this principle, Justice Henshaw said:

"It is a principle whose strict observance is dictated both by natural justice and an enlightened public policy. For it is not enough that a judicial decision be sound. It is of next importance that the tribunal rendering it be free from the charge of interest or the taint of partiality, or else public confidence will be destroyed and judicial usefulness gravely impaired." Meyer v. City of San Diego, 121 Cal. 104, 53 P. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22.

The rule is strictly enforced and carried to extreme lengths. Any interest, even the slightest, comes within the prohibition of its terms. "The minuteness of the interest won't relax the objection, for the degrees cannot be measured. No line can be drawn but that of a total exclusion of all degrees whatsoever." Hesketh v. Braddock, 3 Burr. 1856. "The law seeks to avoid situations where public officers are tempted to sacrifice the interests of the public to their own which destroy faithfulness and fidelity in public service." Gillen v. City of Milwaukee, 174 Wis. 362, 183 N. W. 679. "There should be no encouragement to seeking public office for private ends." In re L'Abbé, 7 Ontario Law Rep. 230. The courts should not seek excuses for such alleged offenders. North Bloomfield v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315. The challenge to the courts has been frequently made that they should not relax this ancient rule of justice, and should take a leading part in forming public opinion in its support. Dillon on Munic. Corp. (5th Ed.) § 772. This principle has been very generally written into constitutions, charters, and statutes.

In California it is expressed in all of its common-law strength in section 920 of the Political Code. More particularly applicable to this case is section 4322, Political Code, which provides, in reference to boards of supervisors, that:

"No member of the board must be interested, directly or indirectly, in any property purchased for the use of the county, nor in any purchase or sale of property belonging to the county, nor in any contract made by the board, or other person, on behalf of the county."

The courts of all common-law countries have vied with each other in the strictness with which the principle here involved, and such statutes as the above have been enforced. None of them has gone further than the courts of our own state. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Meyer v. City of San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 53 P. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22; Stockton Plumbing & Supply Co. v. Wheeler, 68 Cal. App. 592, 229 P. 1020; Nielsen v. Richards (Cal. App.) 243 P. 697; City of Vallejo v. Superior Court, 199 Cal. 408, 249 P. 1084; Lindsay-Strathmore, etc., Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056; Hall v. Superior Court, 198 Cal. 373, 245 P. 814.

[2] The courts have very frequently defined the interest which they have held to be a disqualification. It must not be a mere possible contingent interest, not an interest in the question or general subject to which the matter requiring adjudication relates, but one that is visible, demonstrable, and capable of precise proof. It must be a pecuniary or proprietary interest, a relation by which, as debtor or creditor or otherwise, he will gain or lose something by the result of the proceedings. It must be direct and personal and not merely possible or contingent. Northampton v. Smith, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 390.

"Where a statute speaks of 'interest' or being 'interested,' it in general but not always means a pecuniary or proprietary interest, by which a person will gain or lose something, in contradiction to general sympathy, feeling or bias." Dillon on Mun. Corp. note, p. 1146. "A mere sentimental interest, or an interest in the facts which the issues make it necessary for him to determine, which may tend to induce him to give more weight to the evidence for one party than to the evidence for the other respecting such facts, is not the interest which will disqualify him." Lassen Irrigation Co. v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 357, 90 P. 709; Quatman v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. App. 203, 221 P. 666; Meyer v. City of San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 53 P. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22. Multitudes of cases have repeated these terms in varying forms, but, after reviewing them all, we find, as stated by Justice Henshaw, in the case last cited, that the statements are mere definitions, and they leave the necessity still with us to find, within such definitions, if H. L. Moody, by reason of being a mortgagee of the business of H. G. Moody had such an "interest" as prevented him from acting in the allowance of the claims, or made it unlawful for any contract for the sale to the county of the property covered by the claims to be made by any person. What was H. L. Moody's relationship to the transaction?

[3-5] Prior to the purchases covered by the claims in question, H. L. Moody had sold his entire interest in "the Searchlight" and the printing and supply business to H. G. Moody. This sale was questioned in the pleadings, and some effort was made to reflect upon its bona fides at the trial, but the court found that the sale was actually made, and we will here treat it as so made and unimpeached. When, therefore, the claims came before the board of supervisors, H. L. Moody had no apparent or tangible interest in them. His chattel mortgage gave him none. In California, it is well established that such a mortgage conveys no title, nor gives its possessor any property interest in the subject of the mortgage. It creates only a lien on the mortgaged property for the payment of the indebtedness described in the mortgage. Section 2888, Civ. Code; 5 Cal. Jur. p. 41, § 2. The parties to the mortgage bore to each other simply the relation of debtor and creditor. H. L. Moody was not connected in business with H. G. Moody; the latter was to him a complete business stranger. The fact that H. G. Moody was his son did not disqualify him; nor that he was interested in seeing him succeed, and to see his business grow and improve. Lewick v. Glazier, 116 Mich. 493, 74 N. W. 717; Gillen v. City of Milwaukee, 174 Wis. 362, 183 N. W. 679; Cason v. Lebanon, 153 Ind. 567, 55 N. E. 768; Devlin v. City of New York, 4 Misc. Rep. 106, 23 N. Y. S. 888. H. L. Moody did not own the shop in which the work was done nor the tools nor presses through which it was done. He apparently did not even hold a mortgage lien upon the materials used in preparing the cards, pamphlets, and "scratch pads" which were sold by H. G. Moody. Section 2955, Civ. Code. H. L. Moody was neither to receive nor share in the price which was to be paid for the goods sold, nor was that price to go or be applied in any way to his benefit or advantage. These things appellant substantially does not dispute. But he does contend that, as a direct result of the vote of H. L. Moody, a sale made by H. G. Moody was approved; that that sale added to the volume of business of the latter; that such patronage or increased business added to the value of the good will of such business; that this good will was mortgaged to H. L. Moody; and that through thus adding to the value of his security, it added to the value of his debt; and that thus he had an interest in consummating the sale. There is no warrant for this contention in any of the adjudicated cases. It will be observed that the benefit which H. L. Moody was to receive, and we will assume that the value of the good will of the business mortgaged to him was appreciably increased, was collateral and merely incidental to the sales involved and the allowance of the claims based upon them. A benefit that is thus merely consequential does not constitute a disqualifying interest. In the matter of claims, the board of supervisors and H. L. Moody, one of their members, were not dealing with the good will of H. L. Moody's printing business. The question before H. L. Moody, when he voted to approve the claims, was whether certain goods which he did not own and upon which he did not have even a lien should be purchased by the county, for a price which he was not to receive and upon which he had no claim. In this matter H. L. Moody had no direct or indirect interest. The fact that another property, the good will of H. G. Moody's business, was increased as a result of such sale, was a wholly collateral consequence. See Newport, etc., Co. v. Drew, 125 Cal. 585, 58 P. 187; Beaudry v. Valdez, 32 Cal. 269.

It will be recalled that section 4322 of the Political Code provides, not only that no member of the board of supervisors shall make any contract with the county, but that no other person may make any contract in which such supervisor is interested. Would H. L. Moody have been "interested" in a contract of sale by which the sheriff of the county had purchased the supplies in question from H. G. Moody, under an order from the judge of the superior court, under the provisions of section 144, Code of Civil Procedure?

Such a purchase would have been made by parties who were strangers to him. He would not have owned the goods sold or received the price paid for them, nor would the claim therefor have had to come before the board of supervisors. How can it be said that he would have been interested, in a prohibited way, in such a contract? If he would not have been interested in that contract, he was not interested in the one under review, because in legal effect they would have been identical. The fact that he voted to complete the contract before us would make no difference, as section 4322, Political Code, equally applies to contracts made by any "other person." If he was "interested" in the sale, the sheriff in the case suggested could no more have been a party to it than could H. L. Moody. But this discussion need not be continued. It is well established, as will hereafter appear, that such results as the increased value of the good will herein involved are collateral and incidental to such acts as the allowance of the claims before us, and that such probable increase does not of itself constitute a disqualifying interest; and, while it may be shown to be such by proper allegations and proof, no such additional facts were pleaded in this case, nor appeared in the evidence at the trial. Appellant cites the case of Foster v. City of Cape May, 60 N. J. Law, 78, 36 A. 1089, as supporting his contention. The decision in this case is rather loosely phrased, but can be distinguished by the very substantial considerations that the security there was a pledge and not a mortgage, and the pledgee in such a case "holds a special property" in the pledge, "not possessed by other lienors." 21 Cal. Juris. 290, § 2. The pledge holder thus had a "proprietary" interest in the stock, and also had a direct financial interest in it, as any dividends which the corporation might be enabled to pay as a result of the contract he voted to them would be paid directly to him. In the English case of Queen v. Rand, 1 Law Rep. (Queen's Bench) 230, and the very ably presented Canadian case of In re L'Abbé, 7 Ontario Law Rep. 230, the disqualified party was voting directly on the subject-matter of the security, as H. L. Moody would have been doing if certain property mortgaged to him had, for example, been leased to the county and he voted to repair or improve it, or if he had voted to put money in a certain fund from which some claim of his own was to have been paid.

But in none of the multitude of cases dealing with disqualification has a single case been found where a judge has tried a case, or an official has acted upon a claim, which affected the general financial condition of a party who owed him money, or where the decision or allowance might contribute to the debtor's ability to pay such debt has it ever been held that the fact of such indebtedness, of itself, has disqualified such judge or officer.

The fact that by the decision or vote in such a case the ability of the debtor might be improved has always been held to be too remote an influence to constitute a disqualifying "interest." Other facts have to be shown tending to establish that such remote or collateral fact actually operated to prejudice the officer. Let us take the case of a judge or councilman who acts in the allowance of a demand in favor of one who owes him money. There is no difference between such a case and the case before us. The fact that the improvement in capacity to pay was in one case of an unsecured debt and in the other of a secured debt, where the proceeds of the judgment or claim is not in any way applied for the benefit of the security, does not affect the identity of principle. In each instance, the increased ability of the debtor to pay followed as a result of the judicial act of his creditor. Yet such a fact has never of itself been held to be a disqualification.

In an early case the distinguished Chief Justice Bell of New Hampshire discussed disqualification for interest as it existed at common law, and stated that "a creditor, lessee, or debtor, may be judge in the case of his debtor, landlord, or creditor, except in cases where the amount of the party's property involved in the suit is so great that his ability to meet his engagements with the judge may depend upon the success of his suit." Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114. It will be noted that the mere fact of being a creditor does not disqualify—that depends upon other circumstances. Conkling v. Crosby (Ariz.) 239 P. 506.

In Northport v. Northport T. Co., 27 Wash. 543, 68 P. 204, it was shown that the officer, voting to allow the claims was not only a creditor of the claimant, but had an agreement with the latter by which he was to receive the very proceeds of the claim. By reason of this latter fact, and not because he was a creditor, the contract was avoided. But in the later case of O'Neil v. Town of Auburn, 76 Wash. 207, 135 P. 1000, where supplies were purchased by a contractor from a corporation in which the mayor and a councilman were stockholders, and were paid for in the ordinary course of business, and not from the proceeds of claims allowed by the city on account of the work, the allowance of the contractor's claim was held valid, and the advantage to the creditors through the allowance of claims which added to the ability of the debtor to discharge his debt was held remote and incidental and not to amount of itself to a disqualifying interest. In Webb v. Town of Eutaw, 9 Ala. App. 474, 63 So. 687, a bank had loaned a sum of money to the town to enable it to carry out a contract for street improvement. In an action against a property holder by the city to recover his share of the cost of such work, the trial judge was shown to have been a stockholder in the bank. The claim was made, as it is here, that the interest of the judge in the success of the city, which would thereby be better enabled to pay its debt to the bank, constituted a disqualification. The court held that this interest was too remote and contingent. In the absence of a showing that the bank was interested in the improvements made, or that the sum to be derived by the city from the success of its suit was to be applied to the payment of the bank's indebtedness, no disqualifying interest was shown. "The interest which will disqualify a judge must be direct and immediate" (Id.), and the court then say, as might with equal propriety be said here, "if the debtor is solvent, as, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, he is presumed to be (Jones on Evidence, § 57), his success in the suit," or in this case the allowance of the claims, "will not inure to the pecuniary gain of a creditor who is not a party to it, and his failure will not imperil or in any way impair the claim of such creditor."

In Kansas City Ins. Co. v. Jinkens (Tex. Civ. App.) 202 S. W. 772, a judge who held a policy of insurance in the insurance company was held competent to sit in the trial of an action against the company to recover on another of its policies. His interest in the financial success of the company in which he held a policy, in the absence of a showing that the company was a mutual one, or that some fund in which he was entitled to share might be depleted by the issue of the case, was held "remote."

A member of a council may allow claims or vote to award a contract to a party who leases premises from a corporation in which the councilman is a stockholder. The allowance of the claims or the award of the contract undoubtedly added to the ability of the tenant to pay his rent, and the volume of business done on the leased premises through the allowance of the contract much more tangibly increased the rental value of the councilman's premises than did the sales in question in this case add to the value of the good will of H. G. Moody's business. But this collateral advantage to the councilman was held to be too remote to disqualify him, in the absence of proof that the lessee was insolvent, or that he had previously been unable to pay his rent, or that the premises could not have been let to some other person for an equal rental. Gillen v. City of Milwaukee, 174 Wis. 362, 183 N. W. 679.

These decisions sufficiently state the rule in such cases as this, which is that, where the interest is directly involved, no matter how small, it disqualifies the person affected by it; but that, where the benefit in question is collateral, remote or consequential, the interest will not be presumed to have influenced the decision, in the absence of proof that it did, or of additional facts from which that fact may be inferred.

There being no proof here that the sale to H. G. Moody was not actually made; that H. L. Moody was to receive any of the proceeds of the claims allowed; that such proceeds were to go into any fund out of which the debt was to be paid; or that H. G. Moody was insolvent—there was no showing of a disqualifying interest, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

ALECHOFF et ux. v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CORPORATION. ★
(Civ. 4437.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 17, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1927.

1. Negligence ⚡18—One burning trash must regulate magnitude of fire so as to extinguish it within time prescribed by ordinance.

Under ordinance prohibiting burning of trash except between hours of 5 and 9 o'clock a. m., it was duty of one burning trash to regulate magnitude of fire so as to control and extinguish it within time limit prescribed.

2. Evidence ⚡8—It is common knowledge that sea winds increase in intensity after early morning hours in city of Vernon.

It is matter of common knowledge that, in city of Vernon, prevailing sea winds increase in intensity after early morning hours.

3. Negligence ⚡62(1)—Wind spreading trash fire at hour fire was prohibited by ordinance held not "intervening agency."

Where ordinance prohibited burning of trash except between 5 and 9 o'clock a. m. in city where increasing intensity of sea winds after 9 o'clock was common knowledge, wind which caused spread of fire from burning trash after 9 o'clock held not "intervening agency."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Intervening Agency.]

4. Negligence ⚡18—Ordinance prohibiting trash fires may be invoked in aid of owner of property burned.

City ordinance prohibiting burning of trash except between 5 and 9 o'clock a. m., though enacted for protection of general public, may be invoked in aid of individuals whose property was burned by spreading of trash fire after 9 o'clock.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡603—Ordinance prohibiting trash fires held not invalid for failure to prescribe penalty for violation.

City ordinance prohibiting burning of trash except between hours of 5 and 9 a. m. held not inoperative and invalid because no penalty was prescribed for violation.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡122(2)—Defendant must show that no other provision in law outside ordinance imposed penalties for violation.

In action for destruction of plaintiff's property by spreading of trash fire after 9 o'clock a. m. in city where ordinance prohibited such fires except between hours of 5 and 9 without prescribing penalty, every indetment must be in favor of validity of such ordinance so that it was incumbent on defendant to affirmatively show that there was no other provision in law outside ordinance itself imposing penalties.

7. Municipal corporations ⚡594(2)—Ordinance held not unintelligible where meaning could be gathered from context, notwithstanding inapt phrases.

Ordinance prohibiting burning of trash except between hours of 5 and 9 a. m. held not unintelligible, notwithstanding use of inapt, inaccurate, or improper terms or phrases, where real meaning could be gathered from context.

8. Appeal and error ⚡181, 301—Specifications of error, not presented at trial or on motion for new trial, will not be reviewed.

Specifications of error, not presented to trial court either at trial or on motion for new trial, will not be reviewed.

9. Vendor and purchaser ⚡218—Persons in possession of real property under executory sale contract may recover for destruction of buildings thereon.

Persons in possession of real property under purchase and sale agreement, who had been in such possession for several years before destruction of buildings located thereon by fire, may recover for such destruction, though sale contract was still executory.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Mike Alechoff and wife against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Paul Overton, S. W. Guthrie, Samuel Poorman, Jr., and Douglas Van Dyke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Lewis and Guy Lewis, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, in an action wherein they sought damages for the destruction of property by fire set out by defendant and which spread to the premises occupied by the plaintiffs. The property in question comprised personal property owned by plaintiffs and certain buildings occupied by them situated upon real property held by the plaintiffs under an executory sale contract. The facts as found by the court are substantially as follows: That on or about the 3d day of December, 1921, the defendant started a fire within the city limits of the city of Vernon, county of Los Angeles, about 5 o'clock a. m., in a pile of rubbish, deposited by it on a vacant lot, about 200 feet long and 10 to 25 feet wide and of considerable height, averaging about 8 feet; that while burning, the flames therefrom rose at times to as high as 40 feet in the air, and the smoke and sparks therefrom rose to a height of about 200 feet into the air; that about 25 feet directly south of and extending several hundred feet easterly and westerly from the spot where said rubbish pile was located the city of Los Angeles maintained a yard for the storage of power poles and fence posts, which, at the time of said fire, had several hundred poles distributed throughout said yard; that the burden of the burning of said rubbish was finished about 8:30 o'clock a. m., and at that time there were pieces of wood and refuse scattered over the area, which said pieces of wood and refuse were still burning and alive with fire; that about 9 o'clock of said day a strong wind arose and commenced to blow from the north-easterly direction and fanned the said burning pieces of wood and embers and scattered them over the said burning area and carried the sparks therefrom among the poles in the said yard, causing the fire to break out in various places in and about the said poleyard; that during the period of time, to wit, from 5 o'clock a. m. until 9 o'clock a. m., the defendant had no more than four employees engaged in watching said fire, and that from 8:30 a. m. until after said wind arose and swept said fire defendant's employees failed and neglected to extinguish the burning embers scattered throughout said burning area; that during all of said time the said employees were present at the scene of the conflagration; that after the fire spread to the city poleyard it was carried and spread to the premises of the plaintiffs, located at 2056 East Thirty-Seventh street, within the city limits of the city of Vernon, and burned, consumed, destroyed, and demolished certain personal property belonging to the plaintiffs and three barns situated upon said premises; that at the time of said fire there was in full force and effect in the city of Vernon a city ordinance entitled "An ordinance regulating the hours in which animals may be driven through the city of Vernon, and fixing the hours in which 'trash' may be burned in said city," which said ordinance was duly passed by the board of trustees of the said city of Vernon and adopted on the 6th day of July, 1915, and numbered 158. That it was provided in the said ordinance that "It shall be unlawful for any person to dispose of garbage, paper, or other refuse ordinarily termed 'trash' by burning at any other time than between the hours of 5 o'clock a. m. and 9 o'clock a. m. of the same day. Such burning shall at all times be so confined or controlled that such pieces or particles as are alive with fire cannot fly 10 feet therefrom without 'dying' or 'going out' and such burning shall be done at all times in such a manner that it cannot and shall not cause property surrounding such fire to be ignited"; that the fire was caused to extend and spread to the plaintiffs' property through the carelessness and negligence of defendant's employees and through their failure and neglect to have the same wholly extinguished by the hour of 9 o'clock a. m.

No question is raised as to the amount of damages awarded by the court. The defendant attacks the judgment and refusal of the court to grant a motion for a new trial upon the following grounds: (1) That the wind was such as to constitute the resultant fire on adjoining property an act of God for which defendant is not liable; (2) that the violation of the city ordinance did not constitute negligence (a) because the ordinance was designed to protect the public at large and is of no evidentiary value upon the question of negligence, (b) because the ordinance is impotent, no penalty having been prescribed for its violation, (c) because the ordinance is unintelligible, and (d) because the ordinance cannot be construed as prohibiting the existence of live embers after 9 o'clock a. m.; (3) that the plaintiffs, as the vendees under an executory contract, cannot recover for damages to the realty.

[1-3] If this action were based entirely upon general statutory law without the interposition of a regulatory municipal ordinance, the question of plaintiffs' right of recovery would not be simple of solution. Nevertheless, even under those conditions, in view of the findings of the court that at 8:30 a. m. the burden of the burning was finished and at that time there were pieces of wood and refuse on the lot that were still smoking and alive with fire, and that the employees of the defendant during such time failed and neglected to extinguish the live embers scattered throughout the burning area, which findings are responsive to the evidence before the court, we are strongly inclined to the belief that this negligence might well be determined in law to be the proximate cause of the spreading of the flames to the adjoining property. However, in view of the fact that the findings show a clear violation of the city ordinance, it becomes unnecessary definitely to pass upon this phase of the case in sustaining the judgment. Under the ordinance it was clearly the duty of the defendant to regulate the magnitude of any fire it contemplated starting so as to control and extinguish it within the time limit prescribed by law. Having failed to do this it was negligence, and this negligence not only contributed to the burning of plaintiffs' property, but the failure to comply with the mandates of the law is the primary, if not the sole, reason for the destruction thereof. The evidence demonstrates, and it is a matter of common knowledge, that in the territory here involved the prevailing sea winds increase in intensity after the early morning hours, and, undoubtedly, the ordinance in question was adopted with this fact in mind and for the purpose of preventing the wind from carrying embers to adjoining property. This viewpoint disposes of the appellant's argument that the wind constituted an intervening agency.

[4] The defendant further contends that the ordinance is for the protection of the general public and may not be invoked in aid of individuals. In support of this contention it cites a Nebraska case, Frontier Steam Laundry v. Connolly, 72 Neb. 767, 101 N. W. 995, 68 L. R. A. 425, the opinion in which was rendered by three commissioners, which we do not deem applicable to the facts in the case at bar. In a very terse and logical dissenting opinion rendered by Justice Sedgwick of that court, the law is stated so clearly and concisely as to be in our judgment unanswerable. He states:

"It is said in the opinion: 'If the duty imposed by the ordinance is clearly intended for the protection and for the benefit of individuals or of their property, the violation of the rule prescribed tends to show negligence for which a recovery may be had, but where the duty is plainly for the benefit of the public at large, then the individual acquires no new rights by virtue of its enactment and a violation of the rule is of no evidential value upon the question of negligence.' It is also said: 'In some cases their purpose is both for the welfare of the public at large and also for the protection of the personal and property rights of individuals. In such case the individual may adduce the failure to perform the duty enjoined as evidence of negligence.' So that the holding in this case is that to protect the personal and property rights of individuals is no part of the object of the ordinance. To this proposition I cannot agree. The opinion finds the object of the ordinance to be 'for the benefit of the public at large,' that is, for the public safety, and it is directly stated in the opinion that 'the purpose of section 53 of the ordinance which requires the erection of fireproof doors and shutters upon brick buildings within the city is to protect the general public against the spread of fire.' To protect the general public against the spread of fire is to protect the property of the people of the city generally from destruction by fire, and if the object is to protect the property of all of the people of the city, it certainly must be a part of the object to protect the property of each individual citizen."

We are not without authority on this question in our own state. In Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418, the court says:

"The failure of any person to perform a duty imposed upon him by a statute or other legal authority should always be considered evidence of negligence, or something worse. Whether it constitutes such negligence as tended to cause the injury to the plaintiff, in any particular case, is another question, the principles governing which are stated elsewhere; but such an omission must constitute just cause for complaint on the part of the state, if not of individuals; and when no evil intent appears, the omission may properly be regarded as simple negligence. The omission to perform a legal duty being proved, the plaintiff ought not to be required to prove further that the act omitted was inherently essential to the exercise of due care by the defendant. * * * 'So, if a specific duty is imposed upon any person by law, or by legal authority, an action may be sustained against him by any person who is specially injured by his failure to perform that duty. * * * It is an axiomatic truth, that every person while violating an express statute is a wrongdoer, and as such is ex necessitate negligent in the eye of the law; and every innocent party whose person is injured by the act which constitutes the violation of the statute is entitled to a civil remedy for such injury, notwithstanding any redress the public may also have.'"

To the same effect is King v. San Diego Electric Ry., 176 Cal. 266, 168 P. 131. In the case of Mora v. Favilla, 37 Cal. App. 164, 173 P. 770, the defendant unlawfully washed the sidewalk in front of his place of business at 10 a. m. in violation of a city ordinance prohibiting the washing of sidewalks between the hours of 8 a. m. and 6 p. m., and plaintiff, while passing, slipped, fell, and broke his leg. The defendant argued that there was no negligence by reason of the violation of the ordinance because it was enacted for the purpose of conserving water, a public benefit. The court, however, said:

"We think it clear that while the ordinance may have been designed also to conserve the water supply of the city, another purpose, and the principal purpose of the ordinance, obviously was that the sidewalks should not be made inconvenient, annoying, and dangerous to the pedestrian population of the city during the hours when most in use."

[5.6] Defendant next contends that the ordinance is inoperative and invalid because no penalty is prescribed therein for its violation. The ordinance is prohibitory and the Supreme Court in this state, in Richter v.

Lightston, 161 Cal. 260, 118 P. 790, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1028, says:

"There is no force to the argument that the ordinance as an attempted police regulation is futile in that it fixes no penalty for a violation of its terms. Its terms, it will be noted, are prohibitory. It forbids the issuance of a license within the inhibited district. It is the province of other ordinances to impose fines and penalties for the conduct of the prohibited business without a license, and in the case of the city of San Jose the charter itself makes such provision."

There may have been other ordinances of the city of Vernon prescribing penalties to cover this unlawful act. Every intendment must be in favor of the validity of the ordinance, and it was incumbent upon the defendant to affirmatively show that there was no other provision in law outside the ordinance itself imposing penalties. It failed to assume this burden.

[7] The objection that the ordinance was unintelligible we regard as an overindulgence in technical refinement. Respective counsel argue learnedly and elaborately on the meaning of the word "than" as used in the ordinance. The lower court supplied the word "other" in its construction of the ordinance, which without doubt expresses the legislative intent. This, however, we deem to have been entirely unnecessary. No unbiased person can read the context and have any rational doubt as to its purpose and intent. Black on Interpretation of Laws (2d Ed.) § 56, states:

"The use of inapt, inaccurate, or improper terms or phrases in a statute will not defeat the act, provided the real meaning of the Legislature can be gathered from the context or from the general purpose and tenor of the enactment. In such cases, the words in question will be interpreted according to that meaning which the Legislature actually intended to express, although this may involve a departure from their literal signification."

Furthermore, the same author, in section 47, says:

"It is presumed that the Legislature intends to impart to its enactments such a meaning as will render them operative and effective, and to prevent persons from eluding or defeating them. Accordingly, in case of any doubt or obscurity, the construction will be such as to carry out these objects."

There is much discussion as to whether lighted coals and live embers constitute fire. This strikes us as being in the same category as an attempt to demonstrate an axiom, or to prove that black is black or fire is fire.

[8] Other specifications of error are made, but as they were not presented to the trial court, either at the trial or on the motion for a new trial, we shall not discuss them in view of the well-settled rule that questions not presented to the trial court in some appropriate manner will not be considered on the appeal.

[9] The next and last question presented by the defendant in opposition to the judgment of the trial court is that the plaintiff cannot recover for the destruction of buildings located on the premises described in the complaint. The evidence conclusively shows that the plaintiffs were in the possession of the property under a purchase and sale agreement, and that they had been in such possession for several years prior to the destruction caused by this fire. The case of Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 120 P. 771, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093, definitely disposes of this matter adversely to the defendant's contention. The Supreme Court says:

"It is a well-settled proposition that the proper party plaintiff in an action for trespass to real property is the person in actual possession. No averment of title in plaintiff is necessary. 1 Chitty on Pleadings, 63; Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 P. 22; Strohlburg v. Jones, 78 Cal. 383, 20 P. 705; Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 685; Uttendorfer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 497; Raffetto v. Fiori, 50 Cal. 363; McDonald v. Bear River, etc., Co., 13 Cal. 230. The person in possession can recover no damages for injuries, 'except such as effect his own right, unless he holds in such relation to other parties interested that his recovery will bar their claim.' 4 Sutherland on Damages, § 1012. A defendant who is a mere stranger to the title will not be allowed to question the title of a plaintiff in possession of the land. It is only where the trespasser claims title himself, or claims under the real owner, that he is allowed to attack the title of the plaintiff whose peaceable possession he has disturbed. 21 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. S34. One who is in possession under an agreement to convey giving him the right of possession, may maintain an action against a stranger to the title for a trespass which consists of the removal and conversion of the substance of the estate. Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556; Miller v. Zufall, 113 Pa. 325, 6 A. 350; Interlied v. Whaley, 65 Hun. 407, 20 N. Y. S. 183; McFeters v. Pierson, 15 Colo. 201, 24 P. 1076, 22 Am. St. Rep. 388; Irvin [Irwin] v. Patchen, 164 P. 51 (30 A. 436). He may even recover of his vendor for injuries amounting to waste, committed upon the premises after such delivery of possession."

See, also, 27 R. C. L. § 291, Fouts v. Foudray, 31 Okl. 221, 120 P. 960, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 301, and Estate of Dwyer, 159 Cal. 664, 115 P. 235, wherein the court says:

"When a contract for sale of real property binding on the parties is executed, an equitable conversion is worked; the purchaser of the land is deemed the equitable owner thereof and the seller is considered the owner of the purchase price."

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment of the lower court should be and is hereby affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 72

MILLER & LUX, Inc., v. PINELLI et al.
(Civ. 3271.)District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 17, 1927.

1. Animals ⇨100(8)—Landowner may recover all damages caused by trespassing stock (Civ. Code, § 3333).

Under Civ. Code, § 3333, owner of pasture land is entitled to be reimbursed for all damages incurred by trespassing of stock thereon.

2. Damages ⇨112—Measure of damages for use or destruction of pasturage is different than for destruction of annual crops.

Measure of damages for use or destruction of pasturage is different from that for destruction of crops requiring annual planting, cultivation, harvesting, and marketing.

3. Damages ⇨112—Measure of damages for destruction of crops is market value of estimated crop in then condition of maturity.

Measure of damages for destruction of grains and other crops must be ascertained from market value of estimated crop, considering condition of maturity at time of injury; any other basis being too speculative and uncertain.

4. Trespass ⇨50—Compensation for trespass, suspending and impairing enjoyment of premises, may be based on rental value, in absence of, or in addition to, special damages.

Where trespass suspends and impairs enjoyment of premises, compensation may be given on basis of rental value, in absence of any ground for special damages, or in addition to such damages.

5. Damages ⇨112—Measure of damages to meadow land is cost of reproducing things readily replaceable and rental value as to things not restorable.

In measuring damage to meadow land, cost of reproducing things readily replaceable is proper basis of computation, while, as to things which cannot be restored, rental value must be taken as basis.

6. Evidence ⇨501(10)—Damages by destruction of pasture grass cannot be established by witness' lump sum conclusion without giving facts on which based.

Damages for destruction of grass growing on pasture land cannot be established by witness' mere conclusion as to lump sum, without giving facts on which based, though qualified witness may give opinion on question of value, when material.

7. Damages ⇨112—Measure of damages for destruction of pasturage is reasonable rental value in vicinity for pasture purposes.

Measure of damages for appropriation or destruction of pasturage, where grass cannot be reasonably severed and marketed separate from land, is reasonable rental value thereof in that vicinity for pasture purposes.

8. Evidence ⇨471(20, 35)—Witnesses' estimates of gross damages to growing crops and market value of grass destroyed held incompetent as mere conclusions and speculative.

In action for damages to pasture land by trespassing stock, witnesses' estimates of gross amount of damages to growing crops and market value of growing grass destroyed, held incompetent as mere conclusions and speculative.

9. Evidence ⇨501(10)—Witness' direct opinions as to amount of damages are generally inadmissible, in absence of evidence of facts on which based.

Direct opinions of witnesses as to amount of damages are generally inadmissible, in absence of evidence of facts on which such conclusions are based.

10. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Experienced stockmen, familiar with particular land and rental value of grazing lands, could testify as to value of pasture land damaged by trespassing stock.

Stockmen of some 30 years' experience, familiar with defendant's pasture land and local market rental value of grazing land held qualified to testify as to value of defendant's land, in action for damage thereto by trespassing stock.

11. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Testimony as to gross damages to crops and market value of grass destroyed held harmless, in view of testimony as to facts showing damages greatly exceeding amount awarded.

Testimony as to gross amount of damages to growing crops and market value of growing grass destroyed by trespassing cattle held harmless, in view of witnesses' testimony as to all necessary facts, from which court could calculate actual damages sustained, which greatly exceeded aggregate amount awarded.

12. Animals ⇨100(4)—Finding of damages to land by destruction of hay and grass by trespassing stock sustained.

In action for damage to land by trespassing stock, court's finding that stock ate up, injured, and destroyed hay, grass, and verdure, to plaintiff's damage in sum of $1000, held amply supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Suit by Miller & Lux, Inc., against J. Pinelli and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward Bickmore and R. R. Sischo, both of Merced, for appellants.

J. E. Woolley, of San Francisco (Vincent J. McGovern, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. In this suit for injunction, plaintiff recovered a judgment restraining defendants from permitting their stock to trespass upon his land, and awarding him damages in the sum of $1,000. From this award of damages alone, the defendants have appealed, claiming that the findings, in this respect, are not supported by the evidence.

During the years of 1922 and 1923 defendants owned a stock ranch in Merced county, consisting of 640 acres of land, which was entirely surrounded by grazing land belonging to plaintiff, known as the Los Banos farm. The ranches of the respective parties hereto were separated by wire fences. During the years mentioned the feed for stock was scarce. Defendants owned some 110 head of cattle and horses. In spite of the fence riders who patrolled the lines of plaintiff's land, the fence wires were frequently found cut, and the stock of defendants were found straying upon the land of plaintiffs, where the hay and grass were trampled down, eaten, and destroyed to a considerable extent. Upon the trial, plaintiff was granted an injunction restraining defendants from permitting their stock to trespass upon his land, and $1,000 damages for loss of hay and feed was also awarded to plaintiff. The findings of the trial court supporting this award were as follows:

"The defendants above named caused certain animals belonging to them to run and trespass on the lands of plaintiff, * * * which animals ate up, injured and destroyed the hay, grass, and verdure being and growing thereon, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000. The amount which will compensate plaintiff for the detriment proximately caused by said animals so running and trespassing on said lands of plaintiff is said $1,000. * * *"

Appellants contend that these findings are not supported by the evidence, that there is absolutely no evidence of the quantity, or value of the hay, grass, or verdure which was eaten or destroyed by their stock, and that the only evidence of pecuniary damages sustained was remote, uncertain, and speculative. It is further contended by the defendants that this testimony of estimated damages was erroneously admitted over their objections on the grounds that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that it was admitted without requiring a proper foundation for such testimony to be first proved.

Only two witnesses testify to the amount of damages. The first one was Mr. Mulkey, who testified that he had been a rancher for 30 years, and was formerly the superintendent of the Los Banos farm, and as such had charge of the grazing lands involved in this action. He said that during the years of 1922 and 1923 he had seen the stock of defendants on the Miller & Lux premises, "many times, almost every day for about two years," that he was acquainted with the land upon which the cattle trespassed, and was "familiar with the cost of feed." The evidence of this witness respecting the damage sustained to the growing hay and grass was as follows:

"Q. From your experience in this business, as you have related, what do you think was the market value of the growing grass destroyed each year by the defendants' cattle? * * *

"Mr. Bickmore: We object on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and object further that there is no proper foundation laid.

"The Court: Q. Now what would you say would be the reasonable value, market value, that these cattle are alleged to have destroyed?

A. It would be in the neighborhood of $1,000 a year. * * *

Q. I am asking you if you made any examination to see how much grass these cattle had eaten? A. Yes, sir. * * *

Q. Upon what do you base your estimate of the damage, now, that was done there, how do you calculate that? A. Well, I know what feed will grow on that land, and I know what was there, and I know how much of it that Miller & Lux got. * * *

Q. What did you see? A. I saw the land was trampled and the feed ate off the pasture land. Q. About how many acres were there; about what would you say was the pasture land or wild land these cattle were on? A. That (which) they damaged, was about 240 or 250 acres. * * *

They were on the pasture land and farming land long enough to get all the feed they lived on. * * *

They had no feed anywhere else. * * *

Q. You say that you estimate this damage that these cattle did to be the sum of $1,000? A. On the pasture and farming land. Q. How would you * * * itemize it; in what way was the damage? A. It would be about $300 on the pasture land, and the balance would be on the farming land. * * *

Q. And 260 acres? A. On the pasture land. * * *

Q. Could you say what proportion these cattle ate up on that? A. Two-thirds of it. Q. And did Miller & Lux have any cattle on that land during that time? A. A very few head at that time, in that small field, it was used mostly for work horses from the Ortigalita ranch. Q. You turned the work horses out on it? A. Saturday nights, as a rule, we had to feed them hay, then, as there was no feed for them. Q. You go over to the cultivated land; you estimate $700 damages—now, what is the nature of that damage? A. It was a grain field, and they trampled it all up and ate the grain off of it. Q. How many acres did they have? A. Something over one section. * * *

Sometimes I would see about 30 head of stock on there, * * * and sometimes I would see about 80 cattle and 30 horses. * * *

Sometimes we cut over some of (that land) * * * but not in the immediate vicinity of Fava and Pinelli's place; they ate it off, and there was nothing there to cut. * * *

At that time the pasture there was $2 per month, for the same kind of pasture; * * *

I was renting the same kind of land for $8 an acre a year. * * *

The standard market value, at that time, was $7 or $8 an acre."

Likewise, the witness Simmons testified that he had been engaged in the stock business for 29 years; that he was employed by plaintiff during the years of the alleged trespass, and knew the land in question, the value of pasturage, and the cost of feed. He was then asked:

"What would you say was the market value of the feed destroyed by the defendant's cattle during the year 1924?"

The same objection on the part of defendants above mentioned was made to this question and overruled. The witness then answered:

"Approximately $1,000 I would say. Q. How much per head was feed worth during the year 1924? A. Around $2.

"The Court: Q. I suppose you have had occasion to buy feed? A. Yes sir. Q. For stock during that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you had occasion both to feed stock upon the premises and also to run them on grazing land? A. I have. Q. For how many years? A. For a little better than five years for Miller & Lux.

"Mr. Bickmore: I am not objecting to the man's qualifications, no doubt he is properly qualified. * * *

"Q. That land of this nature, how much per head, per month, would it cost to feed on that kind of land, during the year 1924? A. I don't think that you could get that kind of land * * * during the year 1924 to graze cattle for less than $2.50 an acre, per head, per month. * * * It was a very poor year, a poor and bad year."

Two questions are presented on this appeal: (1) Is the rental value of pasture land a proper measure of damages for the destruction of grass, caused by trespassing stock? (2) Is it reversible error to admit testimony of the gross amount of estimated damages, where such evidence is subsequently supplemented by competent testimony of all necessary facts upon which the court can compute the damages?

[1] There can be no question that the owner of pasture land will be entitled to be reimbursed for all damages incurred by the trespassing of stock. "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages * * * is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not." Civ. Code, § 3333.

[2, 3] The customary method of estimating the value of pasturage in a stock country is to determine the number of head of stock per acre which the ordinary natural growth of grass will sustain. Well-considered cases have held that it is a reasonable rule to estimate damages for the use or destruction of pasturage, from evidence of the reasonable rental value of such grazing land per month or season, per acre, according to the number of head of stock to be pastured thereon. There is a clear distinction between the value of the use of grazing land for pasturage, under which circumstances the grass roots remain in the soil, and from the natural reseeding of which a volunteer perennial crop is reproduced successively, and the measure of damages resulting from the destruction of such crops as vegetables and grain, which require annual planting, cultivation, harvesting, and marketing. Verdure used for grazing purposes cannot be cut, stacked, and marketed by the ton or bale. It has no such market value. It is essentially a part of the realty. As the stock consumes the grass, the shoots spring up repeatedly, and the crop is thus renewed. One may estimate with reasonable accuracy the number of bushels of corn or grain, or the number of pounds, bushels, or crates of vegetables which may be produced per acre, but it is absurd to talk of measuring the market value of mere pasturage in this same fashion. With relation to such crops of fruit, vegetables, and grains, there is no question as to the reasonableness of the well-settled rule which requires the ascertaining of the measure of damages from the market value of the estimated crop, taking into consideration the condition of maturity of the product at the time of the injury complained of. 4 Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) 2997, § 1023; 17 C. J. 891; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 P. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779; Seid Pak Sing v. Barker, 197 Cal. 321, 240 P. 765. Any other basis is too speculative and uncertain. Western B. & S. Co. v. Jevne, 179 Ill. 71, 53 N. E. 565; Wheelock v. Noonan, 108 N. Y. 179, 15 N. E. 67, 2 Am. St. Rep. 405; Eno v. Christ, 25 Misc. Rep. 24, 54 N. Y. S. 400.

But with respect to the market value of pasturage a different rule prevails. In Hanson v. Seawell, 35 Idaho, 92, 204 P. 660, it is said:

"Ordinarily, the rental value of the land would not be proof of the value of the crops. However, where it is shown, as in the present case, that the land was used for pasture and that this was the use to which it would ordinarily and reasonably be put, proof of its rental value as pasture is a proper method of showing the value of the grass. In fact, it seems to be the only method which could be adopted."

See Boggs v. Seawell, 35 Idaho, 132, 205 P. 262; Kellar v. Sproat, 35 Idaho, 273, 205 P. 894. In the last case cited the value of the pasturage was estimated at $15 per head per season.

[4] "Where the trespass suspends or impairs the enjoyment of the premises, compensation may be given on the basis of the rental value, in the absence of any ground for special damages, or in addition to such damages." 4 Sutherland on Damages, p. 2966, § 1015. In 26 R. C. L. 972, § 50, the court says:

"For the destruction of pasture by flood, evidence of the value of the pasturage destroyed is at least prima facie evidence of the damage to the plaintiff."

And in the case of Butties v. Chicago, Santa Fé & Cal. Ry. Co., 43 Mo. App. 280, in which an action was brought for damages for the loss of a growing crop of grass trampled down and consumed by trespassing stock, the court says:

"The plaintiff sought to prove the value of his grass by showing what the pasture was reasonably worth. * * * The law aims at compensation, and we can conceive of no other way that would be more satisfactory or fair. In explanation of the value placed on the pasture for the time, the witnesses stated how many head of cattle could be grazed on the land during the time, and what it was worth per month. If the damage had been done to a crop of growing corn, then the authorities relied on by the defendant would be applicable. It was held in those cases that the landowner ought not to recover the full value of a growing crop of corn or like crops, as if it was fully matured and gathered; that, in arriving at its true value at the time of its destruction, the cost of additional cultivation (if any was needed), and the expense of gathering and fitting for market, should be considered. This would be equitable and right. But any one with the slightest knowledge on the subject knows that such a rule is entirely inapplicable, when the court is seeking to ascertain the correct value of grasses intended for grazing purposes."

[5] Where the roots of the grass in a pasture have been destroyed by water or fire so as to prevent the matured stocks from automatically reseeding the field, the measure of damages includes not only the rental value of the pasture, but also the additional cost of reseeding the field. 4 Sutherland on Damages, 3001, § 1023; Chapple v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 284 S. W. 863; Couch v. Kansas City So. Ry. Co., 252 Mo. 34, 158 S. W. 347, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 555; Crouch v. Kansas City So. Ry. Co., 141 Mo. App. 256, 124 S. W. 1077. "Where the land has been appropriated to a particular use, as by converting it into a meadow, * * * in measuring the loss a distinction must be drawn, of course, between those things which can readily be replaced and those things concerning which restoration is impossible. As to the former, the cost of reproduction is regarded as the proper basis of computation; while, as to the latter, rental value must be taken as the basis. It is to be remarked, however, that the term 'rental value,' as applied to lands covered with a growing crop, means not what the lands may be rented for in the vicinity for ordinary purposes, but the value of the use of the lands for the purpose of maturing and harvesting the crop." Blunck v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 142 Iowa, 157, 120 N. W. at page 741.

[6] The appellant in the instant case relies chiefly for reversal upon the cases of Cox v. Crane Creek Sheep Co., 34 Idaho, 327, 200 P. 678; Cleary v. Shand, 48 Utah, 640, 161 P. 453; Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Murray, 45 Or. 103, 76 P. 1079; and Fremont, etc., v. Marley, 25 Neb. 138, 40 N. W. 948, 13 Am. St. Rep. 482. None of these cases holds that the reasonable rental value of pasture land is not the proper measure of damages for the destruction of the grass growing thereon. But these cases do quite properly announce the rule that such damages could not be established by the mere conclusion of a witness as to a lump sum which he estimates as damages, without giving the facts upon which his conclusion is based. In the Cox Case, it is said:

"They [the witnesses] were permitted to testify to lump sums as such damages without stating any facts upon which such estimates were based. * * * The jury were not informed what was the condition of the pasturage before the sheep grazed over it, nor the extent of the territory grazed over, nor the reasonable value of such pasturage at that time and place."

In the case of Cleary v. Shand, above cited, damages were awarded for trespass in driving some 2,500 sheep over plaintiff's land to the damage of his rye and timothy hay which was planted there. The sheep remained on the pasture only about four hours. In that case it was held to be error for the witness to be permitted to testify as follows: "I would judge the damage would be $500" on account of the sheep crossing the premises. And again: "The damages that I placed at $350 would be covered by the clover and the rye that was eaten off and tramped out, * * * I would judge," etc. There was no attempt to show the reasonable rental value of the pasture land.

In the case of Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Murray, 45 Or. 103, 76 P. 1079, the only witness who testified to the damages incurred on account of trespassing sheep on an uninclosed pasture, said:

"Well, it would be owing to the way—if I owned it, I would not have had them on there for $700 or $800."

The court properly said:

"A witness may state the facts upon which the damages are predicated, and in a proper case, if qualified, may give his opinion upon a question of value, when material; but he cannot express an opinion as to the amount of damages * * * because that is exclusively within the province of the jury."

But the court also used this significant language in that case:

"It would have been competent for a qualified witness to give his opinion as to the value of the grass or pasturage eaten or destroyed. Woodbeck & Matter v. Wilders, 18 Cal. 131; Lommeland v. St. P., Minn. & Manitoba Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 412, 29 N. W. 119."

And in the Fremont v. Marley Case, above cited, where plaintiff sought damages for the destruction of his crops caused by an overflow of the land because of water ditches which were constructed and maintained by the defendant, the court announced the same general rule above mentioned, and properly concluded that:

"A witness who possesses the requisite knowledge may testify as to the value of the crops destroyed, * * * but he cannot be permitted to testify directly as to the amount of the damages sustained."

In this case there was no effort to prove the reasonable value of the pasturage.

[7] We are cited to no authority which directly holds that it is not competent to prove the damages sustained to pasture land by showing the reasonable rental value thereof. Upon the foregoing authorities, and upon good reason, we conclude that the measure of damages for the appropriation or destruction of pasturage, which is used for grazing purposes, where the grass cannot be reasonably severed and marketed separate from the land, is the reasonable rental value thereof in that vicinity for pasture purposes.

[8, 9] In the instant case, over the objection of defendants, two witnesses were permitted to testify to their estimate of the gross amount of damages to the growing crops, on account of the trespass of defendant's stock, without first stating the facts upon which the court could calculate such damages. In substance, these questions were: "What is the market value of the growing grass which was destroyed by defendant's cattle?" The objection upon the grounds that this question was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that no foundation for such testimony had been laid, was overruled. The witnesses then answered: "Approximately $1,000." These answers were, of course, a mere conclusion and were speculative. Direct opinions of witnesses as to the amount of damages are generally inadmissible, in the absence of evidence of facts upon which such conclusions are based. 3 Jones Comm. on Ev. 2502, § 1367; 22 C. J. 204, § 598; 4 Enc. of Ev. 12; Cox v. Crane Creek Sheep Co., 34 Idaho, 327, 200 P. 678; Cleary v. Shand, 48 Utah, 640, 161 P. 453; Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Murray, 45 Or. 103, 76 P. 1079; Fremont, etc. v. Marley, 25 Neb. 138, 40 N. W. 948, 13 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[10, 11] These witnesses were, however, qualified to testify as to the value of pasture land, being stockmen with some 30 years' experience, and familiar with the land in question, and the local market rental value of grazing land. The objectionable answers were also supplemented by testimony on the part of both witnesses of all necessary facts from which the court could make its own calculation as to actual damages sustained. From this evidence it appears that from 240 to 260 acres of pasture land was entirely eaten off or trampled down and destroyed; that 80 cattle and 30 horses were seen on said land "every day for about 2 years," and grazed there "long enough to get all the feed they lived on"; that the stock "ate it (the grass) off, and there was nothing there to cut"; that the market rental value of similar pasture land in that vicinity, at that time, was from $2 to $2.50 per head, per acre, for each month, or from $7 to $8 per head, per acre, for the grazing season. This leaves a mere matter of computation to ascertain the aggregate amount of damages. It is apparent that the minimum figures given would greatly exceed the aggregate amount of damages awarded by the court. The objectionable questions and answers above quoted are therefore harmless and do not constitute reversible error.

[12] The finding of the court that the defendant's stock "ate up, injured, and destroyed the hay, grass, and verdure * * * to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000" is amply supported by the evidence.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

SMITH v. HOLLANDER et ux. (Civ. 5797.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 22, 1927.

Rehearing Granted July 21, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨706(6)—Negligence in not giving warning signal held for jury, where pedestrian was injured by automobile skidding onto sidewalk.

Plaintiff's evidence that before defendant's car skidding on slippery street struck him on sidewalk he did not hear warning signal warranted submission of case to jury on issue of negligence in not giving signal, irrespective of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨706(3)—Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held applicable where skidding automobile struck pedestrian on sidewalk.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies where an automobile skidded on wet street, running on sidewalk and striking a pedestrian, so as to show driver's negligence, unless the driver points out some cause of coming upon the sidewalk which could not have been guarded against by ordinary care under the circumstances.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨706(3)—Burden of proving negligence of driver of automobile, skidding on slippery street and striking pedestrian on sidewalk, is on pedestrian.

The burden of proving driver's negligence is on a pedestrian, in suit for injury from being struck by automobile skidding on slippery street and striking him on sidewalk.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨706(3)—Jury may infer negligence, unless driver of automobile skidding and striking pedestrian on sidewalk proves accident unavoidable by ordinary care.

Jury may infer driver's negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where automobile skidding on slippery pavement struck pedestrian on sidewalk without proof of precise act or omission constituting negligence, unless the driver proves that the cause of injury was one not avoidable by ordinary care.

5. Municipal corporations ☞706(3)—Prima facie showing of negligence from proof automobile skidded against sidewalk pedestrian is overcome by evidence balancing, though not preponderating against, it.

Defendant overcomes plaintiff's prima facie showing of negligence arising on proof that defendant's automobile, skidding on wet street, struck plaintiff on sidewalk, by proof evenly balancing it, without proving absence of negligence by a preponderance of the evidence.

6. Evidence ☞90—"Burden of proof" and "burden of producing evidence" are not same.

"Burden of proof" and "burden of producing evidence" are not the same, even though the use of the one expression instead of the other has been held not to be error.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Burden of Proof.]

7. Municipal corporations ☞706(6)—Evidence that skidding of automobile striking pedestrian on sidewalk was unavoidable held to present question for jury.

Automobile driver's evidence that skidding of car on wet pavement striking pedestrian on sidewalk was unavoidable accident held to present question of driver's negligence for jury.

8. Trial ☞296(9)—Instructions assuming facts in issue held error, where omission of qualification as to truth must have influenced the verdict.

Instructions assuming facts in issue as to worry and disability of plaintiff by omitting the qualification "if any" held error, in personal injury suit where, notwithstanding cautionary instruction relating to damages generally, the omissions must have influenced the verdict.

9. Trial ☞253(4)—Instruction in personal injury suit, omitting element of certainty as lack of capacity to work in future, held error (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Instruction that damages include permanent lack of capacity for work in the future, sustained by reason of injuries, held erroneous as lacking the element of certainty required by Civ. Code, § 3283, providing that damages may be awarded for detriment certain to result.

10. Trial ☞296(3)—Instruction on degree of care overcome, in personal injury suit, objections to expressions "proper care" and "due care."

In pedestrian's suit for injuries, instructions on degree of care required of defendant held to overcome objections to expression "proper care" and "due care" in other instructions.

11. Evidence ☞148—Proof that witness called defendant's number, and person answering said she was defendant, held sufficient foundation for telephone conversation.

Proof that witness called defendant's telephone number, and a person answered saying she was defendant, held sufficient foundation for testimony of telephone conversation, where defendant did not deny having had a telephone conversation.

12. Damages ☞143—Complaint for injuries held not demurrable, where it sufficiently advised defendant of character of proof of injuries.

Complaint for damages for personal injuries by pedestrian struck by automobile was not demurrable, where it pleaded negligence in general terms, and detailed injuries sufficiently to advise defendant of the character of proof to expect.

13. Pleading ☞192(2)—Demurrer for uncertainty to complaint for injuries lies for what is said with uncertain meaning, not for matter omitted.

A demurrer to a complaint for damages for injuries for uncertainty lies for what is said with an uncertain meaning, not for what is omitted, since no description of injuries can be exhaustive.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by F. H. Smith against Arthur Hollander and Hattie Hollander, his wife. Judgment for the defendant first named and for plaintiff and against the defendant second named, and the latter alone appeals. Reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Henry Eickhoff, Jr., and Gregory A. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Appellant, Hattie Hollander, appeals from a judgment awarding damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in being struck by said appellant's automobile. Her codefendant, Arthur Hollander, was granted a nonsuit.

The proof offered by the plaintiff was as follows: While walking westerly on the south sidewalk of Post street, plaintiff was struck and injured by appellant's automobile, which ran up onto the sidewalk unawares from behind him. He did not see it approach nor hear any horn or warning signal. The only eyewitness for the plaintiff testified:

"I saw (the) automobile coming down Post street going west, and I saw it suddenly skid completely around and go right on the sidewalk and knock (plaintiff) down, and back up across the street and go on the other sidewalk and stop. A building stopped it. * * * The street was wet."

[1] Plaintiff's wife testified to a telephone conversation with appellant, in which the latter said that she had lost control of her machine from Van Ness avenue to Buchanan street. This was all the testimony offered by plaintiff in chief concerning the manner of the accident. A motion for a nonsuit by appellant was denied. Apart from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the evidence warranted the submission of the case to the jury upon the question of whether defendant was negligent in not giving a suitable warning signal.

Defendant Arthur Hollander testified on behalf of appellant and himself that a misty rain had fallen for a period of about 15 minutes, and that the street was still wet at the time of the accident; that appellant's automobile was traveling on Post street from Van Ness avenue at a speed of not more than 15 miles per hour in a straight course and in second gear; that about 100 feet east of Buchanan street the forward end of the automobile suddenly skidded towards the left, ran up onto the south or his left-hand sidewalk, and struck the plaintiff. Appellant's testimony was substantially the same. She was the driver, and testified that, when the skidding commenced, there was nothing for her to do to bring the car back into control; that all she did was to hold onto the steering wheel. This was all the testimony for the defendants and appellant concerning the cause of the accident. There is therefore no direct proof of what particular act or omission on the part of the appellant, driver of the car, caused it to skid and run upon the sidewalk.

[2] No contributory negligence was pleaded. Negligence was pleaded generally, and the plaintiff relied on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The court instructed the jury upon this doctrine. Some of the instructions given, when read together, inform the jury that it may infer negligence by means of this doctrine without knowing the specific act or omission which constituted the negligence, if it should find from the evidence that defendant's automobile ran upon the sidewalk and struck plaintiff unawares from behind. Appellant urges that, conceding the doctrine to apply to such facts, nevertheless we have here the additional fact of skidding on a wet street, which appears both from the case as a whole and from plaintiff's testimony in chief. It is said that skidding may or may not be negligent, and for that reason skidding in and by itself furnishes no evidence or at least that the fact of skidding is a sufficient explanation for running upon the sidewalk so as to take the case out of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Appellant cites authorities, including Berry on Automobiles (4th Ed.) § 231, to the effect that mere skidding is not evidence of negligence, and Bloom v. Allen, 61 Cal. App. 28, 214 P. 481, to the effect that skidding may or may not be negligent. This case also states, however, that skidding is not a defense.

That certain acts may or may not be negligent, however, is not determinative of the application of this doctrine. When an automobile leaves its accustomed place in the street, runs upon the sidewalk, and strikes a pedestrian, this, too, may or may not be negligent, depending upon the circumstances, and yet the doctrine has been held generally to apply under such facts (Berry on Automobiles [4th Ed.] § 405; Huddy on Automobiles [7th Ed.] § 512), and to similar situations (Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 676, 117 P. 931; Onell v. Chappell, 38 Cal. App. 375, 176 P. 370; Scheuermann v. Kuetemeyer, 186 Cal. 225, 199 P. 13). The test is not whether certain facts show that negligence exists in every such case or as a matter of law, but whether they show negligence ordinarily. The reason for the doctrine is also important. The one injured is from the nature of the case not in a position to know or prove the precise cause of the accident, whereas the defendant operating the thing causing the injury is in a position to know and should know or be able to explain it. 19 Cal. Jur. 704, § 123, "Negligence."

[3-7] If mere skidding is not evidence of negligence, but running up onto the sidewalk is, then what is to be said of the two combined? Here the appellant's automobile skidded diagonally across Post street, proceeding about 50 or 60 feet, and then up onto the sidewalk to where plaintiff was walking, striking him unseen from behind. It would be unusual if a person so injured would be in a position to prove the precise act or omission constituting the negligence causing the injury, and yet such occurrences do not usually take place in the absence of the driver's negligence. One is compelled to conclude that, if the driver does not point out some cause of the injury and of the coming upon the sidewalk even by skidding which could not have been guarded against by the exercise of ordinary care under all the then known driving conditions, then the injuries in all probability resulted from negligence in handling the car. The burden of proving negligence is upon the plaintiff throughout the case. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur assists him in carrying this burden by means of an inference founded on common knowledge and experience. From the nature and circumstances of the mishap, the jury may infer, where it applies, that the injuries were caused by some negligent act or omission of the driver, without proof of the precise act or omission constituting the negligence. Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, §§ 58, 58a. It was proper for the court to instruct the jury upon the inference which might be drawn by means of this principle, for without it the jury would not be advised that the defendant was under the obligation of explaining the occurrence. For the same reason it was proper for the court to refuse defendant's requested instructions VIII and IX upon the presumption of defendant's freedom from negligence. The instructions should not have the effect, however, of informing the jury that the defendant is obliged to prove her freedom of negligence by a preponderance of evidence. The giving of instructions XV and XXI without giving defendant's requested instruction No. III had this effect. "Burden of proof" and "burden of producing evidence" are not the same, although the use of the one expression instead of the other has been held not to be error. Cody v. Market Street Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 90, 82 P. 666; Worden v. Central Fireproof Bldg. Co., 172 Cal. 94, 155 P. 839. The defendant meets and therefore overcomes plaintiff's prima facie case when she balances it evenly without proving absence of negligence by a preponderance of the evidence. Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 252, 107 P. 309; Scarborough v. Urgo, 191 Cal. 346, 347, 216 P. 584. One way for defendant to meet plaintiff's prima facie case is to offer evidence tending to show that plaintiff's injuries were the result of an unavoidable accident. While the evidence for defendant tending to show the accident unavoidable may be said to be weak, it is a case where reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions, and it would not have been improper for the court to have given defendant's requested instruction V.

[8] The instructions given contain several indirect assumptions of fact which are assigned as error. This arises from expressions used without conditional qualification such as the usual "if any." One such expression is "caused by the negligence of the defendant" (in instruction XXII) and several such assumptions of fact are used in instruction XXIII, where the jury is instructed that "such damages include:

"Subdivision 1. The pain and suffering endured by the plaintiff, etc.

"Subdivision 2. Any loss sustained by plaintiff by reason of the fact that he has been unable to work up to the present time.

"Subdivision 3. All charges incurred and paid by the plaintiff by reason of the injury; * * * and as well as such charges certain to be reasonably incurred in the future by reason of said injuries."

"Subdivision 6. The mental worry endured by the plaintiff up to the present time, due to his reasonable apprehension of future disability, which reasonable apprehension was the proximate result of his injuries.

"Subdivision 7. The permanent disability or lack of capacity for work in the future of the said plaintiff sustained by reason of his said injuries."

Where the fact can be said to be undisputed in the evidence, such assumption has been held not to constitute error. 24 Cal. Jur. 843, cases cited in notes 18 and 19. In several decisions it has been held that, where the assumption of fact is indirect and inferential, it may be considered as cured by other proper instructions, leaving the question to the jury. Ingalls v. Monte Cristo Oil Co., 23 Cal. App. 652, 656, 139 P. 97; Brinck v. Bradbury, 179 Cal. 376, 176 P. 690; Dawson v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 177 Cal. 268, 170 P. 603; Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 216, 81 P. 521.

[9] Under the facts proven and instructions given in this case, we perhaps could pass the assumption of fact in instruction XXII as cured by other instructions; and those in XXIII, subs. 1, 2 and 3, as being either not in dispute or as doubtful assumptions grammatically; but the facts assumed in subdivisions 6 and 7 are in dispute and are not cured by any other instruction given. The cautionary instruction on damages relates to damages in general and as a whole. Subdivision 7, besides assuming the disputed fact of permanent incapacity for work, is also erroneous for lacking the element of certainty of future detriment as required by Civil Code, § 3283. From an examination of the entire cause and evidence we are of the opinion that these errors must have influenced the determination of damages and is therefore reversible error.

[10] The other grounds of appeal are not well taken. Some of the instructions use the expression "proper care" and "due care," but the instructions elsewhere, XII and XIV, instruct on the degree of care required of defendant and this overcomes the objection.

[11] There was sufficient foundation for the telephone conversation with defendant. The witness testified that she called defendant's telephone number and a person answered saying that she was the defendant. 22 Cor. Jur. 302. The defendant did not deny having had a telephone conversation, although she denied any admission.

[12, 13] Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. The injuries detailed in the complaint were specific and detailed enough to advise the defendant of the character of proof to expect. Kuhns v. Marshall, 44 Cal. App. 588, 186 P. 632. A demurrer for uncertainty lies for what is said with an uncertain meaning and not for what is omitted. Callahan v. Broderick, 124 Cal. 83, 56 P. 782. No description of injuries can be so complete that nothing more can be added.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

(257 P.)

SMITH et al. v. BUTLER. (Civ. 4906.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 20, 1927.

1. Deeds $\S$ 17(1)—Purchaser's quitclaim deed to vendor to secure release from conditional sales contract held supported by consideration.

Where purchaser, under conditional sales contract, in order to be released from further obligation by provisions of such contract, executed quitclaim deed to vendor, and assigned contract to him, such deed and assignment held supported by consideration.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

Where evidence is conflicting, it is not province of Appellate Court to attempt to reconcile divergent statements or draw conclusions therefrom at variance with those reached by trial judge.

3. Trusts $\S$ 63 $\frac{3}{4}$ —Purchaser's quitclaim deed to secure release from conditional sales contract held not to create trust in his favor by implication of law.

Where purchaser gave vendor quitclaim deed to secure release from conditional sales contract, no trust was created in favor of grantor by implication of law, since even want or failure of consideration would not raise resulting trust in such case.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank B. Daley, Judge.

Action by J. Walter Smith and another against A. G. Butler. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Pollock & Mitchell, of Ontario, Cal., for appellants.

E. H. Jolliffe, of Ontario, Cal., for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an action by the plaintiffs to declare a trust and to compel the defendant to restore plaintiffs to their rights under a conditional sales contract for the purchase of real estate. In the month of April, 1920, plaintiffs and defendant entered into a contract for the purchase and sale of certain real property in the town of Ontario, county of San Bernardino. Under the terms of the contract plaintiffs made an initial payment of $1,350, and subsequently made two semiannual payments of $881 each, together with interest as prescribed by the contract. The total purchase price of the property was fixed at $12,000. The third payment of $881 and interest was about to become due in October, 1921, when the plaintiffs informed the defendant that they would be unable to make said payment on account of financial difficulties, and requested an extension of time. It is plaintiffs' contention that the defendant then proposed that, if the plaintiffs would execute a quitclaim deed to the premises, assign their contract of purchase, and would within six months pay to the defendant the October payment of $881, together with an additional 1 per cent. interest thereon, and pay rental for the stores located on the real property during the extended period, he (defendant) would restore the contract of purchase, and restore plaintiffs to all their rights and interest in the real property. Plaintiffs further contend that, in pursuance of this proposal, they did execute and deliver to defendant a quitclaim deed to said property, together with an assignment of the contract, which deed was recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county; that thereafter plaintiffs paid the rental on the stores located on said property, and within six months tendered to the defendant the amount of the October payment with interest and additional interest, and the further sum of $662 with interest, being the amount they claimed due, less rental payments, on the fourth semiannual payment, and demanded the restoration of the contract of purchase to them; that defendant thereupon failed, neglected, and refused to recognize the rights of said plaintiffs in and to said property under said contract, and refused to accept said money, and refused to restore to plaintiffs their rights and interest in said property under the contract.

Plaintiffs further allege that thereafter they made further tender of the succeeding semiannual payments, which were by the defendants refused, and that on the 6th day of April, 1922, they deposited all of said sums of money in escrow with the First National Bank of Ontario to be delivered to defendant upon the delivery to said bank of a reassignment of the original contract of purchase. The defendant denies that he made any such proposition to plaintiffs, and denied that he ever agreed to reconvey the property or reassign the contract to plaintiffs. The record discloses that there was no written agreement on the part of the defendant to reconvey the property nor to reassign the contract, and it is an admitted fact that no such writing was ever made by the defendant or ever existed.

The findings of the court are in favor of the defendant, and, in so far as material to this issue, are substantially as follows: The court found that it is not true that the defendant, prior to the delivery of said deed last aforesaid or at any time, proposed to said plaintiffs or any one else that, if they would execute a quitclaim deed conveying all their right, title, and interest in and to the land described in the complaint, and would thereafter within six months pay to the defendant the sum of $881.25 due on October 6, 1921, together with an additional 1 per cent. interest thereon, and would pay the sum of $52 rent for the stores located on said lot during the period of said extension, he, the defendant, would restore said contract, and would restore plaintiffs to all of their right, title, and interest in and to said property; that no such proposition was ever made by said defendant to said plaintiffs at any time; that said quitclaim deed and said assignment were executed and delivered to defendant by plaintiffs for the consideration that said plaintiffs would then and there be released from all further obligation imposed on them by the provisions of said contract of purchase and sale; that the plaintiffs nor either of them paid to said defendant $52 rental for the month of October, 1921, and each succeeding month up to October, 1922, or any other sum as rental of said real property, except the sum of $12 per month for the months aforementioned, which was paid by plaintiffs to defendant as rental of one building situated on said premises and occupied by said plaintiff; that it is not true that the plaintiffs deposited in the First National Bank of Ontario any sum of money or any money at all to be delivered to the defendant when the latter should deliver to said bank a reassignment of said contract, and it is not true that the said plaintiffs or either of them deposited in said bank or any bank, or any other place, any money to be delivered to said defendant; that the plaintiffs were in default in the performance of the agreements and conditions set forth in said contract; that they failed to keep said property insured, and failed to pay the taxes thereon, and were unable to meet the payments provided for in said contract.

[1, 2] Notwithstanding the statement of facts as above set forth, contained in the findings of the court, it is the plaintiffs' contention, first, that there was no consideration for the quitclaim deed and the assignment of the contract, and, second, that a trust is created in their favor by implication of law—neither of which positions can be sustained. There was evidence to support every finding made by the court. It is true that the testimony is conflicting, but it is not the province or the disposition of this court to attempt to reconcile divergent statements or to draw therefrom conclusions at variance with those reached by the trial judge. He saw and heard the witnesses, and should be able to determine the truth. One circumstance relied upon by plaintiffs to discredit the testimony given by the defendant upon which the findings of the court are based may be worthy of comment. In the early stages of the negotiations between the parties, and prior to the signing of the quitclaim deed and assignment, at the time when the plaintiffs informed the defendant that they would be unable to make the October payment and requested an extension, the defendant intimated that he would entertain such a proposition, but before any papers were signed he testified that one of the plaintiffs, who at the time were in financial difficulties, and had made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors to the Los Angeles Board of Trade, came to him, and said that he had been advised by an attorney that they could enter into no binding agreement with reference to his retaining any interest in the property. This, of course, could have but one meaning—that no agreement could be made that would preserve the property for plaintiffs in derogation of the rights of their creditors. In response to this request defendant testified that he stated that there would be no agreement, and that there was no agreement, and that that was the status of the situation when the papers were actually signed. There was ample consideration for the signing of the papers, as set out in the findings of the court, if consideration other than that implied by law may be deemed to be necessary.

[3] The law of the case is clearly expressed, not only in Code section, but by all the text-writers and numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of this state. In the case of Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 668, 47 P. 691, the Supreme Court says:

"A deed by the owner of land duly signed and acknowledged by him and delivered to the grantee, conveying the land to the latter in fee simple, is one of the most solemn of civil acts. It is not a thing to be played with, or reclaimed at pleasure, as a hawk in falconry. It is not void on account of either want or failure of consideration; nor does want or failure of consideration raise a resulting trust. Leading authorities declaring this principle are cited in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Michigan in Jackson v. Cleveland, 15 Mich. 94, 90 Am. Dec. 266. The court, among other things, say: 'A voluntary deed, which purports to be for the beneficial use of the grantee, and which was made deliberately and without mistake or contrivance, does not differ from any other deed in binding the grantor, and can only be attacked by those having superior equities which the grantor had no right to cut off—as creditors and the like. * * * This doctrine of resulting trusts has never been applied to mere voluntary conveyances. Mere want of consideration has never raised resulting trusts out of these.' * * * 'A court of chancery has never ventured, against the expressed will of the donor appearing on the face of the deed, 'to take the use from the donee, and give it back to the donor.'" In Devlin on Deeds, section 1189, the author says: 'It is now settled law that a trust does not result to the grantor merely because there was no consideration for the conveyance'"—citing a number of authorities.

And the same author says (section 834):

"But parol declarations cannot be received with this object, for these cases there exists no resulting or presumptive trust, and the admission of such evidence would be for the purpose of contradicting the written instrument, and establishing a trust in the very teeth of the statute of frauds."

In the case last above cited, an action between husband and wife, the element of confidential relationship was involved, which is absent from the instant case. It may be also said in passing that there is no allegation of fraud, which on the record disclosed would appear to be a necessary element to successfully attack the deed and assignment disclosed by this litigation.

In the case of Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, at page 528, 21 P. 984, 985 (4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162) the Supreme Court says:

"The counsel for the defendant is in error when he contends that the case presents features of actual or constructive fraud. No actual fraud was alleged. A material ingredient of actual fraud is the fraudulent intent, and this must be alleged as one of the facts constituting the fraud. * * * No actual fraud is alleged, found, or shown by the evidence. For all that appears to the contrary, Michael Feeney's deed may have been given and received in entire good faith. The mere failure to perform a parole agreement which was made in good faith is not fraud."

Plaintiffs in their brief have cited innumerable authorities with no effort on their part to distinguish them or to apply them to the facts of the case. Their entire argument is predicated upon a state of facts that does not exist. They have assumed from the beginning that a contract was entered into which had no existence in fact and is contrary to the express findings and conclusions of the court. The inevitable result of this is that the authorities cited have no application whatever to the issue to be determined.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. STOLL. (Cr. 1484.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 20, 1927.

1. Incest §13—Generally, proof of girl's pregnancy is competent to establish corpus delicti.

In prosecution for incest, evidence to effect that girl was pregnant is generally competent and relevant to establish corpus delicti.

2. Criminal law §563—Evidence tending to prove corpus delicti need not connect defendant with offense.

Evidence to sustain corpus delicti need not even tend to connect defendant with commission of the offense.

3. Criminal law §696(3)—Incest §14—Pregnancy at time not corresponding to alleged incest did not establish corpus delicti, and evidence should have been stricken.

Where, in prosecution for incest, testimony relative to girl's pregnancy established that intercourse could not have occurred so as to correspond with time and place of commission of alleged offense, it cannot be said that such fact tended to prove corpus delicti, and motion to strike should have been granted, or jury directed to disregard such evidence.

4. Criminal law §1169(8)—Admitting evidence of girl's pregnancy at time not coinciding with her version of time and place of alleged offense held harmless.

In prosecution for incest, admitting evidence of girl's pregnancy at such time that it did not coincide with her version of time and place of alleged offense held harmless, in that such testimony was clearly in defendant's favor as suggesting some one other than defendant had intercourse with prosecuting witness, thus furnishing possible motive for unfounded charge.

5. Criminal law §507(7)—Fourteen year old prosecuting witness in prosecution for incest held not accomplice (Pen. Code, §§ 26, 261, subd. 1, and § 285).

Fourteen year old prosecuting witness in a prosecution for incest held not an accomplice, in view of Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1, providing age of 18 years at which unmarried female can consent to such act, notwithstanding that under section 26 those over 14 years are capable of committing crime, and that under section 285 no exception is made as to children over 14 committing fornication with person within degree of consanguinity making marriage incestuous.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edwin P. Hahn, Judge.

Lewis M. Stoll was convicted of incest, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. T. Johnson, of San Diego, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was accused by information of the crime of rape and incest. During the trial, on motion of the district attorney, the charge of rape was dismissed. The defendant was found guilty of the crime of incest. This appeal is taken from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only points argued by the appellant in his brief are that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction to the jury that the complaining witness was an accomplice, and that it was error to admit evidence showing her pregnancy.

[1-4] It appears that the prosecutrix is the daughter of the defendant, and was between 14 and 15 years of age at the time the act constituting the crime was charged to have been committed. The district attorney on direct examination drew from a physician that the prosecuting witness was pregnant on the 5th day of October, 1926. On cross-examination this witness testified that the pregnancy was only 6 to 8 weeks advanced. The case was tried on November 17, 1926. The information alleged that the act of incest occurred on or about April 10, 1926. Appellant argues that it is obvious that, if the girl was pregnant, this cannot be charged to the de-defendant, and that his motion to strike this evidence should have been granted. That proof of this character is generally competent and relevant and admissible cannot be doubted. Its purpose is to establish the corpus delicti of the charge. People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 431, 105 P. 420. In this connection it must be remembered that evidence which tends to prove the corpus delicti need not even tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 P. 896. Hence this evidence was properly received. However, since from the testimony of the physician on cross-examination it was established that the intercourse resulting in the pregnancy of the prosecuting witness could not have so occurred as to coincide with the latter's version of the time and place of the commission of the alleged offense, it cannot be said that the fact of her pregnancy tended to prove the corpus delicti of the crime charged. The court should have granted the motion to strike or have directed the jury to disregard this evidence. 16 Cor. Jur. p. 897, § 2203, 2; Dossett v. State, 19 Ala. App. 496, 98 So. 359; Beaudette v. Gagne, 87 Me. 534, 33 A. 23. However, we have no hesitation in holding that in this instance the error neither injuriously affected the rights of the defendant nor prejudiced him in the minds of the jury. In fact, it would appear that this testimony was clearly in his favor, strongly suggesting that some one other than the defendant had had intercourse with the prosecuting witness, thus furnishing a possible motive for an unfounded charge.

[5] The prosecuting witness was not an accomplice. Both appellant and respondent rely upon People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 P. 166. In that case, referring to the crime of incest, it is said, in page 609 (75 P. 168):

"If the prosecutrix, being of the legal age of consent, consents to the incestuous intercourse, unquestionably she is particeps criminis, and her testimony, like that of any other accomplice, uncorroborated, is insufficient to uphold a conviction. Schoenfeldt v. State, 30 Tex. App. 695 [18 S. W. 640]. But if, upon the other hand, she is the victim of force, or fraud, or undue influence, or is too young to be able to give legal assent, so that she does not willfully and willingly join in the incestuous act, she cannot be regarded as an accomplice. Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527 [63 N. W. 1061] 48 Am. St. Rep. 954."

Of course, the incestuous act referred to is an act of sexual intercourse. The age at which an unmarried female is able to give legal assent to such an act is 18 years. Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1. Appellant insists that, since under section 26 of the Penal Code those over 14 years of age are capable of committing crime, and that under section 285 no exception is made of children above the age of 14 years, a girl under 18 and over 14 who commits fornication with a person within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage is declared by law to be incestuous is guilty of incest, and therefore would be an accomplice in a case wherein the other party to the act was a defendant. This argument overlooks the fact that, if the female is the victim, and has not willfully and willingly joined in the act, she is not an accomplice, and that under our statutes, being under the age of legal consent to such an act, regardless of her actual assent thereto, she cannot be said as a matter of law to have willfully and willingly joined in the intercourse.

The judgment is affirmed.

URTON v. OUSDAL. (Civ. 4807.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

Findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal, since appellate court cannot rule on question of preponderance of evidence, but is bound if any evidence supports findings of trial court.

2. Trial $\S$ 28(2)—Whether court should view premises in action on construction contract is within its discretion.

In action on construction contract and for extra work, whether court should view premises is question entirely within its discretion.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 690(5)—In action on construction contract, exclusion of chemist's testimony of analysis of concrete to show proportion of cement held not shown to be error, in view of unsatisfactory record.

In action on construction contract and for extra work, exclusion of chemist's testimony as to result of analysis of concrete used to ascertain proportion of cement held not shown to be error, in view of unsatisfactory condition of record which did not show what portion of cement was analyzed and from what portion of structure it was removed.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 989—Reviewing court will consider entire evidence in determining whether there was error in findings.

In determining whether trial court erred in making findings, reviewing court will consider entire evidence, not limiting itself to portions referred to in appellant's brief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow Judge.

Action by Charles M. Urton against Asbjorn P. Ousdal for a balance claimed to be due under a contract and for extra work. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Bingham, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Mygatt & Crawford and Wm. G. Griffith, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

YORK, J. This is an action brought by plaintiff to recover a balance claimed to be due on a contract and for extra work. Plaintiff alleges the contract and specifications for the work in his complaint, and alleges performance of the same. Defendant admits the contract, but denies that the work was performed according to the terms of the contract and the specifications, and by cross-complaint alleges that different material was substituted for those called for in the specifications. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant on this appeal urges three grounds for reversal.

"First. That the plaintiff admitted the substitution of poorer and cheaper materials in his contract for the foundation of the house he contracted to build, and that he showed no valid reason for said substitution.

"That the evidence shows conclusively that said poorer and cheaper materials were used, but notwithstanding the court found that said substitutions were not made.

"Second. That the court ruled erroneously in refusing to view the premises and in refusing to allow defendants to show the proportion of cement used in said concrete.

"Third. That the judgment and findings of an open book account and an account stated were based upon the erroneous rulings of the trial court."

[1] As to the first ground raised by appellant, an examination of the transcript discloses the fact that there was conflict in the evidence as to whether admission was made or not as to such substitution, and the court upon evidence found that poorer and cheaper materials were not substituted. We cannot, of course, rule on the question of preponderance of evidence. If there is any evidence to support the findings of the trial court, we are bound thereby.

[2, 3] As to the second ground of appeal, or really two grounds designated by appellant as his second ground, we hold that the question as to whether the court should or should not view the premises is one entirely within the discretion of the trial court. If the appellant was prejudiced or surprised by the failure of the court to view the premises after stating that he intended to do so, he had sufficient opportunity to supply any deficiency in the evidence that he might have allowed to exist by reason of his belief that the court was going to make such inspection. The record does not disclose any attempt on the part of appellant to introduce further evidence when the court stated that he did not make such personal inspection. As to the latter part of the second point made by appellant, the record is not in a very satisfactory condition. Just as to what part or portion of the cement had been analyzed by the chemist, and exactly from what portion of the structure the same was removed, was not very clearly in evidence. Therefore we cannot disturb the rule of the trial court in excluding the chemist's testimony as to the result of his analysis. As to whether the chemist tested a portion or sample of the entire concrete body, including gravel, or whether he tested only the mixture of cement and sand which was binding the gravel together, or a pocket of gravel only, is not clearly in evidence.

[4] As to the third point, the evidence is in a somewhat chaotic state, and, taking the portions referred to in the brief of appellant alone, it would be hard to determine how the trial court could have found on the open book account and an account stated, as the record discloses he did find. But, of course, the entire record is what the court had before it, and a perusal of the entire evidence discloses the fact that there was sufficient evidence in the record upon which the court could make its findings. As to any other charges of error that are made, they are charged by appellant in his brief in such general terms that, other than the matters hereinbefore referred to, we have nothing called to our attention which we feel called upon to discuss.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

Habeas corpus — Court may not interfere by habeas corpus with exercise by another court of jurisdiction previously acquired in habeas corpus proceeding.

Court has no jurisdiction to interfere by habeas corpus with exercise by another court of jurisdiction which it previously acquired in habeas corpus proceeding, unless prior jurisdiction of other court has been terminated.

Application by George K. Shaw for writ of habeas corpus. Application denied.

J. A. Tracy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petition for habeas corpus. It appears affirmatively from the petition that the applicant has heretofore applied to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for a writ of habeas corpus and that this proceeding is still pending and undetermined. It is a general rule of wide application that a court is without jurisdiction where it attempts by habeas corpus to interfere with the exercise by another court of jurisdiction theretofore acquired in a habeas corpus proceeding, unless the prior jurisdiction has been terminated.

The application is denied.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 24, 1927.

Habeas corpus ⇨30(2)—Habeas corpus will not issue to secure release from custody of one held under warrant based on information containing evidence of guilt.

Where information contains positive evidence of facts tending to show guilt and is sufficient to support warrant, person arrested and held in custody by virtue of such warrant is not entitled to writ of habeas corpus for his release.

Application by George K. Shaw for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco to secure petitioner's release from custody, in which he is held for extradition. Writ denied.

J. A. Tracy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward M. Leonard, Asst. Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Habeas corpus. Petitioner alleges that he is imprisoned by the acting chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco without authority or warrant. It appears from the return that petitioner is detained in custody under and by virtue of a warrant of arrest issued out of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, which warrant is annexed to such return. It also appears that the warrant was issued upon the complaint of one George Richards charging petitioner under two counts with the crime of felony, to wit, grand larceny, committed in the state of Washington, and with being a fugitive from justice. Certified copies of the original information filed in the superior court of the county of Pierce, state of Washington, and the warrant of arrest, are also attached to the return. At the hearing it was contended that the warrant was issued without any evidence tending to show the guilt of petitioner. There is no merit in the contention. The information contains positive evidence of facts tending to show guilt, and it is sufficient to support a warrant. Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 P. 619. Such being the case, the writ is discharged and the prisoner remanded to the custody of respondent as acting chief of police to be held by him under the authority of the warrant until such charge shall be heard in the manner provided by law, or until he shall be legally delivered unto the custody of the agent of the state of Washington.

BENNETT v. NORTHWESTERN NAT. INS. CO. (Civ. 5383.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 23, 1927.

1. Evidence ⇨413—Parol evidence held admissible to explain transaction by which insured obtained loan and signed purported contract for sale to him of automobile, in action on fire and theft policy not covering car if incumbered (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

In action on policy of insurance covering automobile against fire or theft, and providing company should not be liable if property was incumbered by lien or mortgage, parol evidence of parties held admissible to explain transaction by which insured secured loan and signed document purporting to be contract for sale to him of automobile, withholding title in seller, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, where document was apparently unsigned by party named as seller.

2. Contracts ⇨14—Law does not make contract, where party intended none.

Where parties did not intend to enter into contract, contract will not be implied by law.

3. Insurance ⇨550—Statement in proof of loss that automobile was subject to lease contract held not to estop insured from showing legal effect of transaction under policy providing against incumbrance.

In action on fire and theft policy covering automobile, statement of insured in proof of loss that automobile was subject to lease contract held not to estop insured from showing legal effect of transaction referred to under policy which prevented recovery in case of lien or mortgage on car.

4. Insurance ⇨668(5)—Question whether insured borrowing money and, signing, as buyer, purported conditional sale contract, created lien on car preventing recovery on fire and theft policy, held question of fact.

In action on policy of fire and theft insurance covering automobile, to which defense was that automobile was incumbered by lien or mortgage preventing recovery under terms of policy, evidence as to whether purported conditional sale contract, signed by insured as buyer on obtaining loan, constituted lien or mortgage, held issue of fact for trial court, where contract was apparently unsigned by person named as seller.

5. Insurance ⇨268—Affirmative warranty is condition precedent, breach of which avoids policy (Civ. Code, §§ 2611, 2612).

Affirmative warranty is in nature of condition precedent to validity of policy, which, if broken, prevents policy from attaching to risk which it purports to cover, regardless of materiality of facts warranted, under Civ. Code, § 2612, subject to provisions of section 2611, requiring provision for avoidance of policy in case of breach of immaterial provision.

6. Insurance ⇐280—Representation that car insured was 1921 model constituted misrepresentation of material fact, avoiding policy if model was in fact that of year 1920, where higher premium rate was charged for older car (Civ. Code, §§ 2565, 2581).

Representation that model of car sought to be insured against fire and theft was of year 1921, if in fact car was 1920 model, constituted misrepresentation of fact material to risk, which would avoid policy, as affecting rate of premium or influencing accepting or rejecting of risk, under Civ. Code, §§ 2565, 2581, where higher premium rate was charged for 1920 models than for models of 1921.

7. Evidence ⇐265(2)—Statements of insured in certificate of registration as to year of model of automobile insured held not conclusive in action on policy.

In action on policy of fire and theft insurance, in which defense was that car was falsely represented as 1921 model, instead of 1920 model, statements contained in certificate of registration, signed by insured, though admissible in evidence, held not conclusive as to year of model of automobile.

8. Appeal and error ⇐994(3), 996, 1012(1)—Credibility of witnesses, weight of testimony, and inferences are for trial court sitting as jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

Credibility of witnesses; weight to be given witnesses' testimony, and inference to be drawn from conflicting statements, are questions for trial court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, where trial court sits as jury.

9. Evidence ⇐96(1)—Defendant has burden of proof on issue presented as affirmative defense (Code Civ. Proc. § 1981).

Defendant has burden of proving issue presented as affirmative defense by preponderance of evidence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1981.

10. Insurance ⇐665(3)—Finding that model of car insured was not misrepresented held not against evidence in action on fire and theft policy.

In action on policy of fire and theft insurance covering automobile, in which defense was that model of car, represented as being for year 1921, was in fact that of year 1920, finding of court that model was not in fact misrepresented, so as to avoid policy, held not against evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by W. F. Bennett against the Northwestern National Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Orwitz and Frank J. Fontes, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Francis Neylan, J. Paul Miller, and Bartley C. Crum, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action to recover on a policy issued by appellant corporation upon an automobile by which respondent was insured for the term of one year against direct loss or damage caused by fire or theft. During the term of the policy the automobile was stolen and destroyed by fire, its value at the time of its destruction being in excess of the amount for which it was insured. The action was tried by the court, and upon its findings judgment was entered for respondent in the sum of $1,000, the amount of the policy.

As defenses to the action it was alleged that the automobile at the time of the loss was, without the permission of the insurer, incumbered by a lien, and that at the time of the execution of the policy the insured warranted the automobile to be a 1921 model, when in fact it was a model of the year 1920. The policy contained the following clause:

"Unless otherwise provided by agreement in writing added hereto this company shall not be liable for loss or damage to any property insured hereunder * * * while incumbered by any lien or mortgage."

The evidence shows that respondent, on or about November 5, 1923, arranged with one Turner for a loan from the latter in the sum of $338.50, to be repaid in installments, with interest. Respondent testified that the conversation between the two as to the manner in which the loan should be evidenced was as follows:

"I asked Turner to make a regular form, a regular monthly payment, that I should pay him back that money with interest, and to make it just like he was selling an automobile; that I would sign it, which I did. * * * Turner and I were friends of long standing and I told him I wanted to pay him back. I would accept the money if he would make out a document, such as the one that was presented here, that I would pay him back each month, with interest. * * * I requested that he make a regular form, so that I would know what to pay each month."

He further testified that, after signing the writing alleged by appellant to have created a lien on the car, he was told by Turner that the money loaned had been borrowed from E. F. Hillman and should be repaid to him; that installment payments were made to Hillman, but that no transfer of the title or possession of the car was made to either Turner or Hillman, it being testified by the latter that the document was not signed by him; that he never considered respondent responsible to him for the advances made to Turner; that he had not received or seen the document previous to the trial; and that, Turner was not his agent at the time of the transaction and was not authorized to sign on his behalf.

The document in question was a printed form purporting to be a contract for the sale of the automobile by Hillman to respondent upon the payment in installments as therein provided of an amount equal to the loan. A description of the automobile and the amounts of the monthly payments were typewritten therein, and, according to the printed terms of the instrument, the title to the car was to be retained by the seller until all the payments were made, whereupon a bill of sale was to be executed to the purchaser. The original was not introduced in evidence, and, while the name of Hillman appears in the copy as the seller, it does not purport to have been signed by him or on his behalf. It appears from the testimony that on November 6, 1923, an entry was made in the records of the state motor vehicle department of a change in the legal ownership of the car from R. A. Roberts Company, the concern with which respondent had previously entered into a contract for its purchase, to E. F. Hillman; the latter in this connection testifying that the entry was not procured by him and that he was not a party to the transaction. It was further shown that on November 8, 1923, a bond was issued by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, by its terms indemnifying Hillman against loss which might be sustained in the event of the seizure of the car by the federal authorities; it being recited therein that the car had been sold by Hillman under a conditional sale contract to respondent, and an employee of a firm of insurance brokers testified that a request for the issuance of the bond was telephoned from Hillman's office, and that the premium was remitted therefrom.

As to the latter transaction, Hillman denied that the bond was issued at his request or with his knowledge, and it was testified by his bookkeeper that she at the request of Turner procured the issuance of the bond mentioned. It further appears that a proof of loss signed by respondent contained, under the printed requirement that if, during the currency of the policy, any other person or persons had any interest, mortgage or otherwise, in the automobile, the fact should be stated, the following: "Lease contract E. F. Hillman $300." Respondent testified that, when the proof of loss was verified and delivered to the insurer, the words and figures quoted, which, according to the testimony, are typewritten in type differing in color from the other typewritten portions of the document, did not appear therein; that on the occasion of its delivery a conversation occurred with the agent of the insurer which was as follows:

"We had a conversation about some money, a sum of money that was due Mr. Hillman. He said, 'You haven't anything in here about a mortgage or lien on the car.' I said, 'There isn't a mortgage or lien on the car.' He said, 'Well, you owe Mr. Hillman $300.' I said, 'Yes; I do owe him $300; I owe him a sum of money yet.' He said, 'Well, that should be put in here.' I said, 'Well, it isn't a lien or a mortgage, but, if you want to put something in, why, you can put what you want.' I said, 'If you want to put something in you can put lease contract E. F. Hillman, $300,' and Mr. Dubinske took it to a stenographer and had her type 'Lease contract E. F. Hillman $300.'"

[1-4] While the acts of the parties to the lien transaction were sufficient unexplained to support the conclusion that they intended to create a lien enforceable in equity (Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 18, 74 P. 299), the circumstances were equivocal, and as between appellant and the parties thereto parol evidence was admissible to explain the transaction and show that such was not their intention (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Smith v. Moynihan, 44 Cal. 53; Dunn v. Price, 112 Cal. 46, 44 P. 354; Shattuck, etc., Warehouse Co. v. Gillelen, 154 Cal. 778, 99 P. 348; Luckie v. Diamond Coal Co., 41 Cal. App. 468, 183 P. 178; Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Safeguard Fire Ins. Co., 88 N. Y. 591). The law does not make a contract when the parties intended none (Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Highland Park, 164 Mich. 223, 129 N. W. 46, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 719; Thurston v. Thornton, 1 Cush. [Mass.] 89), nor was the respondent estopped by the statement in the proof of loss from showing the legal effect of the transaction referred to therein (McMaster v. Ins. Co., 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239). The question was thus one of fact (Kinneberg v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 65 Cal. App. 107, 223 P. 81), and we cannot say that the inference drawn by the trial court from the circumstances shown and the testimony of the parties, which it believed, that it was not the intention to create a lien or other incumbrance is not reasonably supported.

The application for the insurance was made by a broker, who, so far as shown, was not a representative of the insurer, and while it was testified by respondent that, not being certain as to the model of the car, he referred the broker for information to a policy previously written thereon, which contained the same description as that in the policy issued by appellant, as was held in Solomon v. Federal Insurance Co., 176 Cal. 133, 167 P. 859, the broker was the agent for respondent, who was responsible for any misrepresentation in the application. In the instant case the policy contained a warranty clause the material portions of which are as follows:

"The following are statements of facts known to and warranted by the assured to be true and this policy is issued by the company relying upon the truth thereof: * * *

"3. The following is the description of the automobile: Model year: 1921. Trade-name: Haynes. Type of body (if truck factory number state tonnage): Suburban. M 38313."

It was further provided that:

"This entire policy shall be void if the assured had concealed or misrepresented any material fact concerning this insurance or the subject thereof. * * *"

[5] Respondent contends that the statement as to the model of the car, if untrue, was not a misrepresentation of a material fact, and further that, it being incumbent on appellant to prove its falsity, this burden was not sustained, and the finding of the trial court, which was adverse to appellant's contention, cannot be disturbed. It is the general rule that an affirmative warranty is in the nature of a condition precedent to the validity of the policy, and, if broken in its inception, the policy never attaches to the risk which it purports to cover (Civ. Code, § 2612; Roberts v. Aetna Insurance Co., 58 Cal. 83; McKenzie v. Scottish Union, etc., Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 555, 44 P. 922; Wolverine Brass Works v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., 26 Cal. App. 183, 146 P. 184) and this without regard to the materiality of the facts warranted (McEwen v. New York Life Insurance Co., 42 Cal. App. 133, 183 P. 373). The extent to which the general rule is modified by the provisions of section 2611 of the Civil Code we need not consider, as it is conceded by appellant that the clause of the policy last quoted above refers to the facts affirmatively warranted.

[6] The evidence shows without contradiction that a higher premium rate was charged for insurance on 1920 models than on those of the year 1921, and in view of the rule that a misrepresentation is material which would affect the rate of premium or influence the insurer in accepting or rejecting the risk (Civ. Code, §§ 2565, 2581; 25 Cor. Jur., Fire Insurance, § 190, p. 155, and cases there cited; Richards on Insurance Law, § 99), the model of the car was a fact material to the risk, and the warranty, if untrue, would avoid the policy.

Appellant, in support of its defense that the car was a 1920 model, introduced in evidence two registration certificates, signed by respondent and filed with the motor vehicle department, in which the car was so described, and it was testified by a witness called by appellant that the original writing signed by respondent to evidence the loan from Turner was shown by the latter to the witness and contained a like description. A copy of this writing which was introduced in evidence by respondent, tended, however, to contradict the testimony of this witness, as the model of the car was not stated therein. With the exception of the testimony of respondent that he never was sure as to the model of the automobile which was purchased by him as a secondhand car, the foregoing comprises the evidence on this issue.

[7, 8] The credibility of the witness and the weight to be given his testimony were questions for the trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847); and while the statements contained in the certificates of registration were relevant and admissible as evidence of the fact in issue, they were not conclusive and their weight as evidence was also a matter for its determination (Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 P. 529; Bush v. Barnett, 96 Cal. 202, 31 P. 2). As the rule is stated by Chamberlayne, The Modern Law of Evidence, § 1390:

"The substantive or procedural law prescribes no predetermined weight for extrajudicial admissions, whether oral or in writing. It leaves the question of weight and construction of an admission, verbal or written, to the jury, entirely unaffected by specific rules as to weight."

[9] The issue was presented as an affirmative defense, which appellant had the burden of proving (Code Civ. Proc. § 1981) by a preponderance of evidence.

[10] No direct evidence as to the model of the car was adduced, and it was for the trial court to determine both the weight of the testimony and the inferences to be drawn from the conflicting statements of the respondent, and we cannot fairly hold, in view of the evidence, that the trial court was not justified in concluding that the proof was insufficient to support the allegations of the special defense.

The judgment is affirmed.

KOEPPLE v. MORRISON, Justice of the Peace. (Civ. 5392.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 23, 1927.

1. Mandamus $\Rightarrow$ 174—Finding that assignment of claim to disbarred attorney for collection was to evade disbarment judgment held surplusage, and will be disregarded.

In mandamus to compel justice of peace to permit disbarred attorney to prosecute action on claim assigned to him for collection, finding that claim was assigned for purpose of evading, nullifying, or escaping effect of disbarment judgment, and that petitioner was agent of assignor, held surplusage, and will be disregarded, where unsupported except for facts that petitioner had been disbarred and assignment was for collection only.

2. Attorney and client $\Rightarrow$ 60—Statute prohibiting disbarred attorney from prosecuting action before justice of peace on claim assigned for collection held valid (Code Civ. Proc. § 299, as amended by St. 1921, p. 100, § 4; § 300, as amended by St. 1923, p. 746).

Code Civ. Proc. § 299, as amended by St. 1921, p. 100, § 4, and section 300, as amended by St. 1923, p. 746, prohibiting disbarred attorney from appearing in propria persona in action before justice of the peace, foundation of which is claim assigned solely for purpose of collection, held valid.

3. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 20(1)—It is common knowledge that collection agencies take assignments of claims for purpose of bringing action; their only interest being percentage as compensation.

It is common knowledge that collection agencies pursue policy of taking assignments of claims for purpose of bringing action; only interest of assignee being percentage as compensation for doing those things ordinarily performed by attorney at law.

4. Constitutional law $\Rightarrow$ 70(3)—Courts will not interfere with statute prohibiting disbarred attorney from bringing action in justice court on assigned claim unless unreasonable or arbitrary (Code Civ. Proc. § 299, as amended by St. 1921, p. 100, § 4; § 300, as amended by St. 1923, p. 746).

Legislature is vested with large discretionary power in determining those matters which are for protection of public, such as Code Civ. Proc. § 299, as amended by St. 1921, p. 100, § 4, and section 300, as amended by St. 1923, p. 746, prohibiting disbarred attorney appearing in justice court on assigned claim, and, unless measure is unreasonable or discretion arbitrarily exercised, courts will not interfere.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by S. Koepple to compel Kenneth E. Morrison, as Justice of the Peace in and for the Township of Santa Ana, Orange County, to permit the petitioner, a disbarred attorney, to prosecute an action upon an assigned claim. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

S. Koepple in pro. per.

Bishop & Wellington, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. The petitioner and appellant, a former member of the legal profession who was disbarred on February 24, 1925, brought an action upon a claim assigned to him for the purpose of collection only in the justices' court of Santa Ana township, where he stipulated to the fact that judgment of disbarment had been entered against him, and that the chose in action was assigned to him solely for the purpose of collection. Upon that stipulation the respondent, justice of the peace, refused to permit the petitioner to proceed with the trial and declined to hear him further, whereupon he filed a petition for the writ of mandate in the superior court. After hearing, judgment was entered denying the writ. This appeal is from that judgment.

Subsequent to the decision of In re Hittson, 39 Cal. App. 91, 178 P. 149, in which it was held that one who had been disbarred had the same right to practice in the justices' court as one who had not been admitted to the bar, and quite evidently in response to the suggestion therein contained that the Legislature had the undisputed right to prevent a person who had been disbarred from appearing in a justices' court, the Legislature amended sections 299 and 300 of the Code of Civil Procedure (St. 1921, p. 100, § 4; St. 1923, p. 746) so that the material portions read as follows:

Section 299:

"* * * During such suspension or disbarment the attorney shall be precluded from practicing as an attorney at law or as an attorney or agent of another in and before all courts, commissions and tribunals in the state, including justice courts, recorder's courts and police courts, and from practicing as attorney or counselor at law in any manner and from holding himself out to the public as an attorney or counselor at law."

Section 300:

"No person who has been an attorney and counselor shall, while a judgment of disbarment or suspension is in force, appear on his own behalf as plaintiff in the prosecution of any action where the subject of said action has been assigned to him subsequent to the entry of the judgment of disbarment or suspension."

[1] The appellant attacks that portion of the findings of fact which says that the claim was "assigned to the petitioner for the purpose of evading, nullifying, or escaping the effect of said judgment of disbarment," and that he "was the agent of the person who had assigned said claim to him." He also asserts that the conclusions of law to the same effect are without justification. It must be conceded that the findings just quoted are without other support than the fact that petitioner had been disbarred previous to the assignment, and that the assignment to him was made solely for the purpose of collection. In so far as the findings go beyond this, we deem them surplusage, immaterial, and unnecessary to determine the issue presented to the court, and they may therefore be disregarded. To determine, therefore, whether the rights of petitioner have been prejudiced, our consideration of the problem must be conducted without regard to the conclusions of the court upon these facts to which the parties stipulated.

[2, 3] The question then frames itself in this manner: Has the Legislature the authority to prevent one who has been disbarred from appearing in propria persona in an action, the foundation of which is a claim assigned to him, solely for the purpose of collection? It is obvious, from a reading of sections 299 and 300 of the Code of Civil Procedure, heretofore quoted, that the Legislature intended to erect such a barrier, and, if such intent is consistent with constitutional guaranties (the petitioner asserts that it is not), we ought to give it effect. We do not need to concern ourselves with the right of the Legislature to prevent any person or class of persons from appearing in propria persona to assert or protect a right—provided there be a substantial distinction between an outright assignment of a chose in action and one for collection purposes only. That there is a marked and vital difference seems to admit of little argument. It is common knowledge that collection agencies pursue the policy of taking assignments of claims for the purpose of bringing action, and that the only interest the assignee has in the subject-matter is a percentage thereof as his compensation for doing those things ordinarily performed by an attorney at law. It is true that he holds the legal title—but it is the bare legal title. Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 P. 913; Chase v. Holmes, 19 Cal. App. 670, 127 P. 652, and Kelley v. Hampton, 22 Cal. App. 68, 133 P. 339. In fact, it was determined in Chase v. Holmes, supra, that the assignment for collection purposes established an agency, revocable by the principal, for the reason that the interest of the assignee to retain a percentage of the moneys collected did not vest him with a power coupled with an interest.

[4] In substance, then, the only interest the assignee or the plaintiff could have would be the fruit of doing that which he is disbarred from doing, to wit, practicing his profession. Petitioner's reply to the last assertion is that he is in the same position as one who has never been admitted, and, since one who has not been admitted may appear in the justices' court as his own counsel upon a claim assigned to him for collection, that appellant has the same right. He argues that section 300 of the Code of Civil Procedure is unjustly discriminatory and therefore violates both the state and federal Constitutions. But the Legislature is vested with a large discretionary power in determining those matters which are for the protection of the public, and, unless the measure is unreasonable or the discretion arbitrarily exercised, the courts will not interfere. In re Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 693, 124 P. 427; Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 152 Cal. 464, 93 P. 70, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260; 14 Ann. Cas. 1080, and In re Barmore, 174 Cal. 286, 163 P. 50, L. R. A. 1917D, 688. It is also a well-recognized principle of constitutional law that there is no unjust discrimination wherever there is a proper classification, and every one who stands in the same relation and under the same circumstances and conditions is treated in the same manner. In re Finley, 1 Cal. App. 198, 81 P. 1041. It cannot be doubted that the Legislature would have the right to say that any person convicted of a criminal offense involving moral turpitude should not be permitted to appear in the justices' court as his own counsel upon a claim assigned to him for the purpose of collection. That such would be a proper classification cannot be denied. The causes for the removal or disbarment of an attorney at law are similarly of such a character as outlined in section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to warrant the Legislature in classifying all of those who have been removed for any of the causes therein mentioned into a special class. There is a great distinction between a man who has proven himself unfit to practice law by the commission of any of the acts denounced by that section and a man who has not proven himself fit for admission. In the first case, the Legislature may properly say as it has, that the public, and in particular those who may desire to assign claims for the purposes of collection, are entitled to the protection of not having them in the hands of those who have proven themselves unfit for the trust.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PIAZZA. (Cr. 966.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1927.

1. Homicide §250—Evidence held to support conviction for manslaughter.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for manslaughter, where defendant killed brother during fight following difficulty over ownership of wine tanks and through enmity arising in settlement of father's estate.

2. Homicide §282—Defendant's guilt of murder or included offense is for jury on conflicting evidence.

In prosecution for murder, it is jury's province to resolve all conflicts in evidence, and on entire evidence determine whether defendant was guilty of murder or any other offense embraced within such crime.

3. Witnesses §37(4)—Witness, who has never heard defendant's reputation for peace and quiet in community discussed, may state that such reputation is good.

Where witness in prosecution for murder declares he has never heard discussed, nor himself discussed, general reputation of defendant for peace and quietude in community in which both reside, it is competent for such witness to conclude from such fact and testify that such general reputation is good.

4. Criminal law §1170(1)—Refusal to allow witness to state that defendant's general reputation for peace and quiet was good, though error, held harmless, in view of court's remarks.

Refusal to allow witness, who had never heard defendant's reputation for peace and quiet in community discussed, to state that his general reputation for peace and quiet was good, though error, held harmless, in view of court's remarks that such statement afforded inference which jury can draw that defendant bore good reputation.

5. Criminal law §1044—Admission of testimony of defendant's character witness held not error prejudicial to defendant, where such witness had never discussed defendant's general reputation, but state made no motion to strike testimony.

There was no error prejudicial to defendant in admitting testimony of his character witness, where such witness stated on cross-examination that he had never discussed defendant's general reputation, but no motion was made by district attorney to strike out his testimony.

6. Criminal law §834(1)—Modification of instruction held not error, where part omitted was but repetition of preceding language.

In prosecution for homicide, modification of instruction that good character of defendant is fact in case in aid of presumption of innocence, and is not to be laid out of view by jury, held not error, where part omitted was in effect but repetition of preceding language.

7. Criminal law §1137(3)—Defendant's counsel, having requested certain instruction, cannot complain because it is given.

In prosecution for homicide, defendant's counsel having asked court to include certain instruction in charge to jury, cannot complain because it was given, even if erroneous in that it was not proper under evidence.

8. Criminal law §776(3)—Evidence held to justify instruction in prosecution for homicide that good character was fact of case not to be laid out of view by jury.

In prosecution for homicide, instruction that defendant's good character is fact of case aiding presumption of innocence, and is not to be laid out of view by jury, held justified under evidence that defendant's general reputation for peace and quiet was good, and that the witnesses had never heard such reputation discussed.

9. Criminal law §723(5)—District attorney's argument relative to Italian race held not prejudicial, where state's witnesses as well as defendant were Italians.

In prosecution of Italian for murder, in which deceased and state's witnesses were also Italians, district attorney's argument relating to Italian race held not prejudicial to defendant.

10. Criminal law §723(5)—There is no justification for district attorney's assault in argument on any civilized race of people as a class.

There is no justification, in prosecution for murder, for general assault on any civilized race of people as a class, in district attorney's argument.

11. Criminal law §719(1)—District attorney may present any theory of case fairly within evidence, and is allowed considerable latitude in presenting cause to jury.

In prosecution for murder, district attorney is entitled to present any theory of case fairly within or deducible from evidence, and he is accorded considerable latitude in presenting case to jury.

12. Criminal law §726—District attorney's argument, relative to note which caused enmity between defendant and deceased, held not prejudicial to defendant, who had invited such discussion in murder case.

In prosecution for murder, in which enmity between defendant and deceased was partially caused by note held by deceased, argument of district attorney relative to such note held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of fact that defendant himself had invited full discussion of merits of controversy concerning note.

13. Homicide §166(3)—In murder case, district attorney was properly permitted to prove that beginning of hostile feeling between defendant and deceased was controversy over note.

In prosecution for murder, district attorney was properly permitted to prove that beginning of hostile feeling between defendant and deceased was controversy over certain note, and that defendant had threatened personal violence to deceased unless deceased delivered note to their mother.

14. Criminal law ☞1186(4)—District attorney's argument as to absence of testimony corroborating one of defendant's witnesses, though constituting gross misconduct, held harmless, in view of conclusive evidence of guilt (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In prosecution for murder, district attorney's argument as to absence of testimony corroborating one of defendant's witnesses, though constituting gross misconduct, held not prejudicial, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, and conclusive evidence of guilt.

15. Criminal law ☞1186(4)—Error in criminal case is not reversible, unless it in fact worked injury (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where error is shown in criminal case, it is duty of reviewing court to examine evidence and ascertain whether error did, in fact, work injury, and mere fact of error does not make out prima facie case for reversal.

16. Criminal law ☞304(2)—As matter of common notoriety, it is known that juries are alert to catch intimation from judge of his opinion of merits.

As matter of common notoriety and common sense, it is known that juries are ever alert to catch from judge some intimation that will give them cue as to what judge thinks of merits of case, and will readily accept court's suggestion or ruling affirming materiality and relevancy of evidence offered.

17. Criminal law ☞855(7)—It is improper for jury foreman, after retiring, to talk to sheriff about penalty for different offenses within crime of murder charged.

In prosecution for murder, it is improper for foreman of jury, after retiring, to talk to sheriff about penalty for different offenses within crime charged, since he should send word to court for such information.

18. Homicide ☞282½—In murder case, jury is not concerned with penalties except for first degree murder.

In prosecution for murder, jury have no concern as to matter of penalties, except that, in case of murder in first degree, matter of punishment, whether death or life imprisonment, rests in their discretion.

19. Criminal law ☞1174(5)—Action of jury foreman in talking to sheriff about penalty for different offenses within crime of murder charged, though improper, held harmless, where defendant was found guilty of lowest offense.

Action of jury foreman in prosecution for murder, in talking to sheriff about penalty for different offenses, though improper, held harmless, where defendant was found guilty of manslaughter, which is lowest, so far as punishment is concerned, of three offenses embraced within crime charged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Pete Piazza was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Rankin, of Willows, and Ezra Cox, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by indictment found and returned by the grand jury of Glenn county with the crime of murder and upon a trial before a petit jury in the superior court of said county was found guilty of the crime of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, and in support thereof urges the validity of the following assignments: (1) That the verdict is not supported by the evidence; (2) that the court erred in certain of its rulings relative to the evidence; (3) that a certain instruction, proposed by the defendant, as given, was so modified as to render it an incomplete statement of the rule sought to be declared therein; (4) that the district attorney, in his argument to the jury, was guilty of misconduct, the necessary effect of which was to prejudice seriously the accused in the minds of the jury; (5) that the foreman of the jury that tried the defendant was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

Preliminarily, and as conducive to an orderly presentation and understanding of the immediate circumstances attending the act of killing, it is proper to explain certain transactions of a business nature affecting the deceased, and the defendant, and particularly their father and mother, the facts in relation to which were developed and shown at the trial. Ignazio Piazza, the deceased, the defendant, and one Tony Piazza, a witness in the case, were brothers. The deceased, by the parents of the brothers and also acquaintances, was known and commonly addressed and referred to as "Charley"; the defendant was likewise known as "Pete." By these names they will at times be referred to herein. The brothers were farmers and grapegrowers on small farms situated in near proximity to the town of Orland, Glenn county, and had been for some six or seven years up to the time that the homicide occurred. Charley lived on his own farm with his family, and Pete and Tony and their respective families lived together and in the same house on a farm not far distant from that of the deceased. Whether the farm was owned severally by defendant or jointly by him and Tony the record does not disclose. It was, however, owned by one or the other or both. About six years prior to the date of the homicide, Pete (so he claimed) caused to be shipped from the city of San Francisco three wine or grape juice tanks (as they are referred to by the witnesses) to the premises of the deceased. These tanks were placed in the deceased's barn and remained there until the date of the killing. The three brothers owned jointly a grape crusher; the brothers rotating in the use thereof in such a way as to cause no inconvenience to any of the three. The father of the three brothers, Guiseppe Piazza, and their mother, Mrs. Marian Piazza, resided in the city of San Francisco. It appears that in the month of April, 1926, the deceased was in San Francisco visiting with his parents, and that at that time a cousin of his, also named Tony Piazza, applied to the father for a loan of $1,000, saying that he needed the money in order to carry on his "grape business." Deceased entered into conversation with his father about his affairs, and in the course thereof the old gentleman stated that he proposed to give his house and lot in San Francisco to his sons Pete and Tony. Charley then asked him how he was going to provide for him. The father stated that he would let the cousin, Tony Piazza, have the $1,000, and that he could make out the note in the name of deceased. This was agreed to, and all three went to the bank, and the old gentleman drew $1,000 therefrom and delivered it to said Tony. The latter signed a note for the amount; it having been prepared by one of the officers of the bank by direction of the father, and the deceased was made the payee thereof. Deceased got possession of the note and gave it to his wife to preserve, and she held it until the time of the homicide.

1. The homicide occurred on the 2d day of October, 1926, between 2 and 3 o'clock p. m., in the barn of the deceased. Other than the defendant, S. D. Koons was the only witness to the homicide. Koons was a farmer living near Orland and not far distant from the ranch of the deceased. He testified that on the day of the homicide he went to the premises of the deceased for the purpose of having some grapes crushed. The crusher, it seems, had two or three days previously been taken away from the premises of the deceased to the farm of the defendant. The deceased, however, having use for a crusher on the day named, leased one from a neighbor, and this was used for the crushing of the grapes of Koons. While the deceased and Koons were engaged in doing the crushing, the defendant made his appearance in the barn, having gone to the deceased's farm in a Ford auto truck. On entering the barn, he stepped up to his brother and a brief conversation was held between them. The deceased asked the defendant why he did not return the crusher, and the latter replied that he had been pitching hay in the daytime and irrigating at night, that he was tired and his brother (Tony) was sick and he could not help load it, and defendant further said:

"I expected you to come and help me load it." The defendant then went to the crusher and engaged in conversation with Koons about the crushing of the grapes. He took hold of the handle of the machine and proceeded to operate it and thus continued to crush the grapes for a few minutes. He thereupon left the barn, but within a short space of time returned and walked over to the pile of staves which he claimed to have left there six years prior thereto and picked up one. The deceased, observing this act of the defendant, addressed the latter, saying, "You must not take those staves." And the defendant thereupon threw with much force the stave at the deceased, who dodged it, and escaped being struck. The deceased then was standing near a table between eight and ten feet from where the pile of staves lay and the defendant stood and hurled the stave at deceased. The deceased started in the direction of where the defendant was, and they immediately engaged in a personal encounter. Koons watched them for some time while they were fighting and until they fell to the ground. He testified that they fought and rolled one another over for some time, and then he turned and started toward the crusher with his back to them. Almost instantly, upon this movement by Koons, a pistol shot rang out, and he hurriedly went to where the brothers were fighting. The defendant was on top of the deceased, holding a smoking revolver in his hand, and pointing it toward the body of the deceased. Koons grabbed him by the wrist and said, "Give me that gun;" and he refused, saying, "No; I won't give you my gun." Koons said, "Well, put it in your pocket;" and thereupon he put it in his pocket. Koons then ordered him to get off of the deceased, and he did so, but stood and held his left foot over deceased. Koons, noticing blood flowing from the face of the deceased, lifted his head and asked him if he had been shot in the head. The deceased replied, placing his hand on his left breast: "No, no; he shot me here; he shot me here." Within a brief period the wife of the deceased, Josephine Piazza, having heard the noise of the shot from her house, which was situated near the barn, rushed to the barn, and, seeing her husband lying upon the ground and bleeding, addressed the defendant, saying, "You shot my husband, your brother." The defendant answered, "Yes; I will shoot you, too;" and he thereupon drew his pistol from his pocket, and she turned and ran around a milkhouse and back of and into the chicken house. He then left the barn with the pistol still in his hand and went to where his automobile was parked. Koons followed him and "told him to get into the machine and get away; there had been trouble enough. He put the gun in his pocket," continued Koons, "and climbed into the machine, and then, after he got in his machine, he took it (the pistol) out of his pocket and stuck it down behind the cushion." Koons further testified that the defendant, after passing through the gate leading into the premises of the deceased, he (defendant) turned his machine so that it faced the gate, and there parked it.

Josephine Piazza, wife of the deceased, testified: That she saw from her house the defendant enter the gate surrounding the premises and go into the barn. That a short time thereafter she heard a pistol shot, the noise of which seemed to come from the direction of the barn. That she asked her mother, who was living with her, if she had heard the shot, to which the mother replied, "Yes; it sounded in the barn." She then asked her daughter Marian if she heard the shot, and she replied in the negative. She testified: That Marian, her daughter, immediately ran toward the barn, and she, (the witness) followed her, and when they got to a gate near the big barn door facing their house, and, as the witness was in the act of going into the barn, she saw the defendant, and said to him, "Did you shoot Charley?" He said, "Yes; you son of a b——, I will shoot you, too." That she thereupon ran back of her house and then toward the chicken house. That after she got into the chicken house she looked through a "little window" and saw the defendant running toward the residence. She further testified that, after the shot was fired and as she was approaching the barn, she heard her husband moaning and exclaiming, "Josie, help," evidently referring to the witness; the deceased being in the habit of addressing her as Josie. She said that, as she saw the defendant leaving the premises in his machine, she went into the barn and found her husband on his hands and knees with his head hanging downward, and that she went on her knees and put his head on one of them. She stated that her husband had a black and blue mark on his forehead, a bite on his left cheek, a bite on the right breast and a "big hole shot in his left breast and bleeding." She testified that three or four days before the day of the killing the defendant and his brother Tony visited the premises of the deceased and stopped at the barn, where they entered into a conversation with the deceased; that she was then in the house, but that she heard loud talking between the men and also noises which sounded like they might be fighting; that she took her baby in her arms and went out into the yard as far as the truck owned by defendant; that she heard the defendant say to the deceased that if he did not take that note to his mother he (deceased) was going to pay for it, and then they drove away. Parenthetically, it may at this juncture be explained that the note referred to was the one given by their cousin Tony Piazza to the deceased in San Francisco in April, 1926, for $1,000, which was delivered to said Tony by the father of the three brothers.

Marian Piazza, the daughter of the deceased and Josephine Piazza, testified: That she saw the defendant when he reached the farm of her father and saw him enter the barn. That she herself later entered the barn for the purpose of hunting for eggs; that while she was in there engaged in that employment she heard the defendant and her father and Mr. Koons talking with each other. That she left the barn and went to the house and into the kitchen, and shortly thereafter, having heard her mother ask her grandmother a question relative to what was going on in the barn, she immediately started toward the barn and entered it. Before getting inside, she heard her father moaning and "calling 'Josie, help.'" When she entered the barn, she found her father on his knees, with one hand on his head, which was hanging down, and "I found Uncle Pete still with the gun pointing at him like that" (indicating); that is, he was standing over the deceased and pointing the revolver downward toward the body of the latter. That she thereupon started toward the gate to go into the road and give the alarm to their neighbors. That about the time the defendant started to leave the premises, but before doing so she heard him say to some one, she did not know who, "You son of a b——, I will shoot you, too." That she thereafter got out into the road, ran a considerable distance toward the houses of several different neighbors, and shouted with such vigor as to attract the attention of some of them and they left their homes and immediately went over to the barn, having been told by the witness that her father had been shot. She testified, as did her mother and the witness Koons, that the weapon that she saw in the hands of the defendant at the time was a nickel-plated revolver. She also testified: That three or four days before the time at which the homicide occurred, she saw the defendant and his brother Tony at the barn on their farm. That they came in an auto truck on which they loaded the grape crusher which, as before stated, was jointly owned by the three brothers. That she heard from the porch of the house a conversation carried on between the three, and that the manner in which they were talking seemed to indicate that they were going to fight. That they were "talking about that note." That she heard the conversation between Tony and her father as follows:

"Defendant: You take that note to your mother.

"Father: Come into the house and you can read it.

"Defendant: No; you take it to your mother."

And just before Tony and Pete left, and as they were getting into the car, defendant said, addressing the deceased, "Don't forget, you take that note to your mother or you will pay for it."

R. J. Yates, a farmer living about 200 yards from the home of the deceased, his farm bordering on a road running east and west, testified: That he left his house about 2:35 p. m. to go to his letter box. That when he reached the northeast corner of his house he heard a "muffled shot," the sound coming from the direction of the barn of the deceased. That he thereupon cut across the corner of his place, thus saving 50 feet distance between his farm and the barn of the deceased, and ran to said barn. "I heard quite a lot of hollering," he said, and, as he reached the barn, he saw a number of other neighbors going toward the barn. He said that he saw Marian, the daughter of the deceased, going through the gate into her father's premises after the defendant had left. On going into the barn he saw Mr. Koons and also the deceased on his knees and holding his hand over his side. That "there was blood all over his face and running down his head on the side of his face."

Dr. J. D. Edmundson, a physician and surgeon, practicing his profession at Orland, was immediately summoned after the shooting, and in response immediately went to the home of the deceased. When he arrived there, he found that the deceased had passed away. He at that time made a cursory examination of the body of deceased and found a gunshot wound which apparently had entered between the third and fourth ribs a little above the heart. He also noticed bruises on the face, and observed that the "left part of his nose was near cut off and split on one side." Later Dr. Edmundson assisted Dr. F. M. Lawson of Willows, county physician of Glenn county, in conducting the autoptical examination of the body of the deceased. The results of this examination were substantially in accord with those of the superficial examination previously made by Dr. Edmundson. The physicians, however, probed the gunshot wound and found it to have entered the body two inches above the left nipple and passed entirely through the body, coming out just to the left of the spinal column and about five inches higher up than at the point of entrance. The other wounds—those in the face and breast—were described by Dr. Lawson, who stated that they appeared to have been caused by biting.

Deputy Sheriff Carl Heard of Glenn county, immediately upon learning of the shooting, hastened to the scene of the homicide and proceeded to make a search for the defendant. The defendant, however, had left the deceased's premises and the deputy sheriff then went to the residence of the former and there searched for him. The officer testified that he kept up his search throughout the entire night, having during the night gone to the home of the defendant several times and renewed his searches there without avail.

Sheriff Roy Heard testified that he also immediately repaired to the premises of the deceased upon learning of the homicide; that he arrived there some time after 4 o'clock, found the deceased wounded as already described, and that he was the party who sent for Dr. Edmundson. He said that he made a search of the premises of the deceased for the purpose of apprehending the defendant if he were there, but that he was unsuccessful, the defendant having left before he arrived at said premises. He also testified that the first time he saw the defendant after the homicide was committed was at the county jail about 5 o'clock the day succeeding that of the shooting; the accused having been brought to the jail by a traffic officer at Corning, Tehama county, by the name of Hobson.

The story of the defendant relative to the homicide and the circumstances leading thereto was briefly as follows: That he went to the home of the deceased on the day of the homicide in his Ford truck, his purpose being to take to his home the wine tanks or the staves of which they are made; that he spoke to Mr. Koons and discussed with him the matter of crushing grapes, and himself took hold of the handle of the crusher and crushed a few; that thereafter he stepped over to the pile of staves and picked up one; that his brother thereupon said to him that he could not take those staves, as they belonged to him (deceased); that at about the same time the deceased rushed toward him and got him by the body and feet and tripped him, and they fell to the floor, where they rolled over, and then the deceased began biting him; that he in turn inserted his teeth in the flesh of the deceased in several different places and finally, while he was on top of the deceased, observed that the latter had a pistol in his left hand; that he immediately grabbed the pistol and each attempted to use it on the other, or that he attempted to prevent the deceased from shooting him; that within a few seconds the pistol was discharged, with the result as above stated. He denied having thrown a stove at his brother, denied that he threatened his sister-in-law, the wife of the deceased, and denied that he flourished a pistol and threatened to shoot her. He said that he did not take a pistol with him to the premises of the deceased, and that the pistol with which the shooting was done was owned by the last named. After the trouble had ended, he said, he got in his truck, and, without stopping at his home, proceeded in the direction of Hamilton City, which is situated about eight miles east of the town of Orland. He testified that he was anxious to get to the Sacramento river, which was a few miles beyond Hamilton City, as he was very thirsty and also desired to bathe his face. He finally reached the river, drank some water, and bathed his wounds and then got into his car and started in the direction of the town of Corning, Tehama county; that he had gone but a short distance when he became drowsy and everything appeared to him to be dark, and he then concluded to stop the car and take a sleep. This he did, and remained in the car until late in the night, when he awoke and then started on his journey, going to a farm situated near Corning, where at one time he was employed. When morning came, he proceeded, he went to the home of a cousin of his not far from the town of Corning. He told his cousin about the difficulty between him and his brother and the shooting, and requested his cousin to get an officer so he could surrender himself. The cousin went out and found the traffic officer above named and the defendant was taken by him to the county jail of Glenn county, arriving there about the hour of 5 o'clock on Sunday, the 3d day of October. The defendant admitted that he had on several occasions discussed the matter of the note above spoken of with the deceased. He said that he had been appointed, by request of his mother, administrator of the estate of his deceased father and that (as is clearly to be implied from his testimony) he considered it his duty to look after and secure the possession of all the assets of the estate, of which he regarded said note as a part. He stated, however, that his discussions with the deceased regarding this note were inspired by his mother who needed the money (the estate being of little value), and that he did not carry any personal feeling or resentment in the discussions.

The wife of the defendant testified that he owned a pistol, but that he left it at their home when he went to the deceased's home on the day of the shooting; that her husband carried no weapon with him that day. She exhibited the pistol at the house to the officers and other persons, and it, according to said officers, corresponded with the description of the weapon with which the shooting was done as it was described by Koons, the widow of the deceased, and their daughter. Other members of the defendant's family gave substantially the same testimony as given by the wife of the defendant.

One Sam Passafiume testified that some two or three days before the killing he was with defendant and deceased in a cornfield about three-fourths of a mile from the deceased's place (whether the defendant's cornfield or not the record does not show), and that deceased seemed to be acting in a sullen manner; that defendant, addressing the deceased, asked him what was the cause of his queer actions; that the latter replied in effect that defendant had caused a notice of some character in connection with their father's estate to be mailed to him (probably a notice of the date fixed for the hearing of the defendant's application to be appointed administrator), and that he did so to annoy him (deceased). The witness further testified that, on the same day, and within a few minutes only after that conversation between the two brothers, he and deceased, out of the hearing of the defendant, held a conversation, in the course of which, and referring to the notice mentioned, the deceased, speaking of the defendant said: "My brother give me trouble. He got the square head. It is better to kill him." On cross-examination, the witness said that he did not at any time communicate that conversation either to defendant or his brother Tony. It was also thus brought out that Passafiume, at the first trial of the case, it having been once before tried, the jury disagreeing, did not give that particular testimony.

There was considerable testimony received regarding the merits or demerits of the claim of the deceased that he was the owner of the note to which reference has been made above. This testimony, except in so far as the fact of its existence was concerned and that there was a controversy between the defendant and the deceased concerning the ownership thereof, threw no light on the issue before the jury, and indeed was not relevant to the issues.

The above brief statement of the facts as they were related by the witnesses for the people and by the defendant and his wife embraces a synoptical recital of all the important testimony directly involving a disclosure of the circumstances leading to and attending the commission of the homicide.

[1, 2] From the testimony, as thus it has been presented herein, and the conclusion arrived at by the jury, as evidenced by their verdict, it may properly be assumed that the following facts were found, and on this appeal must be taken as the established facts in the case, viz.: First, that a bitter feeling had been conceived and was nourished by the defendant against the deceased because of the latter's claim that he was the real owner of the note for $1,000 or the money represented by said note, which their father had loaned to their cousin; the deceased claiming, as has been shown, that his father, in his lifetime, had given him the money, and, to the end that he might receive the same, directed that the note be made, and accordingly it was made payable to the deceased. Second, that there existed a difference between the two brothers relative to the ownership of the wine or grape juice tanks or staves mentioned and the defendant's feeling of bitterness against the deceased was thereby intensified. Third, that defendant, arming himself with a pistol, went to the farm of the deceased on Saturday, October 2, 1926, for the purpose of carrying away the staves or tanks. Fourth, that when he went to the pile of staves and picked up one, and the deceased protested against the taking of the stave by him, the defendant threw the same at the deceased with great force, and that the latter escaped being struck by the stave only by dodging it. Fifth, that the two brothers then engaged in a personal combat, fell to the ground, and in the scuffle rolled one another over, one being on top and then the other, alternately and viciously biting each other; that at last, while the defendant was on top of the deceased, he drew his revolver and fired a shot into the body of his brother, inflicting a mortal wound; that he remained over his body with the weapon still pointed toward the body of the deceased until S. D. Koons, the witness above referred to, made him arise; that he then held his foot over the deceased until said Koons induced him to put his pistol in his pocket. Sixth, that the widow of the deceased, having heard the shot from the pistol, rushed toward the barn and was there met by the defendant, who, after acknowledging in response to her inquiry as to whether he had shot her husband, drew his pistol from his pocket and, calling her an opprobrious name, said that he would kill her, too. The jury could further have concluded, from all the circumstances in the case, that the defendant, after leaving the premises of the deceased, went to his own home, left his revolver there, and thereupon departed from his house with the intention of fleeing and thus escaping apprehension by the officers. It cannot for a moment be doubted that the foregoing facts were sufficient to establish a case of murder against the defendant. It is true that the testimony is in conflict upon some of the vital questions of fact in the case, but, as is well understood, it was for the jury to resolve all conflicts and upon the entire evidence determine whether the defendant was or was not guilty of murder or any other offense embraced within that crime. In this connection, it may be suggested that it is a significant fact that if, as the defendant testified, the shooting was done with the weapon of the deceased under the circumstances described by Koons, he would have taken with him to his home said weapon. It will be noted from the testimony above given by all the witnesses, other than the defendant and his witnesses, that no weapon was found near the deceased immediately after the shooting or on his premises at any time subsequent thereto, a search having been made by the officers for a weapon within a few hours after the homicide was committed. But, be this as it may, it is perfectly clear that, as stated above, a very strong case of murder was made against the defendant, and that he received at the hands of the jury a most considerate degree of mercy when they returned a verdict of guilty against him of the lowest offense comprehended within the crime charged in the indictment.

[3] 2. The rulings relative to the evidence to which the defendant objects involve the action of the trial court in striking out the testimony of certain character witnesses introduced by him. The witness F. M. Myers, a resident of Orland, was asked whether, prior to the date of the homicide, he knew the general reputation of the defendant "for peace and quiet" in the community in which he resided; to which question he made an affirmative answer, and then stated, in reply to a question as to what that reputation was, that it was good. On cross-examination, the district attorney, seeking to learn the basis of his testimony that the general reputation of the defendant for the traits named in said community was good, asked Myers if he had ever heard such general reputation discussed in Orland or immediately thereabouts. The witness stated that he had not. Thereupon the district attorney moved to strike out his testimony. The motion was granted as to the answer of the witness that such reputation "was good"; the court saying, however, that the statement of the witness that he had never heard the defendant's general reputation discussed constituted proper testimony, for the reason, as the court further explained, that "if he (the witness) has not discussed it, it is in there, and from that the jury can infer that he (the party whose general reputation is under inquiry) has a good reputation." The theory of the court seems to have been that the true rule as to this character of testimony is that, while it is proper to permit a character witness to testify that he never heard the general reputation of a party in the community in which he resides for certain traits of character discussed, it is wholly with the jury to infer and find, and not for the witness himself to state, as a conclusion from such testimony, that such reputation "is good." The theory of the judge that the jury, from testimony of the fact that a party's general reputation in the community in which he resides for certain traits of character has never been discussed by the witness or heard discussed by him, thus become as well prepared to form the conclusion that such reputation of such party is good as is or would be the witness, is logically sound. The only question involved in the inquiry which could become serious or important would be whether the witness had told the truth when declaring that he never discussed or heard discussed the general reputation of the party whose character was under investigation. But, according to the established technical procedure or rule with respect to the admissibility of such proof, the order striking out the answer of the witness Myers that the general reputation, etc., of defendant was good, was erroneous. The true rule as to that sort of testimony is that, if the witness declares that he has never heard discussed nor himself discussed the general reputation of a party for certain traits of personal character in the community in which both reside and have for some period of time resided, it is competent for such witness to conclude from that fact and testify that such general reputation is good. The rule is well stated by Mr. Justice Henshaw in People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 582, 70 P. 662, 663, as follows:

"It is a matter of common sense, common observation, and common knowledge that a man's reputation for peace and quiet is seldom a matter of discussion until some alleged breach of the law calls up its consideration. Thus in Regina v. Cory, 10 Cox C. C. 23, Chief Justice Cockburn remarks: 'I am ready to admit that negative evidence to which I have referred, of a man's saying "I never heard anything against the character of the person of whose character I came to speak on," should not be excluded. I think the fact that it is given in the negative form is the most cogent evidence of a man's good character and reputation, because a man's character does not get talked about until there is some fault to be found with him. It is the best evidence of his character that he is not talked about at all. I think the evidence is admissible in that sense.' And so, without multiplying quotations upon the question, may be cited Ward v. State, 28 Ala. 53; State v. Nelson, 58 Iowa, 208 [12 N. W. 253]; State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 207 [407, 21 Am. Rep. 769]; Davis v. Foster, 68 Ind. 238; Craig v. Craig, 5 Rawle [Pa.] 91; Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65; Davis v. Franke, 33 Grat. [Va.] 413; Rice's Criminal Evidence, § 380; Taylor's Criminal Evidence, § 350."

See People v. Stennett, 51 Cal. App. 370, 197 P. 372; 8 Cal. Jur. p. 57.

[4] But with the rule before us, as it is so expressed, it cannot be said with justness in this case, in view of the remarks of the court in making the order striking out upon the theory as conceived by the judge and explained by him, as indicated above, the answer of the witness that the defendant's general reputation for peace and quiet was good, that the accused could have suffered even the slightest prejudice from said order. The court, in making that ruling, while not directly addressing the jury, nevertheless, in effect, thus told them that such statement by the witness afforded the inference, which the jury can draw, that he (defendant) bore such good reputation in such community. True, the district attorney objected to said remarks, but they were not withdrawn by the court and remained in the record to all intents and purposes as an instruction to the jury that they were at liberty—indeed, that it was their duty—to infer from the testimony of the witness Myers, that he had never heard the defendant's general reputation for peace and quiet in the community in which he and the witness resided discussed, that his (the defendant's) general reputation for the traits named was good. Of course, if it were as a legal proposition, correct to say that, from the testimony of the witness that he had never heard the general reputation of the defendant for peace and quiet discussed, it was for the jury to determine and not the witness to state that such reputation was good, it would not be true that it would be the duty of the jury to infer from such testimony that such reputation was good, since, as before suggested, there would still be the question for the jury's solution whether the witness had or had not heard such discussion. But it stands true that the tendency of the remarks of the court in ruling upon the question of the legal propriety of said testimony was to benefit rather than damage the defendant. It is hardly necessary to suggest that, if the same ruling and in connection therewith the same remarks had been made by the court as to the testimony of a witness testifying for the people—that is, for instance, as to that of a witness testifying in behalf of the prosecution that the general reputation of the defendant for peace and quiet was bad—the defendant would have just cause for complaint, although, even in such case, it might transpire that the record was such that the error involved in the ruling and the remarks would avail him nothing in the disposition of the case on appeal.

[5] The next assignment under the present head—why made, though, we are unable to perceive—relates to the testimony of the defense witness Cooper, who was asked the usual preliminary questions as to the general reputation of the defendant and then whether such general reputation was good or bad, to which he replied that it was "good." On cross-examination, the prosecuting attorney asked the witness whether he had discussed such general reputation with citizens or residents of Orland and vicinity, and he replied in the negative. No motion was made by the district attorney to strike out Cooper's testimony, and it therefore remained in the record to be considered by the jury. There was nothing said by the court, in ruling on objections to Cooper's testimony, or that was said by the district attorney in arguing the objections, that tended in any measure to prejudice the rights of the accused.

A like assignment is urged against the action of the court with respect to the character testimony of the defense witness George Wright. That witness testified that the general reputation of the defendant in the Orland community for peace and quiet was good. In his cross-examination by the district attorney he stated that he had never heard defendant's reputation for those traits of character discussed, and had himself never discussed it. On a motion by the district attorney to strike out the testimony, the following took place between court and counsel:

"The Court: I think it must go out. Of course the testimony that he never heard it discussed will remain.

"Mr. Rankin, Defense Counsel: As I understand it, to be clear, his answer that he knows the reputation and that it is good is stricken out.

"The Court: No; that will stand; that it has never been discussed, never heard it discussed before, and that he discussed it after the offense of course is not proper.

"Mr. Rankin: That is the portion that goes out.

"The Court: Yes."

Frankly speaking, it is difficult definitely to determine from the foregoing colloquy between the court and counsel what part or parts of the answer were stricken out. Assuming, though, that the court purposed to strike out that part of the witness' testimony that the reputation of the defendant was good and to permit to stand in the record the part to the effect that the witness had never heard defendant's reputation discussed, then what is said above relative to the ruling on the testimony of the witness Myers is equally pertinent to the action of the court respecting its rulings as to the testimony presently being considered.

[6-8] 3. The instruction, the modification of which by the court is complained of by the defendant, as originally framed and proposed by the accused, reads as follows:

"Proof of good character, when shown by the evidence, comes in aid of the general presumption of innocence, and is no more to be laid out of view by the jury in their deliberations than is the original presumption itself. The good character of the prisoner, when proven, is itself a fact in the case. It is a circumstance tending in a greater or less degree to establish his innocence, and cannot be put aside by the jury in order to ascertain if the other facts and circumstances, considered by themselves, do not establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

The court modified the instruction by eliminating therefrom the following language, and, as so modified, gave it to the jury:

"And cannot be put aside by the jury in order to ascertain if the other facts and circumstances considered by themselves do not establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

Only a casual reading of the instruction as modified, in comparison with the instruction in the form in which it was proposed, is necessary to show that as modified and given it clearly and with sufficient fullness declares the rule respecting the subject to which it relates. The part omitted from the instruction is, in effect, but a repetition of the preceding language thereof. It will be noted that, as given, the instruction states, and properly so, that evidence of good character, when received, supports the general presumption of innocence, "and is no more to be laid out of view by the jury in their deliberations than is the original presumption itself." The part eliminated states substantially the same proposition, although in a different form of language. But the objection particularly emphasized by counsel against the action of the court in modifying the instruction is (so the contention goes) that it was not only inapplicable, since the court "ruled out the evidence of general reputation," but that the jury "would naturally understand (from the instruction, as given, we may assume is meant) the defendant's proof of good reputation failed, and therefore was not to be considered in the case." To that proposition and the reasoning advanced in its support and the conclusion which is to be deduced therefrom, there are several satisfactory answers, which thus may be summarized: First, that (obviously) the effect of the instruction in the form in which it was submitted to the court for approval would be the same as is claimed for it in the form in which it was modified and given, and that counsel, presumably well knowing the condition of the record as to character testimony, themselves asked the court to include the instruction in its charge to the jury, and therefore are in no position to complain because it was given, even if it was erroneous to give it in any form; second, that the instruction was applicable upon the theory, as explained before the jury by the court, upon which the court excluded the answers to the character testimony for defendant, that his general reputation for peace and quiet was good; third, that the testimony of at least two, and we think three, of the character witnesses for the accused, in which their answers that defendant's general reputation for the traits stated was "good," was not disturbed, but allowed to remain in the record as it was given. The foregoing involves a sufficient consideration of the present assignment.

[9] 4. The district attorney, in the course of his address to the jury, made statements which counsel claim involved gross disparagement of the Italian race, as a class (the defendant being a native of Italy) and for this, it is charged, that official was guilty of misconduct which wrongfully and indeed so seriously affected the rights of the defendant as to have prevented him from securing a fair and impartial trial. The language of the district attorney first adverted to by counsel for the defense, and upon which the charge of misconduct is in part predicated, is as follows:

"He (referring to Tony, brother of defendant) is the bird that goes in and gets these letters of administration. He is the gentleman who shows up here to-day with a deed in his pocket. He is the fine Italian hand in this situation throughout, and he has a particular prominent hand throughout. * * *

"Sam Passafume (witness for defendant, whose testimony is above considered), I think you could infer from his testimony, is no—he is a pretty smart Italian. He seeks the usual 'out' that all of those people seek in this way. If you want to try to get a nickel from him, they can understand perfectly, but if you go to ask them something that they don't want to understand, no sabe, right away, no sabe right away, immediately no sabe. Now Sam is no ordinary hombre, and he knows just exactly what he is doing in connection with those things, and what does Sam do. He is also in this league. He is in this league of people from the same part of Italy, from the same neighborhood—Sicilian. They want to help out their fellow townsman. * * *

"The sole question is, Are you going to make these people abide by our laws? Are you going to make them do business in the American way, or are you going to let them shoot you, or me, or any one else, in that method, their method of settling quarrels, and make a Chicago out of Glenn county, a Sicily out of Glenn county, and let these men shoot you if they have a difficulty with you, and settle their troubles in that method, or shall we do it according to the law of this land, and the customs of America? That is what we are here for to-day, and I think you, gentlemen, will take that most important viewpoint."

The specific objection against the foregoing remarks is that the district attorney thus attempted to prejudice the jury against the accused because of the race to which he belongs—that is, because he is an Italian—and at least by innuendo charged that Italians, as a race, in their native country were proposed to the taking of the law into their own hands rather than to submit to constituted authority in the settlement of differences among themselves, or, if brought into a court of justice, will not scruple to fabricate and give false testimony, if the ends they seek to attain require it; that, on coming to our country and locating here, they bring with them the same notions and practice the same methods. The recent case of People v. Simon (Cal. App.) 252 P. 758, decided by this court, Judge H. L. Preston of the superior court of Mendocino county, sitting pro tem. on this bench, writing the opinion, is cited by counsel as supporting their position that the district attorney's remarks were so prejudicial as to imperatively demand a reversal. In that case, it appears, the defendant was a Hebrew charged with the crime of burning insured property, with the intent to defraud the insurers, and the district attorney, in his argument to the jury, said, among other like and equally reprehensible criticisms of the accused:

"There has, of course, grown up a suspicion in this country with reference to fires whenever a Jew has anything to do with it. * * * And that is the reason they were asking you that question [presumably a voir dire question relative to the nativity or religion of the defendant], was because of the fact that there has been so many fires where the Jew lived in the house, in order to obtain the [insurance] money."

[10, 11] The foregoing language constituted misconduct on the part of the district attorney of the most flagrant character, and was itself sufficient to compel a reversal. There is absolutely no justification for such a general assault upon the race of people referred to by the district attorney in the Simon Case; nor is there justification for any such an attack upon any civilized race of people as a class. There are the good and the bad in all classes or all races, but the latter represent the exception in all. There is, however, a distinction in the particular situation in the Simon Case and that in the case at bar. The obvious purpose of the district attorney, in referring derisively to the defendant and the defense witness Passafiume as Italians and insinuating that the framing up of court cases, to which they are parties, or in which they are solicitously interested, was a common practice with and among the Italians as a race, was to degrade or depreciate the evidentiary value of their testimony. Therefore, since the deceased also was an Italian, and his widow, daughter, and his cousin, Tony Piazza, were of the same race, the three last-named testifying for the people to important and singularly significant facts, it is but reasonable to assume that the effect of the remarks of the prosecutor, if indeed they had any effect at all upon the minds of the jury, was to cause no less damage to the case of the people than that of the defendant. In the Simon Case, there was no witness of the Hebrew race that testified for the people. The defendant himself was the only Hebrew concerned in that case; hence the conduct of the district attorney therein in appealing to race prejudice to obtain a conviction was far more vulnerable, so far as the effect it is to be presumed to have had upon the minds of the jury in their consideration and discussion of the case is concerned, than that of the district attorney in the instant case in uttering the remarks to the jury hereinabove reproduced. From this consideration, however, it must not be assumed that we intend to hold, as a matter of law, that the remarks complained of here were not calculated to injure the defendant, merely because they probably more or less had the same effect upon the people's case. There might be in such a situation other considerations entering into the deliberations of the jury which might lead them to throw entirely against the accused the weight of any prejudice with which their minds might have been poisoned by the remarks of the district attorney in disparagement of the honesty and integrity of the Italian people as a race. But the point we make is this: That in the Simon Case, because of its peculiar circumstances, the mollifying lubricant confined within and at proper times percolating through and out of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution could not penetrate the huge wall of prejudice so firmly erected by the district attorney and so smooth down or eliminate the damaging friction between the invaded rights of the accused and his constitutional guaranty of a fair and impartial trial; whereas, in the present instance, the misconduct, while justly subject to severe censure, was not so serious as to compel the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice followed therefrom, when it is considered and viewed in the light of the conclusive character of the evidence presented by the people as in proof of the guilt of the defendant and the fact that such misconduct had application alike to the people's and the defendant's important witnesses. It should be added, however, that there are parts of the remarks of the district attorney included within the above excerpts from his address to the jury that constituted legitimate subjects of discussion. He was entitled to present any theory of the case fairly and reasonably within or deducible from the evidence. In this regard, considerable latitude is to be accorded to the prosecutor in presenting his case to the jury. As to this, it is sufficient to refer to People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 P. 965, and cases therein cited; People v. Swigart (Cal. App.) 251 P. 343.

[12, 13] Referring to the note executed by the cousin, Tony Piazza, and of which frequent mention has been made above, and to the claim by the defense that the father of deceased and defendant never intended that the money loaned to the cousin was to go to the deceased in exclusion of other members of the family, and that deceased, fraudulently or by undue influence, procured the instrument to be made in his name as the payee thereof, the district attorney in the course of his argument said, in effect, that, if such claim of the defense was well founded, defendant should have subpoenaed and so have produced as a witness the officer of the bank at which the note transaction was had and who prepared the note at the request of the father and in his presence, and thus have shown, if he could, that said transaction as it was carried out was superinduced by the fraud or undue influence of the deceased, or, in other words, thus show that the transaction did not, in material respects, occur or was carried out as described in the testimony of Tony Piazza, the cousin; he having testified that the father gave the money to the deceased and directed the note to be made out in the latter's favor. The district attorney was properly permitted to prove that the genesis of the hostile feeling between the defendant and the deceased was the controversy over the note in question and that the defendant had angrily made a statement to the deceased, which might reasonably be interpreted as a threat to commit personal violence on the latter if the condition involved in the statement were not complied with, and conceivably, as a motive for the act of killing, that, unless he (deceased) delivered the note to their mother, the deceased "would pay for it." This was as far as the inquiry, so far as the note was concerned, should have been permitted to be extended. In other words, proof of the fact that the note was made to evidence a loan of money owned by the father of the brothers, of the fact that the deceased was named in the note as the payee thereof, and of the fact that the defendant claimed that the father did not intend to make a gift of the note or the money payable thereunder to deceased, and that the controversy between the brothers thereupon arising became very bitter, was all that it was proper or necessary to be made relative to that transaction. But counsel for the defendant, with vigorous persistency, pressed upon the court the proposition that they had the legal right to go fully into the merits of the controversy, and, although frequently asseverating that an investigation of the merits in this case could result only in introducing issues, collateral and entirely foreign to any question which could legitimately be tried under the indictment, or to any evidence relating to the charge, and which might be presented and properly received, the court nevertheless permitted, over objection by the district attorney, counsel for the accused to open up and press to the limit and inquire as to whether the note really was owned by the deceased or by the estate of the deceased father of the two brothers. That counsel, having taken the initiative in bringing the merits of the controversy into the case, discussed the merits thereof in their arguments to the jury is a clearly warranted conclusion. In fact, the parts of the argument of the district attorney complained of here plainly imply that counsel for the defense, in their discussion of the case to the jury, went into the merits of the controversy quite fully. Thus the defendant himself, through his counsel, directly invited full discussion of the merits of the controversy by the district attorney, and, while that officer's declaration or insinuation in his address to the jury that the bank officer who prepared the note according to the directions of the father of the brothers was not subpoenaed and produced as a witness by the defendant, was because said officer would not have supported defendant's claim that the transaction was fraudulent or brought about through improper influence brought to bear upon the father of the two brothers by the deceased, was improper, still it is hardly reasonable to conceive, in view of the repeated declarations of the court that the merits of the controversy were wholly foreign to the issues of the case, how it could have exerted any influence upon the minds of the jury against the accused or his constitutional right to a fair trial upon the question whether the slaying of the deceased by the defendant was or was not justifiable or excusable under the law. This consideration, together with the fact that, as before stated, an examination of the evidence discloses a strong case of guilt—indeed, a case in which it clearly appears that a verdict of manslaughter possesses the quality of mercy in a very great degree—irresistibly conduces to the conclusion that the misconduct under review has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[14, 15] Again, proceeding under the present head of assignments, the district attorney referred to the fact that, although the young son of the witness Passafiume, so the latter stated, was present in the cornfield in which the witness and the deceased held a conversation, in the course of which the latter, after some angry words with defendant about the note, remarked, in the presence of the son, that it would be better to kill "that square-head," referring to the defendant, or words to that effect, the defense failed to call the lad as a witness to corroborate that testimony of his father, and intimated that such failure was due to the fact that counsel for the accused were fearful lest, on cross-examination, the boy would not corroborate his father's testimony in that particular. "What do they (counsel for the defense) know," exclaimed the prosecutor in this connection, "but what that boy has told things to other people here and there and everywhere about his father's testimony, and they knew I could ask what was said, if he did not say it, and he would have to tell the truth, but, if he did not tell the truth, I could put these people on the witness stand to show that that was all a lie. But, if they do not produce him, I cannot show it. Aren't you, gentlemen of the jury, and this court, entitled to that bit of evidence from this defense? * * * And why, oh why, is not that boy of Sam Passafiume's here to tell you about that occasion in the cornfield, and that conversation in the cornfield, where Sam tells this dastardly fabrication about that threat?" The foregoing remarks constituted gross misconduct on the part of the prosecutor. But, under the rule promulgated by the Constitution in section 4½ of article 6 thereof, as the scope of that section has been construed and applied by the higher courts of the state, the case should not be reversed therefor, since, as repeatedly declared herein, the defendant's guilt, as the record evidence as it must be viewed and considered by a court of appeal shows, is positively established. The case of People v. Smith, 121 Cal. 355, 360, 361, 53 P. 802, and the recent case of People v. Harris, (Cal. App.) 251 P. 823, are cited by the defendant as authorities in which, so counsel declare, the misconduct of the district attorney, for which those cases were reversed, is no more glaring than the misconduct complained of here. The Smith Case was decided July 1, 1898, long before section 4½ was adopted into article 6 of the Constitution. Down to the date of the adoption of the section of the Constitution just named, the higher courts, as they were then required to do and properly so, did not sanction approval of a judgment of conviction in a criminal case in which gross errors, directly affecting the substantial rights of the accused, were committed. This course was founded upon the proposition that any material departure from the established procedure and practice in the prosecution of criminal cases would tend to, if not actually, cause a denial of the right of persons charged with and tried for public offenses of the fair and impartial trial guaranteed by the Constitution and the laws of the state in such cases. It will not be denied that, in many instances, a miscarriage of justice as against society followed from that course (then necessary to be observed or followed) in the treatment of criminal cases by the higher courts. It was for that reason that the people amended the Constitution so that, where an examination of the evidence and the entire record would plainly show that no miscarriage of justice would result or has resulted from any error occurring in the admission of evidence, in the giving of instructions or any misconduct of the prosecuting officer in his presentation of the case to the jury, the cause should not be reversed. The effect of the adoption of section 4½ of article 6 was to abrogate the old rule that prejudice is to be presumed from any error of law, so that now, where—

"error is shown, it is the duty of the court to examine the evidence and ascertain from such examination whether the error did or did not in fact work any injury. The mere fact of error does not make out a prima facie case for reversal which must be overcome by a clear showing that no injury could have resulted." People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 56, 130 P. 1042, 1046.

The opinion in the case of People v. Harris was handed down and filed December 16, 1926. In that case, the defendant was accused of selling intoxicating liquors contrary to the mandates of the Wright Act. St. 1921, p. 79. The defendant "was a deputy sheriff running a lunchroom in Topango Canyon, in the county of Los Angeles." The district attorney, in his argument to the jury, commented upon the fact that the defendant did not call as witnesses the sheriff and certain deputies to testify to his good character. "Exception was taken to the argument, but the court stated it to be within the bounds of argument, and did not advise the jury." The trial court later instructed the jury that, if they believed "from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, then you should so find, notwithstanding proof of his good general reputation as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen." The appellate court held that that instruction involved error, citing People v. Ashe, 44 Cal.

288, quoting from State v. Henry, 50 N. C. 66. The appellate court, referring to those assignments, said:

"We have carefully examined the transcript of the testimony, and while from that reading, unaided by the opportunity to judge of the credibility of the witnesses, by seeing and hearing them, we are inclined to the belief that the defendant may have sold the liquor, we cannot say that there is no reasonable doubt upon the subject."

[16] It is to be noted that a distinction exists between the Harris Case and this, in that in the first named the trial court declared to the jury that the comments of the district attorney on the failure of the defendant to call the officers named to testify to his good character constituted a proper subject of argument by the district attorney, while the trial court in this case made no remarks concerning the district attorney's criticism of the defense in not calling Passafiume's son to the stand as a witness to corroborate his father's testimony of the conversation referred to. The court's statement in its instruction in the Harris Case that the district attorney's argument in the respect mentioned was legally proper may well be assumed to have exerted no little influence upon the minds of the jury in the connection with which the statement was made. In this case, no objection or exception to the district attorney's remarks having been made by counsel for the defense, the court expressed no opinion as to the propriety or impropriety thereof. As a matter of common notoriety and common sense, it is known that juries, always composed of laymen unfamiliar with the technical rules designed to guide the trial of a case, until, in proper instances, such rules are explained to them by the court, are ever alert to catch from the judge, learned in the law and who sits as the nonpartisan director of the trial, some intimation that will give them a cue as to what he (the judge) thinks of the merits of the case, and will readily accept, as they must, for the particular case, the court's suggestion or ruling affirming the materiality and relevancy of the evidence offered. Hence, in the Harris Case, the weight of the judge's opinion as to the right of the district attorney to make a point of the fact that the defendant, by failing to call the officers named to support his case by testifying that he was a man of good general reputation as a law-abiding citizen, must have exercised a potent influence on the jury against the accused or his defense. In connection with the consideration of the instant assignment, we may, even at the expense, more or less, of repetition, pertinently emphasize the fact that the main witness for the people in this case (Mr. Koons)—in fact the only direct witness to the tragedy other than the accused himself—was wholly a disinterested party in the case, so far as he was individually concerned. There was no motive or partisanship in him for or against either the state or the defendant. He had known the deceased for about three weeks only, during which period he had met him but three or four times; one of those occasions being the day of the tragedy, and had never seen nor met the defendant until the day and at the time of the slaying of the deceased. It may from these facts be confidently assumed that Mr. Koons absolutely had or entertained no degree of friendship for the deceased or any feeling of animosity or hostility towards the accused or any attitude of mind with reference to the case that would induce him to tell anything but a straight story of the circumstances leading to and immediately attending and following the fatal combat as he saw it. And he was positive as to all the facts to which he testified. His testimony was not impeached, nor was there any serious effort to impeach it. His testimony alone, the jury believing it, was sufficient to justify a verdict of conviction. That the defendant held in his breast a feeling of malice not only against the deceased, but also against the latter's wife, was shown by his (Koons') testimony and that of the deceased's daughter and widow, to the effect that, after slaying his brother, the defendant, on seeing the widow of the deceased, drew his pistol from his pocket, in which he had deposited it immediately after the shooting, but only on the urgent importunity of Koons, and threatened to kill the widow of deceased, even cursing her and following her, as she, in a state of fear, fled hastily and in quest of a place of safety. Again, the defendant's testimony that, while he and the deceased were on the ground, clutching and fighting and viciously biting each other, first one on top and then the other, he saw in and took from the left hand of the deceased the pistol he (the defendant) used in taking his brother's life, might well have been regarded by the jury, as presumptively they did so regard it, as a pure fabrication. The deceased was "right-handed," according to the testimony of his widow, and it is more than probable that if, at the time they were fighting, he had had on his person a pistol, the weapon would have been carried on his right side, where he the more conveniently could have taken it from his pocket, particularly under the conditions in which the fight was being waged. Koons said that he saw no weapon on the person of the deceased while he (Koons) and deceased were together engaged for several hours in the barn in crushing grapes; that he saw no weapon of any kind until he saw the pistol in defendant's hand instantly after the shooting. The deputy coroner, living at Orland, a short distance from the scene of the tragedy, who was there within a brief time after the tragedy was enacted, testified that he found no pistol or other weapon upon the person of the deceased or in the barn. The sheriff and a deputy, who were at the scene of the homicide a few hours after it occurred, especially searched for a weapon and found none at the premises of the deceased. The widow testified that her husband never owned a pistol. The pistol found at defendant's home corresponded in description with that with which the shooting was done. From these and other circumstances, it was a reasonable theory which the district attorney presented in his argument that defendant, before leaving for the river, after the shooting, stopped at his home and left his pistol with his family. The jury could have reasonably adopted, and no doubt did adopt that theory of the defendant's disposal of the weapon. This recapitulation and analysis of some of the evidence as presented by the people is to show that, as to the facts, there is no analogy between this and the case of the People v. Harris, supra. Again, it is to be noted that, unlike the action of the court in that respect in the Harris Case, the court in this case gave to the jury a clearly expressed and a correct instruction on the character testimony and the part such testimony, when relevant, is designed and entitled legally to play in the jury's deliberations in a criminal case.

Finally, in the present connection, it may be suggested that, while the conclusion that the judgment and the order should be permitted to stand is based, so far as the misconduct of the district attorney above reviewed is concerned, upon the conviction following from an examination of the entire evidence in the case that a miscarriage of justice has not resulted from such misconduct, yet the fact may nevertheless be noted that the attorneys for the defendant at no time interposed an exception to the objectionable remarks of the district attorney or assigned the same as misconduct, so that the court would have been afforded an opportunity to admonish that officer to refrain from employing such an argument and to instruct the jury to pay no heed to the remarks. Some of the remarks above quoted herein would not be reviewable unless such an exception had been taken thereto, while some of them, particularly the last considered, might be held to be intrinsically so objectionable as to require no specific objection thereto to justify a reversal of the case. People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 592, 102 P. 266; People v. McDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 551, 140 P. 256.

5. The last assignment to be considered is the alleged misconduct of the foreman of the trial jury after the case had finally been submitted to that body for deliberation. This point was urged on the one hand and resisted on the other upon affidavits. R. M. Rankin, attorney for the defendant, deposed that the room in the courthouse of the county of Glenn, to which the jury retired to consider the case after it was submitted to them adjourns the courtroom in said courthouse; that the jury retired for deliberation upon the case at about 6:30 p. m. on December 20, 1926, and that affiant, while said jury were engaged in such deliberation, was in the courtroom from 9:50 p. m. of said day, and continuously remained there until the jury returned their verdict to the court; that, at about four minutes to 10 o'clock p. m. of said day, Chester Robinson, foreman of said jury, knocked upon and opened the door of the jury room, "and upon the appearance at said door of Roy Heard, sheriff of Glenn county, the said Chester Robinson said to said sheriff, in substance, as follows: 'How can we get information as to the penalties?' and said Roy Heard * * * answered, in substance, as follows: 'You fellows have no jurisdiction except as to murder in the first degree, as stated in the instructions and verdict you have' (meaning the form of verdict submitted by the court to the jury), and further stated, 'You will have to call the court.' The said sheriff then called the court and the officers thereof, and within a few minutes thereafter the said jury announced that they had a verdict and returned the same herein."

Robinson, in his affidavit, admitted that he knocked at the door of the jury room, that said sheriff went to the door, and thereupon said Robinson, addressing the sheriff, said, "We would like to get some information about penalties," to which the sheriff replied, "You have the instructions of the court and the verdict in there which state that you have nothing to do with the penalties, except as to first degree murder, but you will have to call the court to get any information, and I will call the court." The foreman further deposed that, prior to the said episode, the jury had already voted on the question of the guilt of the defendant and had unanimously found him guilty, but, so the affidavit implies, had not determined the particular offense embraced within that charge of which he was guilty.

[17-19] The foreman should not have talked to the sheriff about the penalty for the different offenses within the crime charged, but should have sent word to the court for that information, although, as to the matter of penalties, a jury have no concern, except, as the court instructed them, that in a case of murder of the first degree the matter of punishment, whether death or life imprisonment, rests in their discretion, nor should the sheriff have attempted to vouchsafe an answer to the foreman's question. But we cannot perceive wherein the defendant was in the remotest degree prejudiced by the incident. The sheriff accurately repeated, in substance, what the court had said to the jury in its instructions regarding their verdict. Besides, the court, upon a consideration of the affidavits, was at liberty to find, as the affidavit of Robinson alleged, that the jury had, before the foreman had talked to the sheriff, unanimously agreed upon the proposition that the defendant was guilty of one of the three several offenses comprehended within the crime charged but not of a particular one of said offenses, and the implication from the order denying the motion for a new trial is that the court so found. In that situation, if the jury obtained the information they were seeking through their foreman under the circumstances as explained, it would seem, since the crime of which the defendant was found guilty was the lowest, so far as punishment is concerned, of the three embraced within the crime charged, he certainly suffered no prejudice—indeed, he was favored and materially benefited.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

KNAUGH v. BAENDER et al. (Civ. 5453.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 24, 1927.

1. Mortgages ⇨38(1)—Finding that deed absolute on face was mortgage held sustained by evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that a deed absolute on its face, which was given by owners of land to purchaser thereof on execution sale, was in fact only a mortgage.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Trial court's finding that deed absolute on face was mortgage will not be disturbed if evidence of party so claiming when taken by itself satisfied trial court.

If the evidence offered by a party claiming that a deed absolute on its face is in fact a mortgage is sufficient to satisfy the trial court thereof when taken by itself, the trial court's finding to such effect will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Deeds ⇨206—Finding that one certain person gave deed to another certain person, designated in deed by assumed name, held sustained by evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain the trial court's finding that one certain person gave a deed to another certain person, who was designated as grantee by an assumed name.

4. Deeds ⇨31—One may receive title under assumed name and thereafter may convey good title under such assumed name.

A person may assume any name in which to receive the title to property, and, if he does so, he can convey good title under such assumed name.

5. Deeds ⇨45—Deed signed in grantor's presence at his request and with his authorization was sufficiently signed (Civ. Code, § 1091).

Where a deed was signed by a person in the grantor's presence, at his request, and with his authorization, it was sufficiently signed although not signed by the grantor himself, under Civ. Code, § 1091, providing that real property may be transferred by a writing subscribed by the party disposing of the real property.

6. Mortgages ⇨304—Where deed from first party to second party was actually mortgage, subsequent deed from second party to first party releases mortgage.

Where a deed absolute on its face given by first party to the second party was in fact only a mortgage, a subsequent deed given by the second party to the first party operated as a release of the mortgage.

7. Acknowledgment ⇨6(2)—Defective acknowledgment of deed does not affect transfer of title.

That a deed is defectively acknowledged in no way affects the transfer of title.

8. Quieting title ⇨43—Under complaint to quiet title, admitting deed held not error, where evidence thereafter showed that one under whom title was claimed had assumed name by which grantee was designated and was true grantee.

In an action to quiet title, where the complaint was in the usual form, the court did not err in admitting a deed where the evidence subsequently showed that the one under whom the title was claimed had assumed the name by which the grantee was designated, had received the deed, and was the true grantee.

9. Evidence ⇨370(4)—Deed proper in form was admissible without preliminary proof (Code Civ. Proc. § 1951).

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1951, a deed was admissible without preliminary proof where it was proper in form.

10. Evidence ⇨373(1)—Under complaint to quiet title, admitting deed held not error, where evidence showed that one under whom title was claimed had assumed name by which grantor was designated and was true grantor.

In an action to quiet title, where the complaint was in the usual form, the court did not err in admitting a deed, where the evidence showed that one under whom title to the disputed land was claimed had assumed the name by which the grantor was designated and was in fact the true grantor.

11. Husband and wife ⇨267(1)—Husband's sole deed conveying for valuable consideration community property acquired prior to 1917 is sufficient.

Where community property was acquired prior to 1917, husband's deed conveying it for a valuable consideration passes complete title without the wife joining in the deed.

12. Estoppel ⇨72—Wife joining in conveyance held estopped to assert title as against subsequent innocent purchaser for value (Civ. Code, § 3543).

Where a wife joined in a conveyance she was estopped to assert title as against an innocent purchaser for value without notice of the true character of the conveyance, he being protected by statute and the real owner of property since, under Civ. Code, § 3543, if one of two innocent persons must suffer loss, the one whose act causes the loss must bear it.

13. Husband and wife ⇨267(1)—Wife selling on execution for alimony property received by husband in exchange for community property ratified exchange.

Where husband transferred community property in exchange for other property, and thereafter wife caused execution to issue for alimony in divorce action and sold the property received in exchange for community property, she ratified the exchange.

14. Husband and wife ⇨267(1)—Wife by own act may ratify husband's acts.

The law permits a wife by her own act to ratify and affirm her husband's acts.

15. Deeds ⇨31—Man receiving title under assumed name could not assume additional name of Ada M. G. in conveying title.

A man assuming the name of G. F. G. in which to receive title could not assume names of G. F. G. and Ada M. G. in which to convey title.

16. Appeal and error ⇨837(2)—Prosecution held no basis for inferences in action to quiet title, evidence not being same.

Criminal prosecution for offering for filing for record a false and forged deed held no basis for drawing inferences on appeal in a subsequent action to quiet title, in which it was claimed that the defendant in the criminal case had a fraudulent intent; the two cases not being based on the same evidence.

17. Appeal and error ⇨837(2)—Prosecution where evidence conflicted, jury found fraudulent intent, and appellate court affirmed conviction held no basis for inferences in action to quiet title where evidence conflicted and court found against fraudulent intent; presumption favoring judgment in each case.

Criminal prosecution for offering for filing for record a false and forged deed, in which the evidence was conflicting and in which the jury found that defendant had a fraudulent intent, and in which conviction was affirmed by the appellate court, held no basis for drawing inferences, on appeal in a subsequent action to quiet title in which the evidence was conflicting and in which the trial court found that the defendant in the criminal action had no fraudulent intent, since in each case the presumptions were, on appeal, in favor of the judgment.

18. Appeal and error ⇨1043(1)—Refusing to compel witness to answer questions respecting identity of persons signing assumed names to deed held not prejudicial, where evidence showed identity.

In an action to quiet title, it was not prejudicial error to refuse to compel a witness, claiming that answers would incriminate him, to answer questions seeking to elicit the identity of the persons signing assumed names to a deed, where the evidence showed that the witness had signed the assumed names.

19. Appeal and error ⇨1056(1)—In action to quiet title, excluding testimony respecting conversation with former owner with reference to quitclaim deed to defendant held not prejudicial to defendant, where conversation occurred subsequent to former owner's conveyance to plaintiff's remote grantor.

In an action to quiet title, sustaining an objection to a question as to whether witness had a conversation with a former owner of the land in dispute with reference to making quitclaim deed to defendant held not prejudicial error as to defendant, where the conversation, if it occurred, was subsequent to the former owner's conveyance of the property to plaintiff's remote grantor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action to quiet title brought by Laura M. Knaugh against Lillie Baender, who brought a cross-action against plaintiff and others. From an adverse decree, Lillie Baender appeals. Affirmed.

L. Gonsalves and A. T. MacDonald, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Nusbaumer & Bingaman, and Ralph W. Arnot, all of Oakland, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree quieting title to certain real property in an action brought by respondent against appellant and others. Appellant in her answer denies the title of respondent and by way of cross-complaint alleges title in herself and has brought in under an order of court the parties herein designated as cross-defendants.

The property involved was originally the community property of one Charles L. Baender and defendant and cross-complainant Lillie Baender, and the same was acquired previous to the year 1917. On August 24, 1919, a writ of execution was issued out of the superior court of Alameda county in the case of Arthur T. Johns v. Charles L. Baender and Lillie M. Baender et al., and at such execution sale on November 18, 1919, one F. B. Schuyler purchased the property. On November 10, 1919, Charles L. Baender and Lillie M. Baender and others conveyed the property to F. B. Schuyler. On November 20, 1919, Schuyler conveyed the property to G. F. Gillellen; November 22, 1921, G. F. Gillellen and Ada M. Gillellen conveyed the property to Charles Baumann; December 12, 1921, Charles Baumann and Elsie Baumann, his wife, conveyed the property to Laura M. Knaugh; and on February 17, 1922, Laura M. Knaugh conveyed the property to Cora B. Dermott. Such is the chain of title as shown by the records. On August 17, 1921, a decree was entered granting Lillie Baender an interlocutory decree of divorce from Charles L. Baender, and by such decree the court set aside the property in controversy to Lillie Baender for life.

An appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree of divorce; the appeal was subsequently dismissed and the remittitur was sent down to the trial court on July 7, 1922.

[1] On the date of the execution sale by the sheriff in August, 1919, and just previous to the bid of Schuyler for the property, one Niels Gostave, who at the time had the record title to the property, but which was owned by Charles L. Baender and Lillie M. Baender as community property, together with Charles L. Baender and Lillie M. Baender and other persons, by grant, bargain and sale deed, conveyed said property to F. B. Schuyler. The facts and circumstances surrounding the execution of this deed and the bid of Schuyler at the execution sale as appears from the evidence were as follows: Charles L. Baender and F. B. Schuyler were dealing together concerning the purchase by Schuyler of an invention made by Baender. During such negotiations the execution sale referred to was advertised, and Baender requested Schuyler to come to his rescue. Baender raised $275, which was all the money he could raise to purchase the property at the execution sale, and Schuyler advanced the remaining $500 necessary to bid the amount of the judgment and costs, and the property was purchased in the name of Schuyler. Previous to the execution sale Charles L. Baender and appellant Lillie Baender for reasons of their own carried the record title to the property in the name of one Niels Gostave, but, this fact having been discovered by plaintiff in the action of Johns v. Baender et al., the execution sale was proceeded with regardless of the record title in Niels Gostave, and under the judgment in that case holding the conveyance to Niels Gostave void. Schuyler was brought into the transaction, and instead of making a loan to Baender on a mortgage took a deed absolute on its face, which the court in its findings found to be a mortgage. Against this finding of the court the appellant urges the objection that it is not supported by the evidence. We are of the opinion that the evidence supports the finding of the trial court in this respect. The record discloses that Baender and Schuyler at the time of the transaction, in order to make it appear that Schuyler was an actual purchaser, arranged the transaction as follows: An additional sum of $2,000 was apparently paid over by Schuyler to Baender at the office of the Alameda County Title Insurance Company, but which sum was immediately and as soon as Baender and Schuyler went outside the Title Company's office paid back to Schuyler by Baender by agreement previously arranged between them. So far as the transaction appeared on its face, Schuyler was the purchaser at the execution sale for the sum of $775 and a purchaser of the equity under a deed from Niels Gostave, Charles L. Baender, appellant Lillie Baender, and others for the sum of $2,000. Such, however, was not the fact. Baender himself paid $275 of the $775 bid at the sale, and Schuyler advanced the difference. On November 18, 1921, over two years later, Schuyler received a sheriff's deed to the property. Baender and Schuyler both testified that the $500, being the money Schuyler actually advanced, was a loan, and the deed was taken as security.

The following, quoting from the testimony of Schuyler and Baender, is sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the deed was intended as a mortgage. Schuyler testified:

"Q. Didn't you tell me last night that the deed was merely taken as a bond, that if the patent was not issued, that you would be safe in your money? A. That is what I told you now; if the patent issued I would have the property with the money that I put up. But if the patent—that is, if the patent did not issue. But if the patent did issue, I was to buy it back with the property.

"Q. You were to reconvey the property if the patent issued? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And the property itself was merely taken as security that the patent would issue? A. No; taken as security for the money that I advanced.

"Q. It was taken as security for your money? A. Sure. When you put up any money you get property as security, don't you?"

Baender testified:

"Q. Now, you say this $2,000 and the Twentieth street property were turned over to you by Mr. Schuyler in payment for one-half interest in this invention; is that true? A. In order to make clear, I think I can explain a little more fully. Mr. Schuyler advanced on the invention $500, which he paid to the sheriff for this property, and he took that property as security for the $500 that he advanced as part payment. * * *

"Q. Was there any understanding or agreement between you and Mr. Schuyler to the effect if letters patent did not issue you were to give him back the money or property? A. No, sir; there was not anything in writing to that effect. There was a verbal agreement if the patent did not issue I would give him back the $2,000.

"Q. Or the property; is that it? A. Either one."

[2] The testimony, together with the inferences logically to be drawn from the circumstances surrounding the transaction considered most favorable from appellant's viewpoint, creates merely a conflict in the evidence. If the evidence offered by respondent taken by itself was sufficiently clear, satisfactory, and convincing to satisfy the trial court that the deed was in fact a mortgage, such finding will not be disturbed on appeal. Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357; Hillwig v. Boyer (Cal. App.) 254 P. 662.

[3] Baender and Schuyler continued to deal with each other concerning Baender's invention and the sale thereof to Schuyler. During the negotiations Baender got into trouble, and Schuyler advanced the sum of $2,000 for bail for Baender, this money being the $2,000 referred to in the testimony of Baender quoted above. The money was paid on an assignment of a one-half interest in the invention and had nothing to do with the original transaction concerning the property. The testimony shows that it was agreed between Baender and Schuyler that, if the patent for the invention was issued, the patent was to be sold to Schuyler and he was to be paid the money he advanced at the execution sale. As a result Schuyler considered the obligation eliminated and was prepared to reconvey the property to Baender or to whomever he desired it conveyed. Baender, not desiring to take the title in his own name, had Schuyler make the deed to G. F. Gillellen, which the court found in its findings to be an assumed name. This name was very similar to the name of Baender's brother-in-law, with the exception that the brother-in-law's name was spelled with three 'I's' instead of four, and the deed was delivered by Schuyler to Baender, Schuyler's testimony being that he was delivering the title to Baender as Baender should request, as he had no further interest in the matter. Baender testified that he used a name very closely resembling the name of his brother-in-law in order that in case of death his brother-in-law might be able to convey the property without the necessity of probate under certain instructions that he thereafter wrote upon a typewriter and pinned to the deed.

Baender testified that it is not true that at the time of making the Schuyler deed he had in mind his brother-in-law, G. F. Gillellen; it was C. L. Baender himself that he had in mind; that he never told anybody that the grantee in the deed from Schuyler to Gillellen was his brother-in-law; that he never assumed the name of his brother-in-law and sister and never signed the name G. F. Gillellen of Los Angeles; as a matter of fact, when he signed the name G. F. Gillellen he signed it as his own; that there is no such thing as exclusive ownership of a name; that he assumed the name for convenience; and that he authorized and directed the execution of the deed under the name Gillellen to Baumann.

The evidence is sufficient to support the finding that F. B. Schuyler gave to C. L. Baender, under the name of G. F. Gillellen, a deed to the property in question.

[4, 5] It is the settled law of this state that a person may assume any name in which to receive title to property, and that if he assumes such a name a conveyance by him under such assumed name passes a good title (Fallon v. Kehoe, 38 Cal. 44, 99 Am. Dec. 347; Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 97 P. 17, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792), and in Wilson v. White, 84 Cal.

239, at page 242, 24 P. 114, 115, the court uses this language:

"It is involved in the very conception of a deed that there must be a grantee, to whom delivery is made, and in whom the title can vest. If there be no grantee, and the deed is to a mere fictitious name, it is obvious that it is a nullity. But if there be a person in existence, and identified, and delivery is made to him, it makes no difference by what name he is called. He may assume a name for the occasion; and a conveyance to and by him under such name will pass title."

It is urged that the deed is ineffective since it was not signed by Baender himself. The testimony, however, shows that it was signed by a person in Baender's presence, at his request, and with his authorization. This is a sufficient execution of the deed. In Blaisdell v. Leach, 101 Cal. 408, 35 P. 1020, 40 Am. St. Rep. 65, the court says:

"The Civil Code, § 1091, requires that a grant of real property shall be subscribed by the grantor in order that the title may be transferred thereby, but it is not necessary that the signature of the grantor be affixed by himself. It may be so affixed by another, if done in his presence, and by his own direction (Gardner v. Gardner, 5 [Mass.] Cush. 483 [52 Am. Dec. 740], and he may also adopt and ratify a signature made by another without any previous authority (Bartlett v. Drake, 100 Mass. 174, 97 Am. Dec. 92 [1 Am. Rep. 101]); and the adoption of a forgery has been held to be binding upon the maker of a promissory note (Forsyth v. Day, 46 Me. 176; Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 [Mass.] Allen, 447). The owner of property cannot be divested thereof by a forged instrument, but his conduct in reference to the instrument may estop him from denying its validity. As between himself and the person who committed the forgery such estoppel may not arise, but if, with knowledge of the forgery, he should declare to an innocent person that the signature was his own, and that he had executed the instrument, and thereby induced him to purchase the property, he could not afterwards claim the property upon the ground that the instrument was a forgery."

[6, 7] If the deed held by Schuyler was merely a mortgage—and it was so found to be by the trial court—the deed from Schuyler to Baender under the name Gillellen, as grantee, would operate as a release of such mortgage, as was likewise found by the court. Appellant contends that the Gillellen deed was not acknowledged as required by law. The fact of a defective acknowledgment in no way affects the transfer of title. Gordon v. City of San Diego, 108 Cal. 264, 41 P. 301.

[8-10] Appellant claims that it was error to admit the Schuyler to Gillellen deed in evidence because of no pleading. The pleading was in the usual form of an action to quiet title, which has been held sufficient. Rough v. Simmons, 65 Cal. 227, 3 P. 804; Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 443, 21 P. 946. The admission of the deed was simply a matter of evidence under the pleading. The deed, being proper in form, was admissible without any preliminary proof. Sec. 1951, Code Civ. Proc. After its introduction evidence was offered and the court found that Baender had assumed the name Gillellen and that he had received the deed. This was sufficient to fix the identity in Baender. Appellant also claims error in admitting the deed from Baender under the name Gillellen as grantor to Baumann. There is likewise no merit in this claim of error.

[11] The property in controversy was acquired by the Baenders prior to 1917, and it was stipulated at the trial that up to the date of the Baumann deed, which was November 22, 1921, the property was the community property of Charles L. Baender and Lillie M. Baender. On that date Charles L. Baender, under the assumed name of G. F. Gillellen, deeded to Charles Baumann—his wife, Lillie M. Baender, not joining in the deed. Unless it be on account of the interlocutory decree of divorce entered on August 17, 1921, setting aside the property to Lillie M. Baender for life, this deed passed a complete title, as the husband's deed alone conveying community property for a valuable consideration, as in this case, acquired prior to 1917, passes a complete title without the necessity of the wife joining in the deed. Roberts v. Wehmeyer, 191 Cal. 601, 218 P. 22.

[12] Appellant urges that the interlocutory decree of divorce vested a life estate in the property in Lillie M. Baender and that therefore a deed to the property without her joining as a grantor did not pass complete title, and cites us to Abbott v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 660, 232 P. 154, in which the court uses this language:

"But when each and every period has expired within which an attack could have been made by motion or by appeal, then and in that event the so-called interlocutory decree, in so far as it adjudges the property rights of the parties, becomes a conclusive decree."

In the instant case an appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree, and such appeal was pending on November 22, 1921, when Charles L. Baender, under the assumed name of Gillellen, deeded to Charles Baumann. It is not material, however, when or if at all the interlocutory decree vested title in Lillie M. Baender, for by her deed to Schuyler she is estopped from asserting title as against a subsequent innocent purchaser for value.

[13, 14] The title of an innocent purchaser for value as here and without notice of the true character of the conveyance cannot be disturbed; he is protected by the provisions of the statute and by his purchase becomes the real owner of the property. Todd v. Todd, 164 Cal. 259, 128 P. 413; Carpenter v. Lewis, 119 Cal. 18, 50 P. 925; Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 P. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61. The parties who executed and placed upon the record such deed are estopped as to a subsequent innocent purchaser for value from averring that the instrument is not such as it appears to be. 17 Cal. Jur. 802, and cases cited. Appellant joined in the conveyance to Schuyler, which led subsequent purchasers for value to ignore the divorce decree. It is well established that if one of two innocent persons must suffer loss, the one whose act is responsible for the loss must be the sufferer. Civ. Code, § 3543. Further than this, the evidence shows that Lillie M. Baender caused execution to issue for back alimony due in the divorce action, and under the execution sold the property which Baender received in exchange for the property sold to respondent's predecessor in interest, thereby affirming the transfer of Charles L. Baender and ratifying his act. A wife by her own act may ratify her husband's acts and affirm them. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 P. 537.

[15] Appellant is correct in the contention that, even though Baender could assume the name of Gillellen, he could not also assume the name of Ada M. Gillellen. Assuming the name Ada M. Gillellen is the basis for holding Baender criminally liable; but this name was not necessary to pass title. When Baender signed the assumed name G. F. Gillellen, that of itself was sufficient to pass a good title without the name Ada M. Gillellen subscribed to the deed under the authority of Roberts v. Wehmeyer, supra.

[16, 17] Appellant has called our attention to the case of People v. Baender, 68 Cal. App. 49, 228 P. 536, which was an appeal by Charles L. Baender from a judgment of conviction of having offered for filing in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county a false and forged deed, the Charles L. Baender convicted being the same Charles L. Baender referred to here and the transaction being the offering for record for filing the deed from G. F. Gillellen and Ada M. Gillellen to Charles Baumann. Appellant here seeks to have us sustain appellant's contention by passing on conflicting evidence in the instant case and by drawing inferences from the case of People v. Baender. On established principles of law this cannot be done, as the evidence in the cases is not the same. In People v. Baender the letter upon which the court lays stress was introduced, but it is not in evidence in this action, and there are other differences as to the evidence and facts surrounding the trial. In People v. Baender a man was being tried by a jury, which found him guilty, but on evidence somewhat different than that in the instant case. The jury having found against Baender and that his intent was fraudulent, all intentions were in favor of that finding and judgment, and the appellate court could hold only that all of Baender's defenses were untrue. The court did not usurp the province of the trial court and pass upon conflicting evidence. Here the court having found that Baender's statement and act were clear of such fraudulent intent, all intendments and presumptions are in favor of the finding and judgment. In both cases there was a conflict in the evidence.

[18, 19] Appellant objects to the court's rulings allowing Charles L. Baender, when testifying as a witness, to refuse to answer certain questions on the ground that his answers would incriminate him and in sustaining an objection to a question propounded to the witness Schuyler as to whether he had any conversation with Baender in reference to making the quitclaim deed to Lillie Baender, this quitclaim deed being executed on December 9, 1921. Had the court's rulings been otherwise on these objections, it would have made no difference, as the question asked of Baender was to elicit the identity of the persons signing the assumed names, and the question asked of Schuyler was directed to a conversation which, if it occurred at all, was subsequent to the conveyance of the property to Baumann.

This disposes of the errors assigned by appellant. From what has been said it follows that we find no error in the record. Furthermore, the equities of the case are all with the respondents.

The judgment is affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 114

CROCKER v. CROCKER et al. (Civ. 3162.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 22, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators $\hookrightarrow$ 455—Attempted appeal by plaintiff executrix from order denying new trial did not present for review issues solely between plaintiff in individual capacity and defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Attempted appeal by plaintiff as executrix from an order denying a motion for new trial held not to present for review, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, providing when appeal may be taken, an issue which was under the pleadings and evidence solely between the plaintiff in her individual capacity and defendant.

2. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 139—Evidence held to sustain finding that corporation's stock was transferred to partner on partnership's dissolution.

Evidence held to sustain trial court's finding that corporation's stock, owned by a copartnership, was on dissolution transferred to member who assumed debts, though the transfer was not entered on the corporation's books.

3. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 129—Transfer of corporate stock, not entered on corporation's books, was valid between parties (Civ. Code, §§ 324, 1044).

Transfer of corporate stock by a copartnership to member who assumed debts on dissolution of partnership was valid, under Civ. Code, § 1044, providing that any property except as provided by statute may be transferred, though not entered on the books of the corporation in conformity with section 324, which especially excepts from its operation transfers as between parties.

4. Executors and administrators $\hookrightarrow$ 421—Executrix's suit to recover corporation's stock theretofore transferred by partnership of which deceased was member was legally between transferor and transferee.

Action by executrix to recover stock which stood on corporation's books in name of dissolved partnership of which deceased had been member, and which had been transferred, was in legal contemplation between the transferor and the transferee, since executrix, for the purpose of administration, stands in the shoes of deceased.

5. Partnership $\hookrightarrow$ 77—Copartner held possession of shares of stock registered in partnership name, since partner's interest extends to every portion of partnership property (Civ. Code, § 2402).

Copartner at all times had possession in legal contemplation of shares of stock registered in partnership name, since under Civ. Code, § 2402, the interest of each member of a partnership extends to every portion of its property.

6. Corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 94—"Certificates of stock" in corporation are paper representation of incorporeal right.

"Certificates of stock" in a corporation are the paper representation of the incorporeal property right.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Certificate of Stock.]

7. Partnership $\hookrightarrow$ 282—Property in shares of stock passed from copartnership to member on dissolution when partners agreed on present transfer (Civ. Code, § 1140).

Claimant became the owner of shares of stock owned by the copartnership when on dissolution an agreement was reached by him and his sole partner for a present transfer of the other's interest to him, under Civ. Code, § 1140, providing that the title to personal property passes to buyer when the parties agree on a present transfer of a thing identified.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action upon a policy of life insurance and to quiet title to personal property by Mary Estell Crocker, executrix of the estate of William Franklin Crocker, deceased, against Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker, substituted as defendants instead of the Western States Life Insurance Company. Judgment for the second named defendant, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying a motion for a new trial and from the judgment. Appeal from the order denying a new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

James F. Gaffney, of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and Henry S. Lyon and J. D. Elliott, both of Placerville, for respondents.

HART, J. The complaint originally filed herein was by the plaintiff above named and against the Western States Life Insurance Company and one Warren Crocker to recover on a life policy of insurance on the life of the plaintiff's testate in the sum of $1,867.16, and, as a second cause of action, to have adjudged that 110 shares of the stock of defendant insurance company are the property of and rightfully belong to the estate of the deceased.

The beneficiary named in the insurance policy upon which recovery is sought by the plaintiff, as executrix, etc., is Warren Crocker, the brother of the deceased. The shares of stock referred to are in the name of "Crocker Bros.," the firm name or designation by and under which the deceased and said Warren Crocker, during a long period of time prior to the death of the former, conducted general merchandising stores in the county of El Dorado. The plaintiff is the widow of the deceased, William Franklin Crocker.

On December 27, 1924, all the parties entered into and filed a written stipulation, in which it was stated: That the Western States Life Insurance Company "admits its liability in the sum of $1,867.16 under the policy mentioned in plaintiff's complaint"; that "in said policy, and upon the records of said defendant, said Warren Crocker appeared as the beneficiary under said policy," and that the said Warren Crocker, as such named beneficiary, and the plaintiff, Mary Estell Crocker, individually, and as the widow of the deceased, have each made a claim to the money payable on said policy; that each has made a demand on the defendant insurance company for the payment thereof, and that the claims so made are conflicting. It is further stated in the stipulation that defendant insurance company "is unable to determine the merits of the said conflicting claims of the said parties to the proceeds of said policy and cannot safely pay the same to any of said claimants without an adjudication of the rights of said claimants; that said defendant (insurance company) is anxious and willing to pay to the party or parties entitled thereto the said sum due under said policy, and is willing to deposit said sum in this court to await the determination of said court as to the party or parties entitled thereto." It was further stipulated that the defendant insurance company, the defendant Warren Crocker, and the plaintiff Mary Estell Crocker are willing that the sum of money due and payable on said policy may be deposited with the court, and that the said Mary Estell Crocker and the said Warren Crocker may be substituted as defendants in this action in the place and stead of defendant insurance company, and that the last named may "be dismissed from this action and discharged from further liability with reference to said policy upon the deposit of said sum with the clerk of this court." As to the controversy between Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker over the shares of stock mentioned in the complaint, it was agreed and stipulated by the parties that no stock stands upon the books of said insurance company in the name of William Franklin Crocker, and that, so far as known to said defendant insurance company, said William Franklin Crocker, at the time of his death, owned no stock of said defendant; that the stock here in dispute "consists of 110 shares of the capital stock of said defendant, standing upon the books of defendant in the name of 'Crocker Bros.'; * * * that said Warren Crocker has possession of said certificates of stock and claims to be the owner of said stock; * * * that defendant (insurance company) makes no claim to said stock adversely to plaintiff, or either to said Mary Estell Crocker or Warren Crocker, and is willing to abide by the determination of this court as to the ownership thereof and of the dividends heretofore declared and unpaid and hereafter to be declared upon said stock." The stipulation proceeds, as in the case of the conflicting claims of the Crockers to the insurance money, that defendant insurance company is willing to deposit in court the money due as dividends on said stock, and that the right thereto, as between Warren Crocker and Mary Estell Crocker, as executrix, etc., be litigated in and determined by the court, said insurance company expressly disclaiming any interest in or right to said stock; that, as to said second cause of action, said Warren Crocker and said Mary Estell Crocker be substituted as defendants in the place of defendant insurance company, and that the latter be dismissed from said action as a party defendant thereto and discharged from all liability with relation to said stock; that said Mary Estell Crocker and said Warren Crocker are willing that said dividends be deposited with the court, that they be substituted as defendants as to said second cause of action in place of defendant insurance company, and that the latter be dismissed from said action and discharged "from all further liability with reference to said stock or said dividends upon the deposit of said dividends with the clerk of this court." It was stipulated by the parties that the court be authorized to make and enter an order in pursuance of the provisions of said stipulation. Upon a filing of said stipulation and the depositing by defendant insurance company of the money referred to with the clerk of the court, an order was duly made and entered eliminating the defendant insurance company from the action as a party thereto and substituting as defendants, in place of the insurance company, Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker.

On January 23, 1925, an amended complaint was filed by Mary Estell Crocker, as executrix of the estate of her deceased husband, in which she and Warren Crocker were alone named as defendants. The allegations of the amended complaint are substantially the same as those of the complaint as originally framed and filed. It is alleged in said complaint, as the first cause of action therein set up, that the Western States Life Insurance Company, on the 21st day of December, 1910, made and executed its policy of insurance upon the life of said William Franklin Crocker, payable to Warren Crocker; that William Franklin Crocker died testate, at the town of Camino, in the county of El Dorado, on the 25th day of June, 1923; that plaintiff is the widow of said deceased, and by due proceedings held in the superior court of the county of El Dorado she was appointed executrix of the last will and testament of deceased; that in the month of February, 1923, "and thereafter, and up to the time of his death, the deceased, William Franklin Crocker, requested said insurance company to change the beneficiary in said insurance policy to his wife, Mary Estell Crocker, this plaintiff, and during said time applied to the said insurance company to have the said beneficiary changed from his brother Warren Crocker to his said wife, Mary Estell Crocker, plaintiff herein." It is further alleged that by the terms of said policy the right to remake and change the beneficiary under said policy was reserved to the insured; that deceased "did everything in his power to have said change in said beneficiary (from Warren Crocker to plaintiff) made before his death," but that said Warren Crocker, at all times having possession of said policy, refused to surrender the same, and represented and claimed that said policy had been lost; that for years before the death of William Franklin Crocker "his said brother Warren Crocker took and had possession of said policy of insurance," and, by representing to the deceased that the same was lost and his refusal to surrender the same, "prevented the change of beneficiary from himself to this plaintiff against the will of deceased." There are certain formal allegations which need not be recited herein.

The basis of the second cause of action involves, as above explained, the controversy between the plaintiff, as executrix, etc., and Warren Crocker, over the ownership of the 110 shares of stock, as set forth in the stipulation of the parties that the insurance company interplead and be dismissed as a defendant in the action and Warren Crocker and plaintiff be substituted as defendants.

Mary Estell Crocker, in her individual capacity, filed an answer to the amended complaint, and, in like capacity, filed a cross-complaint. In her answer, after formal denials of certain allegations of the said complaint, she admits the issuance of the policy on the life of her deceased husband by the said insurance company, as set forth in the amended complaint, but denies that said "policy of insurance is any part of said estate," and alleges that "said policy of insurance and all proceeds therefrom belong to Mary Estell Crocker, individually." The cross-complaint, with the exception of certain additional amendments, is, in all essential particulars, the same as those of the amended complaint. The additional amendments referred to are:

"That said William Franklin Crocker complied with all the requirements of the rules and by-laws of said Western States Life Insurance Company for the purpose of changing the beneficiary and substituting Mary Estell Crocker, his wife, for Warren Crocker, his brother; * * * that the Western States Life Insurance Company has not paid said policy of insurance," but has deposited the sum of $1,867.16 with the clerk of this court, etc.; "that said Mary Estell Crocker, this defendant, individually, claims to be the equitable beneficiary under said policy, and is the equitable beneficiary, and is entitled to payment of the said sum of $1,867.16; that the claim to payment of said sum of $1,867.16 to Mary Estell Crocker is made in good faith."

The defendant Warren Crocker, answering the amended complaint, admitted: (1) The corporate character of said insurance company; (2) the issuance on the 21st day of December, 1910, of the policy of insurance on the life of the deceased, as alleged in the amended complaint; (3) the death of William Franklin Crocker, at Camino, El Dorado county, on the 25th day of June, 1923; (4) the due appointment of Mary Estell Crocker, as executrix of her deceased husband's last will and testament; (5) that Mary Estell Crocker was the widow of the deceased; (6) that during his lifetime deceased made all required payments on said policy to said insurance company, and complied with and performed all the terms and conditions of said contract of insurance, as alleged in the amended complaint; (7) that said insurance company, shortly after the death of William Franklin Crocker, was furnished with proof of the death of said Crocker, "and also," quoting from the amended complaint, "with a certified copy of the will of the deceased and of plaintiff's letters testamentary, and the plaintiff has otherwise performed all conditions of the said insurance contract on her part."

As to paragraph sixth of the amended complaint (first count) the answer of defendant Warren Crocker denies that deceased intended or tried to, or before his death did everything in his power to, have the beneficiary in the insurance policy mentioned in said paragraph changed from Warren Crocker to Mary Estell Crocker. Defendant denies that William Franklin Crocker "at any time requested the defendant to surrender said insurance policy, either for the purpose of having the beneficiary therein changed from Warren Crocker to Mary Estell Crocker or at all, and denies that he at any time refused to surrender said policy to said William Franklin Crocker. Defendant denies that he at any time stated or represented to William Franklin Crocker that said insurance policy had been lost or misplaced, or by any act or in any way prevented a change of the beneficiary named therein by refusing to surrender the said policy, or otherwise, or at all."

Interposing a special defense, the said Warren Crocker alleges:

That "for more than two years prior to his death, the deceased was suffering from a painful and fatal disease, which finally caused his death, and that, as a result of said disease, he steadily became feeble and infirm in body and mind, until during the months of April, May, and June, 1923, he was so weak and suffering so much that he was easily influenced and controlled by, and yielded to the importunities of, his wife, the plaintiff herein, without exercising any independent volition or control of his acts. That for more than two years prior to the death of her said husband, Mary Estell Crocker, plaintiff herein, continuously and persistently endeavored to prejudice him against his brother Warren Crocker, defendant herein, and to persuade him to transfer all his property, including said insurance policy, to her."

Then follow averments particularizing the acts and conduct of Mary Estell Crocker tending to unduly influence deceased against his brother and to cause her to be substituted for his brother as beneficiary in said policy of insurance; that finally, and for several months immediately preceding the death of her husband, the latter became feeble in mind and infirm of body to an extent that enabled the plaintiff to acquire an overpowering control and directing influence over the mind and will of the deceased to such a degree that, "if he (the said William Franklin Crocker), during the months of April, May, and June, 1923 (as alleged in the amended complaint), filed or made any application or request to the Western States Life Insurance Company of San Francisco to change the beneficiary in said policy No. 531, set forth in the complaint herein, from Warren Crocker to Mary Estell Crocker, the said William Franklin Crocker did so solely and only as a result of" such dominating control "and undue influence" so practiced and exercised upon deceased by the plaintiff; that but for such undue influence, so exercised under the circumstances indicated, the deceased would never at any time have made or filed any application or request for such or any change of beneficiary in said life insurance policy.

Answering the averments of the second count in the amended complaint, defendant Warren Crocker denies that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "the owner of all or any of the shares of the capital stock or dividends accruing thereon, referred to in said second count or cause of action, or had any claim to or interest in any of the certificates or dividends as set forth in said second count of the amended complaint."

The defendant Warren Crocker filed an answer to the plaintiff's cross-complaint, filed in her individual capacity, in which, as shown, she sets up an alleged right in her to the money due under the said policy of life insurance. This answer, as to the denials and allegations thereof, is, in all substantial respects, the same as the answer interposed by said Warren Crocker to plaintiff's amended complaint.

The cause was tried by the court, sitting without a jury. Findings were favorable to defendant Warren Crocker, and judgment was accordingly rendered and entered, adjudging defendant Warren Crocker to be the owner of and entitled to the possession of the money due under the said insurance policy and the shares of stock described in the amended complaint. Mary Estell Crocker, as a "substituted defendant," moved for a new trial, and the motion was denied. She, as executrix of the estate, etc., appeals from the judgment and also from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] The principal point made by the appellant is that the evidence does not support the findings. The respondent, however, on the threshold of his argument, urges the point that, so far as is concerned the first cause of action set up in the amended complaint, the basis of which, as shown, is the claim by appellant of ownership of the money due under the life insurance policy in controversy, the appeals here present no question or point which can competently be reviewed. The notice of appeal from the judgment is, in form, as follows:

"In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of El Dorado.

"Mary Estell Crocker, as Executrix of the Estate of William Franklin Crocker, Deceased, Plaintiff, v. Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker, Substituted as Defendants instead of Western States Life Insurance Company, Defendants. No. 2974.

"Notice of Appeal from Judgment and Order Denying Motion for New Trial.

"To Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker, substituted defendants above named, and to C. E. McLaughlin and Henry S. Lyons, Attorneys for defendant, Warren Crocker, and to the Clerk of said Court:

"Please take notice that the plaintiff in the above-entitled action hereby appeals to the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate

District of the state of California, from the judgment entered on the 17th day of July, 1925, and from the whole of said judgment, and also from the order subsequently made and entered by said superior court, denying the motion of plaintiff, Mary Estell Crocker, for a new trial. * * *

The attempt by plaintiff to appeal from the order denying her motion for a new trial is futile, and the appeal or attempted appeal from said order must be dismissed. Code Civ. Proc. § 963; Hester v. McMullan, 29 Cal. App. 664, 157 P. 521.

It is plainly manifest from the phraseology of the notice of appeal from the judgment that there is afforded no escape from the conclusion that, with respect to the issue involved in the first cause of action set up in the complaint, the plaintiff has not presented here a reviewable record. While it is not expressly stated in the body of the notice of appeal in what capacity she appeals from the judgment—whether as executrix of the estate of her deceased husband or in her individual right upon the issue made by her cross-complaint and the answer thereto by defendant Warren Crocker—it is nevertheless to be noted that the language of the notice necessarily makes its caption embracing or stating the title of the action a part thereof. In other words, the language of the notice, "the plaintiff in the above-entitled action hereby appeals," etc., refers to the action, the entitlement of which is, as above shown, "Mary Estell Crocker, as Executrix of the Estate, etc., plaintiff, v. Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker, Substituted as Defendants instead of Western States Life Insurance Company." By such reference, the title of the action is necessarily imported into and made an essential part of the notice itself, and in effect, makes the notice read as follows:

"Mary Estell Crocker, as executrix of the estate of William Franklin Crocker, deceased, hereby appeals * * * from the judgment entered on the 17th day of July, 1925, in favor of the defendant Warren Crocker and against said Mary Estell Crocker, as said executrix," etc.

And it is only a reasonable interpretation of the appeal taken by plaintiff, viewed by the light of the character of the several pleadings filed by her herein, that will lead to the conclusion that she intended to appeal from the judgment in her representative capacity, and thus, on behalf of the estate, try out or have reviewed the points affecting the issue as to the ownership of the shares of stock described in the amended complaint. This conclusion is supported, not only by the language of the notice itself, but also by the consideration that the notice of appeal was addressed to herself and Warren Crocker, "as substituted defendants above named" and to said Crocker's attorney, conceiving, as we may assume, that her rights on appeal upon the question whether she or Warren Crocker was the rightful owner of the money due under the insurance policy could and would be preserved and reviewed on her appeal from the order denying her motion for a new trial. But, whether intentionally or unintentionally, plaintiff omitted to take an appeal from the judgment in her individual capacity, the fact remains that in the latter role she took no such appeal, with the inevitable result that the question whether the findings of the trial court that defendant Warren Crocker was the beneficiary of the deceased in the insurance policy mentioned, and entitled to the money due under and by virtue of the terms of said policy, cannot be reviewed upon this record, since it cannot be, nor is it claimed, that the estate of William Franklin Crocker has any interest in said policy or the money payable thereon. Indeed, as has been made to appear herein, the plaintiff subscribed to the stipulation whereby the insurance company, expressly declaring that it was indebted under the policy in the sum due thereon either to plaintiff individually, or Warren Crocker, agreed to and did deposit the money due under said policy with the clerk of the court, to be disposed of in accord with any judgment, which as between her personally and Warren Crocker, the court might render and cause to be entered in this action with respect thereto. Furthermore, in her answer, as a substituted defendant to the amended complaint, she specifically denied that the estate, or the executrix thereof as such, had any interest in or right to said money. In her cross-complaint, as seen, she set up a claim to said money in her personal or individual right and an issue thereon was tendered by Warren Crocker's answer to said cross-complaint. Upon those pleadings, that issue was litigated and decided. It may be added that neither she in her individual capacity, nor Warren Crocker, as substituted defendants in the action brought by her as executrix, appealed from the judgment, nor did she, as cross-complainant, take such appeal. From the foregoing considerations, it necessarily follows that the only issue that is open to review by this court on the appeal by plaintiff from the judgment involves the question whether there is or is not sufficient support in the evidence to uphold the finding that the shares of stock in the Western States Life Insurance Company are the property of the defendant. A brief reference herein to the evidence will readily disclose that the finding is sufficiently supported. There is no impropriety, though, in stating that, notwithstanding that we are not required—in fact, as pointed out above, not legally authorized—to review the testimony addressed to the question of the ownership of the insurance money, we have nevertheless read the testimony bearing upon that question (and necessarily have we done so, because of the fact that the testimony upon both issues is more or less intermingled), and thus it is comforting for us to learn that, while the merits of the appeal, in so far as is concerned the issue as to the insurance money, cannot be reviewed or considered because of the omission by plaintiff to observe and follow a rule in procedural law, the record contains sufficient evidence of facts and circumstances to sustain the finding responding to that issue.

[2] As to whether the finding that the ownership of the stock in the insurance company rests in Warren Crocker, the evidence may thus be summarized: In the year 1896, the deceased and defendant, brothers, as has been shown, formed a copartnership under the firm name of Crocker Bros., for the purpose of engaging in the general merchandising business in Placerville, El Dorado county, and in that year did start such business in said town. At some time subsequent to the establishment of the Placerville store—the exact time, so far as we have been able to ascertain from the record, is not disclosed therein—a branch general merchandising store was opened by the firm in the town of Camino, in said county. The two stores were thereafter conducted by the Crocker Bros. simultaneously until the month of November, 1918, at which time a dissolution of the partnership between the brothers by mutual consent was effected. The corporate stock in question was, as seen, in the Western States Life Insurance Company, and consisted of 110 shares, evidenced by three certificates issued and entered upon the stock book of said company in the name of Crocker Bros., and were numbered and dated as follows: Certificate No. 3058, for 80 shares, dated August 27, 1910; certificate No. 3819, for 20 shares, dated August 31, 1910; certificate No. 5204, for 10 shares, dated August 17, 1914. Some time prior to the year 1916 (the exact time not revealed by the record) these shares of stock, then and at the time of the dissolution of the value of $800, were indorsed in blank and as so indorsed delivered to the El Dorado County Bank, at Placerville, by the Crocker Bros., as a pledge to secure the payment of a promissory note evidencing a loan from said bank to Crocker Bros., in the sum of $700. This loan was carried by the bank by annual renewals thereof until after the dissolution of the firm of Crocker Bros., and the stock during all that time remained in the possession of the bank as security for the note. Down to the time of the dissolution, the note was signed by William Franklin Crocker and Warren Crocker. The agreement of dissolution was not in writing. Warren Crocker, testifying in his own behalf, explained that the terms of the agreement to dissolve were (briefly given) that the deceased was to take and did take for his share of the partnership assets the Camino store and business, including the real property used in connection therewith, and that Warren Crocker was to and did receive as his share of the partnership assets the Placerville store and the real property connected therewith; that Warren Crocker was to and did assume the payment of the entire indebtedness due from the firm to certain creditors thereof; that Warren Crocker was to receive and William Franklin Crocker turned over to him as his (Warren's) separate property the stock of the insurance company purchased by and issued to Crocker Bros. Warren Crocker testified that, at some time after the dissolution, the note, to secure the payment of which the stock was pledged, matured or fell due and became payable, that he alone renewed and signed said note, and that henceforward continued so to do upon each annual renewal thereof, and that he paid the interest thereon.

In the course of time subsequent to the dissolution, Warren Crocker disposed of the Placerville store and located at Fallon, in the state of Nevada. It appears that the insurance company had not been notified of the transfer of the stock by Crocker Bros. to Warren Crocker. The result was, of course, that such transfer was not entered in the stock book of the corporation. Warren Crocker failed to notify the insurance company of the transfer of his place of residence from Placerville to Fallon. The insurance company therefore continued to remit to and in the name of Crocker Bros., at Placerville, the dividends earned by and payable on the stock from time to time. Those dividends were received by the deceased, still residing at Camino, and by him appropriated to his own use. Having learned of this, Warren Crocker at Fallon addressed to his brother at Camino a letter in which he (Warren) stated, among other things:

"When you was here (deceased had a short time before visited Warren at Fallon), I meant to speak to you about the Western States Life Insurance Company dividends that you have been collecting. It appears that the letters have been going to Placerville in the name of Crocker Bros., and you have been taking them out and getting the checks. You have had the following checks." (Here specifying four different checks from the corporation and the amount of each; the sum total of the four checks being $140.25.)

"Now, I want you to send the balance by return mail, as this belongs to me, and I need the money very bad."

The deceased replied to said letter, in effect admitting that the claim of Warren Crocker made in his letter in relation to the ownership of the stock was well founded. In the reply letter of deceased, he stated, among other things, that the assets of the firm at the time of the dissolution amounted in value to the sum of $8,000, "so," continued the letter, "I took the Camino store as my share and let you have the balance as your share." That Warren Crocker told the truth when he testified that, as a part of the consideration of the agreement of dissolution he was to assume the payment of the existing indebtedness of the firm, is borne out, if not conclusively established, by the fact that deceased, after the dissolution, replying by letter to a letter addressed to him by a creditor of the partnership, demanding settlement of a claim held against Crocker Bros., by said creditor, declared that Warren Crocker had, upon the dissolution, assumed the payment of all the debts of Crocker Bros., and that to him alone the creditors of the firm must look for satisfaction of their claims against the partnership. And this further tends to confirm or support the testimony of Warren Crocker as to the terms of the agreement culminating in the dissolution of the partnership.

There is other testimony in the record which is more or less corroborative of the testimony of Warren Crocker relative to the terms of the agreement of dissolution, but enough of the evidence on the question of the ownership of the shares of stock has now been considered herein to show that the finding of the court upon that issue is abundantly supported by the evidence.

[3] The point is made by the plaintiff that the purported transfer of the stock by Crocker Bros. to Warren Crocker was invalid because the stock was not formally assigned to the latter. The point is not maintainable. As between the parties themselves—that is, as between the transferor and transferee—a transfer of shares of stock of a corporation may be effected by any of the several modes whereby personal property of a different species may be transferred. Civ. Code, §§ 324 and 1044; Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., 48 Cal. App. 1, 14, 15, 192 P. 55. Section 324 reads in part:

"Whenever the capital stock of any corporation is divided into shares, and certificates therefor are issued, such shares of stock, except as hereinafter provided, are personal property, and may be transferred by indorsement by signature of the proprietor, * * * and the delivery of the certificates; but such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is so entered upon the books of the corporation as to show the names of the parties by whom and to whom transferred, the number of the certificate, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer."

In Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, 174 Cal. 316, 327, 163 P. 54, 59, speaking of that part of section 324 of the Civil Code hereinabove quoted, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Shaw (later Chief Justice), said:

"It [referring to the provision of section 324 relating to corporations organized for the purpose of selling and distributing water for irrigation or domestic uses] does not violate the provision of section 324 that shares of stock 'may be transferred by indorsement' and 'delivery of the certificate.' This language does not forbid the making of agreements to transfer, nor the making of contracts, good between the parties, that a certificate shall pass with the transfer of certain other property. Corporate stock would be transferable without such provision. Civ. Code, § 1044. The provision merely prescribes a mode by which the transfer may be made. It does not prohibit a transfer by other methods, nor declare that when made in another manner a transfer may not be enforced by the party entitled to the shares."

In Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., supra, referring to the provision quoted above from section 324, the court, through Presiding Justice Finlayson, said:

"This section of the Code is intended for the protection of the corporation and those who claim under the persons to whom the certificates were originally issued. The section clearly does not cover the whole subject of transfer. Corporate stock would be transferable without such provision as that contained in this particular Code section. Civ. Code, § 1044."

[4-7] Here, as we have seen, the action to recover the stock is by the executrix of the estate of the deceased. The executrix stands, for the purpose of the administration of the affairs of the estate, in the shoes of the deceased, and therefore the action to recover the stock is, in legal contemplation, between the transferor and the transferee thereof. As "the interest of each member of a partnership extends to every portion of its property" (Civ. Code, § 2402) Warren Crocker at all times, in contemplation of law, not only held possession of the shares of stock, although such stock is a species of incorporeal property (Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., supra) and not capable of manual possession, but also had possession of the certificates which are, as stated in the case just named, "the paper representative of the incorporeal right." The uncontradicted testimony of Warren Crocker is that, in the negotiations looking to the dissolution, an agreement was reached for the "present transfer" of the stock to Warren Crocker, or so much thereof as the deceased, as a member of the partnership, was owner of, and hence the title to the whole of the shares of stock thereupon passed to Warren Crocker. Civ. Code, § 1140. The stock being for the purpose explained in the possession of the bank in so far as such possession could be effected by the fact of the actual possession of the written evidence thereof in the form of certificates, indorsed in blank, what more could be done than was done effectually to accomplish a transfer of the stock to Warren Crocker and vest in him title thereto, except by the mode prescribed by section 324 of the Civil Code, a resort to which mode of transfer, as seen, is not, as between the parties themselves, indispensable to the validity of a transfer of corporate stock, cannot be conceived.

Our conclusion, as the above discussion indicates, is that the findings stand immune from just attack, and that they, in turn, support the conclusions of law.

The attempted appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

TOWN OF MARTINEZ v. JOHNSON, Town
Clerk. (S. F. 12452.)

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ⚡926—Town board might issue bonds bearing lesser rate of interest than rate specified in ordinance calling election to vote on issuance (Municipal Bond Act, as amended [Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1964], particularly sections 2 and 5).

Town board of trustees held to have power to direct by resolution the issuance of municipal improvement bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest per annum, payable semiannually, though the ordinance of the board calling the election to vote on the issuance of the bonds provided that the rate of interest to be paid should be 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, under Municipal Bond Act (St. 1901, p. 27), as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1964) particularly sections 2 and 5.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡907—Legislative intent in enacting statute dealing with interest on municipal bonds must be gathered from statute as originally enacted.

The intent of the Legislature in the enactment of Municipal Bond Act (St. 1901, p. 27), as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1964), particularly sections 2 and 5, as to whether a town board of trustees might issue bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest when the ordinance calling the election to vote on the issuance of the bonds specified 6 per cent. interest, must be determined from the statute as originally enacted and not by any subsequent amendment.

In Bank.

In the matter of the controversy between the Town of Martinez and Raymond B. Johnson, as Clerk of the Town of Martinez submitted on an agreed statement of facts under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1138-1140. Application by the Town of Martinez for a writ of mandate to compel Raymond B. Johnson, as Town Clerk of the Town of Martinez, to sign municipal improvement bonds. Peremptory writ of mandate granted.

A. F. Bray, Town Atty., of Martinez, for petitioner.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1] This application for a writ of mandate was presented to this court upon an agreed statement of facts. The petitioner makes the application under the provisions of sections 1138 to 1140, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which relate to the submission of controversies which might be the subject of a civil action to courts which would have jurisdiction of such action upon an agreed statement of facts. The petitioner herein, the town of Martinez, a municipal corporation, seeks to compel the respondent, as town clerk of said town of Martinez, to countersign certain municipal bonds which had been directed to be issued by resolution of the board of trustees of said town of date February 23, 1927. Previous to the passage of said last-named resolution, and on the 7th day of September, 1926, said board of trustees had, by ordinance duly enacted, called a special election to be held in said town for the purpose of submitting to the qualified electors thereof the proposition of incurring a bonded indebtedness of $75,000 for the purpose of acquiring, constructing, and completing certain municipal improvements described in the ordinance calling said election. Thereafter said election was held in all respects as required by law, with the result that more than two-thirds of the qualified electors of said town voting at said election voted in favor of the proposition to incur said bonded indebtedness and to issue said bonds in the sum of $75,000. In the ordinance calling said election, it was provided "that the rate of interest to be paid on said indebtedness is 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually." In the resolution of February 23, 1927, directing the issuance of said bonds it is provided that—

"All of said bonds shall bear interest from their date until paid at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually."

It will thus be seen that, while the ordinance calling said election provided for a 6 per cent. bond, the resolution directing the issuance of the bonds called for a 5 per cent. bond. On account of this variance between the ordinance and the resolution as to the rate of interest the bonds should bear, the town clerk has refused to countersign the bonds prepared in pursuance of and in conformity with the resolution. The sole question involved in this controversy is the power of the board of trustees to direct by resolution the issuance of bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, when the ordinance calling the election to vote upon their issuance provided that they should bear interest at 6 per cent.

The proceedings to incur said bonded indebtedness were held under the provisions of the Municipal Bond Act (Stats. 1901, p. 27) and amendments thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws of Cal. 1923, p. 1964). In section 2 of said act it is provided:

"* * * The ordinance calling such election shall recite the objects and purposes for which the indebtedness is proposed to be incurred, the estimated cost of the proposed public improvements, the amount of the principal of the indebtedness to be incurred therefor, and the rate of interest to be paid on said indebtedness, and shall fix the date on which such election will be held, the manner of holding such election and the voting for or against incurring such indebtedness, and in all particulars not recited in such ordinance, such election shall be held as provided by law for holding municipal elections in such municipality; provided, however, that if the rate of interest to be paid on such indebtedness shall not exceed four and one-half per centum per annum payable semiannually, the rate of interest need not be recited in such ordinance, but in its discretion the said legislative branch may recite in such ordinance a maximum rate of interest to be paid on such indebtedness, not exceeding six per centum per annum payable semiannually, which rate when so recited, shall not be exceeded in the issuance of bonds for such indebtedness."

All that part of said section after the words "provided, however," was incorporated in the statute by an amendment thereto adopted in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 79). As originally enacted, that portion of said section read as follows:

"* * * The ordinance calling such special election shall recite the objects and purposes for which the indebtedness is proposed to be incurred, the estimated cost of the proposed public improvements, the amount of the principal of the indebtedness to be incurred therefor, and the rate of interest to be paid on said indebtedness, and shall fix the date on which such special election will be held, the manner of holding such election and the voting for or against incurring such indebtedness, and in all particulars not recited in said ordinance, such election shall be held as provided by law for holding municipal elections in such municipality."

Section 5 of said statute, as originally enacted, and which has never been amended, provides for the form of the bonds and their manner of issuance and directs that—

"The bonds shall be issued in such denominations as the legislative branch of the municipality may determine, except that no bonds shall be of a less denomination than one hundred dollars, nor of a greater denomination than one thousand dollars, and shall be payable on the day and at the place [or places] fixed in such bonds, and with interest at the rate specified in the bond, which rate shall not be in excess of six per cent. per annum and shall be payable semiannually."

It will be observed that there is nothing to be found in this section of the act, and this is the only section in the act dealing with this subject, directing that the bond shall bear the rate of interest specified in the ordinance; the only direction being that the rate of interest shall be "the rate specified in the bonds, which rate shall not be in excess of six per cent. per annum, and shall be payable semiannually." In construing these provisions of the act, this court has held that the rate of interest provided in the bond cannot exceed that recited in the ordinance calling the election. Peery v. City of Los Angeles, 187 Cal. 753, 203 P. 992, 19 A. L. R. 1044. A similar ruling was made by this court in construing a like act of the Legislature, passed in 1889, authorizing the incurring of bonded indebtedness for the construction of municipal improvements. Stats. 1889, p. 399, as amended (Stats. 1891, p. 94; Skinner v. Santa Rosa, 107 Cal. 464, 40 P. 742, 29 L. R. A. 512). In O'Farrell v. County of Sonoma, 189 Cal. 343, 208 P. 117, it was held that the board of supervisors of a county could not use revenue derived from the sale of bonds for highway purposes except in constructing the highways described in the ordinance calling the bond election. The reasons advanced by this court in Peery v. City of Los Angeles, supra, for holding that the rate of interest provided in the bonds could not exceed that recited in the ordinance, were that, after securing the assent of the electors of the municipality to the issuance of bonds at a definite rate of interest, it would be a fraud upon said electors for the board thereafter to issue a bond bearing a greater rate of interest and thereby increase the burden of taxation beyond that to which the electors had given their assent. This argument, however, cannot be made against the issuance of bonds which bear a less rate of interest than that recited in the ordinance, as by the issuance of such bonds the burden upon the taxpayer would be lightened rather than increased.

It would have been a simple matter, had the Legislature desired to limit the power of the governing body of the municipality in this respect, to have inserted such a provision in the statute. It did provide for certain limitations as to the rate of interest the bonds should bear—that is, not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. It can well be claimed that this studied effort on the part of the Legislature to avoid providing that the bonds should bear the same rate of interest as recited in the ordinance and in expressly specifying the maximum rate of interest the bonds might bear, evinces an intention to confer upon the legislative body a discretion in fixing the rate of interest within the limitations provided. This discretion cannot be exercised so as to cast upon the taxpayers of the municipality a burden greater than that provided for in the ordinance calling the election, but we can see no good reason why it could not be resorted to in an attempt to lessen such burden. The only possible argument that has been presented against such a construction is that the board of trustees or other governing body of the municipality, after reciting in the ordinance a definite rate of interest and after the electors of such municipality had voted in favor of the bond issue upon the assumption that the bonds when issued would bear said rate, may thereafter fix a less rate of interest and one so low that would render the bonds unsaleable, and thereby defeat the whole scheme of public improvements which had been approved by the electors of the municipality. In answering this argument, we would repeat that the Legislature could have provided against such an exigency by a simple statement in the statute to that effect, and the fact that it did not include any such provision in the statute may well be taken as indicative of the belief on the part of the Legislature that such a contingency would seldom if ever arise. There are advantages in favor of giving such discretion to municipal authorities. A very substantial one is shown by the facts in the present proceeding, that of obtaining the funds for municipal improvements at 5 per cent. instead of 6 per cent. The Legislature may well have considered that the advantages to be gained in investing the municipal authorities with this discretion greatly outweighed any possible disadvantages which might arise in withholding said authority.

The only case directly in point to which our attention has been called is the case of Omaha National Bank v. City of Omaha, 15 Neb. 333, 18 N. W. 63. This statute under which said bonds were issued appears to be in many of its essential features similar to the Municipal Bond Act of this state (Compiled Statutes of Nebraska 1881, p. 694). It provides that the proposition to be voted upon by the electors of said city shall state the rate of interest the bonds shall draw, and that, if two-thirds of the votes cast at said election be in favor of the proposition submitted the city council shall thereupon issue said bonds. Under this statute the city council of Omaha submitted to the voters of said city a proposition for the issuance of bonds to draw interest at 6 per cent. The proposition was adopted, "and the mayor and council, having ascertained that bonds at a less rate of interest than 6 per cent. could be sold at their face value, issued said bonds with interest at 5 per cent., but conforming in all other respects to the proposition as adopted by the electors." In a proceeding to declare these bonds illegal and void, the Supreme Court of Nebraska held:

"No question is raised as to the authority conferred upon the mayor and council, when properly authorized by the electors of the city, to issue bonds for the purpose indicated, and the only question for determination is, did the insertion of a less rate of interest in the bonds than was provided in the proposition, affect their validity, the bonds at the reduced rate bringing more than their face value? The attorneys in the case have been unable to find any case bearing directly upon the question, and in our researches we have found none. The general rule is that all contracts made by municipal officers in excess of their powers are void; and the rule applies to municipal bonds. In the case under consideration, however, the power to issue bonds of the kind actually issued and sold was expressly conferred, except as to interest. Under that power bonds for a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent. could not legally be issued, because the greater rate of interest would be in excess of the authority conferred. The officers issuing the bonds are public agents of the city, and must act within the scope of their authority. This authority is in the nature of a power of attorney to issue bonds of a certain description in the name of the municipality to raise a definite sum for the use of the city for a specified purpose. The object was to raise $100,000. If this can be done for a less interest than the agents were authorized to pay, the city is benefited to that extent, and the contract is not ultra vires. It is a fundamental principle of the law of agency that it is the duty of the agent to protect and advance the interests of his principal. That the proper authorities of the city of Omaha have done in this case, and their acts in issuing the bonds in question being within the scope of their authority, the bonds are valid."

A similar ruling is found in the case of Cleveland v. City Council of Spartanburg, 54 S. C. 83, 31 S. E. 871. But the statute under which the bonds were issued expressly gave the city authorities discretion in fixing the rate of interest to be paid on the bonds. We have found no authority contrary to the case of Omaha National Bank v. City of Omaha, supra, and none has been called to our attention. Our statute is somewhat more elastic than the Nebraska statute considered in the Omaha Case. We think there is substantial ground for holding that under the Municipal Bond Act of 1901 the board of trustees are invested, at least impliedly, with some discretion in fixing the rate of interest in the bonds. It is doubtful whether the same can be claimed for the Nebraska statute, and the court there based its decision upon the broad ground that the city council, as agents of the city, were in duty bound to protect and advance the interest of the city, and that they had done so by issuing the bonds at the lower rate of interest. It is not necessary for us to go to this extent in upholding the validity of the bonds here in controversy, for the reason that in our opinion the statute clothes the board of trustees with a certain discretion in fixing the interest the bonds shall bear, provided the interest is not more than 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, and does not exceed that recited in the ordinance calling the election.

[2] Respondent further contends that the Municipal Bond Act, as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1453), and as it stood when the proceedings to issue said bonds were taken, provided for the issuance of bonds under two different methods; one method providing that the rate of interest shall be recited in the ordinance, in which case the bonds must bear the same interest as that recited in the ordinance, and the other method providing that the maximum rate of interest shall be recited in the ordinance, in which case the board of trustees might issue bonds bearing any rate of interest less than the maximum rate recited in the ordinance. These two methods, respondent contends, being contained in the same statute, it must be assumed that the Legislature intended that the result of proceeding under one of such methods would be different from that of proceeding under the other, and that, if under the second method the board has power to fix a rate less than the maximum rate recited in the ordinance, as it unquestionably has, then under the first method provided for in the statute it has no such power. This argument would be more persuasive if the statute in its original form had embraced these two methods, but, as we have already seen, the second method was provided for in the amendment of 1915. As originally enacted, the statute provided for the first method only. The intent of the Legislature in the enactment of this statute must be determined from the terms of this statute at the time of its enactment and not by any amendment subsequently adopted. We think we have shown that the Legislature by the statute as originally enacted did not intend that the rate of interest fixed in the bonds should necessarily be the same as that recited in the ordinance. The Legislature of 1915 may have placed a different construction upon this statute or it may have considered that its meaning in respect to the power of the board of trustees to fix a less rate of interest than that recited in the ordinance was uncertain, and, in order that there might be no question as to such power, it amended the statute by adding the proviso which made certain that which might otherwise be considered uncertain. But whatever may have been the reason that prompted the Legislature to enact the amendment of 1915, nothing that it did then and no intent that it or any of its members then had could affect the intent of the previously Legislature which adopted the statute in its original form. Therefore the presence of these two methods in the statute as now in force does not necessarily indicate that there is any material difference in their application or in the results to be obtained by proceedings under one than those which might be reached if the other of such provisions were followed. We are accordingly not able to agree with this last contention made by respondent.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, we are of the opinion that the bonds issued in pursuance of the resolution of the board of trustees of the said Town of Martinez, of date February 23, 1927, are valid and that it is the duty of the respondent as town clerk of said town to countersign the same as provided by the Municipal Bond Act. Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue out of this court directed to the said respondent, Raymond B. Johnson, as town clerk of the town of Martinez directing him as such town clerk to countersign the bonds issued in pursuance of the resolution of the board of trustees of such town of Martinez on the 23d day of February, 1927.

PEOPLE v. FERLIN. (Cr. 2977.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1927.

Rehearing Granted July 25, 1927.

1. Arson $\S$ 37(1)—Evidence held to support conviction for arson (Pen. Code, §§ 447, 452).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for arson, in violation of Pen. Code, §§ 447, 452, where there was testimony showing that defendant, either individually or with assistance of another, willfully ignited store building with intent to destroy it.

2. Arson $\S$ 15—Whether fire resulted from direct efforts of defendant or those of another acting for him held immaterial, since defendant was guilty of arson as principal in either case.

Whether conflagration resulted from direct efforts of defendant or from conduct of another acting for him held fact question in prosecution for arson, determination of which was immaterial, since in either event defendant was guilty as principal of crime charged.

3. Arson $\S$ 37(1)—Evidence held to support conviction for burning insured property (Pen. Code, § 548).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for burning insured property, in violation of Pen. Code, § 548, where testimony tended to show that defendant, either individually or with assistance of another, ignited insured property with intent to destroy it.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1156(1)—Appellate court will not disturb order granting new trial, unless record discloses manifest abuse of discretion.

Appellate court will not disturb order granting new trial in criminal case, unless record discloses manifest abuse of legal discretion which trial court is required to exercise in disposition of such motion.

5. Homicide $\S$ 253(6)—Evidence held to support conviction for murder committed in perpetration of arson (Pen. Code, § 189).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for murder committed in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, in violation of Pen. Code, § 189, where death of deceased resulted from burns received in building which defendant had caused to be burned.

6. Homicide $\S$ 101—Death resulting from arson is neither justifiable nor "excusable homicide"; "justifiable homicide" (Pen. Code, §§ 195-197).

Death of deceased resulting from arson committed by defendant with or without assistance of another is neither justifiable nor excusable homicide, within meaning of Pen. Code, §§ 195-197.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Excusable Homicide; Justifiable Homicide.]

7. Homicide $\S$ 18(1)—One committing arson held liable for death of partner in crime resulting from such arson (Pen. Code, § 189).

Where death of deceased resulted from arson committed by defendant, fact that deceased was particeps criminis will not relieve defendant of responsibility for death, under Pen. Code, § 189.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 934—Granting new trial for murder in perpetration of arson held abuse of discretion, though deceased was partner in crime and instruction advised acquittal (Pen. Code, §§ 189, 1118, 1181, subd. 6).

Granting of new trial, under Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6, after conviction for murder committed in perpetration of arson, under section 189, held abuse of discretion, where defendant's partner in crime died from burns resulting from arson committed by defendant, notwithstanding that jury's verdict of guilty was brought in after instruction, under section 1118, advising acquittal on such charge.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 887—Instruction advising acquittal is not binding on jury (Pen. Code, § 1118).

Jury is not bound by instruction advising them to acquit on charge of murder, authorized by Pen. Code, § 1118, since such provision does not authorize court to determine, as matter of law, that evidence is insufficient.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 810—Court properly instructed jury on charge of murder after advising acquittal (Pen. Code, § 1118).

Court properly instructed jury on charge of murder after having given instruction advising acquittal, under Pen. Code, § 1118, since such advisory instruction is not binding on jury.

11. Jury $\S$ 131(3)—Juror cannot be examined on voir dire solely to lay foundation for peremptory challenge.

Juror may not be examined on voir dire as to membership in named secret organization solely for purpose of laying foundation for exercise of peremptory challenge.

12. Criminal law $\S$ 438—In prosecution for murder committed in perpetration of arson, admission of deceased's photograph taken after death held admissible to show extent, degree, and character of burns.

In prosecution for murder committed in perpetration of arson, admission of photograph of deceased taken after death held not error, where it was identified by deceased's father and two doctors, who testified that it correctly showed extent, degree, and character of burns which caused death.

13. Arson $\S$ 31—In prosecution for arson, testimony that lessee rebuilt after fire held inadmissible, notwithstanding contention that premises were destroyed to secure lessee's removal.

In prosecution for arson in which it was claimed that premises were destroyed to secure removal of lessee, testimony that lessee had rebuilt on property subsequent to fire held inadmissible.

14. Criminal law §427(3)—Admission of evidence of conversations with defendant's partner in crime in defendant's absence relative to negotiations to burn property held proper in advance of other proof of conspiracy.

In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, admission of evidence of conversations with defendant's partner in crime in defendant's absence, showing negotiations for burning of property, held not error, even in advance of proof by independent evidence of conspiracy between them.

15. Criminal law §680(1)—Order of admission of evidence is within trial court's discretion.

Order in which evidence in cause may be admitted is matter within sound discretion of trial court.

16. Criminal law §423(2)—In prosecution for arson, conversations in defendant's absence with his partner in crime held not inadmissible as hearsay.

In prosecution for arson, conversations with defendant's partner in crime in defendant's absence held not inadmissible as hearsay, since declarations of conspirator in furtherance of common design are binding upon and admissible against coconspirator.

17. Criminal law §1169(5)—Admission of conversations in defendant's absence with partner in crime, if error, held harmless, in view of instruction to disregard such evidence.

In prosecution for arson, admission of conversations, in defendant's absence, with his partner in crime, if error, held not prejudicial where court instructed jury to disregard evidence of such conversations; it being presumed that jury heeded court's instructions.

18. Criminal law §1036(1)—Error in admission of testimony will not be reviewed in absence of seasonable objection in court below.

Defendant in criminal case will not be permitted to assign as error admission of testimony, where he did not make seasonable objection in court below.

19. Criminal law §1044—Motion to strike all of witness' testimony is not sufficient objection to preserve question of admissibility of particular statement for review.

Motion, on cross-examination of witness, to strike from record all of witness' testimony given on direct examination is not sufficient objection to particular statement in direct examination to preserve question of its admissibility for review.

20. Criminal law §742(2)—In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, refusal to instruct that certain person was accomplice held error in view of evidence.

In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, refusal of instruction, that another person who died from burns received in fire was accomplice, held error in view of evidence.

21. Criminal law §829(10)—Error in refusing to instruct that witness was accomplice held not prejudicial, in view of instructions defining accomplice and requiring corroboration.

In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, error in refusing to instruct that certain person was accomplice held not prejudicial, in view of instructions correctly stating definition of accomplice and requiring accomplice's testimony to be corroborated.

22. Criminal law §775(2)—Alibi instruction authorizing acquittal if defendant, who had accomplice, was not present at scene of crime of arson and burning insured property held properly refused.

In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, alibi instruction intimating that absence from scene of crime would justify acquittal held properly refused, in view of evidence that defendant had accomplice.

23. Criminal law §814(1)—In arson case, refusal to instruct that imprisonment in state prison suspends right to defend civil actions for damages held proper, notwithstanding pending action against defendant.

In prosecution for arson and burning insured property, refusal to instruct that imprisonment in state prison suspends all civil rights, including right to prosecute and defend all civil actions for damages, held proper, notwithstanding that suit for damages had heretofore been instituted by defendant's lessee.

24. Criminal law §1216(2)—Sentences for arson and burning insured property must run consecutively and not concurrently (Pen. Code, § 669).

Where defendant was convicted of arson and of burning insured property, before sentence was pronounced on him for either, sentences must operate consecutively and not concurrently, in view of Pen. Code, § 669.

25. Criminal law §991(1)—Error in sentence for burning insured property in allowing it to run concurrently with sentence for arson will not alter effect of judgment (Pen. Code, § 669).

Where defendant was convicted of arson and of burning insured property, error in sentence for latter in allowing it to run concurrently with former held not to vitiate or alter its effect, in view of Pen. Code, § 669.

26. Criminal law §1216(2)—Sentences for arson and for burning insured property must operate consecutively, even in absence of direction to that effect (Pen. Code, § 669).

Sentences for arson and for burning insured property will and must operate consecutively, even in absence of direction to that effect, in view of Pen. Code, § 669.

27. Criminal law §991(3)—Sentences fixing exact term of imprisonment for second degree arson and burning insured property held improper (Pen. Code, § 1168).

Sentences of 25 years for arson in second degree and 10 years for burning insured property held improper in view of indeterminate sentence law, Pen. Code, § 1168, divesting trial court of any discretion in fixing exact term.

28. Criminal law — 991(3), 1184—Error in fixing definite terms of imprisonment for arson does not nullify judgments, but they will be modified.

Error in sentences for second degree arson and burning insured property, in that exact terms of imprisonment were fixed, held not to nullify judgments, but they will be modified by Supreme Court by striking objectionable parts.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lacy D. Jennings, Judge.

George Ferlin was convicted of arson, of destruction of insured property, and of murder, and he appeals from the conviction of arson and of destruction of insured property, while the People appeal from orders granting a new trial on the charge of murder and directing that terms of imprisonment be concurrent. Affirmed on defendant's appeal, and reversed, with directions, on the appeal of the People, and judgment modified.

H. C. Mills, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, George Ferlin, was charged in an information filed in the county of Los Angeles with the crime of arson, murder, and the destruction of insured property. After trial, the jury returned verdicts finding him guilty as charged in each of the three counts of the information. The verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder carried with it a recommendation that he be imprisoned in the state prison for life. This latter verdict was returned notwithstanding the fact that the trial court had theretofore advised the jury, as provided in section 1118 of the Penal Code, to acquit the defendant on the charge of murder. A motion for new trial was thereafter addressed by the defendant to each count of the information. The motion was denied as to counts 1 and 3 and granted as to count 2, the latter count charging the defendant with murder. Judgments were accordingly entered by the trial court directing that the defendant be incarcerated in the state prison for a period of 25 years for arson and 10 years for burning insured property. In the latter judgment it was indicated that the two sentences were to run concurrently.

The defendant has appealed from each of said judgments and from the order denying his motion for a new trial on each of the charges contained in counts 1 and 3 of the information. There is also presented herein an appeal on behalf of the people from the order of the lower court granting the defendant's motion for a new trial on the murder charge and from that part of the judgment entered upon the verdict finding the defendant guilty of burning insured property which directs that the sentence thereunder run concurrently with the sentence entered upon the verdict finding the defendant guilty of arson. A synoptical statement of some of the evidence adduced upon the trial will materially assist in a proper understanding of the innumerable assignments of error upon which the respective appeals are founded.

Drs. F. R. Webb and D. E. Stewart testified substantially that they had examined the deceased, Walter Skala, a boy about 21 years of age, and found that his death had resulted from burns of the third degree which were described as burns actually destroying the tissue on the surface of the body.

Carl W. Pirl testified that during the month of August, 1925, he had operated a gasoline service station in the county of Los Angeles; that on August 3, 1925, the defendant purchased of him 26 gallons of low grade gasoline; that 6 gallons of said quantity were placed in the gasoline tank attached to the defendant's automobile, and that the remaining 20 gallons were transported by the defendant in 4 five-gallon cans; that prior to the date of said purchase the defendant had never taken gasoline away in five-gallon containers; that on the day preceding the purchase of this gasoline the defendant had indicated to him that he would require a large quantity of gasoline with which to wash some old motors and suggested to the witness that "if anybody should ask me how much gasoline he bought I wasn't to tell them anything"; that this admonition was apparently prompted by the fact that defendant said that other vendors of gasoline wanted his business; that he recognized a can shown him, by the faucet or spigot at the bottom, as one of the cans employed by the defendant to carry away a portion of the 20 gallons of gasoline purchased.

Fred W. Brown testified that he had a 5-year lease from the defendant on a grocery store and butcher shop located at 1681 East Manchester street, in the town of Graham, Los Angeles county; that his lease would not expire for approximately 2½ years; that on the day preceding the fire, which occurred about 3 or 4 o'clock on the morning of August 4, 1925, he had placed on a shelf in his storeroom certain aprons and rags recently returned from the laundry; that after the fire he found these materials on the floor saturated with either gasoline or oil; that he also found 4 five-gallon cans in his storeroom subsequent to the fire and that 2 of said cans contained some gasoline; that he recognized a can shown him with a faucet or spigot at the bottom thereof as one of the cans he had found in his storeroom; that the east wall of the building had been blown out and up against the railway posts; that on two separate occasions within four months preceding the fire the defendant had conversed with him concerning the witness' lease; that upon the first of these occasions the defendant said he thought he had a buyer for the premises, whereupon he offered the witness $2,300 for his lease; that the defendant upon the latter occasion offered him $1,000 for the lease; that on the day preceding the fire he noticed the defendant had removed certain electrical fixtures from his store, which adjoined the witness' store to the lot or yard at the rear of the premises; that he had not seen the defendant cleaning any motors. On cross-examination, the witness admitted he had stated to the defendant's wife subsequent to the fire that he would do whatever possible "to give the defendant 40 years."

Chester Hill testified that he was 20 years of age; that he knew the defendant and the deceased; that on or about July 28, 1925, the defendant said to him that "he wished the building was burned down in front"; that the witness "in a joking way" stated that he would burn it down for $300, to which the defendant replied, "Well, we will fix it up;" that he had a conversation with the defendant during the afternoon preceding the fire at which time the defendant stated "he had the gasoline and that evening would be all right;" that the witness thereupon agreed to burn the building that evening; that he then went to see the deceased, whom he had previously informed of the conversations with the defendant, and the deceased said, "I will be down this evening;" that he, the witness, had on other occasions told the deceased he did not intend to fire the building and that he was "through with it," whereupon the deceased said, "Let me have the job and I will do it;" that the deceased on several occasions had inquired as to the defendant's readiness; that on the evening of the fire the defendant told the witness the gasoline "was up in the front of the building"—that part of the building under lease to the witness Brown—and suggested that the storeroom to the rear of the butcher shop be fired; that the defendant stated he wanted the property destroyed because "he had a chance to sell his property, but Mr. Brown kept holding out for too much money for the lease;" that the defendant had also referred to the insurance on the premises. On cross-examination, the witness stated that he never intended burning the property or having anything to do therewith; that the defendant had previously said, "I will get the gasoline, and you throw it around and then light the match;" that he told deceased to make arrangements with the defendant; that during the progress of the fire he and another boy went to the defendant's residence and awakened him; that they then drove in the defendant's car to the scene of the conflagration; that as far as he knew the defendant was unaware of any of the conversations had with the deceased; and that the defendant had not authorized him to talk with or to employ the deceased for any purpose.

Floyd G. Austin testified that he drove the witness Hill to the deceased's place of employment on the day preceding the fire, and that said Hill went in to see the deceased.

Ralph Barnes testified that he was employed by the defendant as a plumber's helper; that he slept in the rear of the burned premises and was awakened by the explosion and some one knocking on his door; that he accompanied the witness Hill to the defendant's home to inform the defendant of the fire; and that, with defendant and his wife, they returned to the scene of said fire.

Bronson Skala testified that he was a brother of the deceased; that the deceased awakened him about 3 o'clock on the morning of August 4, 1925, by his "hollering"; that he opened the door of his home and saw the deceased horribly burned; that "his hair was standing straight up and his shirt and his underwear was burned off to his waist, and his skin was laying over, it was burned;" that he secured a doctor and had the deceased removed to the White Memorial Hospital where he died about half past 2 o'clock in the afternoon; that a key shown to him was found in a pocket of the deceased's trousers. On cross-examination, he stated that the deceased said, "He got burned in the fire, and he saw two men run out of the place. He ran in * * * was an explosion. He got blew out into the street."

James R. Garrett testified that he operated a restaurant two doors from the witness Brown's store; that he heard an explosion and a scream; that he saw the defendant on the afternoon preceding the fire carrying what appeared to be electrical fixtures from his store to a shed on the rear of the premises.

Ira L. Curtis and William H. Bond, conductor and motorman, respectively, testified substantially that their street car passed the defendant's premises about 3 o'clock on the morning of August 4, 1925; that they saw a bareheaded man about 6 feet in height standing there, and that his hair was combed pompadour style and was streaked with gray; that the defendant's hair was more combed back and more gray when they saw him in the sheriff's office prior to the trial than it was at the time of the trial.

William Heldoorn testified that he was a captain in the fire department and that he attended the fire at the defendant's premises and noticed the odor of gasoline; that he saw some "big five-gallon cans" in the storeroom back of the butcher shop.

P. C. Miller testified that he was district county fire warden; that he investigated the storeroom to the rear of the butcher shop as soon as the fire had been sufficiently wet down to permit of entry and found 5 five-gallon cans therein, 2 of which contained some gasoline; that he also found gasoline soaked rags and papers near the door leading from the storeroom to the butcher shop; that he recognized a can shown him with a faucet or spigot on it as one of the cans he had seen in the storeroom.

G. L. Walker, county chemist, testified that he had examined the contents of a can shown him and found that it contained a low grade of gasoline.

R. E. Rankin, deputy sheriff, testified that a key shown to him had been given to him by the deceased's brother subsequent to the time of the fire, and that it opened a lock taken from the door leading to the defendant's electrical shop; that on the evening of August 4, 1925, in the sheriff's office, the defendant freely and voluntarily stated, in response to interrogatories, that he had purchased gasoline the preceding day and had carried it away in cans; that he had used it for cleaning old motors and in his business; that he knew the deceased and that the latter had worked for him at one time; that he had an opportunity to sell the destroyed premises for $20,000 but had unsuccessfully attempted to purchase the witness Brown's lease.

Two policies of insurance covering the destroyed premises and aggregating $4,300 were introduced in evidence by the people.

The defense produced several witnesses who testified that the witness Hill's general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was bad. These witnesses also testified that they had seen the defendant use gasoline in his business for cleaning plumbing and electrical fixtures.

R. E. Williams testified that the defendant had authorized him in March, 1925, to sell the property for $15,000; that the defendant, at the time, said he could buy the witness Brown's lease in the event a sale was arranged; that he was unable to sell the property; that he thought it to be worth about $8,000.

Mrs. Deamie Ferlin, wife of the defendant, testified that he was 44 years of age and 6 feet 4 inches in height; that on the evening of August 3, 1925, the defendant took his family for an automobile ride from which they returned home about 10:30; that the defendant slept in the dining room that night with one of their sons; that she awakened the defendant between 3 and 3:30 o'clock in the morning when the witnesses Hill and Barnes came to their home, and that the four of them drove to the scene of the fire; that the witness Brown told her not to testify in the defendant's favor, and that he had some one who would testify to having seen the defendant at or near the property on the morning of the fire; that the defendant had never combed his hair pompadour, and that it was the same color as at the time of the fire.

By stipulation of counsel the testimony of Dr. Stewart given at the preliminary examination was admitted on behalf of the defendant in lieu of recalling the witness. This testimony was to the effect that the deceased had stated to the witness that he was driving past the witness Brown's store when he saw the fire and two men running therefrom, whereupon he ran into the store and an explosion occurred which blew him into the street. Further outline of the evidence is unnecessary for our consideration of the appeals herein.

Arson is defined as "the willful and malicious burning of a building, with intent to destroy it." Section 447, Pen. Code. To justify a conviction on a charge of arson, it is not necessary that a person other than the accused should have had ownership in the building fired; it is sufficient that at the time of the burning another person was rightfully in possession of or was actually occupying such building or any part thereof. Section 452, Pen. Code. The crime of burning insured property is defined and denounced in section 548 of the Penal Code, which declares in part:

"Every person who wilfully burns * * * any property which at the time is insured against loss or damage by fire, * * * with intent to defraud or prejudice the insurer, whether the same be the property or in the possession of such person or any other person, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year and not more than ten years."

[1, 2] We find no merit in the defendant's contention that the evidence adduced upon the trial is insufficient to warrant his conviction upon counts 1 and 3 of the information. There was, in our opinion, ample testimony from which the jury might properly conclude that the defendant had, either individually or with the assistance of another, wilfully and maliciously ignited the property described in the information with the intent to destroy the same. Whether the conflagration resulted from the direct efforts of the defendant or was the outgrowth of the conduct of another acting for and on behalf of the defendant was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. On this appeal, however, the conclusion of the jury on that point is of little moment, for in either event the defendant is unquestionably guilty, as a principal, of the crime of arson. People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 149 P. 821; People v. Raber, 168 Cal. 316, 143 P. 317.

[3] Nor do we think the verdict finding the defendant guilty of burning insured property in violation of section 548 of the Penal Code is vulnerable to an objection going to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the same. When the evidence addressed to the arson count is considered with that showing the destroyed premises to have been heavily insured at the time of the fire, there can be little question as to the propriety of the verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged in the third count of the information.

[4, 5] In advance of considering the numerous particular assignments of error urged by the defendant we will turn our attention to the appeal of the people from the order granting to the defendant, upon motion therefor a new trial on the charge of murder contained in the second count of the information. It is definitely settled that an appellate court will not disturb an order granting a new trial unless the record discloses a manifest abuse of the legal discretion which the trial court is required to exercise in the disposition of such a motion. People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 312, 159 P. 1046; People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 455, 44 P. 166; People v. Flood, 102 Cal. 330, 332, 36 P. 663. In the instant case the motion for new trial was based, in part, upon subdivision 6 of section 1181 of the Penal Code, which authorizes the court to grant a new trial when the verdict is contrary to law or evidence. It appears from the record herein that the court below granted the defendant's motion upon the ground that under no theory of the evidence had the crime of murder been shown or established as against the defendant. Section 189 of the Penal Code provides in part that:

"All murder which is * * * committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, * * * is murder of the first degree. * * *"

This section of the Code received consideration in the case of People v. Milton, 145 Cal. 169, 78 P. 549, wherein it was declared, in effect, that the killing may be willful, deliberate, and premeditated, or it may be absolutely accidental—in either case the offender is equally guilty. Upon the trial of the cause both sides introduced evidence herein tending to establish that the deceased came to his death as a result of having been burned in the fire which consumed the defendant's premises. We have already referred to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict finding the defendant guilty as a principal in the destruction of said premises. The conclusion is inevitable, therefore, that the death of the deceased resulted from arson committed by the defendant, either individually or in concert with another. In this state of the record the jury very properly returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the crime of murder, as denounced in section 189 of the Penal Code.

[6, 7] The death of the deceased resulting, as it did, from arson committed by the defendant, with or without assistance of another, is neither justifiable nor excusable homicide, within the meaning of sections 195, 196, and 197 of the Penal Code. Nor do we think the fact, if it be a fact, that the deceased was particeps criminis will relieve the defendant of responsibility for the death occurring in the perpetration of the arson conceived and procured by the defendant. For we are of the opinion that our penal statutes are sufficiently broad and definite to charge a defendant with legal responsibility for the death of his partner in crime when, as here, such death results from and is directly attributable to the carrying out of an unlawful and felonious enterprise which had its inception in the mind of the defendant. As we have already indicated, section 189 of the Penal Code provides that all murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson is murder of the first degree. We experience no hesitancy, therefore, in characterizing the death of the deceased as a felonious homicide. It is our opinion that the evidence, regarded in the light of any conceivable theory, is ample to support the verdict returned on the count charging the defendant with murder.

[8] The trial court, in granting the defendant's motion for new trial upon the ground that under no theory of the evidence was the crime of murder shown as against the defendant, did not purport to pass upon the weight of the evidence but held that such evidence, as a matter of law, failed to show the defendant to be guilty as charged. This conclusion was apparently prompted by the lower court's determination that the defendant was not liable or legally responsible for the death of his partner in crime under circumstances such as have been herein narrated. In arriving at this conclusion the lower court was in error upon a question of law. We therefore conclude that said court manifestly abused the discretion vested in it, when, on motion for new trial, it held that under no theory of the evidence had the crime of murder been shown or established as against the defendant. This conclusion obviates the necessity of an extended discussion of the various arguments of counsel as to the theory upon which the prosecution presented its case.

[9, 10] The defendant next contends that the jury were bound by the lower court's instruction advising them to render a verdict of acquittal upon the charge of murder. The instruction as a whole was proper, and its giving was authorized by the provisions of section 1118 of the Penal Code. In conformity to the provisions of said section and as a part of the same instruction, the court informed the jury that it was not bound by the advice to acquit. Section 1118 of the Penal Code receives consideration in 8 Cal. Jur. 284, 285, where it is declared:

"The Code provision does not give a trial court the power to determine as a matter of law that the evidence of the prosecution is insufficient to justify a conviction, and under no circumstances is it authorized to command a jury to return a verdict of acquittal. Any such direction or command is not only erroneous but void. After the submission of the case upon the evidence, however weak, it is still the duty of the jury to pass upon its sufficiency, and find a verdict according to its own best judgment, paying all due respect to the advice of the court as to its insufficiency" (citing numerous authorities).

It is declared in People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 689, 77 P. 818, that:

"Under no circumstances is the court authorized in a criminal case to direct a jury to return any particular verdict. It can simply advise them to do so, an advice which they are not bound to follow."

We are referred by the defendant to many authorities wherein it is indicated that a distinction must be drawn between a case where the trial court is merely of the opinion that the evidence is insufficient to support a conviction and a case where the record is destitute of evidence that would justify a conviction. It is urged that in the latter class of cases, within which class it is said the instant case falls, the instruction of the court is binding upon and may not be disregarded by the jury. What has already been said herein is sufficient refutation of the defendant's argument that there is an entire want of evidence to justify his conviction upon the charge of murder. In passing, it may be said that the trial court, after the giving of the advisory instruction, very properly instructed the jury upon the charge of murder. The defendant's assignment of error in this regard is, therefore, without merit.

[11] We will now direct our attention to the numerous particular assignments of error urged by the defendant in support of a reversal. Upon voir dire examination, the defendant attempted to ascertain of each juror whether he was a member of or affiliated with a named secret organization. Objection was promptly made by the prosecution, which the court sustained. The defendant thereupon explained the purpose of this line of inquiry as being necessary to his intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges. It is now well settled in this state that a juror may not be examined on voir dire solely for the purpose of laying the foundation for the exercise of a peremptory challenge. People v. Edwards, 163 Cal. 752, 754, 127 P. 58. We find no error in the lower court's ruling.

The trial court very properly overruled the defendant's objection to the introduction by the prosecution of evidence in support of the charges contained in the three counts of the information. An examination of the information convinces us that each count thereof states sufficient facts to constitute a public offense.

[12] Nor do we think the trial court erred in admitting, over objection by the defendant, a photograph of the deceased taken after his death. The picture was identified by the deceased's father and by two doctors who testified that it correctly showed the extent, degree, and character of the burns which caused the death of the deceased. The case of People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 480, 126 P. 143, disposes of the defendant's contention.

[13] We perceive no error in the court's ruling striking out the answer of the witness Brown to the effect that he had rebuilt on the property subsequent to the fire. It will be recalled that Brown was lessee under the defendant. The stricken testimony was attempted to be elicited, so the defendant asserts, to rebut the prosecution's claim that the premises were destroyed in order to effectively secure the removal of the lessee. We cannot appreciate the relevancy or materiality of this evidence tending to show reconstruction of the premises subsequent to the fire. The assignment is without merit.

[14-16] It is next urged by the defendant that the trial court erred in admitting over his objection certain conversations which the witness Hill claimed to have had with the deceased. These conversations occurred in the absence of the defendant and apparently without his knowledge and concerned purported negotiations with the deceased for his burning of the defendant's premises. The defendant interposed a two-fold objection to the introduction in evidence of these conversations, it being insisted that there had been no antecedent and independent proof tending to establish a conspiracy between the defendant and the witness Hill, and that such evidence was not admissible for the purpose of establishing one. The testimony was also objected to as being hearsay. It is our opinion, as already indicated, that the jury upon an examination of the entire evidence in the case would be warranted in concluding that the plan for the felonious burning of the premises had originated in the mind of the defendant and had been carried out in concert with another. In the case of People v. Matthew, 68 Cal. App. 95, 107, 228 P. 417, 421, it is declared:

"It unquestionably is the general rule that proof of the existence of the conspiracy ordinarily should precede proof of the acts or declarations of a coconspirator made pending the conspiracy and in aid and furtherance of the common design. But the rule in this respect is not absolute and unyielding; and sometimes, for the sake of convenience, evidence of the acts and declarations of an alleged conspirator is admitted before sufficient proof of the conspiracy is given. Thus where, as here, the facts from which the conspiracy is to be inferred are so intimately blended with other facts going to constitute the crime that it is difficult to separate them, it is not essential to the introduction of evidence of the acts and declarations of one of the conspirators that evidence should first be introduced to establish prima facie, in the opinion of the court, the fact of conspiracy. People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394 (36 P. 678); People v. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 397 (183 P. 865) * * *.

It was not error, therefore, to permit the introduction in evidence of the conversations here complained of in advance of proof by independent evidence of the conspiracy between the defendant and Hill. The order in which the evidence in a cause may be admitted is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, and we see no abuse of such discretion. People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 253, 63 P. 351; People v. Fehrenbach, supra. Nor do we find any merit in the defendant's contention that the conversations between Hill and the deceased looking to the destruction of the premises were hearsay and therefore inadmissible. The rule is well established in this state that the acts and declarations of a conspirator, in furtherance of the common design, are binding upon and admissible in evidence against a coconspirator. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 334, 92 P. 861; People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 76 P. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193; People v. MacPhee, 26 Cal. App. 218, 146 P. 522. In view of this settled rule it may properly be said that the acts and declarations of the coconspirator Hill, in furtherance of the felonious enterprise, were, in contemplation of law, the acts and declarations of the defendant. People v. Creeks, supra; People v. MacPhee, supra.

[17] That these conversations with the deceased were had without the defendant's knowledge does not suggest any variation in the above rule. The apparent purpose of the conversations was the acquisition of an agent through whom the felonious scheme might be consummated. But, aside from what has been said, we do not believe that the defendant was or could have been prejudicially affected by the introduction in evidence of these conversations, even if it be assumed that their admission constituted error upon the part of the trial court. The record discloses that the lower court instructed the jury, at the request of the defendant, to disregard the evidence of any conversations between the witness Hill and the deceased unless said conversations had taken place in the presence of the defendant. It will be presumed that the jury exercised its jurisdiction soundly, and that they heeded the instructions of the court. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 207, 48 P. 75.

We find no error in the several rulings of the court below sustaining objections to certain questions propounded by the defendant during the cross-examination of the witness Hill. The evidence sought to be elicited by the defendant was either irrelevant or not proper cross-examination.

[18, 19] The witness Evans, called by the prosecution, was permitted to testify, without objection by the defendant, that he had seen the deceased walking with the defendant's minor stepson on the morning preceding the fire. It is now urged that the admission of this evidence constituted error. In the absence of a seasonable objection in the court below, the defendant should not now be permitted to assign as error the admission of this testimony. Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 322, 80 P. 92. It is true that the defendant on cross-examination of the witness moved to strike from the record all of the witness' testimony given on direct examination. This motion was properly denied and may not now serve to relieve the defendant of his failure to seasonably object to the admission of the evidence complained of under this assignment. It cannot be said that "all" of the witness' testimony on direct examination was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, as urged in said motion.

[20] We have examined in detail some 14 additional assignments of error touching various other rulings of the lower court and have concluded that an extended discussion thereof would unduly prolong this opinion. Our study of these several assignments of error has disclosed nothing approximating prejudicial error.

[21] Complaint is made by the defendant that the lower court erred in refusing to charge the jury, as matter of law, that the witness Hill was an accomplice. It is urged that this question, in view of the evidence in the case, was not a proper one to be submitted to the jury for determination. We are of the opinion that the defendant's contention is meritorious, for the evidence in the case unquestionably points to Hill as an accomplice. Moreover, the conduct of the prosecuting officer throughout the trial strongly indicates that Hill was so regarded. The question as to whether or not the witness Hill was an accomplice, under the evidence, was not seriously disputed upon the trial of the cause. It was the duty of the trial court, therefore, to instruct the jury, as matter of law, that Hill was an accomplice of the defendant. People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 436, 119 P. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704; People v. Howell, 69 Cal. App. 239, 242, 230 P. 991. However, this error cannot be said to have prejudicially affected the defendant. In People v. McDermott (Cal. App.) 243 P. 485, it is declared that:

"The jury should have been instructed that Sovia must be regarded as an accomplice. That question should not have been left to it to determine. However, it must be presumed that the jurors observed and applied the instructions given them. In other instructions the definition of an accomplice was correctly stated, as also was the rule that the defendant may not be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and that the corroborating evidence is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the crime and the circumstances thereof; and further, that such corroborating evidence must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Hence it is inconceivable that the erroneous instruction given in any way prejudiced any right of the appellant."

Practically an identical situation is presented in the instant case, for the court below in several instructions correctly stated the definition of an accomplice and likewise informed the jury that the testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated and that the corroborating evidence must not only tend to show the commission of the offenses charged in the information, but must also tend to connect the defendant therewith.

[22] The defendant's alibi instruction was properly refused, for it erroneously intimated that, if the evidence addressed to the alibi gave rise to a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's presence at the scene of the crimes when perpetrated, then a reasonable doubt arose as to his guilt and he would be entitled to a verdict of acquittal. In our opinion, absolute proof of the defendant's absence from the scene of the crimes would not, under the circumstances of this case, necessarily preclude his conviction thereof. Citation of authority is unnecessary to support this proposition.

[23] As a final contention the defendant urges that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to the effect that imprisonment in a state prison suspends all civil rights, including the right to prosecute and defend all civil actions for damages. The obvious purpose of this instruction was to cause the jury to consider the effect of a conviction upon the defendant's defense of a civil suit for damages theretofore instituted by the lessee Brown. We cannot perceive the pertinency of such civil litigation to the offenses charged in the information. The instruction had no bearing upon the issues raised herein and was therefore properly denied.

[24] At the commencement of this opinion we stated that the trial court in its judgment under count 3, charging the burning of insured property, directed that the sentence thereunder run concurrently with the sentence imposed under count 1, charging arson. This direction is assigned as error by the people, it being their contention that these sentences must run consecutively. Section 669 of the Penal Code provides that:

"When any person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either, the imprisonment to which he is sentenced upon the second or other subsequent conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment to which he shall be adjudged, or at the termination of the second or other subsequent term of imprisonment, as the case may be."

In the instant case the defendant was convicted of the offenses charged in counts 1 and 3 before sentence was "pronounced upon him for either." It necessarily follows, in view of the mandatory provisions of section 669 of the Penal Code, that the sentences under counts 1 and 3 must operate consecutively.

[25, 26] We have held in Ex parte Kirby, 76 Cal. 514, 18 P. 655, that said Code section "is a mandate to the warden who holds the prisoner in custody, and by it he is informed that the imprisonment on the second conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment." The error of the court below is not, therefore, such as to vitiate or alter the effect of the judgment under count 3. However, to avoid any uncertainty in this respect, the judgment under count 3 of the information is amended by striking therefrom the sentence reading, "To run concurrently with sentence in Case No. 25S76, count 1." The sentences under counts 1 and 3 will and must operate consecutively, even in the absence of a direction therein to that effect. Ex parte Kirby, supra.

[27, 28] In conclusion, it may be said that the lower court also erred in sentencing the defendant to the state prison for 25 years for arson in the second degree, and 10 years for the offense of burning insured property. These sentences were improper and without the authority of the trial court to pronounce. The indeterminate sentence law (section 1168, Pen. Code) has divested the trial court of any discretion in fixing the exact term of imprisonment and has vested such discretion in the board of prison directors, within the limits prescribed by the Penal Code (People v. Gonzales, 36 Cal. App. 782, 173 P. 407). This error of the lower court does not, however, nullify the judgments entered under counts 1 and 3. People v. Rossi, 37 Cal. App. 778, 174 P. 916. The judgments pronounced under said two counts are, and each is, hereby modified by striking therefrom that part thereof in which a definite period of imprisonment is provided. People v. Rossi, supra.

The judgments pronounced upon the verdicts finding the defendant guilty of arson in the second degree and of burning insured property are, and each is, hereby affirmed as modified herein. The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial under counts 1 and 3 of the information is also affirmed. The order granting a new trial upon the charge of murder, contained in count 2 of the information, is reversed with directions to the court below that judgment be entered nunc pro tunc in accordance with the verdict of conviction under said count 2.

FINNIE et al. v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3273.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 9, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 8, 1927.

1. Trusts ⇨203—Irrevocable declaration of express trust in realty for purpose of sale held to convey all legal and equitable interest of trustor, hence judgment creditor of trustor and beneficiary by attachment acquired no lien on land superior to right of prior bona fide purchaser from trustees (Civ. Code, § 863).

Where owner of land conveyed to trustees by means of declaration of express trust for purpose of selling land and distributing proceeds in a specified manner, and where trust instrument contained no reservation of title or right of revocation, held, under Civ. Code, § 863, trustor thereby divested herself of all title and interest, legal or equitable, in the land and judgment creditor of trustor and of beneficiary of trust by attachment issued and served on trustees acquired no lien on the property superior to right of prior bona fide purchaser from trustees, notwithstanding trustees' agreement to sell was not recorded until after levy.

2. Attachment ⇨180—Unrecorded deed is effective against subsequent levy of attachment.

An unrecorded deed or conveyance is effective as against a subsequent levy of attachment.

3. Trusts ⇨134, 153—Irrevocable declaration of express trust in realty invests trustee with entire title and divests trustor of all estate and interest (Civ. Code, § 863).

An express trust to sell real property and distribute proceeds of sale in a specified manner to designated beneficiaries, which declaration of trust contains no reservation of title and no power of revocation, vests entire title in trustee and absolutely divests trustor of all estate and interest in the property, in view of Civ. Code, § 863.

4. Trusts ⇨151(1)—Where irrevocable trust in realty for purpose of sale is made without fraud, creditor of beneficiary may attach proceeds.

Where irrevocable trust in realty for purpose of sale and distribution of proceeds is made without fraud, attaching creditor of beneficiary acquires no lien on realty, but may attach proceeds of sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by Robert J. Finnie and another, as executor of the last will and testament of Theodore A. Bell, deceased, against Clarence M. Smith and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant Clinton L. Walker appeals. Affirmed.

Preston & Duncan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. E. Cooley, of San Francisco, and Theodore W. Chester, of Sacramento, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title to 1,032 acres of land situated in Colusa county.

The facts are not disputed. Sarah Doak, a widow, was the owner of an undivided seventeen-twentieths of the land in question. The balance was owned by the estate of Theodore A. Bell, deceased. March 30, 1922, Sarah Doak executed a conveyance in trust of her entire interest in this property to her two sons, Fred M. Doak and Bert G. Doak. This trust conveyance was recorded July 31, 1923, by the express terms of which the trustor, Sarah Doak, conveyed this property to her trustees, "to sell * * * upon the best obtainable terms, but at a price of not less than $42,500, unless the trustor shall consent to a sale for a lesser amount, and to pay to the following named persons from the proceeds of such sale, the sums set opposite their respective names, to wit: To William C. Doak, $5,000; to John L. Doak, $5,000; to Bert G. Doak, $5,000; to Claude K. Doak, $5,000; to Charles Doak, $5,000; and to retain the balance of said proceeds, in trust, for the use and benefit of the trustor. * * *"

May 25, 1923, the trustees executed a written agreement to sell and convey said real property to the plaintiff Robert J. Finnie, in consideration of the sum of $29,300, payable in installments, three-twentieths of which purchase price was to be paid to the estate of Theodore A. Bell, deceased, for its interest in the property. This sale was duly approved by Sarah Doak, the trustor, and the purchaser immediately entered into possession. Pursuant to the terms of this contract of sale, the purchaser agreed to commence the construction of a clubhouse on said premises before September 1, 1923, and to complete and equip the same at an expense of not less than $8,000. It was further agreed that upon the payment of one-half of the purchase price a deed of conveyance was to be executed to the purchaser, who was to thereupon execute and deliver to the trustees his promissory note for the balance of the purchase price, secured by mortgage on said real property. This agreement was subsequently modified, in accordance with the provisions of which the purchaser, on November 15, 1923, deposited in escrow in the Gridley branch of the Bank of Italy, the sum of $12,452.50, together with $311 interest, to be held by said bank pending the trial of a proposed suit to quiet title to said land, after which the sum so deposited was to be distributed in accordance with the written instructions accompanying the same. These instructions, after directing the payment of taxes, among other things, provided for the payment from said deposit, to the proper parties of "such amounts as are held to be liens on said property by final judgment in said action to quiet title." And further provided:

"That in the event of said property, or any part thereof being offered for sale * * * (said trustees were) to satisfy such final judgment against said property."

In that event, said judgment was to be discharged from said lien. And in order to prevent the actual sale of said property, an injunction was to be sued out to restrain the sale, if necessary. The instructions to the bank further provided that:

"Ninety days after the filing of said quiet title action (said bank was) to pay $1,000 to Bert G. Doak and $1,000 to John L. Doak, and if judgment in said action has become final in favor of the plaintiff therein against Clinton L. Walker, who will be a defendant therein, to pay each of said parties the additional sum of $1,000."

Upon making said deposit pursuant to said agreement and escrow instructions, on November 15, 1923, a deed of conveyance was duly executed and delivered to plaintiff, who immediately thereupon executed and delivered to the trustees his promissory note for the balance of the purchase price, secured by mortgage on said real property. Upon proceedings duly had in the matter of the estate of Theodore A. Bell, deceased, the remaining three-twentieths interest in said real property was also conveyed to plaintiff.

Subsequent to the agreement of sale of said real property by the trustees, but prior to the actual execution of the deed of conveyance, the appellant Clinton L. Walker instituted two separate suits in Monterey county, one of which was against Claude K. Doak and Sarah Doak, in which action he finally recovered a judgment by default for the sum of $6,920. The other action was prosecuted against Claude K. Doak alone, and likewise resulted in a judgment by default for $2,650. In each of these cases writs of attachment were duly issued and on July 26, 1923, served upon this plaintiff, the trustees, Claude K. and Sarah Doak, and levied against all of their right, title, interest, or estate in or to said real property.

By the terms of the trust instrument heretofore referred to, certain bonds and personal property were also conveyed to the trustees for the purposes therein specified. This personal property, however, is not involved in the title to said real property, and for the purposes of this opinion its transfer is immaterial.

The trial court found that the plaintiff was the sole owner of said real property and entitled to the possession thereof, and that this appellant, nor any of the other defendants, had any right, title, interest, or lien upon said real property by virtue of said attachment or otherwise, and thereupon quieted title in plaintiff. From this judgment the defendant Clinton L. Walker has appealed.

The sole question on appeal is whether said attachments created a lien upon the title to said real property.

Appellant contends that the beneficiaries under the declaration of trust retained an equitable interest in the land in question, which was subject to attachment by judgment creditors.

[1] The title to the property involved in this action was conveyed to the trustees by means of this declaration of an express trust for the purpose of sale, on March 30, 1922. By this instrument the trustor was divested of title, and the title was thereby absolutely vested in the trustees for the purpose of sale. Section 863 of the Civil Code provides:

"Except as hereinafter otherwise provided, every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust. The beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust."

The attachment under which the appellant claims a lien upon this property was not levied until July 26, 1923. In the meantime a valid binding agreement to sell the property was executed and delivered May 25, 1923, pursuant to which the purchaser had actually taken possession of the premises. At the time of the attachment, therefore, no title remained in the trustor, Sarah Doak, subject to such lien, and the interest of the beneficiaries was confined solely to the proceeds of said sale as provided by the terms of the trust instrument, and could in no way affect the title to the real property which had already actually passed. The attachment which was subsequent to the trust conveyance, was, therefore, subject to that transfer of title in spite of the fact that the agreement to sell the property was not recorded until after the levy. In the case of the National Bank of Pacific v. Western Pacific Railway Co., 157 Cal. 573, 108 P. 676, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391, it is said:

"A creditor who attaches property for his debt obtains a lien only upon the title or interest which the debtor has in the property at the time of the levy, and that if, at that time, all title and interest therein has passed from the debtor to a third person, the attaching creditor gets nothing by the levy. Tuohy v. Wingfield, 52 Cal. 319; Howell v. Foster, 65 Cal. 173 [3 P. 647]; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 508 [24 P. 930]."

[2] An unrecorded deed or conveyance is effective as against a subsequent levy of attachment. Morrow v. Graves, 77 Cal. 218, 19 P. 489; Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles v. Roberts, 49 Cal. App. 764, 194 P. 751.

Moreover, in 5 Thompson on Real Property, 337, § 4250, it is said:

"Actual possession of land by one who holds an unrecorded contract of purchase, or a bond for deed, is notice of his rights." 2 Tiffany on Real Property (2d Ed.) 2220, § 571; Grants Pass L. & W. Co. v. Brown, 168 Cal. 456, 143 P. 754; Beattie v. Crewdson, 124 Cal. 577, 57 P. 463.

[3, 4] An express trust to sell real property and distribute the proceeds of sale in a specified manner to designated beneficiaries, which declaration of trust contains no reservation of title and no power of revocation, vests the entire title in the trustee and absolutely divests the trustor of all estate and interest in the real property. Civ. Code, § 863; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 24 P. 930; Craven v. Dominguez Estate Co., 72 Cal. App. 713, 237 P. 821. It naturally follows, that under such circumstances, in the absence of fraud, an attaching creditor of a beneficiary under such a trust sale will acquire no lien upon the real property thus conveyed for the satisfaction of his judgment. A bona fide purchaser of real property thus acquired is entitled to a decree quieting his title against such beneficiaries and their creditors. But in a proper proceeding the beneficiaries may enforce a distribution of the proceeds of sale and specific performance of the provisions of the trust. And likewise, in a proper proceeding, the creditors of the beneficiaries may attach the proceeds of sale for the payment of their debt.

Appellant correctly says that, pursuant to the provisions of section 863 of the Civil Code, the trustees under an express trust take the entire title to the property involved, both legal and equitable, so far as it is necessary to carry out the purposes of the trust. In other words, the quantum of title is measured by the express purposes declared in the trust created. But this does not mean that, because the declaration of trust enjoins upon the trustees the duty of distributing the proceeds of the sale of land, therefore, a judgment creditor of a beneficiary under the trust may have a lien upon the title to the land already conveyed. It is equally true, and appears to be the clear construction of our courts, that where by an express trust one is given the unqualified authority to sell and convey real estate, such trustee is thereby necessarily invested with the entire title so that he can carry out the trust and convey a good and sufficient title.

In the case of Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 24 P. 930, plaintiff commenced an action against defendant on a promissory note for $21,404, and attached all of defendant's interest in certain Alameda county land. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and an execution which was duly issued therein was returned nulla bona. Subsequently another action, which was in the nature of a creditor's bill, was instituted by plaintiff against the defendant Waterman and one Smith, in which it was alleged that Waterman had conveyed his one-eighth interest in the Alameda county land to Smith to hold in trust in order to defeat and defraud the creditors of

Waterman. The answer alleged that Waterman had been the owner of a contract to purchase said one-eighth interest in said land, which contract he had assigned to one Stanford as security for Stanford's accommodation indorsement on Waterman's $16,500 note. The statute of limitations ran upon this $16,500 note, and subsequently Waterman conveyed this one-eighth interest in the Alameda county land to Smith "for the purpose of more conveniently making sales of said property, and in trust to divide the proceeds of such sales, * * * among the parties thereunto beneficially interested, and [in order] that the interest of said Waterman therein [which] is now held in trust by said Smith [may be devoted to] for the purpose of paying the indebtedness of Waterman to Stanford, so far as the same can be applied to such payment." Defendant had judgment in the trial court, and on appeal the Supreme Court said:

"The trust created in Smith is an express trust, under subdivision 1, section 857, of the Civil Code. It vests in Smith the whole title, legal and equitable. Civ. Code, § 863. By the very terms of the trust, whether we read it as originally written or as revised, Waterman had no interest in the property, and could never acquire any interest, unless he purchased it, as any stranger might do.

"The only right that any beneficiary under the trust had or has was to share in the proceeds of the rents and profits when realized, and of the sale of the land when sold, and the only remedy that of proceedings to enforce the execution of the trust. * * * Even if Waterman had an interest in the attached property the lien of the attachment would be subject to all equities. O'Rourke v. O'Connor, 39 Cal. 442; De Celis v. Porter, 59 Cal. 464. Even an unrecorded deed would prevail against the lien of the attachment. Plant v. Smythe, 45 Cal. 161; Le Clert v. Oullahan, 52 Cal. 252; Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564. * * * Upon the true theory of this case, the plaintiff took nothing, and acquired no right, by the levy of his attachment. * * * As we have already seen, Waterman had no interest in the land, legal, equitable, present, or prospective. 'An attaching creditor can acquire no greater right in attached property than the defendant had at the time of the attachment. If, therefore, the property be in such a situation that the defendant has lost his power over it, or has not yet acquired such interest in or power over it as to permit him to dispose of it adversely to others, it cannot be attached for his debt.' Howell v. Foster, 65 Cal. 173 (3 P. 647)."

The appellant attempts to distinguish the case of Ward v. Waterman, supra, from the one at bar, on the ground that that case was essentially an action to reform a declaration of trust. The pertinent language above quoted is disposed of by the appellant by the assertion that it is dictum. It is true that, through the medium of a complaint in intervention, the declaration of trust was modified and reformed, but the primary purpose of that action was to force an alleged interest of Waterman in certain real property, to respond to the satisfaction of a judgment, by means of an attachment. The chief issue was whether the attaching creditor could fasten upon Waterman's interest in that real property to satisfy the judgment, after Waterman and the other joint owners had conveyed the land to Smith in trust for the purpose of selling the land and distributing the proceeds pursuant to the directions contained in the declaration of trust. The reforming of the trust in no way altered or affected the application of the principle which was declared by the court, to the effect that, in the absence of fraud, by the conveyance of his title, legal or equitable, Waterman had divested himself of all the right, title, and interest which he had in the property, and there was, therefore no interest of Waterman's for the creditor to attach.

In the case of Craven v. Dominguez, supra, which, like the case at bar, was a suit to quiet title, the Dominguez Estate Company conveyed a large tract of land in trust to the Title Insurance Company by deed dated March 21, 1917. On that same day the Title Insurance Company executed a declaration of trust acknowledging the trust nature in which it held this same land for the purposes of subdivision, sale, and distribution of the proceeds thereof to certain beneficiaries named. On March 20, 1920, while the land was still standing in the name of the Title Insurance Company as trustee, the Dominguez Estate Company executed and delivered an oil lease affecting 140 acres of said tract of land. On April 19, 1920, the Title Insurance Company executed and delivered to plaintiff Emma Craven a deed of conveyance to the same 140-acre tract covered by the oil lease. Plaintiff then had notice and knowledge of the previous execution of the oil lease on the part of the Dominguez Estate Company. On August 21, 1921, the Title Insurance Company executed a written declaration attempting to ratify the oil lease which was made by the Dominguez Company prior to the execution of the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff. Upon these facts the trial court quieted title in plaintiff, which judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, and a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court. It was there contended that the Dominguez Estate Company was the real owner of the property and that the grantee of the 140-acre tract took it with notice and was bound by the former oil lease. The court said:

"The trust thus created was an express trust to sell real property and dispose of the proceeds of such sale. * * * 'Express trusts may be created for any of the following purposes: 1. To sell and convey real property and to hold or reinvest or apply or dispose of the proceeds in accordance with the instrument creating the trust.' Civ. Code, § 857. As a general rule every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustee subject only to the execution of the trust. The beneficiary takes no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust. Civ. Code, § 863.

"* * * In our opinion this trust comes within the general rule expressed in section 863. As we have seen, by the terms of this section, the absolute title to the trust property is vested in the trustee, and the only interest the beneficiary has therein is to enforce the trust. As against the trustee and those lawfully claiming under him, the beneficiary has no interest in the property itself, but only in the proceeds thereof after the property has been sold by the trustee. This was so held by the Supreme Court in construing a trust similar to the one before us. * * * Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 506 (24 P. 930, 934). The beneficiary, the Dominguez Estate Company, therefore, having no interest legal or equitable in the trust property, an attempted transfer thereof by it either in the form of a deed or lease, as against the trustee or its grantee, would not convey any interest in the trust property. On the other hand, the trustee, being vested with both the legal and equitable title, not only could convey by deed a good title to the trust property, but it is the only person clothed with such power. * * *

"A trustee has all the authority necessary to carry out the objects and purposes of the trust. This is true even though the instrument creating the trust may not directly confer upon him such power. * * * The quantity of interest which passes to the trustee in case of an express trust is commensurate with the necessities of his office; the trustee shall have an estate in fee, if that is necessary, to enable him to perform the duties imposed upon him; * * * on this principle a devise of lands in trust to sell clothes the trustee with the fee, because necessary to the execution of the trust * * * (citing Perry on Trusts, § 320; Young v. Bradley, 101 U. S. 787 [25 L. Ed. 1044; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes]).

"The Title Insurance & Trust Company as trustee, therefore, took an estate in the trust property adequate to the execution of the trust, and as the trust was to convey an absolute title to the lands and to distribute the proceeds of all sales thereof, it was necessary for it to own and hold the absolute title to the trust property. * * *

"The creator (of a trust) may, by the provisions of the instrument creating the trust, be divested of an estate or interest in the trust property. Thus where a trust deed creates a valid trust and gives a power of sale to the trustee at the request, and for the benefit of, the beneficiary, under the deed, no power of revocation being reserved, no estate in the premises is left in the grantor, which is capable of being transferred.' 39 Cyc. 245. See, also, Marvin v. Smith, 46 N. Y. 571; Kopp v. Gunter [Gunter] 95 Cal. 63 [30 P. 301]; Willhoyt [Wilhoit] v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 454 (25 P. 675).

"It follows, therefore, that the Dominguez Estate Company had no interest in the trust property which it could transfer by deed or otherwise. * * *

The foregoing authorities clearly hold that where a declaration of trust conveys real property to a trustee for the purpose of selling the land and distributing the proceeds of sale in a specified manner, and where the trust instrument contains no reservations of title or right of revocation, the trustor thereby divests himself of all title to the land. It naturally follows that if the trustor has no interest in the land, legal or equitable, there is no title upon which the judgment creditor of a beneficiary can fasten by means of an attachment. In a careful analysis of the cases cited by appellant there appears to be no case cited which is in real conflict with the principle announced in the foregoing cases.

The appellant contends that just the opposite doctrine has been announced in the case of Kennedy v. Nunan, 52 Cal. 326. The entire opinion of the court in that case is as follows:

"It is provided by section 688, Code Civil Procedure, that 'all goods, chattels, moneys, and other property, both real and personal, or any interest therein, of the judgment debtor, not exempt by law, * * * are liable to execution.' The deed of trust vested or left an interest in the property in question in Thomas O. Larkin, and such interest is, under the Code, subject to sale under execution."

In view of the foregoing authorities, if this language in the Kennedy Case can be said to conflict with these later decisions, the Kennedy Case must be deemed to have been overruled. But since the terms of the trust deed involved in the Kennedy Case are not set out in the opinion, and since the court deliberately says "the deed of trust vested or left an interest in the property in question in Thomas O. Larkin," we must assume that, unlike the declaration of trust in the instant case, the deed in the Kennedy Case did specifically reserve an interest in the land in the trustor. In that event, of course, such interest would be subject to execution or attachment. But that reservation of interest was not made in the instant case.

In the case of Le Roy v. Dunkerly, 54 Cal. 452, cited by appellant, it is apparent that by the terms of the trust deed involved in that case, the title to the real property did not fully pass from the trustor. Clearly an interest in that property was reserved in the trustor. The court there says:

"It is a conveyance * * * upon express trusts, to be used only for such trusts, and the title to be returned to the city upon the fulfillment of the trusts. If the debts were paid by the city, or the creditors released their claims, the property would become again the property of the city in full ownership. The legal title, as in other cases of trust deeds for the security of debt, was in the grantee; the equity of redemption and residuum after the satisfaction of the trust debts, in the city."

These facts also distinguish this Le Roy Case from the case at bar.

In the case of Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368, cited by appellant, it appears that the deed involved conveyed the real property in question with a limited trust or purpose of selling only so much of the property as was necessary to pay such debts as existed against the trustor which were a lien upon the property. The terms of this trust deed clearly left at least a possible interest in some of the lands involved. That was an equitable action which primarily decided that, in order to constitute an equitable conversion of real property into personalty, there must be an absolute duty on the part of the trustee to actually sell the real property. Because, under the trust deed in that case, the sale was conditional and did not necessarily cover all the real property, it was therefore held that it did not constitute a conversion.

All that the case of Fish v. Fowlie, 53 Cal. 373, decides, which is pertinent to this case, is that one who holds a valid contract to purchase land possesses such an interest in the real property as is subject to attachment.

So, also, in the case of Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 35 P. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314, cited by appellant as authority for the proposition that an attachment upon an interest reserved by a trustor in real property carries with it "the right to recover these moneys, in the event of a sale of the land by the trustees was [which are] a part of the thing attached in levying upon the entire equitable interest reserved to the fraudulent grantee by the trust deed." In that case the transfer of land was made to the trustee to secure the payment of an indebtedness due to the trustee. Under such circumstances, it cannot be denied that the trustor would still retain an interest in the land. Moreover, in that case the court found that the trust deed in question was executed by the trustor to defraud creditors and was, therefore, void as against an attaching creditor.

In the case at bar there was no contention that the declaration of trust or the subsequent sale and conveyance of the land in question was fraudulent or void. In fact, the appellant in his closing brief concedes that:

"We do not question the right of Finnie, the respondent, to receive title to this land under his contract upon his payment of amounts due thereunder. Our whole question is as to the right of the appellant here to receive that portion of the money which would belong to Claude Doak."

The sole question involved is whether defendant Walker can maintain an attachment lien upon land sold and conveyed in good faith to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration merely because he holds a judgment against a beneficiary of a trust by means of which the land was conveyed to the purchaser. This doctrine would make the purchaser of land through an express trust conveyance a guarantor for the faithful performance of the obligations of the trustee, and require the purchaser to see that the purchase money actually reached the hands of the beneficiaries who are entitled to it by the terms of a declaration of trust in which the purchaser is not concerned.

We are of the opinion that the declaration of trust in this case conveyed the title to the land in question to the trustees, and that their subsequent contract of sale to plaintiffs was valid and binding, and that plaintiffs took the title free and clear of any subsequent attachment lien on the part of a judgment creditor of the beneficiaries under the trust.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

SZASZ v. JOYLAND CO. (Civ. 3297.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 29, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 25, 1927.

1. Theaters and shows ⇨6—Proprietor of amusement place is responsible for negligence of concessionaires.

Proprietor of place of amusement, who leases part of premises to others for kindred purposes, is responsible for negligence of concessionaires.

2. Weapons ⇨18(1)—Great care must be exercised in use of firearms.

Firearms are dangerous, and great care must be exercised in their use.

3. Theaters and shows ⇨6—Finding that accident should have been anticipated, and that proprietor of amusement place was negligent in maintaining shooting gallery, held warranted.

In action for injury to onlooker at shooting gallery struck by part of bullet, fired by patron of gallery, deflecting from rear of gallery, evidence warranted finding that proprietor of place of amusement should have anticipated accident, and was negligent in maintaining shooting gallery.

4. Theaters and shows ⇨6—Proof held not to absolve proprietor of amusement place from liability for injuries by bullet from shooting gallery.

Where inference that concessionaire's shooting gallery was dangerous was justifiable, and danger arising therefrom ought to have been anticipated, mere proof that no such accident ever occurred before does not require finding in favor of proprietor of amusement park sued for injury to onlooker struck by part of bullet deflected from gallery.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1)—Verdict will not be disturbed because excessive, unless not result of dispassionate discretion of jury.

Verdict will not be disturbed on ground that it is excessive, unless obviously so disproportionate to injury as to justify conclusion that it is not result of cool and dispassionate discretion of jury.

6. Damages ⇨132(14)—$20,000 verdict for loss of eye held not to be disturbed as excessive.

Verdict of $20,000 for loss of eye, pain and suffering caused thereby, humiliation to be suffered in future, and handicap therefrom, cannot be disturbed as excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Frank Szasz, by Charles Szasz, his guardian ad litem, against the Joyland Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Evan J. Hughes, of Sacramento, and P. R. Lund, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh and Robert H. Schwab, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for damages in the sum of $20,000. The defendant has appealed from the judgment. The facts, which are undisputed, are accurately stated in respondent's brief as follows:

"The defendant owns and operates an amusement park in the city of Sacramento known as Joyland Park. There are numerous concessions leased by defendant to various concessionaires in and about the park, among which is a shooting gallery operated by Mrs. Earl Pappas. On the evening of the 24th day of August, 1924, plaintiff, in company with his father, mother, brother, and sister, pursuant to an advertisement in a newspaper, went to Joyland Park for the purpose of seeing a show. Upon arriving at the park the father, after paying the necessary admission for all, plaintiff included, drove his automobile into the grounds of said park. After visiting certain of the attractions about the park, all in the party went to see the show. After the show they proceeded toward the dancing pavilion. While en route to the dancing pavilion, plaintiff requested leave of his father to watch a man shooting at the shooting gallery, which adjoined the dancing pavilion, and, leave being granted, plaintiff, with his brother, Charles, went over to the shooting gallery and stood in front thereof, and, while looking in the direction of the targets, which were situated at the rear end of same, watched the man who was also standing in front of same shooting at said targets.

"While plaintiff and his brother were standing 4 or 5 feet to the rear of the man who was shooting at the targets, and to his right, the man shot once, and then shot again. Immediately after the second shot was fired, plaintiff put his hand to his eye and cried out that something had entered it. His father rushed to his side and thereupon made an examination of the eye, but, being unable to see what had entered it, because of the dim light, took plaintiff into the dance pavilion and later to the hospital, where treatment was given him pursuant to the doctor's orders. It was determined subsequently by X-ray that some foreign substance had entered the eyeball. Thereupon the doctor made several attempts to remove this foreign substance from the eyeball, but found it impossible to do so, which therefore necessitated the removal of same to save the other eye. Several months thereafter the eyeball was removed. It was then found that the foreign substance was a small piece of lead similar to the lead used in the bullets at the shooting gallery. The gun used was a special shooting gallery gun, called the Winchester .22, short rifle. The ammunition used was a Remington U. M. C. .22 short, smokeless, greased bullet made of soft lead.

"The shooting gallery was one story in height. It had a ground floor. Its exterior was made of wood. It was 35 or 40 feet wide and about 35 feet long. It had two wooden sides and a wooden end. The front end was open. At the front end there was a counter about 3 or 4 feet high, the top thereof being about 12 or 14 inches wide. The counter ran the full width of the front end of the shooting gallery.

"At the rear end thereof there was a sheet of iron backing which ran the full width and height of same. Half of the sides were iron. Against this backing the bullets shot by the patrons of the shooting gallery struck, if they were not intercepted in their flight by either the targets or the edges of the flat iron bars in the iron rack hereinafter described. Between the iron backing referred to and the iron rack there was a space of about 2 feet. The iron rack was made of iron rods and flat iron bars. The iron rods stood in a perpendicular manner and were used to support the flat iron bars which were lying one above the other in a horizontal manner. The flat iron bars were made of one and one-half or two-inch material and were a quarter of an inch thick and were situated one above the other about 4 or 5 inches apart. This iron rack ran the full width of the shooting gallery and almost the full height of same. The flat iron bars in the iron rack were used as shelves to set little iron targets made to represent little birds. These little targets were placed closely together, the full length and height of the iron rack; in other words, they were placed there unattached as targets for the shooters to shoot at if they chose. If any of these iron birds were struck by a bullet, they would be knocked off the rack. Suspended from the ceiling of the shooting gallery and 4 inches in front of and near the iron rack was a swinging target. It was about 14 or 16 inches in diameter. It was perfectly round. It was made to represent a clown's face. This swinging target at the time of the shooting was in motion and swung back and forth like the pendulum of an old clock. Attached to the swinging target and to the ceiling was a three quarter-inch iron pipe which held the target in position and swung back and forth with it. At different positions in front of the iron rack were a series of targets."

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to show negligence and that the verdict is excessive in amount. In appellant's opening brief it is correctly stated that:

"The uncontradicted testimony in this case is that the shooting gallery in question has been operated, without change in character of equipment or manner of operation for over 11 years, and that neither before or after the accident upon which this action is based has there been a single injury to patrons or spectators, save that alleged by plaintiff."

Appellant concedes:

"That the proprietor of a place of amusement, who leases part of his premises to others for kindred purposes, is responsible for the negligence of his concessionaires."

It has been so decided. Johnstone v. Panama-Pacific I. E. Co., 187 Cal. 323, 202 P. 34; Harvey v. Machtig, 73 Cal. App. 667, 239 P. 78; Whyte v. Idora Park Co., 29 Cal. App. 342, 155 P. 1018. As firearms are dangerous, great care must be exercised in their use. Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 636, 640, 105 P. 957, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124.

[3, 4] The plaintiff was standing in the rear and to the right of the man who fired the rifle and therefore could not have been struck by the bullet in its direct course; but the evidence clearly shows that he was hit by a fragment of the bullet. Of course, the path of the bullet was not discernible to the eye of any witness, but the whole situation was such as reasonably to establish the probable manner in which the accident occurred. The rear wall of the gallery was of iron, as were also the rear halves of the side walls. About 2 feet in front of the rear iron wall stood the iron rack, consisting, according to the photographs in evidence, of at least 11 horizontal bars supported by 8 or more vertical rods, equidistant apart. A bullet glancing against any one of these rods or bars might readily fly off in such an oblique direction as to strike the rear iron wall at a very acute angle and be deflected thence at a similar angle to one of the iron side walls or to one of the bars or rods in the rack, glancing thence towards the place from which it was fired. The number of courses which such a ricocheting bullet might take through the network of iron rods and bars and against the iron background is infinite. The bullet would probably be broken into fragments which would fly out in different directions. It cannot be held that the evidence does not warrant a finding that the defendant should have anticipated the happening of such an accident and that it was negligent in maintaining the arrangement described. Since it is a justifiable inference that such arrangement was dangerous, and that the danger arising therefrom ought to have been anticipated, mere proof that no such accident ever occurred before does not require a finding in favor of defendant.

[5] There remains the question whether the verdict is excessive in amount. In addition to the pain and suffering caused by the injury and the mortification and humiliation which will naturally be suffered in the future, the plaintiff will be seriously handicapped through life by the loss of his eye. In refusing to disturb a verdict of $15,000 for the loss of a foot in Darling v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 197 Cal. 702, 715, 242 P. 703, 709, the plaintiff not being engaged in any gainful occupation, the court said: "Courts have repeatedly refrained from attempting to establish any precise rule for the measurement of damages in actions for personal injuries, but, rather from necessity, leave the measurement to the sound sense and fair judgment of the jury," and that a verdict will not be disturbed on the ground that it is excessive, unless obviously so disproportionate to the injury as to justify the conclusion that it is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury. In Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598, 610, 242 P. 76, 81, a verdict was upheld for $15,000 on account of damages consisting largely of "facial disfigurements," no organs of the body being permanently disabled. The court said:

"Unless we are able to say that the award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court was so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as presented to us on appeal as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, rather than an honest and sober judgment, this court may not exercise the power of revision."

[6] For like reasons, the verdict of the jury in this case cannot be disturbed. Numerous cases bearing upon the question of verdicts claimed to be excessive are collected in notes as follows: 46 A. L. R. 1282, L. R. A. 1915F, 196, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1376, and 16 Ann. Cas. 39.

The judgment is affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 174

PETERSON et al. v. LARQUIER.
(Civ. 5050.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 27, 1927.

1. Landlord and tenant §22(1)—Contract reciting $500 deposit and agreement to pay additional sums at stated times for lease of 40-room apartment house at $15 per room per month held sufficiently definite.

Written accepted proposal, reciting deposit of $500 for lease of 40-room apartment house, to be commenced within 30 days, and agreement to pay additional sums, to be placed in escrow, when lease was ready for execution and notice of completion filed, the total to be applied as rent for first and last two months of 10-year lease at $15 per room, held sufficiently definite as to time, place, parties, and subject-matter to sustain judgment for damages for breach of contract to execute lease.

2. Landlord and tenant §22(4)—Refusal to execute lease within five days held no defense to action for breach of contract requiring return of deposit if unable to execute lease within such time.

Refusal to execute lease within five days, pursuant to contract requiring return of deposit if "unable" to produce leases for execution within such time, held no defense to action for breach of contract to execute lease.

3. Landlord and tenant §22(1)—Contract provision for return of deposit, if unable to produce leases for execution within five days, held to bind lessor, not lessees, to produce lease.

Contract for lease, providing for return of deposit "if within five days you are unable to produce to me leases for execution" held to bind prospective lessor, not lessees, to produce lease.

4. Landlord and tenant §22(4)—Evidence of enhanced rental value held sufficient evidence of damage sustained by breach of contract to execute lease.

Evidence that rental value of 40-room apartment house was over $1 per room per month more at time of repudiation of contract to execute lease thereof than at time of execution of agreement held sufficient proof of damage sustained by prospective lessees.

5. Landlord and tenant §22(5)—Measure of damages for breach of contract to execute lease is difference between agreed rental and rental value for term.

The measure of damages for breach of a contract to execute a lease is the difference between the rental agreed to be paid and the rental value of the premises for the term.

6. Damages §1—Party aggrieved by breach should be put in same position as if contract were performed.

The law seeks to put the party aggrieved by breach of contract in same position as if contract had been performed.

7. Damages §68—Interest is not allowable in action for unliquidated damages as for breach of contract to execute lease.

Interest is not allowable in an action for unliquidated damages as for breach of contract to execute a lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by May Peterson and another against Anna T. Larquier. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

H. G. Weyse, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. It appears that prior to November 8, 1922, the appellant authorized and requested one James D. Seely to lease for her certain real property situated in the city of Los Angeles, of which she was the owner, and upon which she proposed to construct an apartment house; that in compliance with such authorization and request Seely personally presented to appellant a written communication in the nature of a proposal, signed by the respondents, and reciting, "I hand you herewith $500 as a deposit for the lease of an apartment house to be erected" (upon appellant's property), construction to commence within 30 days, and that when said lease should be ready for execution, "I will hand you the sum of $700 which with the above deposit is to be placed in escrow, together with the lease"; that upon the filing of a notice of completion "I will hand you an additional sum of $1,200, which is to be also placed in escrow"; and that the escrow instructions should require that upon notice of completion the foregoing amounts, together with the lease, would be delivered, and that the total of $2,400 should be applied as rent for the first two months and the last two months of a 10-year lease. It was also proposed that the house should consist of 40 rooms, and that the rate of rental would be $15 per room; that upon the failure of the respondents to pay either of said sums as provided for in the document mentioned, they would forfeit all moneys theretofore deposited, and that the first or $500 payment should be returned if within five days appellant was unable to produce a lease ready for execution. Beneath the signatures of the respondents appears the following:

"Accepted and agree to pay Boyce-Seely Construction Co. the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) commission for securing above lease. 11/11/22. [Signed] Mrs. Anna T. Larquier."

Appellant having thereafter refused to lease to the respondents the premises in question, this action was commenced, praying specific performance or damages. Upon the rendition of judgment in the sum of $4,800 damages, together with interest and costs, for the plaintiffs, Mrs. Larquier appealed.

From the testimony of Seely and the respondent Peterson, it appears that the prospective lessees were at all times ready, able, and willing to lease the premises in controversy, and that they signed the foregoing instrument, deposited in escrow all of the above amounts of money, and demanded that appellant execute a lease which Seely had prepared in conformity with the specifications of the first instrument; that Seely wrote to appellant, and visited her upon several occasions, both alone and with Mr. Peterson, requesting that appellant sign the lease, but that upon each such occasion she declined to do so, stating that she had not yet received from the Bank of Italy her papers, or her building contract; that on or about November 23, 1922, appellant wrote a letter to Seely stating that the $500 had not been handed to her, and that the agreement was therefore "null and void." Seely testified that he explained to Mrs. Larquier that under the escrow instructions he was not permitted to pay the money to appellant in person until she should have complied therewith, and that he urged her to go through with the escrow and enable him to deliver the lease to respondents. Mrs. Larquier testified that when the first document was presented to her respondents had not signed it; "that there was not a signature on it;" that the acceptance had been written over her signature thereafter; and that she did not agree to pay the commission therein mentioned. Appellant's excuse for refusing to sign the lease, when she testified at the trial, was that the proposed lessees were "not suitable and responsible." Beyond this, however, she swore that she was unable to remember any of the dates, correspondence, conversations, or transactions, except that her husband may have written the letter repudiating the agreement upon the ground that the initial payment had not been handed to her personally, and she accounted for her asserted fickle recollection by the fact that it had been "a long time" since the occurrence. Seely testified, however, that he personally wrote the acceptance upon the contract in appellant's presence at her residence, following a thorough discussion with her, and that she signed the instrument exactly as it appeared when introduced in evidence; that during his subsequent visits appellant instructed him to "tell Mrs. Peterson everything will be all right." It is admitted that during that same month, and while these negotiations were pending, Mrs. Larquier leased the same property to another party for a term of ten years at the rate of $16 per room, and erected an apartment house thereon, which was completed in May, 1923.

During the examination of appellant under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, counsel for respondents offered for identification the document dated November 8, 1922, to which appellant interposed an objection. The contract was ordered "marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 1 for identification," and thereafter during the direct examination of the respondent Peterson, the instrument was offered and received in evidence as Plaintiffs' Exhibit 1, without objection. Appellant insists that the contract was but a mere memorandum for a lease; that it was incomplete, uncertain and ambiguous; that it was unenforceable as against either party, for the reason that it was not personally delivered to appellant, and the lease was not executed within five days as agreed; and that said instrument was therefore erroneously admitted in evidence by the trial court. It is argued that the respondents were not bound by the terms of the contract to do anything, and that merely depositing money in escrow did not constitute an act which would have enabled the appellant to compel a specific performance had she cared to do so.

[1] Appellant devotes her principal argument to an attempt to establish certain legal principles governing the specific performance of contracts. This is all beside the subject, since the court did not render a judgment for specific performance, but only for damages. It is further claimed that the instrument which the parties signed was a mere memorandum, and not a contract at all, because too indefinite and incomplete. The objections along that line are untenable. A number of specifications of indefiniteness are attempted to be made—for example, it is said that the “plaintiffs do not agree to pay any definite sum as rent for ten years.” It is admitted that the lease agreed upon was to be for the period of 10 years, at a rental of $15 per room, or $600 per month, and that the entire amount thus provided would be $72,000. And yet, it is said, the plaintiffs did not agree to pay that sum. Merely to state this and other similar objections to the agreement is to show their fallacy. The respondents made a certain definite proposal which the court found had been accepted, and the evidence clearly sustains that finding. We think the writing sufficiently definite as to time and place, parties and subject-matter to sustain a judgment for damages for breach of contract.

It is argued that the court erred in admitting the agreement in evidence. As above indicated, it was admitted without objection.

[2, 3] It is also seriously insisted that there was no enforceable contract for the reason that the lease provided therein to be made was not in fact executed within the five-day limit fixed in the offer. The provision in question is: “The above deposit of $500.00 to be returned to me if within five days you are unable to produce to me leases for execution.” It appears that the appellant did not in fact execute any lease within the 5-day limit, or at all, but to maintain that her refusal to carry out her contract in that behalf may be a defense in an action against her for breach of her contract is a novel theory, and amounts to an attempt to profit by her own wrong. It is said that this clause did not bind the defendant to produce a lease, but that the provision intended that the plaintiffs do so. There is nothing in the agreement to that effect, that such a construction contradicts the plain language of the writing. It is clear that the intention of the parties was that if it should not be within the power of the appellant to produce a lease within five days, then the transaction would be ended and the $500 returned to the respondents, but there is nothing in evidence to indicate that she was “unable” to lease the premises as provided in the contract, but merely that she refused to do so. The fact that she did lease the premises establishes her ability to produce the lease contemplated.

[4-6] Concerning the claim that there was no proof that respondents sustained damage, it is sufficient to say that the court found that at the time of the execution of the agreement between respondents and appellant the reasonable rental value of the premises was $15 per room on a ten-year lease, and that on or about November 22, 1922, at the time when appellant repudiated and breached her contract and refused to execute a lease as provided by the agreement, the rental value of the property in question had enhanced in excess of $1 per room per month for such a lease. This finding is amply supported by the evidence. The measure of damages in such a case is the difference between the rental agreed to be paid and the rental value of the premises for the term; for in this way only can the law compensate an aggrieved party and put him in the same position as if a contract had been performed, which, of course, the law seeks to do. Coburn v. California Portland Cement Co., 144 Cal. 81, 77 P. 771.

[7] The court erred in one respect. It allowed interest against appellant from November 22, 1922, apparently upon the theory that interest should begin at the time of the breach of the contract. However, in an action for damages, where judgment is rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and where, as here, the plaintiff's claim is unliquidated, the law does not authorize the allowance of interest. Brady v. Wilcoxson, 44 Cal. 239; Ferreira v. Chabot, 121 Cal. 233, 53 P. 689, 1092. It appears that the judgment thus erroneously allows interest from November 22, 1922, until the rendition of judgment. This provision is directed to be stricken out, and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Ex parte CULVER. (Cr. 1418.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 1, 1927.

1. Constitutional law ☞250, 265—Statute providing that two or more different offenses of same class of crimes may be charged in one information held not to violate due process and equal protection clauses of Constitution (Pen. Code, § 954).

Pen. Code, § 954, providing that one information may charge two or more offenses of same class of crimes under separate counts, and that two or more informations filed in such cases may be consolidated by court's order, held not invalid as violating "due process of law" and "equal protection of law" clauses of state and federal Constitutions.

2. Constitutional law ☞48—Law is not unconstitutional because it vests in officers authority which might be arbitrarily or unfairly exercised.

Law is not to be held unconstitutional merely because it vests in certain officers authority which might be arbitrarily or unfairly exercised, since it is not to be assumed that such officers will act otherwise than in pursuance of sound discretion.

3. Statutes ☞68, 71—General and uniform laws need be enacted only where they can be made applicable.

Constitution demands that general and uniform laws be enacted only where they can be made applicable.

4. Constitutional law ☞211—To declare law unconstitutional as discriminatory, it must appear that it is not founded on natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction.

In order to declare law unconstitutional as being discriminatory, it must appear that it is not founded on natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction.

5. Habeas corpus ☞4—Irregularities which should be taken advantage of by appeal from conviction furnish no basis for release on habeas corpus.

After conviction, defendant cannot secure release on habeas corpus because of irregularities which should have been taken advantage of by appeal.

Application by Lawrence Culver for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Warden of San Quentin State Prison to secure the release of petitioner from custody on the ground of improper consolidation of charges. Writ denied.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

KNIGHT, J. The petitioner herein, Lawrence Culver, is a prisoner confined in the state prison, and has applied for a writ of habeas corpus. It appears from his petition that he was charged in the superior court in and for Los Angeles county, in two informations, with seven distinct felonies, consisting of lewd and lascivious acts with a child under 14 years of age, sex perversion, and the infamous crime against nature; that pursuant to section 954 of the Penal Code, the trial court ordered the informations consolidated, and upon trial before a jury he was found guilty on all seven charges and sentenced accordingly.

[1-4] Said section 954 provides, among other things, that one information "may" charge two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes under separate counts; also that if two or more informations are filed in such cases the court "may" order them to be consolidated. Petitioner contends that since the power conferred upon the district attorney and the court respectively by the foregoing section is a discretionary one, which may or may not be exercised in all cases, said section "is contrary to the inhibitions contained in the 'due process of law' and 'equal protection of law' clauses of the state and federal Constitutions." It is well settled, however, that a law is not to be held unconstitutional merely because it vests in certain officers an authority which might be arbitrarily or unfairly exercised, for the reason that it is not to be assumed that such officers will act in such manner or otherwise than in pursuance of sound discretion. In re Holmes, 187 Cal. 640, 203 P. 398; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 P. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529. Moreover, the Constitution demands that general and uniform laws be enacted only where they can be made applicable (Argyle Dredging Co. v. Chambers, 40 Cal. App. 332, 181 P. 84); and in order to declare a law unconstitutional as being discriminatory, it must appear that it is not founded upon a natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction (Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604; People v. Schomig, 74 Cal. App. 109, 239 P. 413).

It requires no discussion, we think, to prove that it would be quite impossible in the orderly administration of the criminal laws to require that in every case all criminal charges which might be brought against a person be inserted in one accusation, or that if there were two or more accusations, they be tried together. The effect of a law establishing such procedure would obviously operate injuriously and prejudicially against the prosecution and defense alike. On the other hand, the interests of justice require that in many cases such course be followed. It would therefore seem that the procedure prescribed in the present law is the only feasible and practical one which could be adopted.

Petitioner further contends that different offenses, not of the same class, were charged in one information; that the two informations charged different offenses not of the same class; that the minutes of the trial fail to show that the verdicts were read to the jury and that inquiry was made as to whether or not the same were their verdicts; that the minutes also fail to show that before judgment of sentence was pronounced the court inquired whether or not petitioner had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced.

[5] It is apparent that the points thus made relate to alleged irregularities occurring prior to and at the time of conviction, and it has been repeatedly held that after conviction a defendant cannot secure his release on habeas corpus upon irregularities which should have been taken advantage of by an appeal. 13 Cal. Jur. p. 218, note 15.

The application is denied.

BROWN et al. v. DAVIS. (Civ. 3266.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1927.

1. Evidence ⇨588—Jury need not accept as true explanation of sole eyewitness as to cause of accident.

Jury is not bound to accept witness' explanation of cause of accident, in action for injuries, though witness was sole person present who testified.

2. Appeal and error ⇨933(4)—Order granting new trial which does not specify grounds is presumed not to have been granted for insufficiency of evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Where order granting new trial does not specify whether it was granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it is presumed that order was not based on that ground, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

3. Negligence ⇨68—Invited guest, knowing of excessive speed of automobile, is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to remonstrate with driver.

Invited guest riding in automobile is not guilty of contributory negligence by reason of failure to remonstrate with driver going at excessive or dangerous rate of speed, though fact is known to guest or is plainly obvious to reasonable person in his situation.

4. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Presumption of negligence arose on death of guest from overturning of automobile in exclusive control of defendant (Civ. Code, § 2096).

In action for death of invited guest in automobile resulting from overturning of car while in exclusive operation and control of defendant, presumption of defendant's negligence arose from such overturning, though only ordinary care need be exercised by carrier of persons without reward, under Civ. Code, § 2096.

5. Courts ⇨95(1)—Decisions of courts of other states not in harmony with decisions of local courts need not be considered.

Decisions of other state courts need not be considered, where they are not in harmony with decisions of courts of local state.

6. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Presumption of negligence may arise, though injury was caused by some other agency.

Fact that injury may have been caused by some other agency than defendant does not prevent presumption of defendant's negligence arising under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

7. Negligence ⇨136(12)—Whether presumption of negligence is overcome by circumstances is generally question for jury.

Whether presumption of negligence under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been offset by evidence of facts and circumstances attending accident is ordinarily question of fact for jury in action for injuries.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Almer Brown and others against Will Davis. Judgment for defendant. From an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages for the death of the wife of plaintiff Brown, caused by the overturning of the defendant's automobile while he was driving it and in which Mrs. Brown was riding as his invited guest. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant and the court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. This appeal is from the order granting a new trial.

[1, 2] Mrs. Brown and several others were riding in the automobile at the time of the accident, which occurred late at night. None of the occupants of the machine, except the defendant, were witnesses at the trial. He testified that immediately before the accident "there was a car coming * * * on the other side and what made me pull out of the road, the car was coming on the other side of the road with no lights"; that he thereupon drove off the graveled part of the road and as he attempted to pull back again the right rear wheel collapsed and his automobile overturned. The wheel had broken off at the hub. The defendant testified that before turning off the graveled road he was traveling at the rate of 25 to 30 miles an hour and that he continued at that speed until the accident occurred. In confused and uncertain terms he testified that when the machine left the traveled part of the road, the shoulder thereof evidently being sideling, Mrs. Brown threw her arms around him and thereby caused him to lose control of the automobile. There is neither allegation nor evidence that the defendant was driving at an excessive or dangerous rate of speed. The jurors, of course, were not bound to accept the defendant's explanation of the cause of the accident. The order granting a new trial does not specify whether it was granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and therefore it is "presumed that the order was not based upon that ground." Code Civ. Proc. § 657. Negligence is charged in the complaint in general terms only.

[3] The court instructed the jury, in effect, that if the defendant was driving at an excessive or dangerous rate of speed and that fact was known to the deceased "or was plainly obvious to a reasonable person in her situation," and that she failed to remonstrate with the defendant, she was guilty of contributory negligence. The instruction is so clearly erroneous that it is deemed sufficient to cite Dowd v. Atlas T. & A. Service, 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870, and Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc. (Cal. App.) 247 P. 236, wherein the duty of a passenger in case of a driver's negligence is considered.

[4] The court instructed the jury to the effect that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable to the facts of the case and also that it is not applicable thereto. The doctrine has often been stated in this and other states in the language of Earle, C. J., in Scott v. London Dock Co., 3 Hurl. & C. 596, decided in 1865. The plaintiff in that case, an officer of customs, while in the discharge of his official duties in the defendant's warehouse, was injured by the unexplained fall upon him of six bags of sugar. In the opinion it is said:

"There must be reasonable evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care."

The question here is whether a presumption of negligence arose from proof merely that the automobile overturned while in the exclusive operation and control of the defendant. The answer must be in the affirmative if the foregoing doctrine is to be applied literally. The doctrine is applicable in cases of carriers by automobile for hire. Scarborough v. Urgo, 191 Cal. 341, 346, 216 P. 584; Dowd v. Atlas T. & A. Service, supra. "A carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage." Civ. Code, § 2100. "A carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care and diligence for their safe carriage." Civ. Code, § 2096; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319; Sheehan v. Foster (Cal.

App.) 251 P. 235; Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., supra; Spring v. McCabe, 53 Cal. App. 330, 200 P. 41. Does this difference in the degree of care required of the two classes of carriers justify a distinction in the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur? In holding the doctrine applicable to an explosion of nitroglycerine in process of manufacture into dynamite, it is said:

"As was well said by the court in Rose v. Stephens, etc., Co. [C. C.] 11 F. 438: 'Undoubtedly the presumption has been more frequently applied in cases against carriers of passengers than in any other class, but there is no foundation in authority or reason for any such limitation of the rule of evidence. The presumption originates from the nature of the act, not from the nature of the relations between the parties.' The carrier's contract with his passenger is simply to exercise a certain degree of care in his transportation. It is a duty which the law enjoins upon him; but the law also enjoins the duty upon this appellant and all others, in the conduct of their business, to exercise a certain degree of care toward this respondent and all mankind. The duty which the law enjoins in the two cases only differs in the degree of care to be exercised. The principle of law involved is wholly the same; and, as has been said, the reason of the rule is not found in the relations existing between the party injuring and the party injured. The presumption arises from the inherent nature and character of the act causing the injury. Presumptions arise from the doctrine of probabilities. The future is measured and weighed by the past, and presumptions are created from the experience of the past. What has happened in the past, under the same conditions, will probably happen in the future, and ordinary and probable results will be presumed to take place until the contrary is shown." Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 555. 40 P. 1020, 1021 (29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146).

It is not perceived that the probability of injury being the result of negligence is any less in case of a carriage without reward than one for reward. The doctrine has been held applicable in cases in which the injuring party was bound to the exercise of ordinary care only. Harlow v. Standard Improvement Co., 145 Cal. 477, 480, 78 P. 1045; Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 676, 678, 117 P. 931; Onell v. Chappell, 38 Cal. App. 375, 376, 176 P. 370; John v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 42 Mont. 18, 111 P. 632, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 85; Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A. L. R. 835; Whitwell v. Wolf, 127 Minn. 529, 149 N. W. 299; Berry on Automobiles (5th Ed.) § 512; Huddy on Automobiles (8th Ed.) § 345. The doctrine has been applied in cases of injury to invited guests, caused by the operation of automobiles. Berry on Automobiles (5th Ed.) § 648; Masten v. Cousins, 216 Ill. App. 268; MacKenzie v. Oakley, 94 N. J. Law, 66, 108 A. 771.

[5] There are cases holding to the contrary in states in which an invited guest riding in an automobile is deemed a mere licensee.

Such cases, of course, are not in harmony with the decisions in this state and need not be considered. In Ferrell v. Solski, 278 Pa. 565, 123 A. 493, cited by appellant, it is said:

"From the mere happening of the accident, no presumption of negligence arises."

The court there, however, appears to have been considering the effect of the whole evidence, rather than mere proof of the happening of the accident, for it is further said:

"The evidence justifies the statement that the driver was advancing with reasonable care on an open country highway without other vehicles in sight. There was nothing shown in this case which can fairly be said to have put Solski on his guard as to impending danger, and, though inferences as to proper handling, to be drawn from the circumstances, are ordinarily for a jury, * * * yet, if the undisputed facts show the injury to be accidental, and without negligence, liability should not be imposed merely because loss has been sustained."

The same is true of Simpson v. Jones, 284 Pa. 596, 131 A. 541. Appellant relies particularly on Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A. L. R. 1237. In that case a guest who was riding in a Ford automobile driven by one of the defendants at 15 miles an hour was killed by the overturning of the automobile. The driver "was unable to give any explanation of the cause of the accident, other than that the automobile suddenly sheered to the left and went into the gutter. He could assign no reason for its so doing. * * * The left-hand front tire was deflated." The court said:

"It is not at all beyond the realm of possibility that the accident might have happened by reason of this blow-out. * * * It is familiar knowledge that the blow-out of the front tire of an automobile is a dangerous occurrence, the degree of danger, of course, depending upon the rate of speed, and, we apprehend, somewhat upon the character of the car. * * * Granting that the accident might have been the result of negligent operation of the car, the evidence certainly discloses a possibility that the accident might have been the result of the blow-out. * * * The jury could have done no more than guess as to whether the accident was the result of careless and negligent operation of the car or of the blow-out. Verdicts cannot rest upon guess or conjecture. It is the duty of the plaintiff to prove negligence affirmatively, and while the inferences allowed by the rule or doctrine of res ipsa loquitur constitute such proof, it is only where the circumstances leave no room for a different presumption that the maxim applies."

[6, 7] It is to be inferred from the last sentence quoted that from mere proof of the overturning of the automobile while it was being operated by one of the defendants a presumption of negligence arose, but that this presumption was overcome by proof of the blow-out. In this state it has been held that—

"Such a presumption is evidence in the case, but it has no greater or different effect than the testimony of witnesses. * * * When all the evidence is in, the question for the jury is whether the preponderance is with the plaintiff." Scarborough v. Urgo, supra, page 346 (216 P. 586).

"The presumption of defendant's negligence arises regardless of the fact that the injury may have been caused by some other agency." Osgood v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 137 Cal. 280, 283, 70 P. 169, 170 (92 Am. St. Rep. 171); Housel v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 167 Cal. 245, 248, 139 P. 73, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 665; Willard v. Valley Gas, etc., Co., 180 Cal. 561, 564, 182 P. 32.

Whether the presumption of negligence in such a case has been offset by the facts and circumstances attending the accident is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

RODRIGUEZ v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5699.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 1, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨419—Evidence held to support finding as to termination of compensation claimant's disability (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In proceedings to amend award, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), evidence held to support finding of Industrial Accident Commission as to cessation of claimant's disability over period during which compensation had been allowed.

2. Master and servant ⇨419—Power of commission to amend award by withdrawing compensation awarded held not impaired by delay of insurance carrier in filing petition (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, § 20[d]).

Delay of insurance carrier in filing petition to terminate employee's award for disability held not to deprive Industrial Accident Commission of authority to withdraw compensation previously awarded, which had accrued at time of filing petition, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, § 20(d) (St. 1917, p. 850).

3. Master and servant ⇨419—Industrial Accident Commission has authority to increase, diminish, or terminate award granted (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, § 20[d]).

Industrial Accident Commission at time of amendment of award has authority upon good cause shown therefor, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, §

20(d) (St. 1917, p. 850), to increase, diminish, or terminate award granted by its prior order.

Certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding by E. Rodriguez under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Order of the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, amending a former award in claimant's favor and allowing compensation as for partial disability, and claimant applies for certiorari. Writ denied.

S. Santilli and B. A. Hayne, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On December 23, 1924, petitioner sustained injuries and resulting disability, for which he filed claim for compensation against his employer and its insurance carrier.

On October 28, 1925, an award was made by the commission granting to applicant compensation on a basis of temporary total disability, and providing for weekly payments to continue until the termination of the disability or until the further order of the commission.

On August 13, 1926, the insurance carrier filed petition for order terminating disability as of November 5, 1925. After a hearing and evidence received, the commission on January 3, 1927, made its order amending the former award, so that petitioner be allowed compensation as for partial disability on November 6, 1925, and until further order. On petition by the insurance carrier for a rehearing, that petition was granted, and on March 18, 1927, the commission on the same evidence theretofore received amended its award, so as to deny compensation from December 5, 1925, to November 12, 1926, but to allow compensation as for partial disability from November 12, 1926, until further order of the commission. A rehearing after this last amendment to the award was demanded by petitioner and was denied. Thereupon, he filed this petition for a writ of review.

[1] It thus appears that the principal subject-matter of petitioner's complaint is that he was denied any compensation for the period extending between November 6, 1925, and November 12, 1926. The evidence as set forth in the petition herein, as contained in the report of Dr. Phillips, which was received as evidence in the proceeding, was sufficient to support a finding that the disability had ceased on November 6, 1925. Dr. Phillips stated as the result of his examination on that date that the patient had apparently recovered entirely from the effects of the injury, and in the opinion of the physician was able to do his former work. Nevertheless, from the evidence produced at the later hearing, there was found to exist on November 12, 1926, a partial disability resulting from some renewal of the pathological symptoms resulting from the original injury. We cannot say that there is any inconsistency between these contrasting facts which would require us to hold that there necessarily was any disability during the intervening period for which compensation has been denied.

[2, 3] In addition to his contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the amendment to the award, counsel for petitioner contends that, since the petition of the insurance carrier to terminate disability as of November 5, 1925, was not filed until August 13, 1926, therefore the commission was without authority to deprive him of that part of the compensation previously awarded, and which by the terms of the original award had accrued on August 13, 1926. It seems, however, that, under the provisions of section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 850), the commission at the time of the amendment to the award had authority upon good cause appearing therefor to increase, diminish, or terminate the award granted by its prior order. National Engineering Corporation v. Ind. Acc. Com., 193 Cal. 422, 225 P. 2; Miller Creamery v. Ind. Acc. Com., 66 Cal. App. 404, 226 P. 402. This being so, there is no apparent reason against application of this authority so that it shall relate to the very time when, under the facts, the change in rating should have been made.

The petition for writ of review is denied.

Ex parte OTTO. (Cr. 989.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1927.

Criminal law — 1207—Sentence under Indeterminate Sentence Law for crime committed before it went into effect held void (Pen. Code, § 1168, as added by St. 1917, p. 665).

Sentence under Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pen. Code, § 1168, as added by St. 1917, p. 665), is void where defendant committed crime of escaping from prison two days before such law went into effect.

Original habeas corpus by Carl Otto against the Warden of Folsom State Prison to secure the release of the petitioner from custody on the ground of illegal sentence. Petitioner remanded.

Carl Otto, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner was received into the state prison February 7, 1913, under sentence of seven years each on two charges of burglary of the first degree, the terms to run consecutively. July 25, 1917, he escaped from the prison, but was later returned thereto. He was thereafter tried in the superior court of Marin county and convicted of the crime of so escaping. He was thereupon sentenced by said court to imprisonment in the state prison "for the term of indeterminate sentence as provided in section 1168 of the Penal Code, said term to commence at expiration of present sentence." The Indeterminate Sentence Law (Stats. 1917, p. 665), did not go into effect until July 27, 1917, two days after the petitioner's escape from prison. Under the authority of In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958, and numerous subsequent decisions, the sentence is void. The terms for which the petitioner was sentenced on the charges of burglary have expired, and he is now imprisoned under the sentence upon the charge of escaping. The other grounds upon which petitioner asks to be released are without merit.

It is ordered that the warden of the state prison at Folsom deliver the petitioner to the sheriff of the county of Marin, to whose custody he is remanded, for judgment by the superior court upon the conviction.

Recital in commitment to penitentiary that defendant pleaded guilty to, and was sentenced to prison for, crime of felony, "sex perversion," when read in connection with title of Pen. Code, § 288a, as re-enacted by St. 1921, p. 1633, declaring commission of acts described therein to be sex perversion, held to sufficiently identify crime with that section to enable prison board to exercise its jurisdiction under section 1168 in fixing term of imprisonment.

2. Criminal law § 991(3)—Sentence for sex perversion of not more than fifteen years following terms of statute held valid (Pen. Code, § 288a, as re-enacted by St. 1921, p. 1633).

Sentence to prison on plea of guilty to crime of sex perversion held not invalidated by inclusion therein of maximum of not more than 15 years, in that terms of sentence are identical with those fixed by Pen. Code, § 288a, as re-enacted by St. 1921, p. 1633; no minimum penalty being therein stated.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

KNIGHT, J. Application for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner is now being imprisoned in the state prison under a commitment issued out of the superior court in and for the county of Imperial, which shows that he was charged in said court with "the crime of felony, to wit, sex perversion," and upon arraignment entered a plea of "guilty of the offense charged in the information." The commitment then reads:

"That whereas, the said H. G. Parsons having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of felony, sex perversion, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said H. G. Parsons be punished by imprisonment at San Quentin, in the state prison of the state of California, for the term of not more than fifteen years."

Petitioner contends that:

The "sentence and judgment are void for the following reasons: (1) Because the same fixes or names the maximum penalty; and (2) because the same does not name the felony offense with such particularity as would enable the state prison board to determine what the minimum and maximum terms of imprisonment for the offense of which petitioner was convicted consisted of."

In re-establishing section 288a of the Penal Code (Stats. 1921, p. 1633), the Legislature has, in effect, declared the commission of the acts described in said section to be "sex perversion," the title of the legislative enactment of said section being, "An act * * * prohibiting sex perversion and prescribing a penalty for violation of the provisions hereof"; and it does not appear that the expression mentioned has been employed by the Legislature in connection with the enactment of any other penal statute.

Necessarily the name of the felony of which petitioner stood convicted and for which he was sentenced could not have been inserted in the commitment, because in the section itself no legal appellation was given to the acts denounced therein as a crime; the Legislature having merely described them, and declared that any person participating in them was "punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than fifteen years." The intentional omission to name the crime in the section itself is accounted for by the fact that, in framing the previous Code section, of which the present one is a re-enactment, the Legislature sought to name the crime without describing the acts constituting the same, and the section was de-

[1] For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that the recital in the commitment that petitioner was charged with, pleaded guilty to, and was sentenced to prison for, the crime of "felony, to wit, sex perversion," when read in connection with the title to the legislative enactment of said section 288a, sufficiently identified the crime with that section to enable the prison board to exercise its jurisdiction, under section 1168 of said Code, in fixing the term of imprisonment.

[2] The sentence imposed upon petitioner was not invalidated by the inclusion therein of the maximum of "not more than fifteen years." The terms of the court's sentence are identical with those fixed by said section 288a, no minimum penalty being stated and consequently the instant case is differentiated from the case of People v. Lee, 36 Cal. App. 323, 172 P. 158, upon which petitioner seems to rely. Conceding that the judgment of sentence may have consisted merely of a recital of the offense of which petitioner stood convicted and a designation of the state prison to which he was committed (People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 510, 173 P. 998), the fact that the trial court followed the terms of the statute did not interfere in any manner with the operation of the indeterminate sentence law nor with the jurisdiction of the prison board in the matter of fixing the period of imprisonment, and therefore the sentence imposed was not erroneous.

The application is denied.

PHILBROOK v. MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 5123.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 25, 1927.

1. Garnishment ⚡41—Obligation under building contract arises from rendition of service, not from architect's certificate, within law of garnishment (Code Civ. Proc. § 544).

Obligation to pay for work done under a building contract arises from rendition of service, so as to render the debt due and owing, within Code Civ. Proc. § 544, relating to garnishment, even though an architect's certificate has not been presented to trustee of mortgage money, as required by contract.

2. Garnishment ⚡41—Architect's certificate authorizing trustee to disburse mortgage money to building owner held evidentiary merely, not consideration of obligation to pay for work.

As respects garnishment, architect's certificate which, under contract, was to be conclusive evidence for trustee of performance of work, so as to authorize him to disburse to building owner proceeds of mortgage bonds, held evidentiary; the rendition of services, not production of certificate, being consideration giving rise to obligation to pay for work done under the contract.

3. Garnishment ⚡41—Architect's certificate held unnecessary to authorize trustee of mortgage money to disburse funds to building owner to extent of judgment against owner for work on building (Code Civ. Proc. § 544).

Architect's certificate to authorize trustee of mortgage money to disburse funds to building owner held unnecessary, where judgment against owner for services on the work became final; the judgment being sufficient evidence of performance to render the mortgage money to the extent thereof due owner, within Code Civ. Proc. § 544, relating to garnishment.

4. Garnishment ⚡41—Debt, to be "due or owing" within law of garnishment, need not be immediately payable (Code Civ. Proc. § 544).

Debt, in order to be "due or owing," within Code Civ. Proc. § 544, relating to garnishment, is not necessarily immediately payable, but may be for money fully earned, but not payable until a future time.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Due and Owing.]

5. Garnishment ⚡41—Parties to building contract will not be presumed to have intended architect's caprice in withholding certificate should cause forfeiture of contractor's right to compensation.

As respects garnishment, it will not be presumed that parties to a building contract requiring production to trustee of mortgage money of architect's certificate, in order for money to be payable, intended that money rightfully due for services on the work should be forfeited by contractor on the caprice of the architect in withholding certificate.

6. Contracts ⚡289—Building contractor may collect money, notwithstanding architect arbitrarily withholds certificate.

Where an architect's certificate is refused without cause, the contractor may nevertheless collect his money.

7. Garnishment ⚡41—Architect's certificate to authorize trustee to disburse mortgage money to building owner held solely for trustee's protection.

As respects garnishment, architect's certificate under building contract providing that it should be conclusive evidence of performance of work authorizing trustee to disburse mortgage money to building owner held solely for trustee's benefit, and not prerequisite to recovery for services by one contracting with owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action for money by Ida B. Philbrook, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Carleton A. Philbrook, deceased, against the Mercantile Trust Company of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco (J. F. Shuman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Bert Schlesinger, of San Francisco, Jerome H. Boyer, of Oakland, and Ida B. Philbrook, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of respondent and against appellant in the sum of $5,-601.98.

On July 1, 1911, the Down Town Realty Company leased from Mary Prior and others a parcel of real property at the southwest corner of Mason and Eddy streets in San Francisco. The lease covered a term of 30 years, commencing on April 1, 1912, and provided, among other things, for the immediate erection of a building upon the demised premises by the lessee at its own expense. In pursuance of this latter provision the Down Town Realty Company on July 25, 1911, entered into a written agreement with two construction engineers, Taylor and Johnson by name, whereby the Down Town Realty Company employed these men to superintend the erection of a building on the leased premises and agreed to compensate them for their services in a certain total amount made payable at successive stages in the construction of the contemplated building. On the day of the execution of this agreement Taylor assigned all of his interest thereunder to one Carleton A. Philbrook. This assignment was forthwith consented to and ratified by both Taylor and the Down Town Realty Company, and at all times thereafter Carleton A. Philbrook was treated by all interested parties as a party to the agreement in place of Taylor. Immediately upon the execution of the agreement Johnson and Philbrook commenced the performance of their duties thereunder and continued such performance at all times thereafter up to June 4, 1912. Between December 1, 1911, and June 4, 1912, the Down Town Realty Company failed to furnish the labor, material, and money requisite to the construction of the contemplated building. Finally, on June 4, 1912, all work was entirely stopped and prevented by virtue of the failure of the Down Town Realty Company to furnish the commodities mentioned. On August 12, 1912, Philbrook and Johnson mutually severed and dissolved all of their business relations. Throughout all of the foregoing transactions the Down Town Realty Company assured Philbrook that it would compensate him for his services.

Meanwhile, on the 15th day of November, 1911, the Down Town Realty Company created a bonded indebtedness and to secure the same executed a "mortgage" or "deed of trust." Under this document the company conveyed, granted, mortgaged, and pledged to the Mercantile Trust Company, styled in the document as "trustee," all of its right, title, and interest in and to the demised premises aforementioned, together with the building and improvements to be erected thereon during the term of the lease, and also all other property, real and personal, of every kind and nature whatsoever, and wheresoever the same may be situated, whether owned by and belonging to the company at the date of the mortgage or deed of trust or thereafter in any manner acquired by the company during the life or term of the mortgage or deed of trust. This document also provided that all money received as the purchase price of bonds delivered should be held by the "trustee" subject to the lien of the mortgage or deed of trust, to be disbursed in the manner therein specified. The manner of disbursement of these moneys is set forth in article XVIII of the document, which reads as follows:

"Bonds of the issue herein mentioned shall be certified and delivered by the trustee in accordance with the provisions of this article and not otherwise.

"The trustee shall deliver said bonds or any part thereof to the company or its order or to the purchasers thereof upon the payment to the trustee of the par value thereof, together with all accrued interest thereon, but all moneys so received shall be held by the trustee, subject to the lien of this mortgage, or deed of trust, to be disbursed in the manner hereinafter specified. Such moneys while on deposit with the trustee shall bear no interest.

"On the fifteenth day of each and every month there shall be paid to the company from the proceeds of said bonds, or in said bonds at their par value and accrued interest thereon, eighty (80%) per cent. of the cost of the work actually done on said buildings between the date of such payment and the last payment made by the trustee to the company hereunder upon production of a certificate of the architect in charge of said building or buildings showing the actual cost of the work done on said buildings between the date of said certificate and the date of the last payment made to the company by the trustee hereunder; and such architect's certificate shall be conclusive as to the cost of the work so done and shall be full warrant and authority to the trustee for making such payment to the company.

"It is further understood and agreed that the balance of the proceeds of said bonds or of said bonds remaining in the hands of the trustee upon the completion of said building or buildings after making the payments to the company herebefore provided for shall be paid to the company thirty-five days after the completion of said building or buildings; it being understood, however, that said balance of the cost of the hotel portion of said building shall be paid thirty-five days after the completion of said portion of said buildings, and that the balance of the cost of the theater portion of said building shall be paid thirty-five days after the completion thereof, provided, however, that the total amount of all payments in said bonds or the proceeds thereof to be made on account of the cost of the construction of the hotel portion of the building shall not exceed the sum of seventy-five thousand ($75,000) dollars, and that the total amount of all payments to be made in said bonds or the proceeds thereof on account of the cost of the theater portion of said buildings shall not exceed one hundred and twenty-five thousand ($125,000) dollars.

"The payments above provided to be made from the proceeds of said bonds or in said bonds at their par value shall be made only upon the order of the company and under its corporate seal by its president or vice president and secretary, and shall be accompanied by a certificate of Earl B. Scott, or his successor, as architect of said building, showing that the necessary work had been done to entitle the company to the payment requested to be made in its order or orders. Such order and such certificate shall be full warrant and authority to the trustee for making the payment in money or bonds as hereinbefore provided, and said certificate of said architect shall be conclusive evidence for the trustee of the performance of the work therein stated to be done.

"Payments herein provided shall be made from the proceeds of the sale of said bonds first to the extent that such proceeds are available and then by said bonds at their par value."

For the recovery of moneys due him under his agreement with the Down Town Realty Company and for services rendered by him in connection with the construction of the contemplated building on the demised premises Carleton A. Philbrook filed suit against the company in the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco. That suit was entitled "C. A. Philbrook v. Down Town Realty Co." On November 14, 1912, a writ of attachment issued in that action, and on the same day the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco duly attached and levied upon all goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or other personal property in the possession of or under the control of the Mercantile Trust Company belonging to the Down Town Realty Company. At the time of this attachment and levy the Mercantile Trust Company admittedly held in its hands the sum of $33,482.16, which represented moneys received as the purchase price of bonds issued by the Down Town Realty Company and which moneys it claims to have held under and pursuant to the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust. Upon the making and levy of attachment the sheriff demanded a statement, and the Mercantile Trust Company made no answer. On October 27, 1914, a judgment in favor of Carleton A. Philbrook was made and entered in the case of "C. A. Philbrook v. Down Town Realty Company," for the sum of $3,325.55, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date thereof until paid, and costs in the sum of $49.25. Upon this judgment a writ of execution issued on November 7, 1914. When this writ was served upon the Mercantile Trust Company it answered that it had no funds of the Down Town Realty Company and refused to allow any moneys to be applied or paid in satisfaction of that judgment. On January 8, 1915, the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco returned the writ of execution wholly unsatisfied.

In August, 1915, Carleton A. Philbrook died and thereafter his widow, Ida B. Philbrook, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of his estate, filed this suit against the Mercantile Trust Company as garnishee under section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, upon the theory that the sum of $33,482.16, which at the time of attachment the Mercantile Trust Company held in its possession under and pursuant to the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust, represented property or credit owned by the Down Town Realty Company.

The lower court gave judgment for the plaintiff, finding, among other things, the following:

"That at the time of said levy of attachment, as stated in plaintiff's complaint, upon the moneys held by said Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco under and by virtue of said instrument of date November 15, 1911 (that being the deed of trust from Down Town Realty Company to Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco), no architect's certificate as therein defined in said instrument was presented to the said Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco."

The court further found that:

"The said written instrument mutually signed and executed on the 15th day of November, 1911, by Down Town Realty Company and by Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, as aforesaid (being the deed of trust from Down Town Realty Company to Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco), was made by the said parties thereto with intent to delay and defraud Carleton A. Philbrook of all his demands as a creditor of said Down Town Realty Company, and out of all his rights and claims as such creditor."

The appellant claims that there is no evidence to support a finding that on November 14, 1912 (the date the garnishment was made), it had any moneys, goods, credits, or effects due or owing to Down Town Realty Company, or that it had in its possession or control any personal property belonging to Down Town Realty Company; and it further contends that there is no testimony on which the court could base a finding that the trust agreement from Down Town Realty Company to Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco was in fraud of creditors.

The questions then presented are: Did the Mercantile Trust Company on November 14, 1912, have any money, goods, credits, or effects in its possession due or owing to the Down Town Realty Company? Was the certificate of the architect showing the actual cost of the work done a prerequisite to the money becoming due and owing for work done or services performed? and, Was the trust agreement in fraud of creditors?

There is no issue as to the work being done or the service performed—this question has been adjudicated and a judgment entered to that effect—appellant's position being that, as the contract provides "there shall be paid to the company from the proceeds of said bonds or in said bonds at their par value and accrued interest thereon eighty (80%) per cent. of the cost of the work actually done on said building between the date of such payment and the last payment made by the trustee to the company hereunder, upon production of a certificate of the architect in charge of said building or buildings showing the actual cost of the work done * * * and such architect's certificate shall be full warrant and authority to the trustee for making such payment to the company," no money was due and owing until the production of the architect's certificate.

[1, 2] It would seem that whatever lien attached to the purchase money paid for the bonds was discharged when and to the extent that the construction of the building approached completion. The real consideration for the release of these moneys or any part thereof was the creation of an equivalent value in terms of building construction. This is made clear by the provisions of article XVIII of the mortgage or deed of trust quoted. The production of the architect's certificate required by this article does not represent the consideration for the release of these moneys to the Down Town Realty Company, but merely the required form of evidence of the work done. The purely evidentiary function of the requirement of the architect's certificate is particularly emphasized by a subsequent provision of the same article as follows:

"The payments above provided to be made from the sale of said bonds or in said bonds at their par value shall be made only upon the order of the company and under its corporate seal by its president or vice president and secretary, and shall be accompanied by a certificate of Earl B. Scott, or his successor, as architect of said building, showing that the necessary work has been done to entitle the company to the payment requested to be made in its order or orders. Such order and such certificate shall be full warrant and authority to the trustee for making the payment in money or bonds as hereinbefore provided and said certificate of said architect shall be conclusive evidence for the trustee of the performance of the work therein stated to be done."

It is obvious from the foregoing that the production of the architect's certificate was a formal condition inserted primarily for the protection of the Mercantile Trust Company and giving to it "full warrant and authority" for the making of the payments. Neither the bondholders nor the Down Town Realty Company were interested in the architect's certificates. The former wanted only value in construction work equivalent to moneys released, and the latter wanted only the equivalent in money for the work done.

[3] That Carleton A. Philbrook performed services in connection with the construction of the contemplated building and pursuant to the terms of the agreement entered into with the Down Town Realty Company is not denied. Nor is it denied that he was not paid for the services performed. These facts were adjudicated in the action of C. A. Philbrook v. Down Town Realty Company. The judgment in that case has become final. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction adjudicating the fact that the service had been performed by Carleton A. Philbrook having been entered, the Down Town Realty Company was entitled to receive the money due from the Mercantile Trust Company to it in payment of such service as "cost of the work actually done on said building." The production of the architect's certificates required does not represent the consideration for the release of these moneys to the Down Town Realty Company, but merely the required form of evidence of the work done, which is rendered unnecessary when the fact that the work has been performed has been adjudicated and is evidenced by the solemn judgment of a court of record. That there existed at the time of the garnishment action for debt by Down Town Realty Company against Mercantile Trust Company—that there was a valid obligation or debt owing to Down Town Realty Company is evident.

The question involved here was passed upon in Brainard v. Rogers, 74 Cal. App. 247, 239 P. 1095. There the garnishee was a fire insurance company and the debtor an insured whose loss was covered by the policy issued. At the time of the garnishment the loss had not been adjusted, nor had the proofs of loss been filed as required by the policy. The architect's certificate in the instant case served a purely evidentiary purpose, whereas the proof of loss in the Brainard Case was a condition of the insurance contract. If, therefore, the right of garnishment existed in the Brainard Case a fortiori, the right of garnishment existed here. In that case, with reference to the sections of the Code relating to the liability and the procedure for citation for the garnishee, the court says:

"It will be noted that throughout these sections the expressions 'belonging to' and 'owing' are used in the disjunctive. But one conclusion may be drawn from this and that is that the Legislature intended to authorize the attachment of moneys * * * as well as * * * other properties belonging to the debtor which the garnishee then had in his possession. Looking at the Code sections in this light it follows that moneys which are owing the debtor, though not yet due, are subject to garnishment because the term 'owing' includes an immature as well as a mature obligation."

See, also, Ransom v. Bidwell, 89 Conn. 137, 93 A. 135.

[4] When work is done pursuant to the terms of a building contract the presentation of an architect's certificate is not a prerequisite to the inception of an obligation or debt due and owing, notwithstanding that the contract requires the production of such certificate. The rendition of the service itself gives rise to the obligation "due and owing" for the compensation of services rendered. The word "due" upon which a claim is founded as applied to a debt or obligation to pay money does not always mean that the money is then immediately payable. It may be so used, but it often merely denotes the idea of a complete debt, an existing obligation, or money fully earned, but not payable until a future time or until the happening of another event. Webster's Dictionary. "This question was decided by the District Court of Appeal in Hettinger v. Thiele, 15 Cal. App. 1, 113 P. 121. In that case the facts were the same as in the case at bar, except that the fifth clause, instead of declaring that certain sums were to be paid when certain parts of the work were finished, provided that 75 per cent. of the price should be paid as the work progressed. It contained the same proviso requiring the certificate from the architect before money for work done was payable. In that respect its language was identical with the contract here sued on, as also was the twelfth clause. It was held that the loss payable by the owner, upon a total destruction, included the amount due for the work done at that time, and that the issuance of a certificate by the architect was unnecessary to the accrual of a cause of action therefor." Ahlgren v. Walsh, 173 Cal. 29, 158 P. 752, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 751.

[5] Here Carleton A. Philbrook on July 25, 1911, commenced to work and render service and so continued until on June 4, 1912, when all work on the building was stopped and prevented because of the failure of the Down Town Realty Company to furnish labor, materials, and money requisite to the construction of the contemplated building, and no work was done on such building up to November 14, 1912, when the writ of attachment was issued—a period of over five months, and no certificate of the architect was presented showing the work or service performed by Philbrook which, however, the court in the action of C. A. Philbrook v. Down Town Realty Company found was performed by him. If, as claimed by appellant, no money was due from the trustee to the Down Town Realty Company with which to pay Philbrook until the certificate of the architect was presented and such certificate was never presented, irrespective of the amount of bonds sold by the trustee or the labor performed or services rendered, no money would ever be due to compensate Philbrook for such services. This cannot be the rule. It is not presumed that the parties intended that money rightfully belonging to the party to whom it is due or owing shall be forfeited upon the arbitrary will or caprice of the architect in withholding the certificate. Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal. App. 38, 83 P. 79.

[6] Philbrook entered into the agreement not with the Mercantile Trust Company, but with the Down Town Realty Company; therefore he could directly assert his rights thereunder only against the Down Town Realty Company. This he did. But the Down Town Realty Company had already transferred all of its assets to the Mercantile Trust Company with the understanding that the obligations incurred by the former in the construction of the building would be discharged by the latter under the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust. The mortgage or deed of trust was not made in behalf of the bondholders any more than the Down Town Realty Company. The company under the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust in effect consented to the withholding of these moneys upon the understanding that they would be used to discharge the obligation which it incurred in the construction of the building. The Mercantile Trust Company had notice of the suit brought by Philbrook by means of the attachment process served upon it. It did not elect to intervene. The architect's certificate, if issued, would have meant nothing more than evidence of work done by Philbrook and the validity of his claim. That evidence was afforded in just as conclusive and effective form by the judgment of the superior court in the case of C. A. Philbrook v. Down Town Realty Company. "The court found that there was a completion of the work, and in that case there was no legal ground left upon which an architect's certificate might be refused. Where a certificate is refused without cause, the contractor may not be forever debarred from collecting his money." Kling v. Bucher, 32 Cal. App. 679, 163 P. 871.

Appellant, in support of its contention that there is no evidence to support the findings that on the date of the garnishment the trustee had moneys due and owing to Down Town Realty Company, has cited us to Hassie v. God Is With Us Congregation, 35 Cal. 378; Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 99 Am. Dec. 423; Redondo Beach Co. v. Brewer, 101 Cal. 322, 35 P. 896; Aigeltinger Co. v. Healy-Tibbitts Construction Co., 23 Cal. App. 608, 139 P. 436, 438; Early v. Town of Redwood City, 57 Cal. 193; Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8, 44 P. 357, 53 Am. St. Rep. 151; and Gow v. Marshall, 90 Cal. 565, 27 P. 422. These cases, however, are distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Hassie Case there is no consideration of the question whether a valid garnishment can be made of a debt due and owing, though perhaps not presently payable at the time of the garnishment, the court holding:

"That Kincaid could not have maintained an action at law against the defendant at the time the attachment was served upon the latter, is very clear. There was no privity of contract between them. The defendant had never undertaken or promised, expressly or impliedly, to pay the money to Kincaid; the relation of debtor and creditor did not therefore exist between them. Kincaid was in no sense the assignee of the contract between Davis and the defendant."

The Grain Case does not involve the subject of garnishment. It discusses merely the validity of the assignment of a part of an entire demand and in that connection mentions the Hassie Case. The Redondo Beach Company Case was an action in which the vendee of real property elected to declare a contract forfeited. Subsequent to the election a creditor of the vendee garnished the moneys which had been paid to the vendor by the vendee under the contract of sale. There the court expressed the opinion that the vendee still had some claim against the vendor for the moneys paid in spite of the default, but that such claim was subject to the vendor's right to recoup damages for the breach of the contract, and at best was a mere equity, and therefore not subject to garnishment. In the Aigeltinger Case the contract provided that payments should be made upon the 15th day of each month covering the value of 75 per cent. of the work performed. The defendant was paid for all work done up to June 1, 1920, and defaulted on June 20, 1920. On the day following a creditor of defendant levied a garnishment on the garnishee. The court held in effect that, when on June 20th the defendant abandoned his contract, he waived all rights to compensation under his contract, and that, therefore, when the garnishment was levied on June 21st, there was nothing due from the garnishee to defendant; that when, however, on June 23d, subsequent to the garnishment, the defendant accepted the surrender and cancellation of the contract, it became obligated to pay for the reasonable value of services performed during the month of June. This acceptance of the surrender created a new relation between the parties, and, inasmuch as it occurred subsequent to the garnishment, is without effect upon it. The Supreme Court, in denying a transfer of the case, used this language:

"On those facts, it appears that there was, at the date of the garnishment, no debt, matured or unmatured, due the plaintiff. This being so, there was clearly nothing subject to attachment. We do not express any opinion on the correctness of the broader declaration of the District Court of Appeal that there must be, at the date of the garnishment, a present right of action; in other words, that a debt which is due, but not yet payable, may not be attached."

Early v. Town of Redwood City is a case wherein there appears to have been an absence of obligation from the garnishee to the defendant at the time of garnishment, for no money was owing to the defendant unless and until the services required by the contract were completed, and at the time of the garnishment the work was incomplete. In the Maier Case the court merely held that the garnishment of the purchase price before the sale was completed was ineffective because at that time no credit existed and there was no assurance that it ever would exist; and in the Gow Case the court merely draws the distinction between a debt and credit as subjects of garnishment, the court stating:

"A 'debt' is money owing by the garnishee to the defendant which may be paid over to the sheriff, while credits are something belonging to the defendant, but in the possession and under the control of the garnishee, such as promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness of third parties, which may be delivered up or transferred to the sheriff."

[7] There is nothing in the contract between Philbrook and Down Town Realty Company requiring him to procure the architect's certificate. This certificate is solely for the benefit of and as a protection to the trustee. Rusling v. Union Pipe & Const. Co., 5 App. Div. 448, 39 N. Y. S. 217. Philbrook was in no wise responsible for the abandonment of the work. He performed the services, and payment for such services was due and owing under the trust agreement from Mercantile Trust Company to Down Town Realty Company at the time the garnishment was made.

It is not essential to an affirmance of the judgment in view of the conclusion we have reached upon the question discussed to pass upon the remaining objection urged that there is no evidence to support the finding that the trust agreement was in fraud of creditors, and therefore upon that question we express no opinion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte BOCCI. (Cr. 1402.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 30, 1927.

1. Pleading $\S$ 8(6)—Allegation in petition for habeas corpus that petitioner was unlawfully imprisoned under town marshal's complaint charging misdemeanor held mere conclusion.

Allegation in petition for habeas corpus that petitioner "is unlawfully imprisoned, detained, confined, and restrained of his liberty," held mere legal conclusion, where followed by allegation that illegality consisted in town marshal's swearing to complaint charging petitioner with misdemeanor.

2. Habeas corpus $\S$ 11—Habeas corpus will be denied, where imprisonment is invited or voluntarily submitted to for purpose of testing validity of law.

If imprisonment is invited or voluntarily submitted to for purpose of testing validity of law, or if petitioner, after being admitted to bail, is surrendered by bondsmen solely for purpose of making out case for writ of habeas corpus, writ should be denied.

3. Habeas corpus $\S$ 11—Petitioner, claiming to be imprisoned under invalid ordinance, held not entitled to habeas corpus to test its validity, where custody or involuntary restraint was not shown.

Petitioner alleging unlawful imprisonment for maintaining place of business on Sunday for manufacture and sale of monuments held not entitled to test validity of ordinance by writ of habeas corpus, where it did not appear petitioner was in actual custody or under involuntary restraint at time of issuance of writ.

Application by Nello Bocci for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Marshal of Lawndale to secure petitioner's release from custody on a warrant charging keeping open on Sunday a place of business for the manufacture and sale of gravestones. Writ discharged.

Grant & Zimdars, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Joseph E. O'Donnell and E. R. Hoerchner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Petitioner herein applied for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging in his petition that he was being unlawfully "imprisoned, detained, confined, and restrained of his liberty" by the marshal of the town of Lawndale, San Mateo county, under a charge of misdemeanor, to wit, opening and keeping open on Sunday a place of business for the manufacture and sale of gravestones and monuments, in violation of an ordinance of said town, which ordinance petitioner claims is unconstitutional. The writ was issued, and in response thereto the marshal filed a return, from which it appears that at the time the application for this writ was made petitioner was neither imprisoned nor involuntarily restrained of his liberty.

[1] With respect thereto, the return discloses that on the day the complaint was filed against petitioner in the town recorder's court, which was about two weeks prior to the filing of the application for this writ, the recorder ordered petitioner released "on his own recognizance" pending trial; and nothing further is set forth in the return to show that he was thereafter taken or ordered into custody. Moreover, the record does not show with any degree of certainty that petitioner was ever placed under arrest on said charge. In this connection the return sets forth that "by virtue of a complaint and a warrant of arrest, copies of which are hereunto annexed, marked respectively 'Exhibits A and B,' petitioner herein, Nello Bocci, was accused of violation of Ordinance 28" of said town. But Exhibit B does not purport to be a warrant of arrest; it is merely an order signed by the recorder to the effect that, it appearing to him that the offense charged had been committed and that there was sufficient cause to believe petitioner guilty thereof, petitioner "be held to answer to the same" and committed "to the marshal of the town of Lawndale, and that he be admitted to bail on his own recognizance." (Italics ours.) The return further sets forth that petitioner "was arrested as alleged in his petition herein"; but the petition contains no allegation of arrest. It does allege that petitioner "is unlawfully imprisoned, detained, confined, and restrained of his liberty" by said marshal, but such allegation amounts to no more than a legal conclusion in view of the allegation immediately following it to the effect that "said imprisonment, detention, confinement, and restraint are illegal, * * * in this, to wit, that on March 23, 1927, said Joe Cavalli, as the town marshal, * * * swore to a complaint charging petitioner with the crime of misdemeanor. * * *"

[2] In re Gow, 139 Cal. 242, 73 P. 145, holds that, when a person accused of violating an ordinance has been allowed to go at large on his own recognizance, he will not be permitted to test the legality of his subsequent imprisonment upon a writ of habeas corpus, where it appears that such subsequent restraint was invited and voluntarily submitted to before trial for that purpose only, without any actual imprisonment or restraint, and his nominal imprisonment remains such only so long as it is necessary to file the petition and procure the order for the writ; that in such case the proceeding upon the writ will be dismissed. In conformity with the rule established in the case above cited, it has been repeatedly held, even in cases where there is actual imprisonment, that, if such imprisonment be invited or is voluntarily submitted to for the purpose of testing the validity of a law, or if, after having been admitted to bail the petitioner is surrendered by his bondsmen solely for the purpose of making out a case to support the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus, said writ should be denied. In re Bernson, 35 Cal. App. 344, 169 P. 916; In re Miller, 13 Cal. App. 564, 110 P. 139; Matter of Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 116 P. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267; Ex parte Schmitz, 150 Cal. 663, 89 P. 438.

[3] The attack upon the constitutionality of the ordinance which petitioner is alleged to have violated doubtless presents a number of interesting and serious legal problems, but, since it appears from the record before us that the petitioner was not in actual custody or under involuntary restraint at the time of the issuance of the writ, and in view of the fact that the law affords him ample remedy, after trial and conviction, to test the validity of the ordinance, we do not feel warranted in deviating from the rule of practice adhered to in the cases above cited; and therefore the writ is discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

CHRISTERSON v. CHASE et al. (Civ. 4544.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 25, 1927.

Judgment $\S$ 801—Suit to foreclose judgment lien four years after reinstatement held barred by laches, where prior mortgage had been foreclosed and property sold by holder of sheriff's deed.

Judgment creditor, who delayed suit to foreclose judgment lien for period of nearly four years after time of judgment's reinstatement, held precluded by laches from enforcement of lien against property, where in meantime property had been sold under foreclosure sale of prior mortgage, and conveyed by holder of sheriff's deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by J. E. Christerson against Warren Chase and others. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wetherhorn, Hoyt & Jones, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles H. Brock and Earl E. Johnson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This appeal is by the plaintiff from a judgment of dismissal following an order of the trial court sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. The record discloses the following situation: The defendants' predecessor, French, was the owner of the real estate described in the complaint for some time prior to the year 1915 and up to the time of his death; in 1914 he mortgaged the property described in the complaint to Chapin for $5,000; in 1915 the plaintiff procured and docketed in the proper county a judgment against French for $5,800. More than six months after the judgment was entered the superior court set aside the judgment, and from such order setting aside the judgment plaintiff appealed. The order was reversed upon the ground that it had been erroneously made, and the remittitur was filed in August, 1919, the Supreme Court declaring that said judgment shall be in full force and effect as though the same had never been disturbed, and further declaring that said judgment be re-entered nunc pro tunc as of August 4, 1915. Pending the appeal the defendant French died, and in 1917 Chapin, the mortgagee above named, brought suit on the mortgage, procured a judgment of foreclosure and order of sale, under which the property was sold and bought in by Chapin, who received the deed therefor from the sheriff in 1918. In 1920 Chapin sold and conveyed the property to Van Vrankin, who in October, 1922, conveyed it to Chase and wife, two of the defendants in this suit; the other defendant being the mortgagee of the property under the Chases. In April, 1923, the plaintiff entered the instant suit against the Chases and the bank to foreclose the judgment lien docketed in 1915, and for sale of the property to satisfy that lien.

A summary of the foregoing record will disclose these outstanding facts: The plaintiff procured and docketed a judgment against French in 1915. In 1923 he brought suit to foreclose the judgment lien based thereon, contending that under the law he is allowed to deduct from the toll of the statute the three years intervening between the time when the original judgment was set aside until its reinstatement by the judgment of reversal in the Supreme Court. We are of the opinion that this position is untenable. We are entirely satisfied that the cases relied upon by appellant, Dewey v. Latson, 6 Cal. 130; Englund v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 337, and section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it read prior to its amendment in 1873 (Amendments to the Codes 1873-74, p. 320), do not speak the law of this state on this subject-matter since that time. Since the case of Solomon v. Maguire, 29 Cal. 227, and Rogers v. Druffel, 46 Cal. 654, in which the Supreme Court directly held that the existence of the judgment lien was in no respect affected by an order staying execution, there are no cases supporting appellant's position. However, we do not deem it necessary to ground our decision on this phase of the case, as we are convinced that there is no merit whatever in the appeal. The superior court entered a judgment nunc pro tunc in 1919 reinstating the original judgment as directed by the Supreme Court. At that time Chapin, the owner of the mortgage lien existing when the appellant's original judgment was docketed, was the owner of the property under foreclosure sale and deed. There was absolutely nothing then in the way of enforcement and no apparent legal complications or any other legitimate cause to deter plaintiff from proceeding to enforce this alleged judgment lien. Nevertheless the entire matter was permitted to lie dormant for nearly four years, during which time the property in 1920 was conveyed by the purchaser under the foreclosure proceedings to Van Vrankin, who in turn in 1922 conveyed the property to the defendants Chase in this action. In 1923 the appellant instituted this action to enforce his lien. In our judgment the above recital of the sequence of events as it appears on the record is conclusive evidence of unwarranted and unconscionable laches.

Judgment is affirmed.

HANDLEMAN v. PICKERILL et al.
(Civ. 4860.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨37—Technical meaning of words used in lease gives way to manifest intent of parties.

Technical meaning of words will give way to manifest intent of parties in construing lease, even though technical term to contrary be used.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨80(1)—No privity of contract exists between sublessee and original lessor.

As between sublessee and original lessor, there is no privity of contract or estate.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨80(3)—Sublessee has no right to enforce covenants contained in original lease.

Since there is no privity of contract or estate between original lessor and sublessee, sublessee does not as general rule acquire by virtue of sublease alone any right to enforce covenants or agreements contained in original lease.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨80(3)—Sublessee in suit against lessor to restrain obstruction of show window held not entitled to benefit of covenant of original lease excepting space for entrance way.

Sublessee in suit against original lessor to restrain obstruction of show window held not entitled to benefit of covenant of lessor in original lease excepting from ground floor sufficient space for entrance to upstairs of building, claimed to give right to unobstructed window facing entrance way.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨80(3)—Rights of sublessee against lessor are limited by lessee's rights as fixed by terms and conditions of original lease.

Subtenant is charged with notice of existence of original lease, and is bound by its terms and conditions, and cannot acquire greater rights against lessor than those given by original lessor to his lessee.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨134(5)—Lessees had no right of action against lessor for obstructing display window, facing entranceway, constructed by lessees without lessors' consent.

Where plans and specifications provided for solid wall in entrance to upstairs of building, and where display window was constructed by lessees facing entranceway over protest of lessors and without their consent, lessees had no right of action against lessor for obstructing such display window.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇨80(3)—Sublessee of premises on which building was being erected was bound by plans and specifications agreed to between lessor and lessees.

Sublessee of premises on which new building was being erected under plans and specifications by agreement between lessor and lessees was bound by provisions of plans and specifications, as were original lessees.

8. Estoppel ⇨63—Lessor held not estopped as against sublessee to obstruct display window constructed by lessees without lessor's consent.

Lessor held not estopped to obstruct display window facing entrance to lobby in building as against sublessee, where specifications called for building solid wall, and display window was constructed by original lessees over lessor's protest with understanding that maintenance thereof should not interfere with lessor's free and uninterrupted use of lobby and entrance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Louis Handleman against J. R. Pickerill, B. M. Scott, and Galen H. Welch, copartners doing business as Pickerill, Scott & Welch, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Adolph B. Rosenfield, of Long Beach, for appellant.

John H. Burke, of Long Beach, for respondent Charles Zimmerman.

Daly, Daly & Todd, of Long Beach, for other respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, as sublessee, brought suit against the defendants for injunction from obstructing a show window and for damages. Judgment was rendered for defendants, and plaintiff brings this appeal.

On October 21, 1919, the defendants Pickerill and Scott entered into a written lease with California Chocolate Shops, letting the ground or street floor of a building to be erected by the lessors. The lease contained the following language:

"Excepting from said ground floor sufficient space at the west end thereof for an entrance to the upstairs of said building, and to the elevators to be constructed therein, said excepted space not to exceed in dimensions fifteen (15) feet frontage on West First street by fifty (50) feet in depth."

The term of the lease was for 15 years, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1920. On the date of execution, the lease in duplicate was deposited in escrow under instructions executed by the parties thereto, providing for the delivery of said copies of the lease to the respective parties when the escrow agent should be notified in writing by said parties that the plans and specifications for the building to be erected upon said premises had been agreed upon by both parties thereto. On December 12, 1919, the plans and specifications were duly approved by the parties to said lease, and the escrow agent was authorized and directed by written instructions to deliver to the respective parties copies of said lease. The said lease provided that:

"The lessee covenants and agrees, at its own cost and expense, to install in and upon the premises demised, that is to say, upon the ground floor of said building, all show windows, display fronts. * * *

It was further provided by said lease that:

"The lessors shall, at their own cost and expense, construct the entrance hereinabove provided for, and all of the equipment and interior thereof, and the lessee shall not be put to any expense whatsoever for or in connection with such entrance, the construction or equipment thereof."

It was further provided that:

"The lessee shall not make or permit to be made any changes or alterations in or additions to said demised premises which affect an integral part of said building without first having obtained the written consent of the lessors thereto."

The lease further provided:

"The lessee is hereby expressly given and granted the right to sub-let the whole or any portion of the premises herein demised."

It was further provided that:

"Each and all of the terms, covenants and conditions of this lease shall be binding upon, and each and all of the benefits hereunder shall inure to the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the respective parties hereto."

The lease was delivered on the 12th day of December, 1919, upon approval of the plans and specifications for the building. After the delivery of the lease the defendants Pickerill, Scott, and Welch formed a copartnership, and the defendants Pickerill and Scott assigned said lease to the said copartnership. Thereafter a building was constructed upon the leased premises by the copartnership. The California Chocolate Shops, on or about the 11th day of October, 1920, entered into possession of the ground floor thereof as tenants of Pickerill, Scott, and Welch. Pursuant to the authority contained in said lease, the California Chocolate Shops, on or about the 1st day of August, 1920, entered into a written lease with the plaintiff for a storeroom, which was a part of the ground floor of the premises referred to in the first lease hereinabove mentioned. The term of the last-named lease was for five years commencing on the 1st day of August, 1920. The California Chocolate Shop so constructed the said store front that the same consisted of a show window, the side of which was improved with a pane of glass 3 feet in width and 7 feet high, commencing 18 inches above the floor of the entrance of said building, and the interior of said show window could be readily seen through the said pane of glass by persons using the vestibule and entrance to said building. The court found, from evidence which was sufficient upon which to base its findings:

"That said show window was not so placed or constructed by plaintiff's said lessor, with the knowledge, consent, acquiescence or approval of the defendants Pickerill, Scott & Welch, or either of them, except that during the construction thereof, upon an objection being interposed by the said defendants Pickerill, Scott & Welch, it was agreed between said defendants and California Chocolate Shops that said window might be constructed so as to open into said lobby upon the express condition that the use of said window and the maintenance thereof should not in any wise interfere with the free and uninterrupted use of said lobby and entrance by said defendants Pickerill, Scott & Welch, in such manner and to such extent for business purposes, or otherwise, as they might desire at any time. That said show window did not appear upon the plans and specifications for the construction of said building so approved by said defendants Pickerill, Scott & Welch and California Chocolate Shops, and the construction, use and maintenance thereof was expressly conditioned upon the right of the defendants Pickerill, Scott & Welch to close said window, and to use said lobby and entrance in such manner as they might desire at any time during the term of the lease mentioned in paragraph II hereof."

On October 31, 1920, plaintiff entered into possession of said storeroom and installed therein a shoe store, and in the conduct of his business used the said show window to display his shoes for sale. Defendants Scott and Welch testified that prior to the 31st day of October, 1920, defendants had no notice or knowledge, either actual or constructive, of the execution of said lease between plaintiff and the California Chocolate Shops. On March 1, 1921, defendants Pickerill, Scott and Welch leased to the defendant Charles Zimmerman a space in said entrance and vestibule, and defendant Zimmerman erected a booth in front of the westerly pane of said display window, by reason of which observation of plaintiff's show window was prevented in part and merchandise therein could not be clearly seen from the west by persons using said entrance. Over the objection of plaintiff, two of the defendants' witnesses were permitted to testify as to conversations had between the original lessors and the agent for California Chocolate Shops, the original lessee. Also, the plans and specifications for the construction of the building were admitted in evidence over plaintiff's objection. These plans and specifications did not provide for any show window between the storeroom and the entrance lobby, but showed a solid partition. During the course of construction, the general contractor employed by the original lessors, under instruction of the agent of the original lessee, California Chocolate Shops, left a space in this partition for a show window. Defendant Welch testified that upon observing this opening in the partition he protested to the original lessee's agent, saying, "You know, Mr. Swan, we have intended all the time to lease that for a cigar stand or some other business purpose, and we don't want to have difficulty or trouble with your tenants;" and that Mr. Swan said, "Well, you go ahead with this, and any time that you get a tenant there that we can't make arrangements with to satisfy him, you can close us up;" and that Welch said, "We would do just that very thing." This conversation was confirmed by the testimony of defendant Scott. It was testified that this conversation was held about ten days before plaintiff went into possession of the storeroom.

[1-4] Appellant contends that the language contained in said lease, as follows: "Excepting from said ground floor sufficient space at the west end thereof for an entrance to the upstairs of said building, and to the elevators to be constructed therein"—is to be construed as a reservation and not as an exception. Technically, the term "excepting" "applies to something which constitutes a part of the thing described as granted and which would pass but for the excepting clause, the office of which is to exclude it from the thing described, and the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor. The difference between the term 'excepting' and 'reserving' is so slight and shadowy that in common parlance they are used interchangeably, 'and the technical meaning will give way to the manifest intent, even though the technical term to the contrary be used.' 13 Cyc. 674." Van Slyke v. Arrowhead, etc., Power Co., 155 Cal. 675, 680, 102 P. 816. See, also, Pitcairn v. Harkness, 10 Cal. App. 295, 101 P. 809. However, for the purpose of the decision of this case, we do not find it necessary to determine whether this is an exception or a reservation, since even if the language be construed as a reservation and a covenant to use the space exclusively for an entrance, it would not be enforceable by a subtenant against the original lessor, as no privity of contract or estate exists between the sublessee and the original lessor. 15 Cal. Jur. p. 766; Ericksen v. Rhee, 181 Cal. 562, 567, 185 P. 847; Bailey v. Richardson, 66 Cal. 416, 421, 5 P. 910; City Investment Co. v. Pringle, 73 Cal. App. 782, 788, 239 P. 302; Buttner v. Kasser, 19 Cal. App. 755, 127 P. 811.

"As between the original lessor and the sublessee there is no privity of contract or estate, and therefor the sublessee does not acquire, as a general rule, by virtue of the sublease merely, any right to enforce the covenants or agreements of the lessor contained in the original lease." 16 Ruling Case Law, p. 877; Audubon Hotel Co. v. Braunnig, 120 La. 1089, 46 So. 33, 124 Am. St. Rep. 456.

It follows, therefore, in this case that the plaintiff as a subtenant had no right of action as against the landlord to enforce any covenant or agreement that may have been contained in the original lease to maintain an entrance unobstructed.

[5-8] Appellant argues that defendants are estopped by their conduct and silence from closing this window. A sublessee can in no event have any greater rights against the lessor than are given by the original lease to the lessee. 35 Corpus Juris, 1002. It is the duty of a person contracting for a sublease to ascertain the provisions of the original lease, as a subtenant is charged with notice of the existence of the original lease and is bound by its terms and conditions. 15 Cal. Juris. 767; Baranov v. Scudder, 177 Cal. 458, 170 P. 1122; Georgous v. Lewis, 20 Cal. App. 255, 128 P. 768. In the case at bar, while the original lease gave the right to the original lessee to construct the display windows, nothing was said about their location. Ordinarily, display windows are placed in the front of the storeroom, although such windows are often built facing entrances or lobbies on the side of the storeroom. Under the evidence showing the delivery of the original lease only after agreement of the parties on plans and specifications providing for a solid wall, with no display window fronting toward the entrance, and under further evidence showing that this display window was constructed under orders of the original lessee over the protest of the lessors and without their consent, the original lessee would have no right of action against the lessors for closing up the window. A sublessee can have no right superior to that of the lessee. The building was under process of construction when the subtenant executed his lease. Plaintiff must have known that the building was being erected under plans and specifications and he was bound by their provisions, as was the original lessee. We find nothing in the conduct of the defendants estopping them from closing this window in accordance with their declared intention.

Appellant in his reply brief states that the action is not based on any covenant in the lease to keep the window open, but on the rights acquired in the window against all the world, including the landlord. But under the evidence the original lessee never acquired any right to keep the window open, and plaintiff as subtenant could acquire no rights superior to those of his landlord, the lessee.

Other points raised by appellant are necessarily disposed of by the foregoing conclusions.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

MAYER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 5906.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California, June 30, 1927.

Certiorari $\Rightarrow$ 5(1)—Order refusing to vacate order for publishing summons may be reviewed on appeal from default judgment, and cannot be reviewed by certiorari (Code Civ. Proc. § 412).

Defendant, in action to annul marriage, may have reviewed order refusing to quash order for publication of summons on ground that there was no showing that cause of action existed as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 412, on appeal from adverse judgment, which may be rendered on trial, though judgment by default be entered, and hence certiorari to review order refusing to vacate order for publication of summons should be denied.

Goldman, Nye & Spicer, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for writ of review. It is recited therein that on March 22, 1927, respondent court made an order for the publication of summons in an action for the annulment of a marriage. It is alleged that the summons has been published and that the court will enter judgment in said cause upon default, unless petitioner herein enters a general appearance and contests the same; that defendant in said action duly gave notice of special appearance for motion to vacate and set aside the order of publication and to quash service on the ground that no proper showing was made as a basis for the order, for the reason that it did not sufficiently appear, either by verified complaint or by affidavit, that a cause of action existed against defendant, as required by section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that respondent court denied petitioner's motion. It is then claimed that there is no appeal from said order, for which reason petitioner prays that a writ of review be issued out of this court requiring the superior court to certify its proceedings and that thereupon this court issue its order annulling the said order of publication. We are of the opinion that the application should be denied, for the reason that petitioner may have the alleged error reviewed on an appeal from any adverse judgment which may be rendered upon trial, even though a judgment by default be entered. *Columbia Screw Co. v. In re FAHLMAN. (Civ. 3279.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, June 29, 1927.

1. Adoption $\Rightarrow$ 15—Order of adoption will not be set aside because of fact of relationship, except for clear abuse of discretion (Civ. Code, §§ 224-227).

Since Civ. Code, §§ 224-227, relating to adoption of minor, gives no preference to relatives or other persons, order of adoption will not be set aside only on fact of relationship except for clear abuse of discretion, when proceeding was taken and had according to procedure specified by the Code.

2. Adoption $\Rightarrow$ 15—Appellate court cannot declare determination of trial court granting letters of adoption erroneous, though persons opposing it were fit and proper persons.

An appellate court is confined to record, and when record shows nothing reflecting on persons to whom letters of adoption had been awarded, determination of trial court cannot be declared erroneous, though all persons opposing granting of letters may likewise be fit and proper persons.

3. Adoption $\Rightarrow$ 1—Adoption proceedings are statutory.

Adoption proceedings are purely statutory.

4. Adoption $\Rightarrow$ 15—That 11 year old child was not questioned in adoption proceedings does not require reversal.

Fact that 11 year old child was not placed on witness stand and questioned in proceedings for adoption furnishes no ground for reversal, since interrogating child under 12 years of age is entirely discretionary with trial court.

5. Appeal and error —533(1)—Trial court's opinion cannot be considered on appeal.

Opinion of trial court rendered in decision of cause is not a part of record which can be considered on appeal.

6. Adoption —15—That trial court entertained prejudice or bias against grandparent opposing adoption will not require reversal.

Even though court in adoption proceedings entertained prejudice or bias against grandparent opposing granting of letters of adoption it will not require reversal, unless it be shown that court erred in granting letters of adoption to another and that welfare of minor was not best subserved by order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Proceedings by Walter S. Joy and wife for the adoption of Margaret Fahlman, a minor child. From an order of adoption, F. O. Burlin and wife, grandparents of said minor, appeal. Affirmed.

G. B. Hjelm, of Turlock, for appellants.

H. K. Landram, of Merced, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before the court upon an appeal from an order of adoption made in the above-entitled matter, whereby the petition of Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, his wife, for the adoption of said minor, was granted.

The transcript shows that on or about September, 1924, the father of said minor, Carl E. Fahlman, died in the county of Merced, state of California, leaving said minor daughter of the age of 10 years. After the death of said Carl E. Fahlman, F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin, maternal grandparents of said minor, applied to the superior court of the county of Merced for letters of guardianship of the person and estate of said minor. At about the same time Oscar Fahlman, a brother of said Carl Fahlman, deceased, applied to the same court for letters of guardianship. The two petitions for letters of guardianship for said minor came on for hearing in said superior court in the month of October, 1924, and the hearing of said petitions was regularly continued from time to time until about April 27, 1925. On the latter date, Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, his wife, filed a petition in the superior court of Merced county seeking an order of said court permitting their adoption of said minor child. Notice of this hearing was regularly given, and notice was also given to the said F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin. The hearing of the petition for adoption was set for May 8, 1925. At said hearing F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin appeared and filed an opposition to the granting of the petition for adoption theretofore filed by the said Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy. Between the date of the filing of the petition by Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, his wife, for the adoption of said minor and the hearing thereof, the said F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin filed a like petition in the superior court of the county of Stanislaus, praying for an order permitting their adoption of said minor. This petition, however, was not before the superior court of the county of Merced, and we have only to do with the petition filed by Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, and the opposition filed thereto by F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin. At the conclusion of the hearing upon the petition filed for the adoption of said minor by Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, the court made its order granting the same, and from this order F. O. Burlin and Sophia Burlin appeal.

Upon this appeal no question whatever is made as to the fitness of Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy as persons to whom might be granted an order authorizing the adoption of said minor child Margaret Fahlman.

The testimony set forth by the appellants in their brief refers only to the fitness of F. O. Burlin. This testimony, however, we do not need to review, for the simple fact that under the law, whether F. O. Burlin was or was not, or is or is not, a fit and proper person to be permitted to adopt said minor child, cannot be held as bearing upon any of the issues tendered for determination. The court, as we have said, determined that Walter S. Joy and Annia Joy, his wife, were such fit and proper persons and that the interests and welfare of the minor in question would be best subserved by granting the petition for adoption filed by them.

[1] The record shows that Walter S. Joy and his wife were both less than 50 years of age and that F. O. Burlin and his wife were both over the age of 70 years, that the minor child was of the age of only 11 years. The trial court, in addition to oral testimony as to the fitness and capacity of the persons applying for adoption of the minor, had before it the individuals making the application and also the individuals filing the opposition thereto, and as sections 224, 225, 226, and 227 of the Civil Code, relating to adoption of minors, give no preference whatever to relatives, or other persons, making application for adoption, it would require a very clear case of the abuse of the judicial discretion vested in the trial court to authorize an appellate court to set aside an order of adoption, where the proceeding is shown to be taken and had according to the procedure specified by the Codes, and the fact of relationship only is urged as a cause for reversal.

[2] In guardianship proceedings, where both the estates and custody of minors may be involved, the Codes set forth certain preferences as to who may be appointed, but when it comes to the matter of adoption, the future welfare of the minor is the only matter for consideration. Under such circumstances, the Legislature has left such determination to the judicial discretion of the trial court. In the case at bar, there is absolutely nothing presented in the record upon which we could predicate error of the trial court, as to whom the right of adoption should be awarded. There is nothing which shows the unfitness of any of the parties, so far as the testimony set forth in the transcript is concerned, save and except, as the difference in ages of the respective parties applying for and opposing the adoption of said minor child might be deemed a proper matter for consideration. Ordinarily speaking, the conclusion would seem proper that the welfare of a minor would be best served by granting letters of adoption, where the parties applying are under 50 years of age, rather than sustaining the opposition or granting letters of adoption to persons over 70 years of age. Here, again, the presence of all the parties in court, their conduct and their actions, are matters vital to be considered by the trial court, and are matters of which an appellate court can have absolutely no knowledge. An appellate court is confined to the record, and when the record shows nothing reflecting upon the persons to whom the letters have been awarded, an appellate court cannot declare the determination of the trial court erroneous, even though all the persons opposing the granting of letters may likewise be fit and proper persons to whom adoption letters might be granted.

[3] Upon first impression it would seem that grandparents should be given preferential rights in matters of adoption, but the Legislature has omitted so to provide, and has made the welfare of the child the dominant factor, and not the wishes or desires of any one who might, perchance, be a relative. As stated in the cases of Adoption of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 126 P. 161, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214, and In re Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 33 P. 460, 21 L. R. A. 380, adoption proceedings are purely statutory, and as an examination of the sections of the Codes shows that the Legislature has scrupulously refrained from giving preferential rights to any one, it would simply be a matter of judicial legislation for an appellate court to do so.

[4] It does appear from the record that the 11 year old child was not placed upon the witness stand and questioned upon the hearing. This, however, furnishes no ground for reversal. In re Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 33 P. 460, 21 L. R. A. 380; In re Williams, 102 Cal. 80, 36 P. 407, 41 Am. St. Rep. 163. These cases hold that where the child is under 12 years of age, interrogating the child is entirely discretionary with the trial court.

[5, 6] It is further urged that in the opinion of the trial court, orally announced upon the conclusion of the hearing upon the application for adoption by Walter S. Joy and his wife, the trial court used language indicating bias or prejudice against F. O. Burlin. The opinion of the trial court rendered in the decision of the cause is not a part of the record which we can consider upon appeal. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 488. In addition to this we may add that even though the court, for some cause or other, entertained a prejudice or bias against F. O. Burlin, unless it be shown that the court erred in granting letters of adoption to the petitioner, and, further, that the welfare of the minor was not best subserved by the court's order, no cause would be made to appear justifying a reversal.

In addition to what we have said, it appears from the record that the deceased father of the minor had, just prior to his death, expressed himself as being opposed to the custody of his minor child being in any manner granted to either F. O. Burlin or Sophia Burlin. The record however, is silent whether the father had any valid reasons for entertaining such views prior to his death.

The Legislature not having given preferential rights to relatives in the matter of adoption, and no cases having been called to our attention establishing such a rule of decision, and nothing being shown in the record indicating that the welfare of the minor has not been best subserved by the order of the trial court made herein, it follows that the order of the trial court must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 5600.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Award by Industrial Accident Commission, sustained by evidence, is conclusive.

If evidence is sufficient to sustain finding on which award of Industrial Accident Commission is founded, the award will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Master and servant ☞405(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding insurance carrier was not prejudiced by employee's failure to give timely notice of injury (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 15).

In proceeding for compensation, under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), evidence held sufficient to sustain ultimate finding of Industrial Accident Commission that insurance carrier was not prejudiced in making its defense by employee's failure to give notice of injury in accordance with section 15 of the act.

3. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 397(3)—Express finding is not required on ultimate fact, not made issue.

No express finding was required on ultimate fact, which was not made an issue by pleadings.

4. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 403—Employer has burden of proving prejudice by reason of employee's failure to give timely notice of injury (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, §§ 15, 19[d]).

Prejudice to employer by employee's failure to give notice of injury within 30 days after its occurrence, in accordance with Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 15 (St. 1917, p. 831), is an affirmative defense, and burden of proof thereof rests on employer under section 19(d).

5. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 405(6)—Evidence held to sustain finding that employee's injury was not caused, continued, or aggravated by unreasonable refusal to submit to treatment (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act).

In proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), evidence held to sustain finding that employee's disability was not caused, continued, or aggravated by unreasonable refusal to submit to medical or surgical treatment.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act by an employee of the Julian Petroleum Corporation, opposed by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, insurer. From an award by the Industrial Accident Commission, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

Edward C. Mills and Harold J. Hunter, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. By this proceeding petitioner seeks to have reviewed an award made by respondent, Industrial Accident Commission, to an employee of the Julian Petroleum Corporation, of which corporation petitioner was the insurer.

The principal facts are as follows: On February 9, 1926, the date on which the employee started his employment at a service station of the Julian Petroleum Corporation, he sustained an injury to his left knee. Not suffering immediately therefrom to any considerable extent, he finished the day's work. That evening, however, he told his uncle, who was the sales manager of his employer, of the accident which had befallen him, and on the same evening consulted his personal physician regarding the injury which he had sustained. At that time the knee showed no swelling or discoloration. The next day he returned to his work, the knee then being slightly swollen and painful. From that date and continuously thereafter to the 5th day of May following, the employee continued to work, during all of which time he was under the medical care of his own physician—on which latter date he told the superintendent of the service station, who was the immediate superior of the employee, of his injury and the date on which it had been received. From May 5th to June 1st, on account of the injury which he had sustained, the employee was neither able to nor did work at his occupation. On June 1st he again returned to his work and so continued until July 15th, at which time and ever since he has been unable to work on account of said injury. No medical treatment was ever offered to the employee by his employer or by any other corporation or person in its behalf.

Petitioner urges that because the employer was not notified by the employee of the injury sustained by him until nearly three months had elapsed after the accident causing the injury had happened, and because the employee did not follow the advice given to him by his own physician, the award should be annulled.

Section 15 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831), among other things, provides in effect that, unless within 30 days after the occurrence of the injury the employer be notified thereof, no claim to recover compensation therefor shall be maintained: "Provided, further, that the failure to give any such notice, or any defect or inaccuracy therein, shall not be a bar to recovery under this act if it is found as a fact in the proceedings for the collection of the claim that there was no intention to mislead or prejudice the employer in making his defense, and that he was not in fact so misled or prejudiced thereby."

On the hearing of the application for compensation, the respondent commission, among other things, found as a fact that:

"Neither of the defendants had notice or knowledge of said injury as defined in section 15 of said act, but the insurance carrier has not been prejudiced in making its defense. The employee obtained medical treatment on the same day of said injury and thereafter, and the evidence does not show that the employee's disability was or is caused, continued, or aggravated by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, or to any surgical treatment."

Considering the evidence produced at the hearing of the application by the employee for compensation for his injuries, the effect of such finding includes the implied facts that neither the employer nor its insurer, the petitioner herein, was prejudiced in making its defense to the claim of the employee by reason of the failure of such employee, within 30 days after the date of the accident, to give the required statutory notice thereof; and that because of the fact that the employee had competent medical advice and treatment for the injury on the date on which the injury was sustained by him and continuously thereafter, which advice was substantially followed by the employee, the disability of the employee was not caused, continued, or aggravated by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical or surgical treatment.

[1] The rule is well established that if the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding upon which the award is founded, the petitioner has no solid ground upon which to base the relief for which it prays. The substantial question, then, presented for determination is whether from the evidence the respondent commission was justified in making such finding.

The only evidence contained in the record to which the attention of this court has been directed, which would tend to show that the employee had intentionally misled the employer regarding the accident, was that wherein the employee made the statement that prior to May 5th he did not inform the employer of the fact that he had been injured, "because I had just got the job, I was only working about two weeks, and I knew how hard it was for me to find work; and I thought it would get progressively better instead of worse. At that time when it was absolutely necessary for me to go away I told my employer about it, and he gave me a leave of absence, and said when I came back he would fix me up, and I didn't see him after that."

[2-4] Giving to such statement its broadest significance, and conceding that it is some evidence of an intention on the part of the employee to conceal from the employer the fact that an accident had occurred through which the employee had sustained an injury, nevertheless the entire evidence, and especially the admitted fact that the employee was treated continuously by a competent physician from the date of the injury to the date of the hearing before the respondent commission, is sufficient, we think, to sustain the ultimate finding by respondent that the insurance carrier was not prejudiced in making its defense. Moreover, it appears that no direct issue was presented by the answer of the petitioner here to the application of the employee for compensation with reference to the intent of the employee in failing to notify his employer of the happening of the accident; and consequently that no express finding was required on such ultimate fact not made an issue by the pleadings. Prejudice to the employer, by reason of such failure to give notice, is an affirmative defense, and the burden of proof thereof rests upon the employer. Section 19(d), Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831).

In the case of San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways v. Industrial Accident Commission, 180 Cal. 121, 127, 179 P. 386, it is held that, in view of the fact that prejudice to the employer by reason of the failure of the employee to give notice is an affirmative defense and that the burden of proof rests upon the employer therein, and because of a finding by the Industrial Accident Commission that there was no intention on the part of the employee to mislead or prejudice the employer in making his defense and that the employer was not in fact misled or prejudiced thereby—the failure by the employee to serve the employer with a written notice of the injury, within 30 days after the injury was received, did not bar a recovery of compensation.

It may be noted that on May 5th, when the condition of the injured knee had become so bad that the employee was unable to continue in his employment, although the employer was then directly notified of the injury sustained by the employee, the employer did nothing to relieve the situation. But the petitioner contends that had the employee followed the advice given him by his personal physician, to the effect that the employee "keep off the leg," he would have recovered from the injury, and consequently, that, owing to his neglect and implied refusal to obey the directions of his own physician in that regard, the disability was aggravated to such an extent that the final condition of the knee cannot be charged to the petitioner.

As hereinbefore indicated, after the employer had received notice of the injury, although the opportunity to assist the employee was then afforded, neither the employer nor its insurer took any action in the premises. In addition thereto, it manifestly appears that from the beginning the employee had medical care, and the record contains no evidence which casts any criticism upon the ability of the physician who was treating the employee. Indeed, the expert physician called by petitioner to testify in its behalf placed his stamp of approval upon the treatment prescribed by the physician in attendance upon the employee when he testified:

"I think that Dr. Rose (the attending physician) had outlined adequate treatment for him (the employee) * * * but [he added] I do not think that he accepted it."

It therefore becomes apparent that, excepting for the statement made by the physician called by petitioner to the effect that he thought the employee did not accept the prescribed treatment (which, of course, is immaterial), and excepting for the possibility that the employee failed to follow the directions given him by the physician, the treatment which he received was "adequate"; from which fact it follows that in all probability the physician for the insurer could have done no better for the employee than did the physician actually in attendance, and therefore that no actual prejudice resulted to the employer or its insurer from the circumstance that the employee had his own physician to look after his condition rather than the physician employed by the insurer of the employer.

As to that part of the evidence which affects the failure of the employee to "keep off the leg," in accordance with the directions of his physician, the record discloses that if any such direction was ever given the employee, at first the injury showed no indication of a serious development and the doctor's directions were more in the nature of a suggestion than a real direction, and that later, when the doctor advised the employee "very strongly," he promptly accepted such advice and gave up his employment. Although the testimony given by the doctor with reference to the matter was not altogether clear nor free from inconsistencies, it included the following:

"Q. He (the employee) continued to work up to May 1st, didn't he—the first part of May? A. Something in that neighborhood.

"Q. And you strenuously objected to that, didn't you, as a doctor, knowing this man had a bad knee? A. To a certain extent.

"Q. Did you or did you not advise him to work? A. The first part I did not advise him strongly, the latter part I advised him very strongly. I says, 'If you don't stay off the knee and go to the hospital, you will lose that knee.'

"Q. And he kept on working? A. No; he went away after I told him that.

"Q. That was the first part of May? A. Yes.

"Q. Didn't he work some part of June, Doctor? The testimony is that he worked two weeks in July. A. That is right; he came back from the springs and felt better after the rest, and he thought he could continue his work.

"Q. Now, Doctor, in fairness to you don't you think that this man would have made better progress had he stayed off his knee? A. I do believe he would.

"Q. Why, certainly. And don't you think he should have quit work as soon as the condition became severe? A. In the beginning there was no indication to quit work and no indication of any serious development.

"Q. Did he limp on his knee? A. Not in the beginning; later on he started to limp, with a temperature."

[5] While some evidence appears in the record from which a conclusion contrary to that expressed in the finding in question might have been reached by the respondent commission, from the foregoing it is apparent that it was within the province of the respondent commission to make the finding on the evidence that the disability of the employee was not "caused, continued, or aggravated by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, or to surgical treatment."

Other questions are presented for determination by this court, but as each of those suggested by petitioner depends upon a decision in its favor of the questions hereinbefore considered, it becomes unnecessary to devote to them the consideration which otherwise they would deserve.

The award is affirmed.

SHUMWAY v. WOOLWINE et al.
(Civ. 4861.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Mechanics' liens §281(1)—Evidence held to support finding that residence erected, except for completion of interior decorating, was substantially completed.

In suit for foreclosure of mechanic's lien, evidence held to support finding that residence erected was substantially completed and that imperfection was trivial, where sole work remaining to be done was completion of interior decorating.

2. Contracts §295(1)—Substantial completion of building entitles contractor to recover on contract.

Substantial completion of building under contract for its erection amounts to completion for purpose of determining right of contractor to recover on contract.

3. Appeal and error §1008(1)—Ultimate findings control where inconsistent with probative findings.

Where probative findings are inconsistent with ultimate findings of trial court, ultimate findings control.

4. Mechanics' liens §93—Constructive completion of building may arise from occupancy and use thereof by owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187).

Occupation of uncompleted building may constitute constructive completion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that occupation and use of building by owner for more than 30 days, accompanied by cessation of labor thereon, shall be deemed equivalent to completion.

5. Mechanics' liens §288(3)—What constitutes trivial imperfection under building contract is question for court in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien.

In suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, question of what constitutes trivial imperfection in completion of building is question of fact to be determined by trial court under conditions and circumstances.

6. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Findings are not disturbed, if supported by any substantial evidence.

Findings of trial court can be overturned only where unsupported by any substantial evidence.

7. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 157(1)—Finding that erroneous inclusion of cost of uncompleted work in mechanic's lien was inadvertent held not error where plaintiff disclaimed sum at trial.

Finding of trial court that plaintiff, in suit for foreclosure of mechanic's lien, erroneously included cost of uncompleted work through inadvertence held not error where plaintiff made no claim therefor at trial.

8. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 157(4)—Inadvertent claim in lien for work not performed, where not willful, does not forfeit lien (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, 1202).

Error in advertently including improper sum in mechanic's lien does not forfeit lien claimed, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, unless excessive claim was willfully included, under section 1202.

9. Contracts $\S$ 335(2)—Performance of contract may be alleged, instead of pleading nonperformance and excuse, where contract has been substantially performed.

Rule that one who relies upon excuse for nonperformance of contract should plead both nonperformance and excuse, instead of alleging performance, does not apply in case of substantial performance, where incompleteness is trivial in character.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Suit by W. H. Shumway against Lauraine Woolwine and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, and H. H. Atkinson, of Reno, Nev., for appellants.

Courtney A. Teel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Defendants appeal from a judgment in a suit for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien.

Plaintiff entered into a cost plus agreement with defendants for the construction of a residence, under the terms of which plaintiff was to receive as compensation 10 per cent. of the total cost of labor and material. On April 8, 1922, defendants Woolwine moved into and took possession of the residence, when some of the fixtures were not installed and some of the interior decorating had not been completed by reason of the dampness of the walls. It was agreed the decorators would finish this work during the summer after the walls had dried out. According to the evidence, this decorating was an extra contract, the original contract providing for plain tinting only. Mrs. Woolwine testified that she contracted with the painters for the extra decorating. The installation of the fixtures was completed soon after April 8th, but the decorating was never completed, although the decorators offered to finish the work after plaintiff had filed his lien on June 22, 1922. No notice of completion was ever filed.

The complaint alleges completion of the work on April 8, 1922. The court found:

"That pursuant to the terms of said contract and as directed by the said defendants Lauraine Woolwine, J. E. Woolwine and B. L. Harding, plaintiff caused said building and improvements to be constructed to the state of completion, and that plaintiff duly performed pursuant to said contract all things upon his part to have been performed, and that said building and improvements were not entirely finished and completed on the 25th day of April, 1922; that defendants Lauraine Woolwine and J. E. Woolwine took possession of and occupied and used said building and improvements on or about the 8th day of April, 1922, and have continued said use and occupancy at all times since said April 8, 1922; that said use and occupancy has been entire and exclusive since said April 25, 1922; that all work and labor on said building and improvements completely ceased on said last-mentioned date, and that no notice of completion thereof has ever been filed by defendants, or any of them, or by any one else.

"That prior to aforesaid completion and during the course of the construction of said building and improvements, defendant Lauraine Woolwine personally had dealings with and gave orders and instructions to the painters and decorators on said building and improvements for the performance of about $800 worth of extra work over and above the original contract for same; that on or about April 7, 1922, defendant Lauraine Woolwine and said painting and decorating contractors agreed, with the approval of plaintiff, to temporarily finish said painting and decorating otherwise than as provided by said extra contract for same, and the said painters and decorators agreed with defendant Lauraine Woolwine to refinish and complete same as agreed in and by said extra contract, during the summer of 1922; that through no fault of plaintiffs, said painters have not completed said painting and decorating; that said painters offered so to do during August of 1922, but defendant Lauraine Woolwine refused to permit them to refinish said painting and decorating pursuant to said extra contract as aforesaid, or at all; that the reasonable value of said painting and decorating agreed to be done during said summer of 1922 was and is the sum of $160, which said sum was withheld by defendants from said painting and decorating contractors as aforesaid; that said noncompletion of said building and painting is trivial in character, and that defendants can be compensated therefor by an allowance of said sum of $160.

"That plaintiff by inadvertence included within his claim of lien aforesaid amount of $160; that said claim for work and materials not furnished was not willfully made, nor was said claim made with any intent to falsify nor to defraud defendants, or any of them."

[1, 2] Appellants urge that plaintiff failed to complete the work undertaken, and therefore cannot recover. We cannot agree with this contention. Under the evidence, the work of the original contract was substantially completed when defendants Woolwine entered into possession. Substantial completion is completion. In J. Musto, etc., Co. v. Pacific States Corporation, 48 Cal. App. 452, at page 458, 192 P. 138, 140, the court said:

"As to such character of contracts the law is well settled that a substantial performance of all the essential parts thereof, had in good faith, will entitle the contractor to recover the contract price, less compensation to the owner by way of recoupment for any damage resulting from trivial defects and imperfections due to inadvertence and not affecting substantive parts of the contract. This is especially true where, as in this case, the owner has received the benefit of what has been done and is enjoying the fruits of the work. Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 556, 150 P. 769; Rischard v. Miller, 182 Cal. 351, 188 P. 50; Collins v. Ramish, 182 Cal. 360, 188 P. 550; Morris v. Hokosona, 26 Colo. App. 251, 143 P. 826; Omaha Water Co. v. City of Omaha, 156 F. 922, 85 C. C. A. 54."

To the same effect, see Hallensleben v. Heine Piano Co., 54 Cal. App. 925, 201 P. 942; Thomas Havery Co. v. Jones, 185 Cal. 285, 289, 197 P. 105; Hammond Lumber Co. v. Yeager, 185 Cal. 355, 197 P. 111.

[3] Appellants urge that the special finding that the building was not entirely completed on the 25th day of April, 1922, will control the general finding of completion. Even though the probative findings were inconsistent with the ultimate findings of completion in accordance with the contract, the latter would control. J. Musto, etc., Co. v. Pacific States Corporation, supra; Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 38 P. 740.

[4] Appellants' next contention is that there is no evidence to justify the finding of a constructive completion of the building for the reason that occupation of an uncompleted building does not constitute constructive completion. Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the occupation and use of a building by the owner for more than 30 days, accompanied by cessation of labor thereon, shall be deemed equivalent to completion. Appellants' argument that the lien was premature is based upon the assumption that the work was not completed. As we have seen, there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the court that the building was substantially completed, and there was occupancy, together with cessation of labor, for more than 30 days before the filing of the lien.

[5, 6] It is claimed by appellants that there is no evidence to support the finding that the building was completed. Such claim is without merit, where the evidence shows that the work was substantially finished except the contract for extra decorating entered into directly by one of the defendants and the decorators. Under the circumstances in the case at bar, where the unfinished work was to be done under a contract for extras which could not be performed until the dampened walls had dried out, and where it appeared that the reasonable value of the unfinished decorating was the sum of $160, as compared with the sum of approximately $22,000 as the reasonable value of the entire work done under the contract, we conclude that the trial court was justified in finding that the said noncompletion was trivial in character. What constitutes a trivial imperfection is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court under the conditions and circumstances of each case; and this finding can only be overturned when it can be said that there is no substantial evidence to support it. Hammond Lumber Co. v. Yeager, 185 Cal. 355, 358, 197 P. 111.

[7, 8] Plaintiff erroneously included the cost of the uncompleted work in his lien. As plaintiff made no claim for this sum at the trial, we see no error in the finding of the trial court that this claim had been made inadvertently. Neither did the filing of such lien inadvertently including the said sum invalidate the lien, as there was no evidence that this amount was willfully included. Under the provisions of section 1202 of the Code of Civil Procedure a lien is not forfeited unless a person shall willfully include in his claim, under section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, work or materials not performed or furnished for the property described in the claim.

[9] Appellants rely upon an alleged fatal variance between the pleadings and the proof. The complaint alleged that plaintiff duly performed all things provided in said agreement to be performed on his part. In addition to the general finding of completion of the building, the court found specially that defendant Lauraine Woolwine ordered extras from the painters and decorators, as appears from the findings hereinbefore quoted. Appellants cite the case of Herdal v. Sheehy, 173 Cal. 165, 159 P. 422, as authority for the rule that if the plaintiff relies upon an excuse for nonperformance, he should plead both the nonperformance and the excuse, instead of alleging performance. This rule does not apply to a case of substantial performance where the incompleteness is trivial in character, as in the case at bar. Smith v. Mathews Construction Co., 179 Cal. 797, 179 P. 205; Conrad v. Foerst, 54 Cal. App. 277, 201 P. 795.

An examination of the record discloses that appellants' claim that there is no evidence to justify the finding of contractual relation for extra work between defendant Lauraine Woolwine and the decorators is without merit. Neither do we find any variance between the lien and the proof. The evidence supported the finding of the court that there was substantial completion. The finding was upon the express contract, as stated in the lien, and not upon quantum meruit, as claimed by appellants.

Appellants further contend that there is no evidence to justify the court's findings that plaintiff performed all things on his part to have been performed, and that there was a fatal inconsistency in the findings for the reason that the court found that the uncompleted portions of the contract were trivial in character. A discussion of these further contentions becomes unnecessary by reason of our conclusions heretofore stated.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 298

JURI v. KOSTER. (Civ. 5234.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1927.

1. Pleading ☞204(3)—Complaint stating distinct causes of action is not generally demurrable if one is good cause of action.

General demurrer cannot be sustained to a complaint, where one of several distinctly framed causes of action states a good cause of action.

2. Corporations ☞547(1)—Agreement between corporation, trustees, and subscribers to fund for benefit of corporate creditors held enforceable by assignee of subscriber expressly made beneficiary (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Agreement whereby certain parties of the third part severally agreed to pay specified amounts to enable trustees to adjust claims of creditors of a corporation, specifically providing that one of subscribers, a creditor, should be paid in full, held enforceable by that subscriber, under Civ. Code, § 1559, permitting a third person to enforce a contract made for his benefit.

3. Parties ☞7(2)—Trustees and other creditors held not necessary parties plaintiff to action on subscription contract for benefit of creditors by subscriber and creditor who assumed several liability (Code Civ. Proc. § 383).

Third person, both a subscriber to an agreement to raise funds to adjust claims of creditors of a corporation and creditor thereof, could, under Code Civ. Proc. § 383, bring an action on the agreement without joining as plaintiffs the corporation and the trustees or the other creditors, where he had undertaken a several liability.

4. Parties ☞7(1), 22—Trustees under subscription agreement for creditors' benefit held not "united in interest" with debtor corporation, within statute, so as to be necessary plaintiff or defendant in subscriber's action thereon (Code Civ. Proc. § 382).

Trustees, under an agreement between debtor corporation, trustees for creditors, and subscribers to a fund for adjusting claims of creditors, were not united in interest, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 382, so as to require them to be joined as plaintiffs or defendants in an action on the agreement by the assignee of one who was both subscriber and creditor.

5. Parties ☞30—Creditors held not necessary parties plaintiff to action on subscription contract by assignee of subscriber, who was also beneficiary of fund for creditors' benefit.

Creditors, who were not parties to agreement executed by a corporation, trustees, and subscribers to a fund for benefit of creditors, were not necessary parties to an action for breach thereof by the assignee of one of the subscribers who was also a creditor, where the agreement contained provisions solely for the benefit of plaintiff's assignor.

6. Parties ☞30—Creditors who were not necessary plaintiffs in action on subscription contract by subbeneficiary of fund for creditors' benefit held not necessary defendants.

Creditors were not necessary parties defendant to an action on an agreement to subscribe fund to enable trustees to adjust corporation's debts, brought by assignee of subscriber who was also a creditor and an express beneficiary, where they were not necessary parties plaintiff.

7. Parties ☞30—Subscription agreement held to authorize suit thereon by subscriber, who was also beneficiary, without joining other subscribers.

Provision in agreement between corporation, trustees, and subscribers to provide funds for adjustment with creditors, authorizing suit against any defaulting party in favor of plaintiff's assignor who was both a subscriber and express beneficiary, held to make it unnecessary to join other subscribers as defendants in action on agreement.

8. Pleading ☞18—Complaint on contract, stating essential facts, is sufficient against objection to uncertainty in matters of legal interpretation.

Complaint stating essential facts of nature of the cause of action is sufficient against objection that it is uncertain, where alleged uncertainties are matters of legal interpretation of contract.

9. Pleading ☞207—Uncertainty in contract is not matter for special demurrer by party promisor to complaint thereon (Civ. Code, § 1654).

Uncertainty in contract is not a matter for special demurrer by a party promisor, to a complaint on the contract, since, under Civ. Code, § 1654, the contract must be interpreted most strongly against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action for breach of contract by E. Juri against H. Koster. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lloyd Macomber, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. H. Ricketts, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. [1] The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff following defendant's failure to answer after his demurrer to the amended complaint had been overruled. The action is one for the breach of a written contract, which is set out in full as a part of the amended complaint. The demurrer is both general and special, but as the amended complaint was framed in three distinct causes of action, the third or which pleaded an account stated as to which no general demurrer was interposed, it will be necessary to consider the grounds of the special demurrer only because, if the amended complaint pleaded one good cause of action, the general demurrer could not have been sustained to the pleading.

The written agreement upon which the litigation is based was executed by the Pacific Alloy & Steel Company, a corporation, as party of the first part, three named trustees, parties of the second part, and sixteen individual parties of the third part who severally agreed to pay to these trustees the amounts specified as subscriptions opposite their respective names. The purpose of the agreement was to raise funds to enable the trustees to adjust the claims of creditors of the corporation of which plaintiff's assignor was the principal one, but inasmuch as this assignor also joined in the agreement and obligated himself to pay something over $13,000 monthly to the trustees it was expressly agreed that his claim of $162,676.77, being much in excess of the total monthly payments required to be paid by him and consisting entirely of loans and advancements made by him to the corporation for its use and benefit, "the payment of his account in full shall be assured and guaranteed." For this purpose the parties of the second part, the trustees, jointly, in their individual capacity as well as representatives of the other parties to the agreement, guaranteed the payment of this account in full.

[2] The agreement also provided that no default on the part of any subscriber should affect the rights of plaintiff's assignor under the agreement, and that the trustees should jointly and severally have the right to sue for and collect any sums due from any subscriber. From this it is argued that the plaintiff did not have legal capacity to sue, but that the suit should have been brought by the trustees. But the complaint alleged that demand had been made upon the trustees, and that they had refused to bring the suit. The point is answered by the agreement itself, which picks out plaintiff's assignor from all the other creditors and declares that his claim alone shall be paid in full while all others are subject to adjustment. By thus acknowledging his claim and providing that it should be paid in full irrespective of what arrangements might be made with the other creditors, the agreement made him an express beneficiary, entitling him to sue under the terms of section 1559, Civil Code, which reads:

"A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it."

[3, 4] It is argued that there is a defect of parties plaintiff in that neither the corporation nor the trustees or the other creditors were joined as such. Though the corporation was the principal in the execution of the contract, the defendant undertook a several liability upon which he was liable to be sued without joining his principal either as a party plaintiff or as a party defendant. Code Civ. Proc. § 383. As to the trustees, they were not united in interest, within the meaning of section 382, Code of Civil Procedure, and hence were not required to be joined as either plaintiffs or defendants. San Diego Water Co. v. Flume Co., 108 Cal. 549, 557, 41 P. 495, 29 L. R. A. 839.

[5] The creditors, other than plaintiff's assignor, were not parties to the agreement and, though it was executed partly for their benefit, paragraph 8 thereof was distinctly and solely for the benefit of plaintiff's assignor. It is for the breach of this portion of the agreement that this suit was commenced, and we can see no reason for joining the other creditors, particularly as it does not appear from the complaint that any one of them has an enforceable claim against either the corporation or the subscribers in the agreement at the time this suit was begun.

[6, 7] It is argued that there is a defect of parties defendant because of the failure to join as such the other creditors and the other subscribers. If we are right in our conclusion that the other creditors need not have been joined as parties plaintiff, then, of course, they are not necessary parties defendant because it is only on the theory that they are necessary plaintiffs and refuse to join as such that the defendant may claim that they should be joined as defendants. As to the other subscribers, the point is completely answered by the special terms of the agreement which authorize suit against any defaulting party in favor of plaintiff's assignor.

[8, 9] The defendant urges that the complaint is uncertain, unintelligible, and ambiguous in a number of particulars. It is not necessary to consider these specifications because the complaint does plead the essential facts to acquaint the defendant with the nature of the cause of action. These specifications of uncertainty are really not matters of uncertain pleading, but are matters going to the legal interpretation of the rights and the liabilities of the respective parties under the contract. As the defendant was a party promisor in the contract, which therefore must be interpreted most strongly against him (Civ. Code, § 1654), any uncertainty in the contract is not a matter for special demurrer to the complaint because the means of clearing that uncertainty are with the defendant, and he is presumed to be the party who caused the uncertainty to exist (Id.).

Judgment affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 168

PEOPLE v. BENNING. (Cr. 1399.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 27, 1927.

1. Homicide §244(1)—Evidence held to support conviction for manslaughter as against contention of self-defense.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for manslaughter, where defendant killed deceased during discussion of latter's improper relations with defendant's wife, claiming that he thought deceased was about to draw gun.

2. Criminal law §554—Jury may disregard defendant's uncontradicted statement of facts leading up to crime when circumstances warrant it.

Uncontradicted statement of defendant, made in his own defense in prosecution for homicide, need not be accepted as proof of facts leading up to commission of crime, when other circumstances justify jury in disregarding such testimony.

3. Criminal law §703—District attorney's opening statement in murder case, offering to prove defendant's threat to get deceased, and that deceased made no demonstration against defendant, held not error, in view of evidence.

In prosecution for murder, in which defendant pleaded self-defense, opening statement of district attorney offering to prove that deceased was making no demonstration against defendant, and that defendant had threatened to get deceased, held not error, where evidence was offered in support of both statements.

4. Criminal law §1178—Assignments on admission of testimony need not be considered, where no reasons were given in brief and no authorities cited.

Assignments complaining of admission and rejection of testimony during course of trial need not be considered, where no reasons are given in brief why rulings are wrong, and no authorities are cited.

5. Criminal law §763, 764(23) — Instruction on self-defense, warning jurors to consider whether reasonable man would have fired fatal shot under circumstances, held not "comment on evidence."

In prosecution for homicide, in which defendant pleaded self-defense, instruction on self-defense, warning jurors to consider whether under circumstances reasonable man would have fired fatal shot, held not objectionable as "comment on evidence."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Comment.]

6. Homicide §340(4)—Any error in instructions relating to malice and justification for shooting in heat of passion held harmless, where defendant was convicted of manslaughter.

In prosecution for homicide, any error in instructions relating to malice and justification for shooting, if done in heat of passion, is not reversible, where defendant was convicted of manslaughter only.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Alexander Ray Benning was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry Houser, of San Jose, John T. Lewis, of Hollister, and Wm. R. Biaggi, of San Jose, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried on an information charging the crime of murder, and was found guilty of manslaughter. From the judgment following the verdict and from the order refusing a new trial the defendant has appealed on a typewritten record.

The facts of the case, briefly stated, are that the defendant shot and killed one John Bena in the city of San Jose on the 16th day of August, 1926, at about 6 p. m. Ill feeling had arisen between the defendant and the deceased growing out of information coming to the defendant of improper relations between the deceased and the defendant's wife. Some time prior to the killing the defendant had warned the deceased to cease his attentions to his wife, but a short time thereafter the defendant's wife informed him that the association still continued. On a number of occasions immediately prior to the killing friends and neighbors had informed the defendant concerning these relations. This information, it is claimed, influenced the defendant to seek out the deceased in order to give him additional warnings, and, as the defendant started out upon this mission, he procured from one of his friends a loaded revolver, which he testified he took along merely for the purpose of scaring the deceased and to protect himself in the event the deceased and his associates made an attack upon him. The defendant found the deceased in a pool hall, but, not wishing to approach him in company with his associates, he (the defendant) waited in his automobile on the other side of the street directly in front of the entrance of the pool hall until the deceased came out. As the deceased started to walk down the street, the defendant moved his car to the other side of the street and engaged the deceased in conversation. The only testimony as to what occurred at that time comes from the lips of the defendant. This testimony is that the defendant accused the deceased of having improper relations with his wife, and insisted that he come down with him to the home of one Orlo King, a friend of the defendant, in order that he may make proof of his assertions; that he informed the deceased that defendant's wife had made a complete confession to him of these relations; that the deceased refused to go with him to King's, whereupon the defendant told him that he had a gun in his car, which he displayed to the deceased. It is then in the testimony that the defendant thought the deceased made a motion with his right hand to draw a gun from his hip pocket, whereupon the defendant immediately shot the deceased through the right breast, from which he died some twenty-four hours thereafter without having made any statement as to the circumstances of the shooting. In a confession made on the night of the shooting the defendant stated that he told the deceased: " * * * We will go to King's and they will back it up; then I am going to beat you up."

The entire case of the defendant before the jury was one of self-defense, and was based on his testimony that a motion was made by the deceased to draw a weapon, from which the defendant thought his life was in danger. Two witnesses were offered by the prosecution, who were passing the automobile immediately prior to the shooting, and who testified that they did not see the deceased make any motion indicating an intention to draw a gun, but that as they passed the car the deceased had both hands on the door of the automobile.

[1, 2] The appellant argues that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. The point is that, as no direct testimony was offered to disprove appellant's testimony that the deceased made a motion indicating an intention to draw a gun, the jury was bound to accept appellant's claim that he felt he was in imminent danger and shot the deceased in self-defense. People v. Estrada, 60 Cal. App. 477, 213 P. 67, is cited in support of the argument. In that case the court reversed a judgment of manslaughter on the ground that all the evidence tended to show a justification for the killing, and that there were no conflicting circumstances. The case differs from the facts in evidence here, because in the Estrada Case the evidence showed that the deceased was the aggressor, and struck the first blow; that the defendant was not armed, and did not anticipate a quarrel with the deceased; but that, after resisting the assault of the deceased, he struck the fatal blow with a weapon which he took from the deceased.

Thus all the circumstances in evidence coincided with the defendant's direct testimony that he felt himself in imminent danger and struck the fatal blow in defense of his own life. Here the circumstances are that the defendant purposely sought out the deceased for the purpose of picking a quarrel and was the aggressor throughout the controversy; that the deceased was not armed, and did not anticipate a quarrel with the defendant; that the deceased was standing beside the automobile in which the defendant was sitting, and had both hands resting upon the door of the machine with his head and shoulders protruding inside the car; and that the range of the bullet showed that the fatal shot was fired while the deceased was standing in this stooping position with both shoulders on a line with the door of the automobile. From these circumstances the jury could well have drawn the inference that, whatever motion the deceased made with his right hand, it was not one for the purpose of drawing a weapon, but that, if he had intended to draw a weapon, he would have thrown his right shoulder back, and at the same time withdrawn his head and shoulders from the inside of the car. There was the additional circumstance that the deceased made no effort to seize the gun in the defendant's hand, and that the defendant made no effort to prevent the deceased from attacking him, but shot without warning. These circumstances, balanced against the direct testimony of the defendant that he thought the deceased was about to draw a weapon, and that he fired in self-defense, were sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the defendant was not in imminent real or apparent danger at the time he fired the fatal shot, and that the plea of self-defense was not proved. The general rule is that the jury may disregard the testimony of the defendant when other circumstances warrant it, and we have found no authorities holding that the uncontradicted statement of a defendant made in his own defense must always be accepted as proof of the facts leading up to the commission of the crime. To so hold would mean that circumstantial evidence must always give way to the direct testimony of the defendant, who, in cases like this, would be the only eyewitness to the actual commission of the crime.

[3] Complaint is made of the conduct of the district attorney in his opening statement to the jury when he offered to prove that the defendant had threatened to get the deceased, and that, at the time of the shooting, the deceased was making no demonstration against the defendant. It was said that the district attorney knew that these facts could not be proved, and that his statement was prejudicial to the defendant. Evidence was given to show that shortly before the shooting the defendant had made threats that he was going out to look for the deceased, and that he was going to beat him up. The prosecution attempted to show through the testimony of two witnesses that the deceased made no motion to draw a gun. The testimony of these witnesses was merely that they saw no such motion, and, though on cross-examination both were shown to have been in such a position at the time of the shooting that they could not have seen the deceased, there was no error in offering this testimony, and, of course, no error in stating that such showing would be made.

[4] Complaint is made as to numerous rulings on the admission and rejection of testimony during the course of the trial. No reasons are given in the brief why the rulings were wrong, and no authorities are cited. For this reason it is not necessary to consider the assignments here. People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 P. 770.

[5, 6] Criticism is made of some of the instructions given by the trial judge. After instructing the jury fully on the issue of self-defense, the trial judge warned the jurors to consider whether, under the circumstances of this case, a reasonable man would have covered the deceased with his gun, but not have fired the fatal shot. It is said that this is a comment on the evidence, and objectionable for that reason. We cannot see it in that light.

Other instructions relating to malice and justification for the shooting, if done in the heat of passion, are also complained of. These instructions were given, because the defendant was on trial on a charge of murder, and, inasmuch as the verdict was manslaughter, we cannot see how the defendant has in any way been prejudiced by these instructions.

We have examined the entire record, and find that the defendant was fairly tried and convicted.

Judgment and order affirmed.

DAILEY v. GLASSELL. (Civ. 4472.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 1, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨770(1)—Appellant's failure to submit brief on question whether action survived death of respondent held abandonment of appeal.

Where respondent died pending appeal and appellate court ordered briefs submitted on question whether action survived his death, held appellant's failure to file brief or to take any step to substitute a party in place of respondent constituted abandonment of appeal.

2. Specific performance ⇨28(2)—Contract, whereby seller agreed "to install free of charge * * * graded and oiled streets and also water mains to each lot," held too indefinite to support specific performance.

Paragraph of contract of purchase and sale of realty, "the seller agrees to install free of charge to the purchaser graded and oiled streets and also water mains to each lot," held insufficiently definite or certain to support action for specific performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action for specific performance of a contract for purchase and sale of real property by John H. Dailey against Andrew Glassell. From a judgment of dismissal after sustaining of demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jas. E. Hannon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. The trial court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's first amended complaint. Plaintiff failed to further amend within the time prescribed, which resulted in a judgment of dismissal from which this appeal is prosecuted. At the hearing before this court on the May calendar the death of the defendant and respondent was suggested by his attorney in the trial court; no reply brief or other appearance having been made in this court. No substitution of the parties has been made in this court.

[1, 2] It was the contention of the respondent at the hearing that the cause of action does not survive his death. The court ordered this matter submitted upon briefs, ten, ten, and five, and directed the appellant, within that time, to take such steps as are prescribed by law to effectuate a substitution of parties. Respondent filed his opening brief as directed by the court, but no action has been taken by the appellant. No brief has been filed and no move has been made to substitute a party in the place and stead of the deceased respondent. Under such circumstances, two months having elapsed, it is our judgment that the appellant has abandoned his appeal. An inspection of the record, however, satisfies us that in reaching this conclusion the appellant has not suffered the loss of any substantial right and that the trial court is clearly right in its ruling on the demurrer. The action is predicated upon a demand for the specific performance of the following paragraph of a contract of purchase and sale of real property: "The seller agrees to install free of charge to the purchaser graded and oiled streets and also water mains to each lot." It is apparent on its face that this language is so indefinite and uncertain as to requirements, and utterly lacking in essential particulars as to be specifically unenforceable.

Judgment affirmed.

CHRISTENSON et al. v. CUDAHY PACKING CO. (Civ. 5757.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 25, 1927.

1. Costs ☞3—Right to costs is purely statutory.

Right to recover costs is purely statutory.

2. Costs ☞247—Party to whom costs are awarded on appeal can recover only such amounts actually paid out by him as have been necessarily incurred in action (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1027, 1034).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1027, 1034, party to whom costs are awarded on appeal is entitled to recover only such amounts actually paid out by him as have been necessarily incurred in action.

3. Appeal and error ☞460(1)—Filing of stay bond on appeal is mere privilege, and not duty imposed upon appellant.

Filing of stay bond on appeal is not a duty imposed on appellant, but is a mere privilege.

4. Costs ☞251—Premium of surety bond to stay execution on appeal is not necessary expenditure which party to whom costs are awarded on appeal can recover (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1027, 1034).

Party to whom costs are awarded on appeal is not entitled to premium of surety bond given to stay execution of judgment as a necessary expenditure under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1027, 1034, expenses recoverable being filing fees, printing of transcript, charges for clerks and notarial certificates, and similar items of fixed and uniform nature.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Eleanor L. Christenson, as executrix, etc., and others, against the Cudahy Packing Company. Plaintiff recovered judgment, which the Supreme Court modified, and ordered that defendant recover his costs on appeal. From an order striking certain items from cost bill, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Casper A. Ornbaun and Robert Duncan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas, Beedy, Presley & Paramore, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff had recovered a money judgment against the defendant, from which the latter appealed. The Supreme Court modified the judgment, and ordered that the defendant recover its costs on appeal. When the remittitur was sent down, the defendant, in due course, filed its memorandum of costs, in which were included four separate premiums paid on a surety bond to stay execution of that judgment. On motion of the plaintiff these items were ordered stricken from the bill, and the appeal is taken from that order.

[1, 2] The right to recover costs is purely statutory. Turner v. East Side Canal & Irr. Co., 177 Cal. 570, 573, 171 P. 299; Estate of Gallo, 71 Cal. App. 352, 353, 235 P. 66. Section 1027, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the prevailing party on appeal "may recover all amounts actually paid out by him in connection with said appeal, and the preparation of the record for the appeal, including the costs of printing briefs. * * *" Section 1034, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a party seeking to recover costs awarded by an appellate court must file a memorandum of costs verified in the manner prescribed in section 1033, which relates to costs in the trial court. By the latter section it is required that the party verify the memorandum, stating that the sums listed have been necessarily expended in the action. Reading these sections together, we find that the party to whom costs are awarded on appeal is entitled to recover only such amounts actually paid out by him as have been necessarily incurred in the action.

In Sime v. Hunter, 55 Cal. App. 157, 202 P. 967, it was held that the prevailing party on appeal was not entitled to recover as costs the sums paid out by him for a copy of a transcript used by him in preparing the appeal, and which was not ordered by the trial court, or the sums paid out to cover the traveling expenses of his attorney to and from the hearing in the appellate court. Turner v. East Side Canal & Irr. Co., 177 Cal. 570, 171 P. 299; and Estate of Gallo, 71 Cal. App. 352, 235 P. 66, cover the same point where the party had failed to obtain an order of court to print the transcript of testimony as required by section 274, Code of Civil Procedure. In Arrow Garage Co. v. Kikugawa, 69 Cal. App. 509, 231 P. 571, it was held that storage charges on an automobile held under attachment pending an appeal were not recoverable as costs under the Code section. The appellant cites several cases from other jurisdictions, but none of them aids in the interpretation of our statute.

[3] Bearing in mind that only the expenses necessarily incurred in the preparation of the appeal may be recovered, we should look at the circumstances under which the disputed items arose. The plaintiff in the litigation had recovered a money judgment upon which it was entitled to execution and sale of the defendant's property. To prevent this the defendant filed its stay bond as it was privileged to do under the statute. Because the defendant chose to employ a surety company for this purpose, it was required to pay the premiums in dispute. But the filing of the stay bond was a mere privilege, and not a duty imposed upon the defendant in connection with the appeal. Williams v. Atchli- son, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 140, 141, 103 P. 885 (134 Am. St. Rep. 117, 19 Ann. Cas. 1260), where it was said:

"The filing of such an undertaking by a surety company is likewise not a necessity, but a special privilege accorded under the statute."

Furthermore, the appellant was not required to file a surety bond for this purpose, but might have filed a personal bond for which no premium would have been required.

[4] In limiting the recoverable costs to such expenses as have been necessarily incurred in connection with the appeal, the Legislature had in mind expenses such as filing fees, printing of the transcript, charges for clerks and notarial certificates, and similar items of a fixed and uniform nature. In so limiting the recoverable costs a double purpose is served—uniformity in the charge to be imposed upon unsuccessful parties, and prevention of imposition upon such parties through unnecessary and unreasonable expenditures. We are satisfied that the premium of a surety bond in a case of this kind is not a necessary expenditure within the meaning the Code section.

Order affirmed.

STANTON v. SANTA ANA SUGAR CO.
(Civ. 4720.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Contracts ⇨338(2)—Defendant must set up rescission as affirmative defense to action on contract by third person for whose benefit it was made (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Rescission of contract, sued on by third person for whose benefit it was made, under Civ. Code, § 1559, must be set up as affirmative defense by defendant.

2. Contracts ⇨333(1)—Plaintiff need not plead nonrescission.

In suit on contract, plaintiff need not plead that contract was not rescinded.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3)—Plaintiff's failure to plead that contract made for his benefit was not rescinded held not ground for reversal, in absence of claim of rescission or injury to parties' substantial rights (Civ. Code, § 1559; Code Civ. Proc. § 475).

Where third person's action, under Civ. Code, § 1559, on contract made for his benefit, was tried without claim of rescission, and parties' substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's failure to plead negatively that no rescission was made, such neglect is not ground for reversal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

4. Contracts ⇨187(1)—One not party to contract made expressly for his benefit may sue promisor (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Under Civ. Code, § 1559, third person, not party to contract made expressly for his benefit, may sue promisor thereon.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨222—Unprofitableness of defendant's cropping contract with plaintiff's tenant held no defense to action on contract to pay rent.

That defendant's cropping contract with plaintiff's tenant proved unprofitable was no defense to action on latter's unconditional contract to pay plaintiff certain sum for rent out of no specific fund.

6. Stipulations ⇨18(1)—Stipulation that one executing contract was acting as defendant's agent foreclosed contention that contract was not binding on defendant.

Stipulation that one executing contract in defendant's behalf was acting as defendant's agent, with full authority to make contract, foreclosed contention that contract was not binding on defendant, because obligatory words were written in pencil in form provided by defendant.

7. Contracts ⇨147(2)—Parties' intent must be ascertained by contract itself.

Parties' intention in making contract is to be ascertained by contract itself.

8. Landlord and tenant ⇨231(2)—Tenant's testimony as to whether he had rent money held inadmissible in lessor's action against one contracting with assignee of lease to pay rent.

In lessor's action on defendant's contract with assignee of lease to pay rent, tenant's testimony as to whether he had any money with which to pay rentals was properly excluded.

YORK, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff was the owner of certain land, which he leased to one Shiroishi for three years, beginning on November 1, 1920, for which Shiroishi agreed to pay plaintiff $4,710. Payments were to be in installments, of which $50 was to be paid on the signing of the lease, $700 on January 5, 1921, $250 on May 15, 1921, and $500 on October 15, 1921. The other payments are not material in this case. On January 8, 1921, Shiroishi, with the consent of plaintiff, assigned said lease to one Sakurai, who agreed to pay all the rentals as specified in said lease. Sakurai on the 8th day of January, 1921, entered into a contract with defendant, wherein defendant agreed with Sakurai to pay $1,500 of said rentals to plaintiff, and thereupon defendant paid to plaintiff $750 and agreed to pay $250 to plaintiff on May 15th, and $500 thereon on October 15, 1921. Defendant thereafter paid $200 of said sum to plaintiff and was given credit for the $50 paid on the execution of the original contract of lease. Plaintiff prosecutes this action to recover judgment for $500, the remainder of the said $1,500 defendant promised Sakurai he would pay to plaintiff.

[1-4] Plaintiff's action is based upon section 1559 of the Civil Code of the state of California, which reads as follows:

"A contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind."

The complaint does not allege whether the contract was rescinded by the parties to it before the action was brought. It seems to have been considered by the Supreme Court of this state as an essential allegation in the complaint in Ericksen v. Rhee, 181 Cal. 566, 185 P. 847. The statement in that case was, however, obiter dictum, and we do not consider it binding on us in deciding this appeal. The above is the only case where we have found any suggestion that it should be plead that no rescission of such a contract had been made. Having established that the contract was made, there was no presumption of rescission, and rescission, therefore, if it existed, should have been set up as an affirmative defense by the defendant.

Again, the action was tried without any claim of rescission having been made, and the substantial rights of the parties were not affected by failure on the part of the plaintiff to plead negatively that no rescission was made before the complaint was filed, and therefore the neglect to plead it could not be ground for reversal. Section 475, Code Civ. Proc. It will be noted that the section of the Civil Code upon which plaintiff relies for maintenance of this action used the word "expressly" and not "solely." A contract made expressly for the benefit of a third party may have been also for the benefit of one or more of the contracting parties, and has been so made in nearly all the cases where such a contract has been under consideration, since the enactment of said Civil Code provision. The contract under consideration was not to pay out of a certain fund.

Plaintiff, under the terms of his lease, was to receive his rent, whether the enterprise in which Shiroishi and Sakurai and the defendant were engaged was profitable or involved a loss. It was a contract for unconditional payment to the plaintiff of a certain sum for rent of his property. In fact, defendant paid the plaintiff $950, which was not from any specific fund, but from defendant's moneys, without reference to the source from which the moneys came. Independent of said provision in section 1559 of our Civil Code, plaintiff could not maintain this action. Under that code section it is well settled that the "third person" may maintain an action against the promisor, although not a party to the contract, when it appears by the contract that it was made expressly for his benefit. The facts of this case make a stronger case for plaintiff than the facts in the case of Malone v. Crescent City M. & T. Co., 77 Cal. 38, 18 P. 858, as in this case there was an unconditional promise to pay plaintiff $1,500. See, also, Lewis v. Covillaud, 21 Cal. 179 (overruling McLaren v. Hutchinson, 18 Cal. 80), and Washer v. Independent Mining, etc., Co., 142 Cal. 702, 76 P. 654; also, Flint v. Cadenasso, 64 Cal. 84, 28 P. 62.

[5] In the contract under consideration it was clearly expressed that the defendant would pay plaintiff said $1,500, and, if there were any doubt as to whether the defendant's promise was for plaintiff's benefit, it appears that plaintiff before consenting to the assignment of the lease to Sakurai required that the sugar company confirm the obligation to pay the rent. It was no defense to this action that the defendant's contract with Sakurai turned out to be unprofitable to defendant. Washer v. Independent Mining etc., Co., 142 Cal. 702, 76 P. 654.

The motion for a nonsuit made herein does not point out wherein the evidence "does not constitute a cause of action," or wherein evidence is "not sufficient to show any case against the Sugar Company." The record discloses, however, that evidence was introduced or offered after the motion for nonsuit was made, and the record apparently does not disclose that the motion for nonsuit was ever restated after such additional evidence was in.

[6-8] The defendant's contention that the obligatory words of defendant's contract were written in pencil, in a form provided for such contract by defendant, were not obligatory on defendant cannot be sustained. It was stipulated during the trial that Gerhart, who executed the contract in question on behalf of defendant was acting as agent for defendant with full authority to make the contract. This stipulation, of course, forecloses defendant from making the contention that the contract was not binding on it. It is immaterial whether plaintiff was a party to the contract with defendant, in that it appears that it was made expressly for his benefit. The intention of Sakurai and defendant in making the contract is to be ascertained by the contract itself, and it is clear and free from ambiguity. This conclusion is sustained by the authorities cited by respondent. The other provisions of the contract between Sakurai and defendant in no way modify or affect the contract of defendant to pay plaintiff $1,500, in that plaintiff's right to receive rent was in no way dependent on the cropping contract, and the defendant's promise to pay $1,500 to the plaintiff was in no way conditional on the success or failure of the beet crop. The court did not err in sustaining the objection to the question asked Shiroishi as to whether he had any money with which he could pay the rentals.

The judgment is reversed.

CITY OF COLTON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5662.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 1, 1927.

1. Mandamus ☞57(1)—District Court of Appeal may issue writ of mandate to superior court to set aside order dismissing appeal from recorder's court.

District Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandate to the superior court to set aside an order dismissing an appeal from a recorder's court.

2. Courts ☞188(1)—Jurisdiction of recorder's and police courts depends on statute, within constitutional limits.

Jurisdiction of recorder's court and police court depends entirely on legislative action, within constitutional limits.

3. Appeal and error ☞417(2)—That notice of appeal from "recorder's court" to superior court was entitled "In the police court" held not ground for dismissal of appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 475; Pen. Code, § 1461).

That notice of appeal from recorder's court to superior court was entitled "In the police court" held not ground for dismissal of appeal, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 475, where it correctly gave parties' names, was addressed to recorder and trial justice acting for recorder named, and identified judgment as one entered by such justice "recorder's court" and "police court" being ordinarily synonymous, as indicated by Pen. Code, § 1461.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Police Court.]

Application by the City of Colton for a writ of mandate to the Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Benjamin F. Warner and Charles A. Allison, Judges, to vacate an order dismissing an appeal from the Recorder's Court. Writ granted.

Loeb L. Cossack and O'Connor & Findlay, all of Colton, for petitioner.

Hert & Mussell, of Colton, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an application for a mandate for the purpose of directing the judges of the superior court of San Bernardino county to vacate an order made by them dismissing an appeal to said superior court from a judgment theretofore rendered in a recorder's court.

[1] At the outset the respondents present a demurrer to the petition, and contend that this court is without jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandate to the superior court to set aside its order dismissing the appeal from the recorder's court. The authorities, however, do not sustain respondents in their position in that regard. Peacock v. Superior Court, 163 Cal. 701, 126 P. 976; Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 474, 114 P. 978; Hellner v. Superior Court, 61 Cal. App. 785, 215 P. 709; San Francisco-Oakland T. Rys. v. Superior Court, 48 Cal. App. 586, 192 P. 116; Widrin v. Superior Court, 17 Cal. App. 93, 118 P. 550. It is therefore apparent that the demurrer should be, and it is, overruled.

The facts with reference to the matter presented by the petitioner herein are that in an action pending in the recorder's court of the city of Colton a judgment in favor of the defendant was rendered by a justice of the peace, who at the time in question was acting for and in the place of the recorder of said court; that thereafter, and within the time allowed by statute, the plaintiff in said action served upon the defendant therein and filed in the superior court in and for the county of San Bernardino his notice of appeal from such judgment; that said notice of appeal was entitled "In the Police Court of the City of Colton," etc., and was addressed, "To L. S. Lyman, Acting for James Temby, City Recorder, James Temby, City Recorder, and M. O. Hert, Attorney for Defendant." The notice itself, following the title of the action, so far as is here material, was as follows:

"You and each of you will please take notice that the plaintiff in the above-entitled action does hereby appeal from the judgment as a whole entered by Acting Judge L. S. Lyman, on the 9th day of February, 1927, against said plaintiff, in favor of said defendant. * * *"

It further appears that in due course the appeal came on for hearing before the respondent superior court, at which time, on motion of the defendant, the said superior court dismissed said appeal, on the ground, as stated in the notice of motion, that the appeal "was taken from a court not in existence; that this action was tried in the recorder's court of the city of Colton, and no appeal was ever taken therefrom, and that no notice of appeal was ever served in said matter." It will thus be observed that, while the action originally was pending in the recorder's court, the notice of the appeal was entitled "In the Police Court"; and consequently, that the question here to be determined is whether such notice of appeal was sufficient in the premises.

[2] In the common acceptance, no distinction is made between a recorder's court and a police court. Each of them is an inferior court and the jurisdiction of one is frequently, if not universally, similar to, if not identical with, that of the other. The matter of jurisdiction of either of such courts within constitutional limits depends entirely upon legislative action. It is therefore apparent that cities of one class may have a recorder's court, whose jurisdiction may be identical with the jurisdiction of a police court located in an adjoining city of a different class. So general is the use of the term "police court," as applied to any of the inferior courts of municipalities, that, as applying to proceedings in the justice and police courts and appeals to superior courts, the Legislature has seen fit to enact a statute by which such courts are defined as follows:

"The term 'police courts,' as used in this and the succeeding chapter, includes police judges' courts, police courts, and all courts held by mayors or recorders in incorporated cities or towns." Pen. Code, § 1461.

In the case entitled Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 624, 626, 26 P. 530, it is said:

"But a recorder's court is none the less a police court because it happens to have been called by another name. The character of a court is determined, not by its name, but by the nature of its jurisdiction and functions, in which respect the recorders' courts of cities organized under the general Municipal Corporations Act cannot be distinguished from other police courts."

In re Baxter, 3 Cal. App. 716, 86 P. 998, is a case where the authorities are reviewed, and which case contains language that indicates that the words "recorder" and "police judge," or "recorder's court" and "police court," in the circumstances present in that case, were respectively used interchangeably and synonymously.

In the habeas corpus proceeding entitled Ex parte Fil Ki, 79 Cal. 584, 21 P. 974, it appeared that the petitioners had been convicted of contempt of court, in that they had violated an injunction in a suit in which the complaint was entitled as "In the Supreme Court of the county of Yuba," etc., while the other papers in the case were correctly entitled "In the superior court," etc. It was the contention of the petitioners therein that no action such as that in which the injunction purported to have been issued was pending in the superior court at the time the injunction was issued. While admitting that the complaint was defective, in that it did not correctly specify the name of the court in which the action was brought, it was held that the defect was one which did not affect a substantial right of the defendants in the action, and consequently that the writ of habeas corpus would not relieve them from punishment for contempt in disobeying the injunction.

The case entitled Estate of Damke, 133 Cal. 433, 65 P. 888, involved a question not unlike that in the instant case, in that in the notice of appeal in the case cited the title of the court was given as "In the Superior Court of Sacramento County," whereas the matter in which the appeal was taken had been heard in San Joaquin county. The respondent therein made a motion that the appeal be dismissed because of the said defect in the notice. It was held that because it was apparent from the notice that the order from which the appeal was taken was otherwise sufficiently identified, and that the respondent had not been misled by reason of the defect, the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied.

The language of section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure includes the following:

"The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any * * * defect, in the pleadings or proceedings which, in the opinion of said court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties."

As is said in Rauer's L. & C. Co. v. Superior Court, 10 Cal. App. 423, 102 P. 547:

"The object of the notice [of appeal] is both to apprise the opposite party of the appeal, and as to what the appeal is from."

In Allen v. Byerly, 32 Or. 117, 48 P. 474, it is said that:

"The appellate court should construe a notice of appeal liberally, and hold that jurisdiction is conferred by its service if, by fair construction or reasonable intentment, it can ascertain therefrom that the appeal is taken from a judgment in a particular action."

And in State v. Hanlon, 32 Or. 95, 48 P. 353, the following language appears:

"If the notice of appeal informs the adverse party that a party to the judgment intends to appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court, and is so specific in its description of the judgment complained of as to acquaint a stranger to the record of the judgment alluded to in the notice, it is sufficient to confer jurisdiction; and this object may be accomplished without alluding to the time when the judgment was rendered."

It is said in Lancaster v. McDonald, 14 Or. 265, 12 P. 375, that notice of an appeal "simply means the making known to the adverse party the fact that an appeal is taken in the particular case."

[3] In the instant case, in the notice of appeal given by petitioner, as appellant in the appeal to the superior court, the names of the parties were correctly given; the notice was addressed to the justice who presided at the trial of the action—indicating that at the time in question he was acting in the place and stead of the recorder of the court—naming him, besides again naming the recorder as one of the persons to whom the notice of appeal was addressed. In addition thereto, the language contained in the body of the notice again identified the judgment from which the appeal was being taken as one which had been entered in the "above-entitled action * * * by Acting Judge L. S. Lyman, on the 9th day of February, 1927, against said plaintiff, in favor of said defendant. * * *

Considering the facts and inferences contained within such notice, together with the additional fact that the terms "recorder's court" and "police court" are ordinarily synonymously regarded, we think it clear that the respondent in the appeal could not have been misled by the fact that the caption of the notice was incorrect, in that the appeal on its face purported to be taken in an action theretofore pending in the "police court," rather than in the "recorder's court." It does not appear that any substantial right of the defendant in the action was affected by reason of the defect in the notice, and we are accordingly constrained to hold that the appeal should not have been dismissed.

The respondents are therefore directed to vacate the order by which the appeal in the action in question was heretofore dismissed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

TOPLEY v. MEGARRY et al. (Civ. 3289.) *

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 29, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 25, 1927.

1. Wills ☞90—Indorsement of stock to children, to be effective if indorser failed to return from trip, was not gift, but testamentary act.

Signing of indorsements on back of certificates of stock, to transfer them to children in case indorser failed to return alive from trip she was about to take, held to be testamentary act, and not act divesting her of either ownership or control of stock, since intent, as well as manual tradition, is necessary to constitute gift.

2. Wills ☞90—Where indorsement of stock was testamentary act, failure of indorser to rescind indorsement for 19 years did not make such act gift.

Where indorsement of stock was testamentary act, and not gift, so that no title passed, indorser's failure to rescind indorsement for 19 years will not constitute such testamentary act a gift and transfer of title under theory of laches, since laches is such neglect to assert right as, considered with other circumstances causing prejudice to adverse party, operates as bar in court of equity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; Rolph L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Emma S. Topley, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of James H. Topley, deceased, against Annie D. Topley Megarry, as executrix of the last will and testament of Anna Topley, deceased, and others, to recover a one-third interest in certain shares of corporate stock. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank L. Coombs and Nathan F. Coombs, both of Napa, for appellant.

Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, and Theodore W. Chester, of Sacramento, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. A corporation known as the Topley Company was incorporated in July, 1904, by the Topley family. Upon incorporation there was issued to James Topley, the father, two certificates, one representing 196 shares of the capital stock of said corporation and the other representing 200 shares. There was also issued to Anna Topley, the mother, 1 share and to the three children of said James Topley and Anna Topley, to wit, to James H. Topley, William H. Topley, and Annie D. Topley Megarry, 1 share each. The father conveyed certain property to the corporation in consideration of the shares issued to him. The father, James Topley, died on or about the 20th day of January, 1905, leaving a will executed in 1899, whereby he devised to his wife, Anna Topley, all of his property.

The complaint alleges that on or about the 16th day of January, 1905, the said James Topley caused said certificates of stock issued to him to be indorsed, assigned, and delivered to his wife, Anna Topley. On the 3d day of February, 1905, the said Anna Topley signed an indorsement on the back of each of the certificates issued to the said James Topley, as heretofore stated, the indorsement being as follows:

"I hereby assign all my right, title, and interest in this certificate 1, calling for 196 shares, to J. H. Topley, William H. Topley, and Annie D. Topley Megarry in equal proportions, February 3, 1905."

The indorsement on the second certificate, referred to as issued to James Topley was in the same language, save and except as to the number of shares.

The certificates referred to were not detached from the stubs in the stock book of the corporation, and after the indorsements herein referred to, the stock book, including the certificates, was placed in the safe belonging to the company in the storeroom where the company did business, which business was that of conducting and maintaining a drug store. So far as the record shows, the stock book, with certificates therein, was kept and remained in the safe belonging to the company until some time in December, 1921. The two sons remained in the employ of the company in the conduct of the drug store just referred to; James H. Topley acting as manager. In the latter part of the year 1921, James H. Topley became ill and went to a hospital some time in December of that year. Prior to going to the hospital, James H. Topley brought to Anna Topley all the books of the corporation. Some weeks later, in examining the stock book, Anna Topley discovered her signature to the indorsements herein mentioned and proceeded to draw red ink lines through the same and to mark the indorsements "Canceled." On January 20, 1922, James H. Topley died. On November 23, 1923, Anna Topley executed her last will and testament, devising all of her property to William H. Topley and Annie D. Topley Megarry. On March 30, 1924, Anna Topley died. Thereafter the will executed by James H. Topley in 1899 was filed and admitted to probate; also the will executed by Anna Topley on November 23, 1923, was filed and admitted to probate. Thereafter this action was begun by Emma S. Topley, as administratrix with the will annexed of James H. Topley, deceased, to recover a one-third interest in the 396 shares of the corporate stock of the corporation issued to James Topley, as hereinbefore stated. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The court found that the attempted indorsement and assignment of the certificates of the capital stock of said corporation by the father, James Topley, in 1905 was void. The will of James Topley, admitted to probate, conveyed all of his interest in said certificates of stock to his wife, Anna Topley, the person to whom the assignment of said certificates of stock was attempted to be made. While the mother, Anna Topley, died preceding the actual date of the trial of this cause, her testimony was taken by way of deposition and introduced in evidence in that form. It appears from the deposition of the mother that, prior to the time when she affixed her signature to the indorsements on the back of the certificates, as stated, she had become ill and was going South for medical treatment; that just prior to her leaving for the South, on account of her health, James H. Topley brought the stock book containing the certificates of stock referred to, with the indorsements, which we have set forth herein, on the reverse side of said certificates, and in the language of the witness said:

"Mother, you are about to go South. I have a little something here that I want you to sign to protect us children if you should meet with an accident. I told him, 'No; I'll not sign.' He said: 'Mother, if you sign, I promise you on your safe return back that I put everything back just as it was before.' I signed what he gave me to sign without reading it."

So far as the record shows, James H. Topley never mentioned this transaction to either his brother or sister. Thereafter, and during the period of about 19 years, the business of the company was conducted, Anna Topley acted as president, the son William H. Topley acted as vice president, and James H. Topley acted as secretary and treasurer. The income tax returns of the company, made out by James H. Topley, in one of its schedules, gave the name of Anna Topley as president, owning 397 shares, William H. Topley as 1 share, and James H. Topley, as 1 share. The income tax returns also set forth the respective salaries of each. The mother acted as president of the corporation, signing all papers as president, and visited the store about three times a week.

There appears no testimony in the record indicating that the mother, Anna Topley, in February, 1905, or at any other time, intended to make a present gift of her interest in the certificates of stock referred to, to her three children, or to any of them. The evidence which we have quoted of what occurred at the time of the indorsements justifies the conclusion of the trial court that there was no intention to pass title to said certificates of stock by said Anna Topley to her three children or to any of them. The finding of the court is in the following language:

"That the placing of said writings in the possession of James H. Topley was without any intention, purpose, belief, or understanding on the part of Anna Topley or James H. Topley that they would pass title to said stock, or any part thereof. Both of said parties at said time believed, understood, and intended that no title would pass thereby. That neither William H. Topley nor Annie D. Topley Megarry knew anything about said writings until some time in January, 1922, and neither of said parties ever claimed or asserted any rights thereunder. No delivery of said writings, or either of them, was ever made to said parties, or to either of them."

[1,2] We may add that the testimony which we have quoted surrounding the circumstances of the signing of the indorsements on the back of the certificates would have justified a further order finding that whatever Anna Topley then and there did was testamentary in character, and not an act divesting her of either ownership or control; it being evident that no gift or transfer was intended, unless the said Anna Topley failed to return alive. Upon this appeal the finding of the court that no present title passed from Anna Topley to her three children on the 3d day of February, 1905, appears not to be questioned. The attack upon the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment of the trial court is based entirely upon the question of laches.

It is argued that as, during the 19 years intervening between the date of placing her signature upon the certificates referred to and the erasure thereof by the said Anna Topley, nothing was done by the said Anna Topley in relation thereto, the defendants are now estopped to rely upon the fact that no present gift of the stock was intended at the time of the indorsement and that the indorsement was only testamentary in character. The drawing of red lines through the indorsements and marking the same "Canceled" by Anna Topley in 1922 would not, of course, affect in any wise the transaction in relation to the certificate of stock in February, 1905. That act not constituting a present gift, and being only testamentary in character, and void for that reason, does the question of laches arise in this case? All the testimony set forth in the transcript is to the effect that all three of the children recognized and acknowledged the mother's ownership in and to the certificates of stock mentioned during the entire period intervening between February 3, 1905, and the date of the death of the son, James H. Topley. As set forth in 10 Cal. Jur. 520, laches is defined as:

"Such neglect or omission to assert a right, as taken in conjunction with the lapse of time, more or less great, and other circumstances causing prejudice to an adverse party, operates as a bar in a court of equity."

And as stated on page 534 of the same volume:

"The defense of laches is available whenever a demand or other preliminary action is necessary on the part of the plaintiff and such action is not taken within the period of the statute of limitations."

No title to the certificates of stock having passed in February, 1905, from Anna Topley to the three children, and no claim thereto having been made by any of the three children during the intervening period of time, and no ownership therein having been asserted by any of the three children, we do not very well perceive how the subject of laches can enter into this action and justify a holding that an act which was purely testamentary in character and therefore void in 1905, now constitutes a gift and transfer of title. The stock book said by appellant to be in the possession of James H. Topley was in the safe owned by the company, and leads us well to the conclusion that the stock book was in the possession of the company.

The complaint in this action bases the right of the plaintiff to the alleged assignment and transfer of the certificates of stock made by Anna Topley on February 3, 1905.

There is no asserted claim of ownership, dominion, or anything which would indicate a claim of ownership and dominion over the stock by reason of any act or thing done or performed during the intervening 19 years, and if the testimony shows and justifies the conclusion of the trial court as we have said, that no title then and there passed, the plaintiff's action must fail. Had the deceased, James H. Topley, during the intervening period, asserted ownership to the certificate of stock, or had any of the children during said period asserted ownership, or taken any action indicating ownership of said certificates, or had any of them exercised any dominion or control over said certificates, or done anything which would have indicated to the mother, Anna Topley, that such ownership was claimed, then and in that case it might be argued that Anna Topley acquiesced in such claim of ownership by not having brought an action to have the alleged transfer of title adjudged ineffective. We do not need to review the authorities cited by appellant on the subject of laches, because the circumstances of the case which we have related in brief, show that they are inapplicable.

That the trial court was justified in finding that no title passed from Anna Topley to the three children, or any of them, under the evidence in this case, is sufficiently supported by the following authorities: Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 45 P. 867; Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 P. 267; Kenney v. Parks, 137 Cal. 527, 70 P. 556; Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 98 P. 269; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. Practically all of the cases in California on the subject of gifts are cited in the authorities here mentioned. All the authorities unite in holding that intent as well as manual tradition are necessary to constitute a gift. This testimony shows the trial court was justified in holding as entirely wanting in the case at bar.

No reason having been called to the attention of this court as to why the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, it is hereby ordered that the judgment of the trial court be and the same is hereby affirmed.

LICHT v. GALLATIN et al. (Civ. 3256.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 29, 1927.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨76(1)—Covenants against subletting are strictly construed against lessor.

Covenants of lease against subletting are to be strictly construed against lessor.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨180(3)—Subtenancy under lease requiring lessor's consent to subletting is presumed valid.

Under lease requiring lessor's consent to subletting, subtenancy, in absence of showing to contrary, will be presumed to have been created with his consent, since it is presumed that sublease was valid.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨180(3)—Complaint in subtenant's action for ejectment is not insufficient for failure to allege performance of conditions subsequent or to anticipate and negative defense.

In action for damages for ejectment brought by subtenant, complaint held not insufficient for failure to allege that tenant performed lease, or that his lease was in force subsequent to its execution, or that plaintiff performed covenants of sublease, since it was unnecessary to allege performance of condition subsequent or to anticipate and negative any defense.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨180(3)—Subtenant's pleading in ejectment that tenant at one time had leasehold estate raised presumption of continuance of lease.

In subtenant's action for ejectment, pleading that at one time tenant had leasehold estate raised presumption of continuance of his lease.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨180(3)—Subtenant's complaint alleging lessor's successful appeal from order of condemnation, and subsequent destruction of property to compel plaintiff to vacate, held to state cause of action.

Complaint in subtenant's action for ejectment showing lessor's successful appeal from order of condemnation of leased property, and subsequent destruction by lessor, which "was wrongful and made with the express intent of compelling plaintiff to vacate said premises," held to state cause of action.

6. Pleading ⇨214(8)—Demurrer admits facts of complaint only for purpose of determining its sufficiency.

While demurrer admits truth of facts alleged in complaint for purpose of determining its sufficiency, such facts are not admitted for any other purpose.

7. Appeal and error ⇨843(2)—On appeal from judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint in ejectment, validity of ordinance involved will not be determined, where not necessary.

On appeal in ejectment, where complaint was held demurrable, as not stating cause of action, reviewing court will not determine whether ordinance involved was unconstitutional, in reversing judgment, where such determination is unnecessary to decision, since defendants may be able to deny terms of ordinance, or show that other terms cure alleged defects.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action for damages for ejectment by Ned Licht against Malvena Gallatin and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Downey & Downey and George A. Work, all of Sacramento (Thomas Ashby, of Sacramento, of counsel), for appellant.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the third amended complaint without leave to amend and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendants. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The following facts are alleged in said complaint: June 5, 1918, defendant Gallatin leased to George Manoles, for a term of five years, a three-story brick building in the city of Sacramento. By the terms of the lease Manoles agreed "not to let or underlet the whole or any part of said premises * * * without the written consent" of the lessor. June 21, 1918, Manoles leased a part of the ground floor of the building to the plaintiff for the full term of the lease first mentioned, subject to "all of the conditions" of the latter. Plaintiff immediately went into possession under the sublease and thereafter, until March 20, 1921, he "conducted the business of a new and secondhand clothing, jewelry, and sundry dealer on said premises." February 8, 1921, the city commissioner of public health and safety served on defendants a document, signed by him as such commissioner, containing the following:

"The undersigned, through the building inspector and the chief of the fire department of the city of Sacramento, has inspected the premises at No. 201 J street, city of Sacramento, and deems the building on said premises insecure and unsafe to life and surrounding property and that said building is liable to endanger surrounding property by fire and is not sufficiently protected from danger by fire. Said building is hereby condemned and you are hereby ordered to tear down and remove the same immediately."

On the same day the defendant Carly, acting as the agent of defendant Gallatin, appealed from the order of the commissioner to the city commission and "asked exemption from condemnation the first story of the building." On the same day the city commission made an order, by the terms of which—"the condemnation was made effective as to the second and third stories of said building; that the said appeal was sustained as to the first story thereof, with the proviso that if, upon the removal of the second and third stories of said building, the first story should be found to be dangerous, it should be removed; that, according to the proceedings before said board on said day relating to said appeal, said first story was to be left in its then status until the second and third stories should be removed; that one of the purposes of ordering the removal of the second and third stories was to have the condition of the first story ascertained; that said order has never been revoked, modified, or set aside."

February 14, 1921, the city commissioner of public health and safety served on plaintiff a writing signed by the commissioner and addressed to the plaintiff and the defendants and Manoles, reading as follows:

"You are hereby notified that the building (of which you are the owner) or (which is occupied by you) described as that certain three-story building, No. 201 J street, * * * has been condemned by the building inspector of the city of Sacramento and has been ordered torn down by the commissioner of public health and safety, and you are further notified to tear down and remove said building within ten days after the service of this notice."

At that time "the said order of the commission * * * was in full force and effect." "There had been no change in the condition of the said building * * * between the time at which the said order of the commission was made and the time at which the notice" of February 14th was served. On the same day the defendants erected scaffolding preparatory to the demolition of the building and on the 16th of March, 1921, they had completed the removal of the second and third stories. March 18, 1921, "the defendants commenced the demolition of the first story of said building." March 19, 1921, plaintiff served on Carly, as agent of defendant Gallatin, a written notice, stating that the plaintiff, "in vacating the premises, * * * is not abandoning said lease, but expressly claiming right as lessee under said lease. And you are further notified that demand is made that repairs and particularly roof and structural repairs be made on said property * * * so as to avoid condemnation of the lower story property, and to maintain said property leased in condition for occupancy." March 20, 1921, "the plaintiff was compelled to vacate and did vacate the premises." The demolition of the first story of the building was completed July 15, 1921. "Said first story was, during all of the times mentioned herein, safe and in good condition." "No order for the condemnation of said first story was made. * * * Said first story was never condemned, and * * * the destruction thereof was wrongful and made with the express intent of compelling plaintiff to vacate said premises * * * and for the purpose of depriving him of possession thereof." The commissioner of public health and safety "was without authority to give or have given said notice" of February 14th "or make any order with reference to said building except such as might be necessary to effectuate the order of the commission." A new building was subsequently erected upon the site of the demolished building and "leased to other parties." The plaintiff "has at all times mentioned herein been able, ready, and willing to perform the conditions of his said lease and has offered so to do. * * * The defendants have refused and still refuse to deliver possession of said premises * * * to plaintiff and have denied and now deny his right to the possession thereof." Appropriate allegations of damage are made, followed by a prayer for the amount thereof. The ordinance under which the building was condemned provides:

"Section 1. Whenever the commissioner of public health and safety, through the building inspector or the chief of the fire department of the city of Sacramento, shall deem any buildings, walls, chimneys, stacks or other structures within the limits of the city of Sacramento, to be insecure or unsafe, in any manner, to life or surrounding property, or that has been partially destroyed by fire or is liable to endanger surrounding property by fire or is not sufficiently protected from danger by fire, the commissioner of public health and safety shall notify the owner, agent, or person in possession thereof and order that the same be torn down and removed within ten days after the receipt of such notice of condemnation. * * *

"Sec. 2. The owner, agent, or person in possession shall have a right to appeal to the city commission from the order of condemnation made within ten days after the service of notice of condemnation. The city commission, upon notice of appeal being presented to it, shall set a date for the hearing of the matter and shall finally determine the course to be followed. If the action of the commissioner of public health and safety * * * be affirmed by the city commission, the owner, agent, or person in possession must within five days, after the decision of the city commission has been rendered, commence in good faith to tear down and remove said building * * * or other structures and must complete such removal within twenty days thereafter.

"Sec. 3. Upon the refusal or neglect of the owner, agent, or person in possession * * * to comply with any lawful order given under and by virtue of the provisions of this ordinance relative to the abatement or removal of said building * * * or other structure, then the commissioner of public health and safety shall proceed to tear down and remove such building * * * or other structures. All expenditures so incurred shall be charged against the owner and shall be a lien upon the lot on which said building * * * or other structure is situated."

[1, 2] The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the facts stated therein are insufficient to constitute a cause of action, and on many special grounds. No attempt is made by the respondents to justify the order sustaining the demurrer on any special ground and as there appears to be no merit in any of such special grounds it is deemed unnecessary to discuss them. The question, then, is whether the complaint states a cause of action. There is no allegation therein that the lessor consented to the subletting. "It seems to be the law that where there is a clause in a lease that it shall not be assigned without the previous consent of the lessor, and there is a breach of the covenant not to assign, the lessor has only the option to forfeit the lease for the breach of the condition, and that the assignment is not void, but passes the term, and the only remedy is for breach of the covenant." Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 318, 51 P. 684, 685; Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 327, 104 P. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609. Covenants against subletting are to be strictly construed against the lessor. Harrelson v. Miller & Lux, Inc., 182 Cal. 408, 413, 188 P. 800. "Under a lease requiring the lessor's consent to subletting, a subtenancy, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, will be presumed to have been created with his consent." 15 Cal. Jur. 766; Stevenson Bros. Co. v. Robertson, 21 Cal. App. 224, 227, 131 P. 326. It is to be presumed that the alleged sublease was valid rather than invalid. Alaska Salmon Co. v. Standard Box Co., 158 Cal. 567, 569, 112 P. 454; Henke v. Eureka Endowment Ass'n, 100 Cal. 429, 432, 34 P. 1089.

[3] In respondents' brief it is said:

"There is no allegation in the complaint that Manoles has performed any of the terms of his lease. There is no allegation in the complaint that the lease to Manoles was in force at any time subsequent to its execution. * * * There is no allegation that the plaintiff, Licht, performed even the covenants of his sublease from Manoles."

It was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege the performance of conditions subsequent or to anticipate and negative any defense which may be available to the defendants. Arnold v. American Insurance Co., 148 Cal. 660, 668, 84 P. 182, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6; Spencer v. Commercial Co., 30 Wash. 520, 71 P. 53, was "an action by a tenant against his landlord for damages on account of an alleged wrongful eviction." The complaint therein contained no allegation of performance by the plaintiff and the defendant's demurrer thereto was sustained. In reversing the case, the court said:

"When the complaint alleges the execution of the lease and possession thereunder, and facts showing a wrongful eviction and damages, a cause of action is stated. The facts showing forfeiture or voluntary surrender, or any other matters of that kind, are proper to be set up in the answer."

[4, 5] Respondents say that "no presumption of continuance of Manoles' lease arises from pleading that at one time Manoles had a leasehold estate. * * * The presumption of continuance is applicable to evidence only and not to pleadings." Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 P. 750, and McCaughy v. Schuette, 117 Cal. 223, 46 P. 666, 48 P. 1088, 59 Am. St. Rep. 176, are cited in support of respondents' contention. The former case was an action in claim and delivery and the latter was an action to recover possession of real property. In Curtin v. Kowalsky, 145 Cal. 431, 432, 78 P. 962, an action by the assignee of a judgment to recover the amount due thereon, the court said:

"It was not necessary for the complaint to state that the plaintiff was the owner or holder of the judgment. Such ownership and holding was the legal result of the assignment, and that fact having been alleged, it follows as a matter of law that plaintiff thereby became the owner and holder thereof. This condition of ownership is presumed to continue, and it was not necessary to allege that plaintiff was the owner at the time the action was begun. Such an allegation, or its equivalent, is required in actions to recover the possession of specific property, but not in actions to recover on money demands."

See, also, Pryce v. Jordan, 69 Cal. 569, 571, 11 P. 185; Troy v. Troy, 72 Cal. App. 757, 761, 238 P. 143; Hooper v. Smith, 30 Cal. App. 460, 462, 158 P. 556; Rock Ridge Park Co. v. Wells, 27 Cal. App. 281, 283, 149 P. 792; Williams v. Ashe, 111 Cal. 180, 188, 43 P. 595, was an action in claim and delivery. The plaintiff therein alleged that "on and after the 17th day of November, 1892, he was the owner and in possession of the property." It was contended that this allegation was not sufficient to show ownership at the time of the commencement of the action. The court said:

"It was insufficient against a special demurrer, doubtless, but defendant did not demur at all. * * * It was not obnoxious to a general demurrer, for, however imperfectly pleaded, there is still by fair intendment to be gathered from the complaint that he claimed ownership and right of possession at the time of the commencement of his action."

The facts necessary to constitute a cause of action in this case may, "by fair intendment," be gathered from the complaint. "Pleadings are no longer to be strictly construed against the pleader, but are to be liberally construed with a view to promoting justice. Code Civ. Proc. § 452." Burian v. Los Angeles Café Co., 173 Cal. 625, 627, 161 P. 4.

It fairly appears from the complaint that the defendants had prosecuted a successful appeal from the first order of condemnation made by the commissioner, in so far as it applied to the first story of the building; that the commissioner was without authority to make the second order, the order of the city commission never having been "revoked, modified, or set aside"; that the first story of the building was at all times "safe and in good condition," and that "no order for the condemnation of said first story was made, and that said first story was never condemned"; and that the destruction thereof by the defendants "was wrongful and made with the express intent of compelling plaintiff to vacate said premises * * * and for the purpose of depriving him of possession thereof. It seems clear that the complaint states a cause of action for damages.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that the ordinance under which the building was condemned is unconstitutional. It is not deemed advisable to determine that question unnecessarily on this appeal. While a demurrer admits the truth of the facts alleged in a complaint for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of the complaint, such facts are not admitted for any other purpose, and the defendants may be able to deny the alleged terms of the ordinance or to show that other terms thereof cure the alleged defects therein. It would probably lead to confusion, therefore, to pass upon the constitutionality of the ordinance without a full presentation of the terms thereof.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to overrule the demurrer.

84 Cal. App. 312

STEWART, City Superintendent of Schools, v. EAVES, County Auditor. (Civ. 4964.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 1, 1927.

1. Mandamus ☞163—Where irregularities, if existing, did not appear on face of complaint to compel auditor to pay petitioner's salary as superintendent of schools, demurrer was properly overruled.

Where irregularities, if existing, did not appear on face of complaint for writ of mandate to compel auditor to pay petitioner's salary as city superintendent of schools, demurrer was properly overruled.

2. Pleading ☞214(1)—Demurrer admits facts as stated in petition.

By demurrer, facts were admitted as stated in petition.

3. Mandamus ☞164(2)—Allegation that petitioner's contract of employment as superintendent of schools was wholly void in law and illegal was "conclusion of law."

In action for writ of mandate to require auditor to draw warrants in payment of petitioner's salary as city superintendent of schools, allegation in answer that petitioner's contract of employment for $5,600 per annum commencing

July 1st was wholly void in law and illegal was pure "conclusion of law."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conclusion of Law.]

4. Mandamus ☞164(2)—Allegation that petitioner's contract of employment as superintendent of schools was void because at time he was serving as superintendent under valid, subsisting, unrevoked contract, was conclusion of law.

In action for writ of mandate to require defendant to draw warrants in payment of petitioner's salary as city superintendent of schools, allegation in answer that contract of employment was void because at time of its execution petitioner was serving as city superintendent of schools under valid, subsisting, and unrevoked contract, was conclusion of law.

5. Schools and school districts ☞63(5)—As regards fixing of compensation, city superintendents of schools are employees, not "public officers" (Pol. Code, §§ 1609, 1793, subsec. 2).

Under Pol. Code, §§ 1609, 1793, subsec. 2, city superintendents of schools are employees and not "public officers," as regards right to fix compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Officer.]

6. Schools and school districts ☞63(1)—City superintendent of schools and board of education could rescind existing contract of employment by mutual consent.

Under charter provision of Santa Barbara clothing board of education with entire control and management of public schools in accordance with Constitution and general laws of state, city superintendent of schools and board of education could rescind existing contract of employment by mutual consent.

7. Schools and school districts ☞63(1)—Permitting board of education to accept resignation of city superintendent of schools does not nullify statute providing that he shall be elected for term of 4 years (Pol. Code, § 1793).

Permitting board of education to accept resignation of city superintendent of schools during time for which he was appointed does not nullify effect of Pol. Code, § 1793, providing that city superintendents elected by city boards of education shall be elected for term of 4 years, since statute does not provide specific time for commencement or ending of term, and one elected to succeed retiring employee is elected for 4-year term.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by Paul E. Stewart, City Superintendent of Schools of Santa Barbara, against Albert T. Eaves, as County Auditor of the County of Santa Barbara, for writ of mandate to require defendant to draw warrants in payment of petitioner's salary. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clarence C. Ward, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Schauer & Ryon, of Santa Barbara, and Cushing & Cushing and Delger Trowbridge, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant, county auditor of Santa Barbara county, from a judgment of the superior court granting a writ of mandamus to plaintiff and directing the auditor to draw his warrants in favor of the respondent as city superintendent of schools of the city of Santa Barbara for the sum of $466.66 as salary for the months of November and December, 1923. On July 10, 1917, A. C. Olney was employed as such city superintendent for a 4-year term at $3,500 per annum. On the 23d of January, 1919, Olney resigned, his resignation to be effective on January 31st, and the respondent herein was employed as city superintendent, to take effect February 1, 1919. On May 31st of the same year respondent's salary was fixed at $4,000 per annum, effective July 1, 1919. On June 3, 1920, the respondent resigned as such city superintendent, his resignation to be effective June 30th of that year, which resignation was regularly accepted, and on the same day the respondent was employed by the board of education for a full term at $5,000 per year, effective on the 1st day of July, 1920. On June 7, 1923, respondent again resigned as city superintendent of schools, to take effect June 30th of that year, and on the same day was employed as such superintendent for a 4-year term at a salary of $5,600 per annum, commencing on the 1st day of July.

The city superintendent of schools of the city of Santa Barbara is appointed by the joint action of the high school board and the board of education of the Santa Barbara school district; the membership of the two boards being identical in personnel. On January 29, 1924, orders were duly drawn by the proper official of the board of education for the salary of respondent at the rate of $5,600 per year for the months of November and December, 1923. They were regularly countersigned in the manner required by law by the county superintendent of schools and were presented to the appellant herein as county auditor of the county of Santa Barbara, with the request that he draw his warrants thereon in the manner provided by law for the payment of said salary of the respondent, which he refused to do and still refuses so to do.

This action was brought to compel the performance of that duty. The city superintendent of schools is elected under paragraph 1793, § 2, of the Political Code, reading as follows:

"City superintendents of public schools, elected by city boards of education, shall be elected for a term of four years, and said city boards of education shall have full power to fix the salary of all employees."

Section 1609 of the Political Code provides as follows:

"Boards of school trustees, and city * * * boards of education shall have power and it shall be their duty: * * * In each city school district governed by a city board of education, such board may employ a city superintendent of schools. * * *"

Section 1726 of the Political Code provides:

"In every high school district formed and existing in an incorporated city or town, or in a single school district, the board of education or board of school trustees of such incorporated city or town or school district shall constitute the high school board, and shall have the management and control of the high school in said district. * * *"

Section 1741 of the Political Code provides as follows:

"Except as in this article, or in article XV of this chapter, otherwise provided, the powers and duties of high school boards shall be such as are now or may hereafter be assigned by law to boards of education or boards of school trustees in school districts."

Section 56 of the charter of the city of Santa Barbara provides:

"The board of education shall have the entire control and management of the public schools in the city in accordance with the Constitution and general laws of the state, and is hereby vested with all the powers and charged with all the duties of such control and management."

The appellant contends; First, that the court erred in overruling the demurrer of defendant to plaintiff's petition for writ of mandate; second, that the evidence does not support the finding contained in paragraph 16 of the decision that the allegations in paragraph 7 of defendant's second defense are untrue; third, that the evidence does not support the finding in paragraph 17 of the decision that the allegations in the defendant's third defense are untrue; fourth, that the plaintiff is a public officer and that his compensation could not be increased after his election or during his term of office; fifth, that the board of education had no power or authority to cancel the contract entered into between said board of education and said Paul E. Stewart on the 3d day of June, 1920, or to enter into the contract of June 7, 1923, for the performance of the same duties as covered by the contract of June 3, 1920, or to allow extra compensation therefor while the terms and conditions of the contract of June 3, 1920, yet remained to be kept and performed.

Taken in the order in which they are assigned in support of his contention that the demurrer to the petition should have been sustained, defendant cites the case of Cook v. Reid, 39 Cal. App. 453, 183 P. 820. In that case the complaint is in substance as follows:

"The plaintiff is, and at all times named in the complaint he was, the owner and holder of a certain order and requisition of the Rannell's school district, county of Riverside, dated May 11, 1916, payable to W. H. Cook or order for the sum of $75 from the school fund of said district, and signed by two trustees of said district on that date. On June 30, 1916, the plaintiff presented said order to the superintendent of schools of the county of Riverside, who thereupon duly examined and approved the same in writing by indorsing upon said order: 'Examined and approved, numbered as above, June 30, 1916,' and affixed his signature thereto as county superintendent of schools and thereupon drew said requisition on said auditor as such. On the 6th day of September, 1916, the plaintiff presented said requisition to the defendant as auditor of said county at his office; thereupon the defendant refused to allow and indorse the same and refused to draw his warrant in favor of the plaintiff for the amount stated in the order and requisition, although sufficient funds are available therefor."

The court said in that case:

"In such cases, where the official duty involved is discretionary, the burden is upon the petitioner. In the present action, petitioner's complaint does not show what service or other consideration is the foundation of his claim, and does not allege any fact from which an abuse of discretion can be inferred."

It will be observed that there is not a word in the complaint as to the character of the service performed or material furnished, and no allegation that any services were performed or rendered, notwithstanding that section 1700 of the Political Code provides that no warrant must be drawn in favor of any teacher, unless the officer whose duty it is to draw such warrant is satisfied that the teacher has faithfully performed all the duties prescribed in section 1696. In the instant case no such condition exists. The complaint specifically sets forth the services that have been performed by the respondent, as well as do the requisitions drawn by the county school superintendent, which were presented to the auditor and which were and are made a part of the complaint in this action. The allegations of the complaint are certain and specific and set forth all the facts necessary to constitute a complete cause of action, and upon their face show that the petitioner is entitled to the amounts set forth in the requisition. Under these circumstances the case of Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 P. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249, was an action in mandamus arising under the San Francisco charter, wherein it was made the duty of the county auditor to examine the contract, "the steps taken previous thereto, * * * and the record of said assessments," and he "must be satisfied that the proceedings have been legal and fair." In that case the court said:

"In our opinion the true tests are whether its [referring to the auditor] determination is intended by law to be final, and if not whether there is any other 'plain, speedy and adequate remedy.' If the determination of the tribunal [the auditor] was intended to be final, it is plain that it cannot be disturbed, either on mandamus or in any other way. If it was not intended to be final, but there is another 'plain, speedy and adequate remedy,' the writ cannot issue; for it was not designated to usurp the place of other remedies. But if the determination was not intended to be final, and there is no other adequate remedy, the writ must issue. * * * In the present case there can be no doubt that the auditor was to examine the proceedings and satisfy himself that they were legal, for the statute expressly says so; and if they were found by the court to be illegal, the writ could not issue. But being perfectly legal, the question is whether the determination of the auditor was intended to be final. And we can see no ground for saying that it was. There is nothing in the language of the act which shows that it was intended to be final. It certainly would not be final in favor of the contractor. In the numerous cases in which street assessments have been before the court, we have never seen it suggested that the signature of the auditor cured previous illegality; and it seems clear that it would not do so. Why, then, should it be final against the contractor, and be conclusive that the proceedings are illegal when it is apparent that they are not so? * * * If the determination of the auditor be not final, then, upon the principles above stated, the writ must issue."

[1, 2] It is significant that the powers and discretion of the auditor under the San Francisco charter are much broader than under the statute. Under the statute he shall sign the warrant in case he allows said demand. Stats. 1905, p. 528. Under the city charter he is burdened with specific responsibilities of investigation which he may not avoid performing. The writ has been repeatedly issued in cases of this character, and where as in the instant case, the irregularities, if existing, do not appear on the face of the complaint, the procedure is undoubtedly warranted and proper. The appellant alleges that the auditor was in a position which enabled him to familiarize himself with the proceedings leading up to the contract executed on the 15th day of June, 1923. This may be true, but, nevertheless, by the demurrer, the facts are admitted as stated in the petition of the respondent and it necessarily devolves upon the court to determine the ultimate fact as to the legality of these proceedings.

[3, 4] Appellant's second contention is that the evidence does not support the finding contained in paragraph 16 of the decision of the court declaring the allegations of paragraph 7 of defendant's second defense to be untrue. The first allegation that the contract of employment of respondent for the sum of $5,-

600 per annum, commencing July 1st, is wholly void in law and illegal, is a pure conclusion of law, and the second allegation that said contract is void because at the time of its execution respondent was serving as a city superintendent of schools of the city of Santa Barbara under a valid, subsisting, and unrevoked contract, is also a conclusion of law, and the remaining allegation, to wit, that on June 7, 1923, the city superintendent attempted to resign as superintendent of schools and rescind said valid, subsisting, and unrevoked contract, is a mixed allegation of fact and law; and the allegation that petitioner attempted to resign under an express understanding of the board of education that he would be immediately re-employed by said board of education as said city superintendent of schools at an increased salary, and that a new, separate, and distinct contract would be executed by and between said board of education and petitioner, is untrue, is fully supported by the evidence produced at the trial. The remaining allegation in that paragraph, as well as the allegations contained in the third separate defense, consist of a narration of facts concerning the several appointments and resignation and increases of salary of the respondent, the legality of which is the very issue involved in this litigation, and if the conclusion at which we have arrived in this case is correct, and the board of education of the city of Santa Barbara was authorized by law to do the things that they did do, these allegations become immaterial.

[5] The next in order, of the contentions of the appellant, is that the plaintiff is a public officer and that as such his compensation could not be increased after his election or during his term of office, and in this respect, appellant relies upon section 9, art. 11, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed."

The question as to whether a city superintendent of schools is a public officer has never been directly determined in this state. It would seem from the wording of section 1793 of the Political Code, on its face, that it was the conclusion and determination of the Legislature that a city superintendent was not a public officer, but simply an employee. Section 2 of that section provides:

"City superintendents of public schools, elected by city boards of education, shall be elected for a term of four years, and said city boards of education shall have full power to fix the salary of all employees." (Italics ours.)

In the case of San Diego v. Dauer, 97 Cal. 444, 32 P. 531, it is assumed, and that assumption has never been questioned or contradicted that a city superintendent of schools is an employee and not a public officer. The law as hereinbefore set out with respect to the powers and duties of the boards of education, and contained in sections 1609-1741 of the Political Code, and section 56 of the Santa Barbara charter, is comprehensive and would appear to eliminate the vesting of any statutory or charter powers in the city superintendent. His duties apparently are entirely ministerial and not outlined or enumerated by any law. He is not required to give any bond for the faithful performance of his duties nor take any oath of office. The only provision of the law which is usually incident to a public officer, and which governs in the appointment of a city superintendent, is the section of the Political Code fixing a four-year term of office, which section, however, does not fix any specific time either for the beginning or termination of that term. In the absence of any charter provision or statutory law defining the duties of a city superintendent, it may be fairly deduced that neither the state nor the municipality intended to vest this officer with any of the sovereign powers of the state or municipality, except such as are directed by the employing power which, under the statute and the charter, have complete control and government of the city schools. We have found nothing in the statutes, nor in the municipal charters, nor in the decisions of the higher courts of this state that defines the official status of a city school superintendent. As before indicated, in the case of San Diego v. Dauer, supra, the Supreme Court said, "Assuming, therefore, that the superintendent of schools of the city of San Diego is an employee of the board of education of that city," which assumption has been the prevailing opinion with respect to that matter for 34 years and has been and still is being acted upon with the acquiescence of the legislative departments of the state and by everyday practical application in the civil municipalities, it would seem that we have reached a stage in this state with respect to city superintendents of schools where it must be held that the Legislature has conclusively determined in sections 1609 and 1793 of the Political Code that these officers are employees and not public officers; otherwise, the delegation of power by that body to municipalities to fix such salaries is unwarranted and illegal. In Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 103 P. 199, the Supreme Court speaking through Mr. Justice Beatty, said:

"When the right to enact a law depends upon the existence of a fact, the passage of the act implies and the conclusive presumption is that the Governor and the Legislature have performed their duty, and ascertained the existence of the fact before enacting or approving the law—a decision which the courts have no right to question or review."

The law in other states with respect to this subject-matter is clearly defined in Farley v. Board of Education, City of Perry, 62 Okl. 181, 162 P. 797. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma there said:

"A public officer is one whose duties are fixed by law and who in the discharge of the same knows no guide but established laws. Employment arising out of a contract whereby the person employed acts under the direction or control of others, and which employment depends for its duration and extent upon such a contract, is not an office."

In Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481, the court says:

"A person 'who receives no certificate of appointment, takes no oath of office, has no term or tenure of office, discharges no duties, and exercises no powers depending directly on the authority of law, but simply performs such duties as are required of him by the persons employing him, and whose responsibility is limited to them, is not an officer and does not hold an office, * * * although the persons so employing him are public officers, and his employment is in and about a public work or business.'"

In State v. Spaulding, 102 Iowa, 639, 72 N. W. 288, the Supreme Court said:

"When such appointment is provided for or required by law, which fixes their powers and duties, and they are required to take an oath and to give bonds, they are usually considered public officers; but where a deputy is appointed, merely at the will and pleasure of his principal, to serve some purpose of the latter, he is not a public officer, but a mere servant or agent. * * * So a 'position the duties of which are undefined, and which can be changed at the will of the superior * * * is not an office, but a mere employment, and the incumbent is not an officer, but a mere employee.'"

An illuminating case covering substantially all the questions involved in this action is found in Ward v. Board of Education, 11 O. C. D. 671. It may be stated that the statute law with respect to the matters there involved does not materially differ from our own law. The court says:

"Each board of education shall have the management and control of the public schools of the district with full power to appoint a superintendent and assistant superintendents of the schools," etc. "The General Assembly, in cases not provided for in this Constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished. * * * A majority of the board of education shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; upon a motion to adopt a resolution * * * to employ a superintendent, teacher," etc. "Taking the statute and averments together, we believe that Ward as superintendent was not an officer, but was an employee."

[6, 7] Assuming that the foregoing discussion leads to the logical conclusion that the city superintendent of schools is an employee and not a public officer, we come to the final question as to whether such employee and his employer—the board of education—may within the purview of the law rescind an existing contract by mutual consent? In the case last above cited the Ohio Circuit Court says, speaking of a contract between the board of education and the city superintendent:

"Such contract entered into between the teacher and the board of education is subject to the general rules governing the validity of contracts."

In volume 35 of Cyc., at page 957, we find the following:

"Except in so far as governed by special statutes the making, requisites and validity of contracts by school districts are governed by the rules applicable to contracts generally."

Further, in the same volume, at page 935, the following language is used:

"The modification or rescission of a school district contract must ordinarily be made in the manner in which the execution must have been made."

There are several cases in which the Supreme Court of this state has sanctioned the modification and termination of contracts with boards of education, notably Harris v. Central High School Dist., 45 Cal. App. 669, 188 P. 617; West v. Pasadena, 43 Cal. App. 199, 184 P. 877; and Armstrong v. Vallejo, 173 Cal. 217, 160 P. 414. Appellant relies upon the case of California Highway Commission v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 218 P. 579. In that case the real crux of the action centered around the question as to whether the highway commission was authorized by law to breach a contract and make a gift to a contractor as a basis for the extinguishment of an existing and operating contract. The Supreme Court held that, in view of the powers vested in the highway commission by the several legislative acts creating it, it had no such power, the commission, by the terms of the creating acts having been granted specific authority as agent of the state to enter into contracts, but given no corresponding power to breach them, and, as we understand the decision, its application is limited to the conditions and status developed in that particular case, and that it was not its purpose to run counter to the doctrine announced in the long line of cases in this and other jurisdictions which may be said to be crystallized in the language to be found in section 1112 of Bigelow on Estoppel, wherein it is said:

"But it is a well-settled principle, applicable alike to states or the United States, that whenever a government descends from the plane of sovereignty and contracts with parties, such government is regarded as a private person itself and is bound accordingly. * * * A state in its contracts with individuals must be judged and must abide by the same rules which govern similar cases between individuals; and, whenever such a contract comes before the courts, the rights and obligations of the contracting parties will be adjudged upon the same principles as if both contracting parties were private persons."

Chief Justice Myers, in the Riley Case, states that to warrant the state agent in breaching a contract he must be vested with authority to do so by express grant or clear implication, and he finds neither to exist in the language contained in the acts creating the highway commission. Under the charter of the city of Santa Barbara, approved by the Legislature, the board of education is clothed with the entire control and management of the public schools in the city in accordance with the Constitution and general laws of the state, and "is hereby vested with all the powers and charged with all the duties of such control and management." Certainly under this language there is no limitation and nothing is left to depend upon implication. If the board has full power in the management and control of the school, it must be vested with the power to make contracts and unmake contracts. It is the contention of appellant that to permit the board of education to accept the resignation of a city superintendent of schools during the time for which he was appointed would nullify the effect of section 1793 of the Political Code. Such is not the effect. When in the judgment of the board of education it is for the best interests of the schools under their control and management to accept the resignation of an employee, such termination in nowise disturbs the requirements of that section. It must be remembered that section 1793 provides no specific time for the commencement or ending of the term. Consequently any person elected to succeed a retiring employee will be elected for a full 4-year term.

In the Armstrong Case, supra, the Supreme Court has recognized the power of the board of education to employ a city superintendent, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1793 of the Political Code for a temporary term, and this upon a verbal understanding between the employee and the board that such were the terms of his employment. If it is the intention of the legislative power of the state, the county or the city, to deny boards of education the power to do the things that were done in the instant case, it devolves upon that branch of the government to make that purpose clear in the statute law. In this case there is no element of bad faith or ethics involved.

The evidence before the court shows that the respondent had no agreement or understanding with the board of education when tendering his resignation that he would be appointed to succeed himself. It is disclosed in the record that it had come to the knowledge of the board that the services of the respondent were in demand in another city and at a salary double that paid him in the city of Santa Barbara. Of their own volition and knowledge, and for what the boards considered the best interests of the schools of that city, the resignations and subsequent appointments were brought about.

If we are correct in the foregoing discussion, it becomes unnecessary to consider other points raised by the respondent to the effect that, even if the petitioner is a public officer, he is not a city, town, or municipal officer within the meaning of section 9, art. 11, of the Constitution; nor that the term follows the man and not the office where the commencement and ending of the term are not vested by statute. These are interesting questions, on which we express no opinion, as a discussion of them would unnecessarily greatly enlarge the scope of this opinion.

Judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CONTRA COSTA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5853.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 260(12)—Statutes respecting appeals from convictions in superior court apply to justice's court appeals, unless inconsistent, when those expressly applicable to latter control (Pen. Code, § 1467).

Under Pen. Code, § 1467, sections in title 9 as to appeals from convictions in superior court must be applied in determination of justice's court appeals, unless inconsistency arises, in which case sections of title 11, expressly made applicable to justice's court appeals, are controlling therein.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 260(12)—On reversal of conviction in justice's court, superior court may decide whether to order new trial (Pen. Code, §§ 1262, 1469).

Under Pen. Code, § 1469, read in connection with section 1262, it is for superior court to decide whether new trial shall be ordered on reversal of judgment of conviction on appeal from justice's court.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 260(12)—Order reversing justice's court conviction of violating self-insurance provision of statute and discharging defendant held within superior court's appellate jurisdiction (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, § 29; Pen. Code, §§ 1262, 1469).

Order that justice's court judgment convicting corporation of violating Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 857) § 29, relating to self-insurance, be reversed and corporation discharged held within superior court's appellate jurisdiction, under Pen. Code, §§ 1262, 1469.

4. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1134(7)—Superior court's holding that undisputed facts were insufficient to show criminal intent to violate self-insurance provision of statute is not reviewable on certiorari (Pen. Code, § 20; Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917, § 29).

Error in Superior Court's construction of undisputed facts, appearing in statement on appeal from justice's court, as insufficient to establish criminal intent, necessary under Pen. Code, § 20, to convict corporation of violating Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 857), § 29, relating to self-insurance, is not reviewable by Court of Appeal on certiorari.

Application by the People of the State of California for a writ of certiorari to annul an order of the Superior Court of Contra Costa County, H. V. Alvarado, Judge, reversing a judgment of a justice's court, convicting the Cowell Portland Cement Company of violating the self-insurance provision of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, and discharging defendant. Writ denied.

Warren H. Pillsbury and G. C. Faulkner, both of San Francisco, for the People.

A. F. Bray and J. E. Rodgers, both of Martinez, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This proceeding in certiorari was commenced in behalf of the people of the state of California for the purpose of having annulled an order made by the respondent superior court in determining the merits of an appeal taken to said court by the respondent corporation Cowell Portland Cement Company, from a judgment of conviction obtained by the people in the justice's court of the first township of Contra Costa county.

There is no controversy as to the facts, and, briefly stated, they are as follows: In January, 1926, the Industrial Accident Commission caused a criminal action to be instituted in said justice's court against the respondent corporation upon a charge of misdemeanor, to wit, violation of section 29 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 857), relating to self-insurance; and thereafter said corporation was tried before a jury upon said charges and convicted. A judgment of fine was imposed; whereupon an appeal was taken to the superior court, which was thereafter heard upon a statement of the case theretofore settled by the justice of the peace before whom the action was tried. On November 5, 1926, said superior court rendered a written decision determining said appeal, wherein the sufficiency of the complaint upon which the conviction was obtained was not questioned, but which held that the evidence set forth in the statement on appeal was legally insufficient to establish the essential fact that the failure of said corporation to comply with the terms of said act was willful and intentional (Pen. Code, § 20); and it was therefore ordered "that the defendant corporation be and it is hereby acquitted of the offense charged in the complaint."

Being dissatisfied with said decision, the people presented a motion to vacate the same upon several grounds, one of them being:

"(4) That said decision was improvidently entered and was a nullity in that the court was without jurisdiction to enter an order of acquittal or to take any other action on appeal than to affirm or to reverse and grant a new trial."

On January 6, 1927, said motion was denied, but in the order denying the same the court directed:

"That the order made in the above-entitled case on the 5th day of November, 1926, be and the same is hereby corrected and made to read as follows: 'The judgment entered in the justice court of the First judicial township of the county of Contra Costa, state of California, in the above-entitled case on July 23, 1926, is reversed. The defendant is ordered discharged and his bond exonerated.'"

Petitioner contends that the jurisdiction of a superior court in the matter of the determination of an appeal from the justice's court in a criminal action is restricted to a dismissal of the appeal, or an affirmance, or a reversal of the judgment of conviction; and that if the judgment be reversed a new trial must be granted as a matter of course, to be held in the superior court; that, therefore, since in the instant proceeding the order of reversal made by the respondent court on January 6, 1927, has the effect of terminating the action without further trial and of discharging the respondent corporation from further prosecution upon said charge, said order is to that extent void and should be annulled.

[1] The Code sections relating to appeals from judgments of conviction rendered in the superior court are set forth in title 9, part 2, of the Penal Code, and the matter of appeals from judgments of conviction in the justice's court is dealt with in title 11, part 2, of said Code; but section 1467, which is made part of the latter title, provides:

"The appeal may be taken, heard, and determined as provided in title 9, part 2 of this Code, * * *" —and consequently the Code sections contained in title 9, relating to appeals from convictions in the Superior Court, relate also to justice's court appeals and must be applied in the determination thereof (Garrett v. Superior Court [Cal. App.] 249 P. 871; Lillywhite v.

Superior Court [Cal. App.] 251 P. 945; Brown v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 14, 13 P. 70) unless an inconsistency arises between the Code sections of the two titles, in which event those sections contained in title 11, which are expressly made applicable to justice's court appeals, are controlling therein (People v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. App. 770, 222 P. 864).

[2] Title 11, relating to justice's court appeals, does not specify the forms of judgments which the superior court shall render in the determination thereof, but in title 9 there are two sections which provide as follows:

"The court may reverse, affirm, or modify the judgment or order appealed from, and may set aside, affirm, or modify any or all of the proceedings subsequent to, or dependent upon, such judgment or order, and may, if proper, order a new trial." Section 1260, Pen. Code. "If a judgment against the defendant is reversed without ordering a new trial, the appellate court must, if he is in custody, direct him to be discharged therefrom; or if on bail, that his bail be exonerated; or if money was deposited instead of bail, that it be refunded to the defendant." Section 1262, Pen. Code.

The sections just quoted do not in any manner conflict with any of those contained in title 11 relating to justice's court appeals, but, on the contrary, are in entire harmony with section 1469 thereof, which provides:

"Upon an appeal the superior court may review all matters set forth in the statement and affecting the judgment appealed from, and may set aside, or confirm, or modify any or all of the proceedings subsequent to and attendant upon such judgment, and may, if necessary or proper, order a new trial. If a new trial be granted it must be in the municipal court, if the appeal be from a judgment of the municipal court, otherwise it must be in the superior court." (Italics ours.)

The foregoing section, when read in connection with section 1262 above quoted, makes it clear, we think, that upon a reversal of a judgment of conviction on appeal from the justice's court, it is a matter for the superior court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction to decide whether or not a new trial shall be ordered, the language of said section 1469 being that said court "may, if necessary and proper, order a new trial." In Ex parte Ballard, 149 Cal. 144, 84 P. 833, it was expressly held that section 1262 of said Code conferred exclusive power upon the court of appellate jurisdiction to order a new trial or to discharge the defendant on reversal of a judgment, the court saying:

"There are cases where there are such inherent defects in the prosecution, and such impossibility of a legal conviction of the defendant, that he ought not to be put upon another trial, and the purpose of section 1262 is to give to the appellate court the power, and impose upon it the duty, of directing discharges in such cases."

And it was furthermore held that when an appeal is taken from the judgment and also from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and the appellate court reverses the judgment without an order directing a new trial and without making any order as to the release of the defendant, "such action is evidently the result of inadvertence and of a temporary forgetfulness of section 1262, * * *" and does not ipso facto entitle the defendant to his release by the trial court, or by any other court into which he may bring the case by habeas corpus or other proceeding; but that the appellate court still has power to, and upon proper application will, either make the order directing the discharge of the appellant or rule upon the order denying the motion for a new trial.

[3] We conclude, therefore, since under section 1469 of said Code the superior court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction over justice's court appeals in criminal actions, may or not order a new trial, upon a reversal of the judgment, and if a new trial be not ordered, must, under section 1262, order the discharge of the defendant and exonerate his bail, that the respondent court, in making the order herein complained of, acted within the lawful exercise of its appellate jurisdiction and that consequently its order is not void.

[4] Petitioner further contends that the legal construction placed upon the undisputed facts appearing in the statement on appeal with reference to the question of criminal intent, upon which the judgment of reversal is based, is erroneous, and that such error is reviewable in the instant proceeding. In ruling upon an analogous situation, the Supreme Court said in Roberts v. Police Court, 185 Cal. 65, 195 P. 1053:

"It is thoroughly settled that the judgment of a police or justice's court will not be reviewed on certiorari, after appeal taken therefrom and determination of such appeal in the superior court. * * * It [the superior court] must determine the appeal, reversing or affirming the judgment of the police court as it deems one or the other course proper in view of the matters shown by the statement of the case. Whichever it does it is acting in the exercise of its lawful jurisdiction, and not in excess of such jurisdiction. It has the same power to affirm in any case that it has to reverse, and the mere fact that its conclusion is wrong does not make its action in excess of its jurisdiction. In such case we have simply error in the exercise of jurisdiction. All that petitioner's contention amounts to in this regard is that the superior court should have reversed the judgment of the police court, and that it erred in affirming it. The substantial contention is that the statement of the case showed that the evidence on the trial in the police court was not sufficient to establish the guilt of the petitioner of the offense charged. If that be true, the superior court erred in affirming the judgment, but mere errors in the exercise of jurisdiction are not reviewable on certiorari. It seems superfluous to cite authorities in support of these well settled propositions, but if authority be desired, it is to be found in the opinion of this court in the Matter of Hughes, 159 Cal. 360 (113 P. 684)."

In view of the rule above stated, it is certain that even though the legal construction placed by the respondent court upon the evidence relating to the question of criminal intent be erroneous, it is beyond the power of this court to review such error in this proceeding.

The writ is denied.

I

PEOPLES of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. William H. SCOTT, Defendant and Appellant. (Cr. 1465.) District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 16, 1927. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge. Light & Lane, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged, by an information filed on August 6, 1926, with the crime of robbery. The first trial of the case, resulting in a conviction, was commenced on the 6th day of October, 1926. On October 21st the court set aside the verdict of guilty and granted a new trial, and reset the case for trial on the 28th day of October, and on that day continued the matter for trial until the 8th day of December, 1926, when the second trial was had. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and judgment was pronounced thereon, and defendant prosecutes this appeal from that judgment, urging only one point for its reversal, to wit, that defendant was not brought to trial within 60 days from the filing of the information. The point here raised was directly passed upon by us in habeas corpus proceedings involving this defendant. In re Scott, 254 P. 596. That opinion conclusively disposes of this appeal. Judgment affirmed.
